The Hot Springs pastors were most kind and attentive. If the Sunday school band could only give out to the world the mental and soul-healing that these great health-giving hot and cold springs convey, then could we begin to see the end of the long journey we have been making toward church-wide and nation-wide Christian citizenship and service.

Editorial

LET THE GOOD WORK GO ON.

Senator E. R. Tillman, of South Carolina, introduced the United States Senate to pass a few days since a resolution forbidding smoking during its sessions. This action is much to be commended. So august a body ought not to think of tolerating such a practice.

We have also been pleased to notice that Dr. W. B. Palmore, the distinguished Editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, is earnestly advocating the enactment of a law at the approaching session of our General Conference against receiving preachers into the traveling connection who are addicted to the use of tobacco. Such a measure was introduced in our law-making assembly at Asheville, N. C., four years ago and lacked only three or four votes of being adopted. It was our pleasure to vote in favor of this proposal then, and if Providence permits us to go to Oklahoma City and it is brought forward, we shall again give it our hearty support.

The boys and girls are being taught in our public schools that tobacco is a pernicious poison, and that the use of it is harmful—a position that cannot be successfully controverted—and surely the Church in its ideals ought not to fall below the standard of secular educators. We have many pastoral charges to-day in which a minister who uses the weed is not wanted, and we feel that the time has fully come to take the suggested forward step. And we are not sure if such a law is passed, that it ought not to be made retroactive. If our older pastors preach to persons addicted to the use of intoxicants that they can quit by the assistance of the Holy Spirit, how can they logically set up the pitiful plea that they themselves cannot triumph over the appetite for tobacco? The truth is, they could do it if they would. To be sure, there are many good men who smoke or chew, or do both, but they would be better off and would set the youth of the country a more wholesome example if they did not do so.

We are aware that it is unpopular to give expression to such sentiments, but we have never been disposed to suppress our convictions because if stated they might bring us into disfavor in any circle. Evasiveness may have its rewards, but we do not desire them. We prefer to stand out in the open and take the consequences, whatever they may be.

THE ONE WHO MOST DESERVES A MONUMENT.

Senator John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, introduced in the upper branch of Congress last week a bill appropriating $150,000 to erect on the Isthmus of Panama a monument to Ferdinand de Lesseps, the original projector of the great waterway now being brought to completion. We have no objection to this measure—indeed, we think the carrying out of his purpose would be a fitting tribute to the noted Frenchman—one that would likely touch a responsive chord among the peoples of the Old World, and particularly among those of the Republic of France. But, in our opinion, the man who more than any other deserves to have a shaft erected to his memory on the bank of the Panama Canal is the late Senator John T. Morgan, of Alabama. It is true that he preferred the Nicaragua site, but it was his masterful and tireless advocacy of the project of linking the two oceans that aroused the American people to the importance of undertaking the task and made possible its achievement anywhere. No opposition could deter him and successive defeats could not depress him. Others faltered and gave up in despair, but he stood nobly on until death paralyzed his massive brain and stilled his eloquent tongue. The leader fell at his post, but not until he had fired the heart of the Nation with his scheme and created a sentiment in its behalf that nothing could withstand.

The selection of the place where the canal was to be constructed was a more incident of the vast enterprise—a work for the engineers. It was the conception as a whole that thrilled the mind and enlisted the energies of the great Southerner, and the consummation of the enterprise, though not in exact accord with his plans, is the fulfillment of what for so many years was regarded as his wild dream. So there ought to be set up on some conspicuous spot where the passing ships of the world could not but see it, a towering column crowned with a statue of the brilliant statesman who with far-reaching vision saw what others could not see and who finally led his countrymen along as they were to follow, along the shining way of progress. But alas! we fear that this will not be done. The real benefactors of the race are not infrequently overlooked. He who gives the finishing touches to a large and worthy undertaking is often acclaimed and crowned a hero, while the man who laid the foundation for it and performed the more difficult work of making it possible is passed by and forgotten. We rarely hear Daniel Webster spoken of in connection with the War between the States (God spared him from seeing the sad spectacle of his country "rent with civil feuds and drenched in fraternal blood"), but it was his matchless speeches in Congress that generated in the North the sentiment that maintained the American Union. One glorious thing about the service of Christ is that he knows what every person does, and that each shall be given his due reward.

HAS NO REFERENCE TO METHODISTS.

The Presbyterian of the South says: "One of 'Billy' Sunday's best and shrewdest remarks lately uttered, is that 'The Church's machinery is getting so heavy that you can hear it creak.' The trouble is that the inventors are having their own way all the time. It is not tolerable for any one to oppose the modern devices. One daring to do such a thing is pounced upon and derided as an obstructionist, an opponent of progress, an enemy of the Kingdom."

Of course, our esteemed contemporary is speaking of the Presbyterian Church only. Manifestly, from the various suggestions that we see in our church papers, we Methodists need a great deal more machinery and government. When we shall have two or three special secretaries in every presiding elder's district and a deaconess in every pastoral charge, a glorious day will have dawned upon us. The pastors will then have little to do except to go hunting and fishing. The only thing we see that may mar their happiness is that their salaries may have to be largely sliced to support their assistants. But who is not willing to make some sacrifice that he may be a gentleman of leisure?

A GREAT SHOWING.

Three of the ten medals (its usual annual number) awarded this year by the National Institute of Social Science came to New Orleans physicians, as follows: Dr. A. L. Metz for achievements in the field of chemistry and social science; Dr. Charles W. Duvall, for notable achievements in the field of bacteriology and medical research, and Dr. C. C. Bass, for distinguished services in the way of medical discoveries. It is said that this is the first time that any medal of this Society has been awarded to a person living south of the Potomac River. Hurrah for Tulane University, New Orleans, and the South!

THE DEDICATION OF EPWORTH.

The Epworth M. E. Church, South, of this city, was dedicated in the presence of a large congregation last Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. The sermon, which was an able and appropriate discourse, was preached by Dr. I. W. Cooper, President of Whitworth College. The music was one of the most pleasing features of the occasion. The form of dedication contained in our Ritual was impressively read by Dr. J. M. Henry, presiding elder of the New Orleans District. As there was no debt on the part of the church that was completed and ready to be consecrated to sacred uses (the Sunday school room), it was decided to take a free will offering for the main portion of the contemplated structure, which is to be erected as soon as practicable, and the cards distributed for this purpose brought in pledges amounting to $865.50. Besides the pastor, presiding elder, and Dr. Cooper, the following ministers were present at the service: Dr. S. H. Werlein, Dr. J. T. Sawyer, Rev. C. A. Battie, Rev. R. H. Harper, Rev. J. G.

Snelling, Rev. A. J. Gearheard, and Rev. W. E. Thomas. We should be pleased to give something of the history of Epworth Church if the space were at our disposal. It started as Tulane Mission twenty years ago and has grown steadily ever since, until to-day it is a well organized Church, with a promising outlook. We congratulate Brother Doss and his worthy flock upon what they are doing to build up Methodism in their part of the city. They have certainly wrought well.

BISHOP KILGO COMING.

Rev. Paul M. Brown, Secretary of Education of the Louisiana Conference, was in New Orleans last week and paid the Advocate office an appreciated visit. He stated that the campaign for funds to strengthen our educational institutions in the State is being carefully planned and that it will be pressed with vigor. Bishop John C. Kilgo has promised to assist in this work from March 29 to April 4, and Brother Brown will probably use him entirely in the city of New Orleans, at which time a stirring canvass in behalf of this great cause is to be made here. We are delighted to know that Bishop Kilgo is coming. It was under his wise and aggressive leadership that Trinity College was built up in North Carolina, and we feel sure that he will be able to help appreciably our needy educational work in Louisiana.

Brother Brown requested us to announce that the following District Educational Secretaries have been appointed to assist in carrying forward this important movement: Alexandria, W. D. Kleinschmidt; Baton Rouge, J. A. McCarmack; Lafayette, A. S. Lutz; Monroe, George Fox; Ruston, H. W. Cudd; New Orleans, H. W. Jamieson; Shreveport, T. H. Morris.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mrs. J. D. Barbee, of Greenville, Miss., has been visiting relatives in Memphis, Tenn., for some days.

In a personal note to the Editor, Rev. I. D. Borders states that Rev. J. C. Park, our beloved pastor at Tupelo, Miss., who has been quite ill, is reported to be considerably improved. This is, indeed, gratifying news.

Rev. J. J. Brooks, who is one of our veteran preachers in the great Mississippi Delta, speaks hopefully of his work at Boyle, Miss. It gives us a somewhat homesick feeling when we get a letter from up that way.

Rev. Louis Hoffpauir writes: "My post office hitherto was Gold Dust, La., but is now Ville Platte, La. Our work is very promising. We have had 6 additions since Conference, and I have baptized 4 infants and officiated at three weddings."

Rev. E. B. Sharp, of Webb, Miss., says: "Everything is moving on nicely in this charge, and we are expecting a year of progress. Brother O. B. Culpepper, of Memphis, has promised to be with us at Webb in a tent meeting, beginning on September 5."

Of his charge at Donaldsonville, La., Rev. T. D. Lipscomb says: "The work is going forward very satisfactorily. We are hopeful of a fruitful year." With Brother and Sister Lipscomb to lead the way, it is not surprising that Methodism is making progress in this interesting field.

We make grateful acknowledgment to Rev. W. N. Duncan, our gifted young pastor at Holly Springs, Miss., for a second club of subscribers—eight in number—from his historic charge. Methodism has long had a worthy and cultured flock in Marshall County's Capital City.

Rev. H. J. Moore, of Wiggins, Miss., gave us several subscriptions from his charge on the 11th inst., adding in the letter that brought them the following statement: "Our work here is progressing reasonably well." Thanks for your kindness, brother; and may the Lord prosper increasingly the labor of your hands.

By a close vote the State Senate defeated the amendment to the Mississippi Constitution which proposed to strike out the provision forbidding the bequeathing of property to any religious institution. It is evident that if the Churches ever secure such a change in the organic law of Mississippi they must take their cause before the people.

Dr. W. H. Huntley, the able and brotherly presiding elder of the Seashore District of the Mississippi Conference, was in New Orleans last Monday and favored our office with a call. He spoke encouragingly of the work in his diocese. It was our pleasure to have Dr. Huntley and Dr. I. W. Cooper, who remained in the city until Monday afternoon, to lunch with us down town.

Dr. F. R. Hill, Sr., has recently assisted Rev. C. C. Weir in a good meeting, fasting ten days, at Morgan City, La. Dr. Hill is now visiting his brother, Mr. Wm. Hill, at Alexandria. He expects to go to Mobile the last of this month, where he has an engagement to assist Dr. McGehee, the pastor of St. Francis Street Church, in a series of revival services which will start the 1st of April.

We regret to learn that our church at Zachary, La., was destroyed by fire on March 8.

Rev. L. A. Humphries, recently serving at Winnfield, La., has been transferred to the Northwest Texas Conference and stationed at Matador.

Dubach, La., has an attractive new parsonage, of the bungalow type, with modern conveniences. Rev. J. G. Sloan is the progressive pastor of this growing charge.

Rev. W. J. Porter has organized a new church at Bryceland, La., with 26 members, and has in process of erection there a house of worship which is nearing completion.

The Gideon's on Sunday, March 8, carried 2100 Bibles to the leading hotels in New Orleans to be distributed to their various rooms, one to be placed in each. This was a great work.

Brother J. D. Ireland, of Selma, Miss., renews his subscription to the Advocate and expresses his appreciation of it. He has been taking it since 1879. Blessings on this long-time friend of our historic paper!

A correspondent states that Rev. W. E. Akin, who is serving the Elmore (La.) Circuit, has made a fine beginning with his work, and that his people are delighted with him. A good year is predicted for this charge.

Rev. F. B. Ormond sounds an optimistic note from his charge—the La Branch Street Church, of McComb, Miss. He thinks that the indications point to a year of advancement. We are indebted to Brother Ormond for a club of 6 subscriptions, forwarded on March 9.

We have in hand an announcement of the Commencement exercises of the Meridian (Miss.) Colleges which will take place on May 22-26. Rev. J. V. Budd, of Georgia, will preach the Commencement sermon and also deliver the Baccalaureate Address.

Rev. A. J. Henry, of Tishomingo, Miss., is bestirring himself in his field. Among other things that he is trying to do, is to place the church paper in the homes of his people. We are grateful to him for his efforts in this direction, and we pray that he may have much success in his work for the Master.

Brother R. N. Jeffries, who is much appreciated in this section as a singer and choir director in revival services, is now making up his slate of engagements for the spring and summer, and any one who desires his assistance would do well to write him at once. His address is 1713 Marshall Street, Shreveport, La.

Rev. L. A. McKeown, of Byhalia, Miss., writes that the Lord continues to bless him with health and that he is enjoying the work in his new pastorate. We are pleased to know that this faithful itinerant is again physically in shape to prosecute his loved employ. No truer soldier ever followed the standard of the Cross.

Rev. J. H. Thompson reports a glorious revival meeting at Bude, Miss., in which there were 100 conversions and about 90 accessions to the Churches, 45 of them coming into ours. The preaching was chiefly done by Rev. D. E. Kelly. Brother Thompson's account of this meeting will appear in the next issue of the Advocate.

Dr. J. M. Sullivan, to whom we are indebted for an account of the excellent revival meeting recently held at Millsaps College, which appears in this issue of the Advocate, in a personal note, says: "We are getting along remarkably well in spite of the inconveniences coming as a result of the destruction of our Main Building by fire."

In our "Personal Column" last week it was stated that Rev. C. C. Griffin presided over the Coalville (Miss.) quarterly conference, when resolutions of sympathy for Dr. W. H. Huntley in the loss of his daughter, Miss Helen, were adopted. This was an error. It was the pastor, Rev. C. C. Gibson, who held the conference in Dr. Huntley's absence.

Our esteemed brother, Rev. W. A. Bowlin, who serves the Booneville (Miss.) Circuit, states that the congregations on his work are increasing and that the general outlook is encouraging. Brother Bowlin has sent in already 19 new subscriptions to the Advocate and 2 renewals. It is needless to say that we appreciate this fine service rendered the Conference organ.

In a letter from Lorman, Miss., bringing us 8 names for our subscription files, with a check to correspond, Rev. J. F. Campbell adds the following note: "The work is progressing nicely in this, the Harrison, charge. We have a fine people whom it is a delight to serve. We are praying for the advancement of the kingdom and are expecting a great year."

Miss. Mollie Higginbotham, who is one of the Advocate's unfailing friends, gave us her usual annual club of subscribers from Mer Rouge, La., a few days since, consisting of 13 renewals and 4 new subscriptions. We highly appreciate this good service, and we pray God's richest blessings upon this faithful servant of the Master, who is noted for her good works.

We acknowledge the reception of a copy of the Directory of the M. E. Church, South, at Sayre, Oklahoma, of which Rev. W. L. Anderson, an ex-Mississippian, is the pastor. It is well gotten up in every respect, and indicates that this congregation is a flourishing one, with a minister who is abreast of the times leading it. We rejoice in the success of our friend in his western field.

Rev. R. H. Bamburg, our hustling pastor at Calhoun, La., who believes in taking care of all the interests of the Church, is remembering the Advocate in his rounds and pressing its claims. He gave us a club of 6 subscriptions on March 10, for which we heartily thank him. Of course, Brother Bamburg is meeting with success in the general work of the pastorate. He has the habit of succeeding.

Rev. R. I. Collins, whose zeal to extend our Lord's kingdom knows no abatement, under date of March 10, says: "Our work is going forward. We had a regular revival service last Sunday. God was with us in spiritual power. At the close I exhorted for the Advocate, and secured three new subscriptions, which I enclose to you." We appreciate this kindly service upon the part of our young friend.

An interesting revival is in progress at the Louisiana Avenue Church of New Orleans, of which Rev. J. L. Sutton is the pastor. The service last Sunday night, when Dr. I. W. Cooper preached, was a specially impressive one, and there were several penitents at the altar. Dr. J. M. Henry occupied the pulpit last Monday evening, and it was announced in the city papers that Rev. R. H. Harper would do most of the preaching thereafter.

Gibbsland, La., where Rev. J. O. Bennett is pastor, is happy in the possession of a neat new parsonage. Arcadia also has lately acquired a new home for the preacher—a tasteful and thoroughly modern bungalow. The pastor at the latter place is Rev. Hayes Howell, a transfer from Georgia, who is spending his first year in Louisiana. Echoes from up that way are to the effect that he has made a most excellent impression in his new field.

Mrs. Mildred Tate Wells, of New Albany, has recently had brought out by S. C. Toof & Co., of Memphis, Tenn., an illustrated volume of her poems. We feel sure that this announcement will be noted with interest by those who have had the pleasure, from time to time, of reading her verses in the Advocate. We have not yet seen this publication, but we hope to have the privilege of examining it at an early date, when we may have something further to say concerning it.

Under date of March 16, Rev. W. M. Sullivan of Shubuta, Miss., writes: "My father died on March 14 in the full triumph of a Christian faith. He was eighty years of age, and had been a steward in the Church for more than forty years." We deeply sympathize with Brother Sullivan and the other bereaved ones in this hour of sorrow. We hope that some one will furnish us a more extended account of the life and labors of the deceased at an early date.

At the annual meeting of the Religious Education Association of the United States, held in New Haven, Conn., March 4-8, Rev. Robert Selby was chosen Director of this organization for the State of Mississippi. This Association numbers among its directors many of the most eminent educators and clergymen of the country, and Brother Selby's election to a directorship in it is quite an honor and a fitting recognition of his deep interest in the cause of education.

After spending a few days resting and recuperating on the Mississippi Gulf Coast, Mr. W. P. Kretschmar, of Greenville, Miss., visited New Orleans this week, and while here paid our office an appreciated call. We scarcely need to say that we were delighted to grasp his hand and look into his face again. Brother Kretschmar is President of the Commercial Savings Bank of Greenville and is one of the most solid and promising young business men in the Magnolia State.

Rev. W. T. Woodward, of Sicily Island, La., writes as follows: "We have been very kindly received by our people. Our first quarterly conference included Sunday, March 8. The stewards made the same assessment as last year. This work suffered very much during the past two years as a result of overflows. We received an excellent 'pounding' this morning (the 14th) by the good people of Vidalia. Mrs. Sallie Ratcliff and Mrs. John Boatner, Sr., collected the various articles."

Our esteemed friend, Brother F. A. Howell, of Durant, Miss., has lately been interesting himself in the circulation of the Advocate in his community, with gratifying results. He recently sent us a club of 17 subscriptions, accompanied by a check to correspond and a few kindly words. Of his pastor, Rev. E. Nash Broyles, Brother Howell says: "He is doing a fine work here. We have had 26 additions to the Church since Conference, and the attendance upon Sunday school and the preaching services is excellent."

Under date of the 15th inst., Rev. W. W. Holmes, of Ruston, La., writes: "At the morning service on the first Sunday in this month, I received 24 persons into the Church, 18 of them on profession of faith. Fifteen were baptized at the altar. It was truly a great service, especially so since it came in the regular work of the church, no special revival meeting having preceded it. We have received 50 into the Church since Conference, most of them on profession of faith. Bishop Murrah will spend Sunday, April 5, in Ruston."

The National Child Labor Committee is holding its annual meeting in New Orleans at the time of this writing, and has brought quite a number of celebrities to the Crescent City, among whom are Miss Jane Addams, Dr. Felix Adler, Dr. Owen R. Lovejoy, United States Senator Robert L. Owen, of Oklahoma, and Judge J. A. McCulloch, of Greenville, S. C. An enthusiastic open air meeting was held in Lafayette Park last Sunday afternoon, at which a number of stirring addresses were made. The business sessions of the Committee are being held at the Athenaeum.

We are indebted to the following brethren, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere for two or more subscriptions sent in since the last issue of the Advocate: Rev. J. L. Greenway, Silver Creek, Miss., 4; Rev. W. W. Perry, Haynesville, La., 5; Rev. T. L. Porter, Eureka, Miss., 6; Rev. J. R. Bright, Moorhead, Miss., 10; Rev. Robert Randle, Eros, La., 6; Rev. D. M. Gean (Okolona Ct.), 5; Rev. G. A. Morgan, Opelousas, La., 6; Rev. J. M. Lewis, Carriere, Miss., 5; Rev. E. C. Grice, Bastrop, La., 4; Rev. W. M. Young, Amory, Miss., 9; Rev. J. W. Thompson, Meadville, Miss., 3.

In a personal note to the Editor, received this week, Dr. John W. Boswell stated that he is in fine health and enjoying life. As most of our readers know, Dr. Boswell is now connected with the editorial department of our Sunday school work in Nashville, Tenn. The Church is fortunate in having so true and able a man at this important post at this time, when some of the denominations are finding it difficult to keep the prevalent skepticism out of their Sunday school literature. So long as we have Drs. Chappell, Beatty, and Boswell in charge of affairs, Southern Methodism will be safe in this respect.

Rev. S. W. Miller, of Frisco, Texas, in renewing his subscription states that he must have the paper, since it brings weekly news of those whom he loved and with whom he wrought in former days. Brother Miller says that his grasp upon the things of earth is weakening, but that he feels that his anchorage on the other shore is constantly strengthening. Among the friends whom he specially mentions is Dr. T. C. Wier, of Starkville, Miss., whom he says he has known for 44 years. Of the seven men (including himself) who joined the Memphis Conference in 1869, six are still living and two are yet in the active work.

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of Booneville, Miss., sends us the following note: "After a brief illness in her home in Prentiss County, Miss., Mrs. G. W. Rogers, the mother of Rev. W. F. Rogers, of our Conference and Rev. J. H. Rogers, of Oklahoma, passed to her heavenly reward at 1 o'clock a. m. on March 14. She was in her eightieth year. A more extended account will be sent you later." We regret to be informed of the death of this mother in Israel, and our heart goes out in tender sympathy to the bereaved. May the Heavenly Father have them, each and all, in his gracious keeping, and may they be comforted by the Holy Spirit!

Rev. B. F. Lewis, our alert and active pastor at Crystal Springs, Miss., observed last week as "Institute Week" for his church. Services were held every evening at 7:30 o'clock, and the causes of the American Bible Society, Home Missions, Conference Claimants, Church Extension, Education, and Foreign Missions were discussed by the following speakers, respectively: Rev. W. H. Lewis, Rev. R. Selby, Rev. T. B. Clifford, Dr. W. H. LaPrade, Dr. A. F. Watkins, and Bishop W. B. Murrah, the last named occupying the 11 o'clock hour on Sunday. We do not remember ever having heard of an Institute of this kind before, but it seems to us that such a series of discussions would prove most informing and helpful to any congregation.

The many friends of Rev. H. R. Singleton in this section will be pleased to see the following brief message from him: "The work of our Church (Scruggs Memorial, St. Louis) is progressing favorably. I have received 75 members since last Thanksgiving Day, and expect to receive 100 more on Easter Sunday. Most of those who have joined up to the present have done so by profession of faith. The Protestant Churches of St. Louis have entered upon a campaign to win 10,000 souls for Christ and the Church during Lent, by personal evangelism. Our own 24 churches have fixed upon 1000 new members as our proportion, but we will probably come nearer 2000. We have secured 250 in the first two weeks, during the most severe weather."

HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

This, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is sure evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scourge. There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!

On the evening of January 8, the death angel came into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rich and bore away on "snowy wings" the sinless spirit of little MARIE, their only daughter, who was six years and a few months old. Her little life, though so short when measured by years, meant much to those who knew and loved her. She was an unusually bright child, possessing a sweet and affectionate disposition. We shall miss the little pattering feet, and the sweet childish voice, as she so often sang baby brother to sleep. But heaven seems nearer and a new link has been forged to bind our hearts to Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me for of such is the kingdom of heaven." She bore her suffering so patiently that she was indeed an example to those who watched her. May those who loved her remember that that which Jesus does is done well, and that they are only separated from their loved one for a short while.
A FRIEND.

Miss LUCY A. OSBORN was born at Mosley's Bluff, Union Parish, La., on September 8, 1877; and departed this life February 13, 1914. She was a daughter of N. B. and A. C. Osborn; and she had been an active member of the M. E. Church, South, for more than twenty years. Sister Lucy contracted tuberculosis, which after months of illness carried her to the grave. During all her sickness and pain, she was not heard to murmur nor complain. On the evening of her death, she passed quietly away. O Death, where is thy sting? She leaves her mother, one brother, two sisters, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Her mother lives in Pollock, La., and her sisters are: Mrs. Effie Ferguson, Alexandria, La., and Mrs. Hattie McCrary, Pollock, La. Her brother, Mr. Enoch Osborn lives in Oklahoma. The Church has lost a faithful worker, and the town a Christ-like life. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. E. G. Wood in the home, and by the Woodman Circle at the grave. May her life help us to press forward to the mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus.
E. G. WOOD.

The death angel visited the home of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Banks, at McDonald, Miss., and took from their tender embrace their infant son, MAURY MASON. Little Maury was 10 months old the day he departed for the celestial city, and was one of the most lovely little boys that I ever saw. His mother said repeatedly, "He was too good to stay in this world." His death was mysterious; there were three doctors present besides his father, but nothing could be done to stay the hand of death. The same loving Jesus that called the little child to him, taking him in his own hands and setting him in their midst, (Matt. 18:2) called little Maury to be with him. Little Maury leaves a father and mother, one sister and two brothers to mourn their loss. Weep not, dear ones, as those who have no hope; for little Maury is not dead; he has just left his earthly house for the one not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. So be faithful to Jesus and you will soon overtake him in that good home, where it will be one cloudless morning. Farewell, little Maury; we will meet you over there.
M. R. JONES.

Brother C. E. SPENCER, a native Mississippian, and a young man in his twenties, who had made his mark in the busy world, although so young, died February 25, 1914, at his home near McCarley, Miss., of measles and pneumonia. He was a member of the official board of our Church at McCarley and always regarded the rules of the Church as sacred, and showed his interest in the work by freely contributing to the support of the Church. There was a congeniality of identified interests between him and his pastor which greatly endeared him to that friend who deeply feels his loss.

The Carrollton Conservative says of him: "It is indeed hard to realize why it is so when death invades the ranks of humanity, and cuts down in the ardor and enthusiasm of bright young manhood, those who are cherished for the glorious achievements of the present and the buoyant hopes of the future, and this idea finds expression in the death of our young and sincere friend, who had already made a success in life, and whose future was bright with promise. But He calleth his beloved sleep," which is indeed the greatest of all human consolations.
WALTER JONES.

The subject of this sketch, Mr. F. M. REMBERT, was born in Wilkinson County, near Woodville, Miss., May 27, 1823, and died in Wesson, Miss., on the morning of March 2, 1914, aged 90 years, 9 months, and 2 days. While quite young his parents moved to Copiah County and settled near Brown's Wells. In 1871 he moved to Hazlehurst, Miss., where he was engaged in the mercantile business and in 1892 he moved to Summit, Miss. He spent the last 11 years of his life in the home of his daughter Mrs. J. S. Rea at Wesson, Miss. Nearly all of his life was spent in Copiah County. The Lord blessed this home with 9 children, two of whom preceded him to the spirit land. Seven of his children are still living to mourn their loss, 5 sons and 2 daughters. Brother Rembert joined the Methodist Church, South, when a boy. He loved his Church and was loyal and true to her support as long as he lived; he never forgot her financial interests. He took his Church paper as long as he could read it and when he was asked if he wanted his subscription renewed his reply was no but I will renew my pastor's subscription for one year, and so he did. In the death of Brother Rembert his children lost an affectionate father, and the community a useful citizen, and the Church a friend. We pray God's blessings upon all the loved ones he has left behind. May his grace be sufficient in this time of sorrow.
J. H. FOREMAN, P. C.

IN MEMORIAM.

Death, cruel death, has again invaded our community and snatched away, not one of the aged and infirm, but a boy. With prospects bright, all budding fair, just rising into bloom, Death came in an untimely hour and snatched him to the tomb. ROBERT, the youngest son of Mrs. Estelle Rich, was born on August 13, 1898, and died on November 29, 1913. His mission to this world was a brief one, soon finished, but not until he had made for himself a place in the affections of those nearest to him that cannot be filled. His was not a mission of long continued usefulness, nor a long and fierce struggle. He was a manly youth and made for himself many friends. It is only a few short months since the writer had the pleasure of looking into that handsome face as he came to the front in a meeting shaking the hand of his pastor, saying, "I am ready to do what the Lord wants me to do."

"A precious one from us has gone, A voice we loved is still; A place is vacant in our home That never can be filled; God in his wisdom has recalled the bloom his love had given, And though his body slumbers here The soul is safe in heaven."

Tidings From the Field

Rose Hill, Miss.

Many of our good people gave us a very hearty welcome on our return to this charge, for this, the third year. They showed their appreciation in one way by giving us a "pounding" better than any received in the past. We have many good people to work among. Our first quarterly conference was held recently and reports were very gratifying. What was reported on the pastor's salary was in advance of the first quarterly conference of last year. There were more than a hundred persons present. Dr. H. W. Featherstun, our presiding elder, was on hand, and preached a very deep and helpful sermon. He is giving a good account of himself, getting over his large field, the Newton District, as if he had scarcely reached the age of thirty. He is pushing every interest of the church and proving himself very helpful to the pastors. We are planning for great things this year and trying to work to this end. Pray for us.—D. E. Vickers, P. C.

Waterproof and St. Joseph, La.

We have begun our year's work with marked promise of a fruitful season. We are in a community that has been devastated by overflows for the past two years. But with the levees built stronger than ever before, and little or no water in sight so far, there is a distinct feeling of optimism throughout the country. This feeling is augmented by a most favorable season, as this country is wholly dependent upon the cotton industry for its material prosperity, and the season has been ideal for planting preparations. We have three appointments on the work, and at every service we are met by large congregations. It is, however, the work at Waterproof that we especially desire to mention. Our Sunday congregations are unusually large here, besides we have the best attended prayer meeting I have ever seen. We are at present using the Acts of the Apostles, chapter by chapter, for our prayer meeting studies, and making it really a study circle, which seems to have aroused no little interest among our church people and quite a good many non-church members. We have a teacher-training class that is doing splendid work on the advanced course. We have a "teen age" boys' social club, which we have organized into a boys' organized Sunday school class. The pastor claims them for his own. They are live ones. We have a splendid Sunday school at St. Joseph, presided over by one of the most consecrated Christian gentlemen it has ever been our pleasure to know—Brother B. F. Bonney. Brother Bonney is 82 years "young" and a staunch Methodist, a vigorous and enthusiastic Sunday school man, and is loved by a host of children and young people. Things look good up here in the swamps.

—Geo. Fox.

Webb, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: Were it not for the thought that some of our pastors may read this I would say that we have the best charge in the North Mississippi Conference, and certainly we have one of the most pleasant to serve. We are well into our third year and the outlook is very encouraging. There have been some valuable improvements made on the parsonage within the last two years. We have recently enlarged the kitchen and dining room, making them really comfortable. The ladies of the Missionary Society are raising money to make some valuable improvements on the other rooms. When this work is done, we will have a comfortable, neatly arranged parsonage. They are not only fixing a house for us to live in, but they also see that we have something to live on. A few days ago we were called to the church, and when my good companion and I walked in we were met by about fifteen ladies smiling and singing "Showers of Blessings." Our hearts were made glad, indeed, not so much for the material value of the groceries presented, which amounted to nearly $50, but for the friendship of the company who presented them. In this company were representatives of all the churches and some who do not belong to any church. After a brief song service, we all went over to the parsonage for a short stay and then came the happy time—when the children were carrying the packages and parcels from the church to the pantry and unwrapping them. The gifts ranged all the way from candy to a nice home-cured ham. Then on the back porch we found a new barrel of flour which some of the brethren had sent. Owing to some difficulties, such as a little bad weather, some spinal meningitis and other things, our prayer meeting is not as wide-awake as it should be. The Sunday schools at Summer and Webb are doing nice work. They have just added the Cradle Roll Department at Webb, with a membership of about fifteen. I have never had the pleasure of being the pastor of a more enthusiastic school than the one at Summer. The work there is very promising.—E. B. Sharp, P. C.

Meridian, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We were cordially welcomed for the second year by the kind people of Fifth Street Church. They have shown their appreciation in many ways. We have some as choice people here as it has ever been my privilege to serve. They are awake to every interest of the Church, and are giving us their co-operation in our efforts to build up the Master's kingdom. Our church, in all departments, is progressing nicely. Our Sunday school is doing a most excellent work. It is well organized, with an efficient corps of officers and teachers. The attendance is much larger than at this time last year. Our Woman's Missionary Society is moving forward, and is enthusiastic for a greater year's work. Our Epworth League, which was organized a few months ago, is doing a splendid work among the young people. The Board of Stewards have charge of all the church finances, thus relieving the pastor of the burden of raising the Conference collections. They have inaugurated a good financial system, which is being successfully worked. We have large congregations, and much interest is manifested in the services. We have been having some uplifting services. We are pleased with the revival spirit of our church. We have received forty members since Conference, 28 by certificate and 12 on profession of faith. Our special revival services will begin on April 19. We have secured the services of Rev. W. B. Hogg and Rev. O. C. Seevers for our meeting. We are expecting a great meeting. We have not forgotten the Advocate. We are now planning an active campaign for it.—H. A. Gatlin.

YOUR GRANDFATHER WAS A BOY.

When Gray's Ointment already had a long established reputation. Way back in 1847, Dr. Jas. A. Brown of Davidson Co., Tenn., wrote:—"I have often recommended Gray's Ointment for old and indolent ulcers—in one case of 20 years standing, occupying nearly the whole space between the knee and ankle, in which case it effected a permanent cure." Ever since 1820 Gray's Ointment has been heaping victory upon victory in its fight against blood and skin diseases such as ulcers, tumors, boils, burns, etc. It is an old tried remedy. Send for a Free Sample to Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., or get a 25c box at your druggists.

"Kind hearts are the gardens,
Kind thoughts are the roots
Kind words are the flowers,
Kind deeds are the fruits."

THIS WILL INTEREST MANY.

F. W. Parkhurst, the Boston publisher, says that if anyone afflicted with rheumatism in any form, neuralgia or kidney trouble, will send their address to him at 701 Carney Building, Boston, Mass., he will direct them to a perfect cure. He has nothing to sell or give; only tells you how he was cured after years of search for relief. Hundreds have tested it with success.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS.

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

JUST HALF IN BED.

Clyde, Ky.—Mrs. I. A. Decker writes from Clyde: "I recommend Cardui, the woman's tonic, to any woman in need of a remedy. For five years I was unable to do my own work. Half my time was spent in bed. At last I tried Cardui. Now I am well and happy, and can do my own work." Don't suffer pain, headache, backache and other womanly miseries when your own druggist has on his shelf a remedy for such troubles—Cardui. Get a bottle for your shelf. As a general tonic for weak women, nothing has been found for 50 years that would take its place. Try it. It will help you.—Adv.

Pure Blood

Is absolutely necessary to give the health that brings happiness, a good appetite, restful sleep, and makes you eager for life's duties. HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA makes pure blood and so creates this much-desired condition.

THE LOVE THAT NEVER DIES.

By Rev. F. A. Lane.

There is a love that never dies,
'Tis born of God above the skies;
It rids my heart of vilest sin,
And makes my soul rejoice within;
It makes me love my Savior, Lord,
And always trust his holy Word;
It lifts my soul above the skies,
Where holy pleasure never dies.

Makes me love my enemies, too,
As well as friends sincere and true;
It makes me walk where Jesus trod,
With faith in my dear Lord and God;
It gives me strength from him on high,
So that my soul will never die.
Oh, that we all possessed that love,
So all could live with God above!

RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY.

(The following resolution was passed at the first quarterly conference of Coalville (Miss.) Charge, Seashore District.)

Whereas, Brother W. H. Huntley, our beloved presiding elder, is kept away from us to-day on account of the death of his daughter, Miss Helen Huntley, be it Resolved, That we express to him and his family our deepest sympathy, and pray that they may be enabled by the help of God to bear their trouble and be resigned to His will.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be mailed to Brother Huntley; that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and that a copy be spread on the minutes of this Conference.

DON'T TAKE CHANCES.

About one piano purchaser out of four gets perfect and permanent satisfaction from the instrument he buys. If you knew the Piano business you would understand why this is the case, for most pianos now-a-days are made to sell and not to endure. The average piano looks good at first, and for a while sounds well, but after a few years it begins to show its poor workmanship and inferior materials by a thin or metallic tone.

Why take chances when the New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club absolutely insures your permanent satisfaction and at a great saving in price? A guarantee of permanent satisfaction means nothing unless it is made by a permanent firm. Ludden & Bates, the Managers of the Club, are the oldest piano house in this section of America, and they have always guaranteed and given permanent satisfaction. Their guarantee is as good as gold; that is why they were selected to conduct the Club.

Write for your copy of the Club catalogue and get acquainted with the greatest piano buying opportunity of the age. Address the Managers, Ludden & Bates, New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.—Adv.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, on January 12, 1914, the death angel claimed the spirit of our beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. Bettie Nelson, causing deep grief among her friends, be it therefore Resolved by the Woman's Missionary Society of Fifth Street Church, Meridian, Mississippi:

First, That we extend to the bereaved family our sincere sympathy, and pray God's blessings upon them in this bereavement.

Second, That in the death of Mrs. Nelson our Society has lost one of its most faithful members. Her influence was always felt for good. She was always ready to do what she could for the advancement of the Master's Kingdom. Her last church work was that of getting the parsonage in readiness for her new pastor.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our Society; that a copy be sent to the family of our departed friend, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

SPECIAL SCHOOL FOR FEEBLE-MINDED CHILDREN.

Parents and guardians of children of arrested mental development will be interested in the work of the Stewart Home and School, a private institution for the care and training of children of backward mental development. The School accepts children any age above five years and provides mental and physical training under teachers who have been specially trained for this particular class of work. Each child is under the daily supervision of a medical specialist who has devoted his entire professional life to the study of the physical and mental defects of these unfortunate children.

Home influences are thrown around each child and every means known to science is employed to develop them in mind and body to a point where they will be a pleasure both to their parents and to themselves.

The annual catalogue shows the splendid facilities afforded by the School and contains much information that will prove interesting and instructive to parents. Interested parties should address the Superintendent, Dr. John P. Stewart, Box 19, Farmdale, Ky.—Adv.

GRANDMA USED SAGE

TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to bring back color, gloss, thickness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant, remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," thus avoiding a lot of fuss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

WHERE DRUGS FAIL.

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the stomach rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from Shivar Mineral Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, gall stones, kidney or liver disease, uric acid poisoning or other conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer as printed below. His records show that only two in a thousand, on the average, have reported no beneficial results. This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful spring. Simply sign the following letter: Shivar Spring.

Box 17F, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

IMPORTANT NOTICE!

The Council meets in Fort Worth, Texas, April 8-16. The change of date for this meeting affects those of the Louisiana and Mississippi Annual Meetings. The Louisiana Conference Missionary Society will meet in Rayville, on March 31, April 1-2. There will be an executive meeting Monday night March 30, and a conference with district secretaries on Friday, April 3. Remember this change. Place, Rayville. Date, March 31, April 1-2.

MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL MEETING

The Mississippi Conference Missionary Society will convene in Laurel on April 24, instead of 17. Let all of our women bear in mind this important change, for whether you attend the annual meeting or not you should know when it is in session for your delegates and officers need your prayers that they may be wisely guided in planning the work and solving the problems for the coming year.

TO THE AUXILIARIES OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

When Caleb stilled the people before Moses he said, "Let us go up at once and possess the land for we are able to overcome it." May our hearts be still to-day, we are on the border line, seeing a new life and hearing a new voice saying: "Here am I, Lord, send me." Clara Godat stands at the threshold of a new land into which we may enter through her and with her. She is a new "life land" before us. Possession carries with it the idea of appropriation or reaching out, going forward, enlarging the place of our tent. Let us look out upon this "life land." Shall we possess it? Your auxiliary pledged in 1913 a certain amount for the support of the two missionaries who are giving us a share in the riches of Christ's kingdom in Brazil and Mexico. This opportunity of further entrance comes again to you to-day in this my most earnest appeal. Will you increase your pledge? We need, to support Miss Godat in her chosen field of work, $1000. $350 must be added to the Conference pledge of last year, making the total amount to be raised this year $2750. Please let me hear from you immediately, stating the amount that your auxiliary pledges.

Yours for service,
Mrs. A. P. HOLT,
Cor. Sec., For. Dept.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

There is a society in the Hattiesburg District that is very earnest in its work for the Master. Last year these ten members—that is the membership of the society—paid $297.95 to mission work, and this year they have pledged to support a boy or girl in school in China, and one man and his wife, she is one of the ten, are going to support a native worker in the same field. Every one of these ten members tithe and every one takes the "Voice." There is another Society in the same District that is doing good work too, but, as yet, it has only one department. When it takes up the other department perhaps it will do as good work as the other one mentioned; we hope so any way. The finest Young People's Society in the District is in a church where the pastor preaches only in the afternoon twice a month, and in this same church is a strong Children's Society. May this good work continue until there is a flourishing society for young people and children in every church in the Conference. In the Hattiesburg District there are twenty-one united societies, four that have only the Home Department and one that has only the Foreign Department. There are twenty-one Children's Societies and four Young People's Societies in the District. Four societies were organized last year after the Annual meeting and one has been organized this year. Our Conference First Vice-President says, "All our First Vice-Presidents ought to have Helps and Entertainments for Children, price 25 cts." These should be ordered from Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

This paper as its name implies is issued daily during the session of the Council, which meets in Fort Worth, Texas, April 8-16. Who wants to be behind the times? Not one of you, I guarantee. Then are you willing to be a "back number" when it comes to keeping up with your woman's work? Subscribe for the Daily and keep abreast with the new methods and plans which will be adopted from day to day during this meeting. There will be no halt in your work, you can move right along with your officers. Try it and see if it isn't money well invested.

NOTES FROM THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Executive meeting was held in Holly Springs, February 5 and 6. Every member of the body was present except Mrs. Jones, Treasurer, Foreign Department, who was detained at home. Plans for the general advancement of the work were made. The time of the annual meeting was fixed for June 11-15. This date was set to meet the wishes of Aberdeen, the place of meeting. A "Workers' Conference" is to be held in Aberdeen June 11, in the afternoon. This will be conducted by a capable leader and will prove of much good to those who attend. This is where the delegates will get the most benefit of the session, since this is where they will exchange plans and ideas of their own, as well as get the benefit of the opinions and advice of the Conference officers. All delegates are urged to go to Aberdeen to stay through the entire time, beginning Thursday, June 11, and continuing till Monday, June 15.

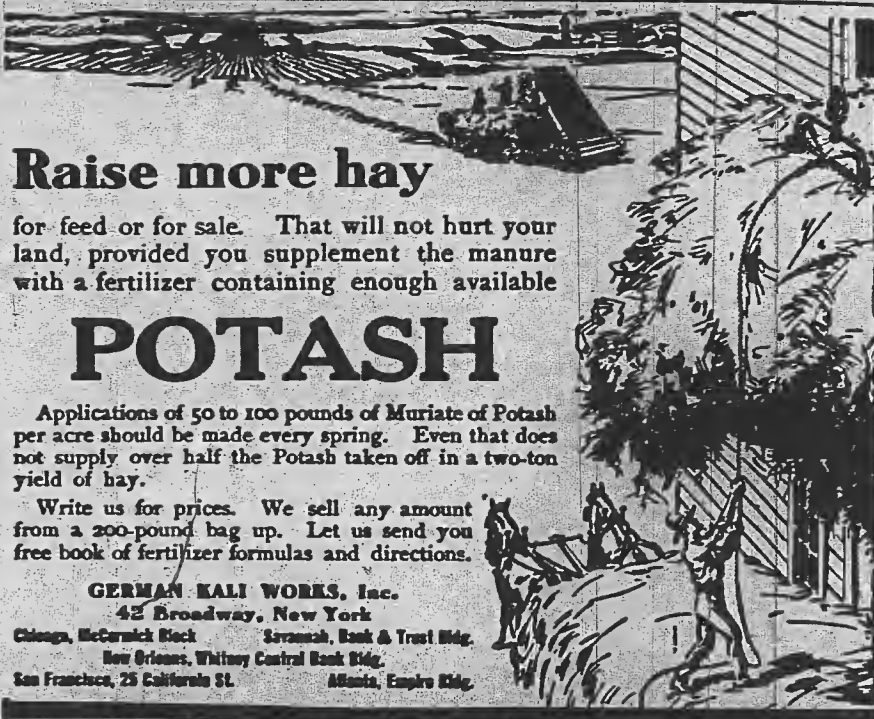

The Treasurer's report showed that the foreign department had raised $2800 on the pledge, nearer than ever before to the $3000 pledged for the Conference. The home department raised $1327 on Conference pledge, $125 more than was pledged. These figures are encouraging, and show that our work is growing in interest. At last, at long, long last, the Helen Finlay scholarship is completed, with a surplus of $22.50. This surplus was voted to be used to refund the "Mary K. Stone" room in Scarritt Bible and Training school.—A Miss. Bulletin.

DEATH OF MRS. WELCH.

Mrs. Dr. Welch, mother of Miss Maud Welch, our missionary to the Indians, died in January, after a long illness. The sympathy of all the women of the missionary societies is extended to Miss Welch in her bereavement. Mrs. Welch was buried in the Indian cemetery at Mount Scott. The Indians were present and showed their love and appreciation of her beautiful life.

ANOTHER TREAT FOR THOSE ATTENDING THE COUNCIL.

Miss Lockie Rankin, our pioneer missionary to China, will be present. She was the first missionary sent to a foreign field by the Woman's Missionary Society of our Church, having been sent to China in 1878. She sailed from Shanghai on the Chiyo Maru, March 10, and will reach Fort Worth in time for the Council meeting. A royal welcome will be extended to this missionary who has labored so long and so faithfully for China and for her Master. Of her it can be fittingly said:

"On the great love of God I lean,
Love of the Infinite Unseen,
With naught of heaven or earth between.
This God is mine, and I am his;
His love is all I need of bliss."

MRS. L. C. BARNES AT FORT WORTH.

One of the attractive services of the Council meeting will be the evening when Mrs. L. C. Barnes gives an address on "The New America." Mrs. Barnes is the author of the study course book by that name and has had large experience in dealing with immigrants. She is the author of the text-book, "Early Stories and Songs for New Students of English," which is used by many of our deaconesses in teaching English to immigrants. She is also Chairman of the Committee on Home Mission Interests among Immigrants of the Council of Women for Home Missions.

ATTENTION MISSISSIPPI AUXILIARIES!

Our Council Publicity Superintendent wants to have an exhibit of the Publicity Department from each Conference represented in the Council at the Council meeting the first of next month. Among the things she wants from our Conference is, "One copy of every secular paper in your Conference that has at any time during the year been used by the auxiliary Publicity Superintendent—the copy sent of course to have her contribution in it." She adds, "Please send whole papers and not clippings." Another thing she wants is, "One copy of every map or chart or poster that has been created in your Conference for publicity work. If none has been created in your Conference ask the auxiliaries to make one for this exhibit. Please have these made on cloth or paper large enough to be tacked up."

Any Publicity Superintendent or auxiliary that can supply these two requests please do so at once. Don't wait on some one else for they may put it off and this exhibit must reach Fort Worth by April 1! Please send to

Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Remedy.

Trial Package Mailed Free to Any Sufferer.

If you have catarrh of the head, nose, throat; if catarrh has affected your hearing; if you sneeze, hawk or spit; if you take one cold after another; if your head feels stopped up; you should try this Remedy discovered by Dr. Blosser, who has made a specialty of treating catarrh for over thirty-nine years.

This Remedy is composed of herbs, flowers and seeds possessing healing medicinal properties; contains no tobacco, is not injurious or habit-forming; is pleasant to use and perfectly harmless to man, woman or child.

Catarrhal germs are carried into the head, nose and throat with the air you breathe—just so the warm medicated smoke-vapor is carried with the breath, applying the medicine directly to the diseased parts. If you have tried the usual methods, such as sprays, douches, salves, inhalers and the stomach-ruining "constitutional" medicines, you will readily see the superiority of this Smoking Remedy.

Simply send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you a free package containing samples of the Remedy for smoking in a pipe and made into cigarettes, together with an illustrated booklet which goes thoroughly into the subject of catarrh. He will send by mail, for one dollar, enough of the medicine to last about one month.

The Sunday School.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By R. A. Maddox.

Mr. H. O. Thrash, of Chunky, writes that they are about ready to begin the Teacher training class there.

Get the basket ready for that five cent assessment collection. Don't go back on the order of the Conference.

Brother H. K. McKee is hard at work on the Oak Ridge Church. He has now two Teacher-training classes, using the Legion of Honor. Brother McKee believes in his Sunday school.

The Field Secretary was with two country churches last week, and resurrected the Sunday school at both places. Country pastor, if you need help in your Sunday school let the secretary for that work help you.

The five-cent assessment is coming in from several charges. The charge that fails to pay the assessment this year is going to be a "back number." Some of the very weak country charges have paid their assessment already.

Brother J. C. Chambers, at Collins, is wanting his Sunday school re-organized, graded and up-to-date, also a Teacher-training class; but that is just like Brother Chambers, for he is always pushing forward, and never going backward.

On the Braxton charge Brother W. Bishop Waldrop, the hustling pastor, is doing good work. At Braxton, where the parsonage is located, Brother Waldrop is loved by all in the town—by those of other denominations as well as his own members; and Brother Waldrop is not letting an opportunity pass to help them.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

If the readers of these notes believe in reciprocity, let them send in their notes of progress to the writer at Kentwood that what they have learned and have done may be passed on to help others. If they cannot show this much interest, then the work must be discontinued. To always be taking in and never giving out shows a poor type of Christian unselfishness.

The mixed young people's Good Samaritan Class of Kentwood recently had charge of one of the Sunday night services in the church, furnishing the music—vocal and instrumental—and the ushers for the occasion. In this way not only was the class recognized, but the capabilities of young people were found out that otherwise would for a long time have gone undiscovered. This occasion gave the pastor a good opportunity to preach on the work of the organized Bible Class.

The Wesley class of adult women of the Kentwood school and some of their friends recently enjoyed a very happy social meeting at the home of Mrs. H. E. Sanders, the president. Her home was tastefully decorated for the occasion, an appropriate program of music was rendered and refreshments served. This class was organized and built up largely under the leadership of Mrs. R. S. Walton. A recent service rendered the church by it was the re-arranging and padding of the altar knee rest.

In connection with recognizing staying to church as a meritorious feature of the children's Sunday school grade, the pastor at Kentwood is preaching them a five-minute sermon each Sunday morning, and having them to take the leading part with him in the responsive reading of the Psalm. Special music is furnished at times by those of them who are trained in the Junior Epworth League. Already the attendance of children at the regular preaching services has very noticeably increased and splendid results are expected. An entire 11 o'clock service is also occasionally given to them.

The Kentwood church has secured the use of a lot adjoining its property on which there is a vacant automobile barn that is to be converted into the meeting place for a boys' club and general social center for the young people of the church. This lot, coupled with the church property, furnishes ample room for tennis, croquet, and other outdoor games, as well as all the indoor games, and as the church is ideally located for a social center the members believe that in this plan they have great opportunity for service and for building up their church life. Mr. J. C. Pettit, who teaches a large boys' class, has been for some weeks reading the best books on organizations for boys and is now ready to organize a camp of the Knights of Ezelah, and proposes that the boys themselves shall do the work necessary to put the hall in order for their use. It will also be used for Sunday school classrooms.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Salts has a good Sunday school. Mr. Sampson, a busy business man, is superintendent, and all his teachers have joined a Teacher-training Class. The home atmosphere of the church is one of Sunday school uplook and enthusiasm.

Mr. Lauderdale had some 4 or 5 of his superintendents at the McCool Institute and so much good work was done in his charge that local workers in all these places promised to go out and assist the circuits where schools are unorganized.

Cockrum has a fine Sunday school, with 55 on the roll and an average attendance of 75. A live Teacher's Study Class meets Friday afternoon and a good class is taking the Advanced Teacher-training course. These good people are making great progress, and are doing such steady work that it is a joy to see them do it.

Vaiden has a choice number of Adult workers. Mr. and Mrs. Conger have the two Adult classes, and Mr. Conger will lead the large and interested Teacher-training Class. Mr. Langley has a fine Sunday school bank account back of him and already they are preparing to build new Sunday school rooms to their church, and are planning forward work along all lines.

Rev. E. Nash Broyles has doubled his Sunday school membership at Durant since Conference; 143 were present on a recent Sunday. From Miss Ramsey's fine Primary Class on to Mrs. Mayfield's newly organized Matrons' Class, all of Superintendent Landfair's teachers indicated a fine desire for better training and up-to-date equipment. This they will find in their new church, soon to be built.

Grenada has a fine pastor and people, a good Graded Sunday school through the Intermediate Class, and the pastor, himself, teaches a fine class of Teen Age boys and girls. Mrs. Stokes has the Men's Class and is doing good work. The bright-faced, attractive group of girls and the fine teachers from our own Grenada College make it a joy to speak to any Methodist audience there. These girls have special advantages along all lines and a superior one in that the busy and capable President finds time to teach the Bible and Psychology and one or two books on Sunday school work. This is one of the very finest methods to secure trained leaders in every town. It would make any Methodist genuinely proud to visit this college and see the fine things it is doing.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" FOR LIVER AND BOWELS

Cure Sick Headache, Constipation, Biliousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath—Candy Cathartic.

No odds how bad your liver, stomach or bowels; how much your head aches, how miserable you are from constipation, indigestion, biliousness and sluggish bowels—you always get relief with Cascarets. They immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the constipated waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your liver and bowels clean; stomach sweet and head clear for months. They work while you sleep.

Make This and Try It for Coughs

This Home-Made Remedy has no Equal for Prompt Results.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with 1/2 pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

This simple remedy takes hold of a cough more quickly than anything else you ever used. Usually conquers an ordinary cough inside of 24 hours. Splendid, too, for whooping cough, spasmodic croup and bronchitis. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

This makes more and better cough syrup than you could buy ready made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and other natural pine elements which are so healing to the membranes. Other preparations will not work in this plan.

Making cough syrup with Pinex and sugar syrup (or strained honey) has proven so popular throughout the United States and Canada that it is often imitated. But the old, successful mixture has never been equalled.

A guaranty of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

YOUR FRECKLES

Need Attention in February and March or Face Will Stay Covered.

Now is the time to take special care of the complexion if you wish it to look well the rest of the year. The February and March winds have a strong tendency to bring out freckles that may stay all Summer unless removed. Now is the time to use othine—double strength.

This prescription for the removal of freckles was written by a prominent physician and is usually so successful that it is sold by your druggist under guarantee to refund the money if it fails. Get an ounce of othine—double strength, and even a few applications should show a wonderful improvement, some of the smaller freckles even vanishing entirely.

EUREKA CHARGE, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Dr. Meek: If you will kindly allow me space, I will give you a brief outline of our work since Conference here in the Eureka charge. When we came here we found a charge with five appointments, with plenty of work to do. We were very kindly received, and we soon felt at home. We took in the situation, and seeing the great work that needed to be done, we said, "By the grace of God we will attempt great things for our Lord." I am glad to say our people have shown a willingness to co-operate with us in doing the work that was so much needed. We have made an auspicious beginning. We had our first quarterly conference on March 7 and 8. Brother Dornan, our "beloved," was with us on Saturday and preached a most excellent sermon to a large and attentive audience, after which he held the business session of the conference, every church, except one, being represented. The reports were good—the best in years. This, we hope, is only the beginning of still better things. Brother Lockhart came out from Batesville and filled our pulpit on Sunday at 11 a.m., preaching an inspiring sermon from the text, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." It was, indeed, good to be there. There is a great deal being said and written about a revival. We see the need of it everywhere; but I believe if it ever comes, we, as God's people, will have to give the Holy Ghost the right of way in our hearts and lives: "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." I believe in the old Methodist doctrines—not one, but all of them—and believing thus, I verily believe we as the ministers of Jesus Christ should urge our people to go on unto perfection, to seek the fullness of the blessing of Jesus Christ. Oh, Brother, it is the glorious privilege of every child of God to be "filled with all the fullness of God." It was this for which Paul prayed in behalf of the Ephesian Christians. May we, as the professed people of God, open our hearts and let the blessed Holy Spirit come in with all His illuminating power, and may our darkened spiritual vision be clarified, that we may see perishing men and women going down into the darkness of eternal night. The great enemy of souls never sleeps, nor takes a vacation. So let us be alert, vigilant and prepared for every good word and work. May our loins be girt about with truth and our lights brightly burning. "Awake! awake! oh, Zion, and put on thy strength." Yours in the good fight, THOS. L. PORTER.

IN REMEMBRANCE.

Miss NELLIE WILSON, the youngest daughter of G. W. and Mary J. Wilson was born October 12, 1894, in Lawrence County, Miss., in which place she lived until March 15, 1913. She then moved with her parents to El Centro, Cal., and there remained until her death. She was thrown from a horse on September 29, receiving injuries, from the effects of which, she never recovered and her sweet spirit took its flight on October 9, 1913. She leaves 7 brothers, 3 sisters, a father and mother, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. She was a sweet Christian girl, and was loved by all that knew her. She united with the Baptist Church at Wanilla, Miss., in 1907. I have often heard her say, that she would like to go through the ordinance of baptism again to show her faith in her Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. She had a spiritual vision while on her death bed in which her Savior was carrying her across the waters. Oh! how sad, to see one so young and fair plucked like a budding flower; and now, her friends and loved ones only have the sweet remembrance of one so pure and sweet. Her last words to us were "Meet me in heaven—I am gone." Oh, how sad those words, but surely we shall meet again in accordance with the promise of our Lord. Her remains were brought back to the old home she loved so well to be put away. A beautiful and touching funeral service conducted by Rev. R. J. Boon, her pastor, in the presence of many sympathizing friends and loved ones took place at the family cemetery after which she was laid to rest by loving hands, on October 15, 1913. May the loving spirit of our Lord and Savior comfort our aching hearts in this sad hour of bereavement.

Sleep on, sweet Nell, and take thy rest. God called you home; He loved you best.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

AT REST.

"The golden gates were opened
As a gentle voice said, 'Come,'
And with farewells unspoken,
She calmly entered home."

After 63 years of earthly existence, which began January 30, 1850, and ended, January 8, 1914, at her home in Singleton Springs, Miss., Mrs. MELLIE C. LENARD has entered the life more abundant, there to be with loved ones gone before. She joined the M. E. Church, South, quite early in life and remained an active member until her translation to the Church triumphant. We feel that in her we have lost a wise counsellor and a faithful teacher in our Sunday school. She was known as the preacher's friend. Her seat at Church and Sunday school was scarcely ever vacant. She was a true Christian, and delighted to talk on the theme of salvation and God's goodness to her. To her, it was a pleasure to visit the sick and speak words of comfort to those in distress. She leaves to mourn her departure two daughters—Mrs. S. R. Presley and Mrs. Estelle Rich; a sister, Mrs. Sam Hunter, and a host of grandchildren, relatives and friends. "Aunt Mell," as we all loved to call her, has left a vacancy that can never be filled.

"Call not back the dear departed,
Anchored safe where storms are o'er,
On the borderland we left her,
Soon to meet and part no more."
A FRIEND.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE,

May 5, 6, 7, 1914.

The Brookhaven District Conference will convene at Wesson, Miss., on the morning of May 5 at 9 o'clock. It is hoped that all the pastors, local preachers, and delegates will be in attendance upon the first session of the Conference, and will go prepared to remain through the entire session. The pastors will please to hold church conferences, and elect their delegates and send the names to me as soon as they can, so that I may have the roll complete for the opening session. This is very important to a good beginning. The regular committees will be appointed in good time. The program will be arranged for a profitable and helpful session. All the interests of the Church will have careful attention. Send Rev. J. H. Foreman, Wesson, Miss., the names of local preachers and delegates. Connectional men will have an opportunity to present their claims. ROBT SELBY, P. E.

THE DECISION AGAINST THE CHURCH.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee has spoken in the Vanderbilt case, and as will be seen from the dispatch sent out from Nashville which appears elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate, it has pronounced against the contentions of the Church on every essential point involved in the litigation. The supervisory rights of the Bishops, so plainly written in the Charter, and which Bishop McTyeire in his last will and testament urged them to exercise faithfully, have been completely swept away; the Board of Trust has been affirmed to be a self-perpetuating body; it has been declared that Commodore Vanderbilt, and not the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was the founder of the University, and that Mr. Vanderbilt did not give his money to the Church, and that the Church does not and has never owned the institution. The only vestige of authority left the Church is a sort of nominal right (not arising out of the Charter, but based upon a mere contract agreement) to confirm the trustees after the Board has elected them, the persons thus designated by the Board being empowered to serve until the time of their confirmation or rejection. And even over this poor pittance of power has been hung the threat that if the Church should exercise it "in a contumacious manner," it must cease to exist. This qualification seems to strip this confirmatory power of any real significance, for if the Church should take issue with the Board of Trust as to the fitness of any man to serve as a trustee, under this declaration of the Court she doubtless would be promptly overriden. In other words, the Church has been entirely divested of any property rights in the institution and of any voice in its government, and its possession and management have been committed to a small body of men which is wholly independent and the personnel of which is a matter of its own determining. (Not even does the Board hold the university and its possessions legally in trust for the Church.)

Uncertainty in All Litigation.

We deeply regret the outcome of this long-continued litigation, but we cannot say that it is a surprise to us. We have fought, as best we could, for the cause of the Church, not because we believed it was certain to win, but because we believed that it was just and right. We are not in the habit of championing principles because we think that they are popular and destined to triumph; but we try to stand for our honest convictions concerning pending issues, whether we think they will culminate in victory or go down in defeat. So far as the Vanderbilt suit is concerned, we have all along felt uneasy as to the result. Not because we had any doubt that justice and equity were on the side of the Church (that we believed with all our heart, and we still stand ready to maintain before that highest of all earthly tribunals—the enlightened Christian public); but because we were aware that Vanderbilt University had been cradled by Methodist preachers who knew little about the intricacies of the law and the importance of making everything in the charter clear and definite, so that no successful legal assault could be made upon it in the future. We, furthermore, knew that there is no certainty as to what the verdict of a court will be concerning matters in litigation. One court often differs from another and not infrequently in the course of time such tribunals reverse their own decisions. Law and equity do not by any means always accord, and legal technicalities often prevail, while bleeding justice is trampled underfoot. Moreover, in this particular case we have not been unmindful of the outside agencies that have been at work. We do not make the charge that any one of the judges in this litigation has been consciously swayed by wrong motives; but the ermine does not make a man more than human, and the atmosphere that had been created about these men in Nashville and which they had been breathing for months was distinctly hostile to the interests of the Church. And if in the history of the race there has ever been a man, except the great Galilean, who also was divine, that was large enough to rise wholly above his environment, so as not to be affected by it, we do not know his name.

And let it be distinctly noted that the hostile atmosphere referred to was a CREATED one—we used that word designedly in the sentence appearing in the preceding paragraph. It did not develop spontaneously in the course of the contest, as a result of the honest and unbiased convictions of the people of Nashville. It came chiefly in consequence of an unexpected development in the case—the appearance on the scene, at the invitation of Chancellor Kirkland of Mr. Carnegie, the great enemy of Church schools, whose millions of money, skilfully manipulated, have caused dozens of educational institutions to repudiate their denominational relations and obligations. The noted agnostic offered to donate $1,000,000 to the Medical Department of Vanderbilt University, $800,000 of which was conditioned on a verdict against the Church in the suit which was then before the Supreme Court, and which was to be decided in a few months. He also went further and delivered a lecture to the effect that a religious denomination has no business in the field of higher education. The proffer of this money and the thought that through the success of the Church in her litigation it might be lost to the little city on the Cumberland, made its citizens, in the language of Judge E. C. Reeves, "almost fiftified." Its papers suddenly began to flame with editorials against the contentions of the Church, and many of the people were wrought into such a pitch of frenzy that they railed out in opposition to her claims.

Nor was this all that was done. When the new Medical Department was organized some months later, Dr. Pritchett, of the Carnegie Educational Foundation, said to be an implacable enemy of religious schools, who had been made one of its trustees, was on hand and delivered a speech in which he dropped the hint that the million dollars given was only a beginning of what was needed. And when men who have millions at their disposal make hints, they carry not a little weight. This address was also scattered over Nashville; and as Dr. Ivey stated in our General Organ, while the case was being argued, the Nashville papers conspicuously paraded the statement that if the Church should win, the city would lose $1,000,000. All this went on where the Supreme Court Judges could not but be cognizant of it. Did Chancellor Kirkland inspire it? There is no record of his having disapproved of any feature of it. And for Mr. Carnegie's timely appearance on the scene and his remarkable offer, with its astounding conditions, it is admitted that he was in part at least responsible. And for these outrageous proceedings, unparalleled, so far as we know, in the history of Southern litigation, the majority of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust have unblushingly stood sponsor. They have not seemed to possess enough moral perception to see the grave improprieties involved. Or if they saw them, they apparently have felt that their situation was desperate enough to justify the means of assistance invoked. So, with an obsequiousness that was sickening and pitiable, they licked the Machiavelian hand that was stretched out to help them in their dire extremity. And even when the Church was slapped in the face and insulted by a man who belongs to no religious denomination on earth—a man who has advertised his skepticism to no small extent—not one of the so-called Methodists standing with the majority of the Vanderbilt Board cared enough to rise from his seat and protest against the affront given, though these gentlemen were supposed, in part, to represent the Church in the governing body of the University. If in the whole history of modern Christianity a more humiliating spectacle than that which these trustees (?) then and there presented can be found, we do not know where it is.

We shall not at this time undertake to review in detail the whole history of this long-drawn-out contest, but there are some points connected with it to which we desire to call attention. 1. Let it be noted that this case has been before three tribunals of a judicial character. It was first before the Vanderbilt Commission, composed of five Christian lawyers, every whit as able as the members of the Supreme Court of Tennessee. After all the controverted points had been elaborately presented by counsel, that body decided practically every important contention in favor of the Church, and laid down the platform upon which the Church has stood ever since. Next the case was passed upon by Judge Allison, a distinguished Tennessee Chancery Judge, who concurred in the findings of the Vanderbilt Commission in every important particular. Then the case went to the Supreme Court, which completely reversed the rulings of the other two bodies. The first two decisions were made before Mr. Carnegie hung up his glittering prize for a verdict against the Church; the last one was made afterwards.

2. The Church was not responsible for this lawsuit; on the contrary, she did everything in her power to avoid it, except to abjectly surrender her rights. From the starting of the movement to establish the University in 1871 down to 1905, the relations between the Church and the Trustees were entirely harmonious. This controversy began in the latter-named year when, at the instance of Dr. Kirkland, all of the Bishops except five were ejected from the Board of Trust. This was plainly violative of the following provision of the Charter, which Bishop McTyeire clearly understood had survived all amendments, and which he regarded as one of the two strong holds that the Church had upon the institution: "That the Bishops of the Methodist Church be and are hereby requested to act as a Board of Supervision of the University, and jointly with the Board of Trust to elect the officers and professors, and prescribe the courses of study and plan of government." In 1898, in a formal printed address, published in the Vanderbilt Bulletin, Chancellor Kirkland thus interpreted this clause of the Charter: "The Bishops of the Church, under the Charter, were made a Board of Advisers with powers almost, if not quite identical, with the Board of Trust." But in 1905 he proposed to abridge this part of the Charter, by having only five Bishops on the Board, and giving no recognition whatever to the Episcopal College as a whole. One who can see anything at all can perceive that to have surrendered this principle would have been perilous to the Church—it would have torn away one of the two strong arms by which she held the institution. But this was by no means the whole of the Chancellor's program; he also set in motion an effort to secure a proposed new charter in which it is dependably stated, the name of the Church did not at all appear. These movements necessarily awakened grave suspicion and created much unrest throughout the connection. So, when the General Conference met in Birmingham in 1906 the Vanderbilt Commission, consisting of five lawyers from different parts of the Church, was constituted, with instructions to study the various conflicting claims and define the relations

BE PATIENT WITH THE LIVING.

Sweet friend, when thou and I are gone,
Beyond earth's weary labor,
When small shall be our need of grace
From comrade or from neighbor,
Passed all the strife, the toil, the care,
And done with all the sighing,
What tender truth shall we have gained,
Alas, by simply dying?

Then lips too chary of their praise
Will tell our merits over,
And eyes too swift our faults to see
Shall no defect discover;
Then hands that would not lift a stone
Where stones were thick to cumber
Our steep hill-path, will scatter flowers

Sweet friend, perchance both thou and I,
Ere love is past forgiving,
Should take the earnest lesson home,
Be patient with the living;
To-day's repressed rebuke may save
Our blinding tears to-morrow,
Then patience—e'en when keenest edge
May whet a nameless sorrow.

'Tis easy to be gentle when Death's silence shames our clamor,
And easy to discern the best
Through memory's mystic glamor;
But wise it were for thee and me,
Ere love is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
Be patient with the living.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

UPPER CURRENTS.

By Rev. J. Marvin Nichols.

The most of us are dying for the want of the tonic of the upper currents. We have breathed the miasma of the bog and the swamp until our blood has grown sluggish and lifeless. Would to God we could more often stray outward and upward! Over in the hills of God every passing wind is freighted with something that tones the falling spirit. One rich draught of this healing air is worth all the toll that brings you to the regions where the upper currents stray. What matters the toll of the journey if at last you breathe an atmosphere that does not belong to the vale whence you came?—Nashville Christian Advocate.

A SIX-YEAR TIME LIMIT.

By Rev. C. A. Battle.

The itinerant system marked a new epoch in church polity. It is peculiar to Methodism. Yet it is strangely like the plan pursued by the Apostle Paul in his ministerial journeys of founding churches, revisiting them, and sending his preachers from place to place as they needed aid. The Baptist Church has been quite successful in the United States, now numbering 5,924,662 members, having started in Rhode Island in 1640—274 years ago. Methodism is far in advance of her sister denomination with 7,125,069 members, though having started in this country 120 years later than the Baptists. The great difference in progressiveness may be attributed to the peculiar organization of Methodism. Her every church is supplied with a preacher; changes are made when they are advisable in the sight of the watchful presiding elders; and the constant, active, moving body, filled with enthusiasm and the spirit of sacrifice, has wrought wonders for the kingdom.

If this powerful itinerant system, which has been tried and proved, is to be preserved for the future, the time limit in some form or other must be kept in use. Else the old habit of being given a place for the "living," as was in vogue in the days of Wesley, in the Established Church, will fall upon Southern Methodism. The polity of the Baptist Church has proved much more efficient than those of that order, even with its loose central organization. The kingdom of God was never organized for just the higher classes, for one soul is as valuable in the sight of God as another. "Mere numbers," therefore, must amount to a great deal in the kingdom.

That the itinerancy depends for its life upon the time limit is a well founded belief. The Methodist Episcopal Church removed the limit some years ago. It seems to be an accepted fact that church and preacher in many instances make their own bargains and the Bishop agrees to the plans. Great churches often practically "call" their preachers. In Methodism this is the breaking up of the ancient heritage of a sacrificial ministry, and the seeking for high places to there remain. So often one hears: "I do not like to move about from year to year;" or, "The Methodist Church entails such hardships upon men in that they never have the opportunity of remaining long enough in a place to build a home and to make friends." The spirit of Methodism in the past has been of the apostolic order. It would be a different thing if the new plans and ideas wrought better in the kingdom. No one would desire to subject the ministry to trials and hardships merely for the discomfort of it. But the Christian religion has thrived only through sacrifice. There is something wrong when the ministry continually complains about hardships and trials. It was never a bonanza; it was never a place of ease justly; and one should be content to be sacrificial or realize that the ministry is the wrong place for him. Paul said in writing to the Corinthians that he had a right to expect of them a carnal reward for preaching spiritual things, but lest he be hampered and feel dependent he would not accept the smallest remuneration, desiring to be free, yet the servant of all. Dr. Frank M. Thomas of the Louisville Conference said: "Looked at from below the itinerant wheel drips blood and seems at times to turn heavily and wearily upon its axis, but looked at from above it is studded with millions upon millions of immortal souls to its very periphery, flashing and gleaming and coruscating with the redemptive glory of the risen Christ."

It is the writer's opinion that most of the cries for relief from the time limit proceed from the city pastors and not from the more poorly provided-for country preachers. In the cases of the latter to remove the limit altogether might mean in many instances being buried in a barren field where they would not even have the opportunity of the Baptist brother in going to some other charge and preaching a trial sermon. The opportunity of reaching a greater field of usefulness would be far more limited. The present system holds out possibilities for a young man. He is perfectly willing to serve an apprenticeship in the light of future possibilities. Not that ambition will lead him into fantastic expectations, but that he will be given the opportunity of larger fields of service as his talent and development permit in the light of the possibilities and conditions. And this is perfectly in line with the spirit of sacrifice. To bury oneself, to spend one's time where only half the power in store is used is not sacrifice; it is waste.

What the writer wishes to advocate is a limit of six years in the hope that it will meet the needs of the city churches for longer pastorates and still preserve the great itinerant system. The cry has arisen for so long from the cities that a change is needed, that it seems that something must be done. A six-year limit would give, according to the habit of moving in other protestant bodies, ample time for a preacher to make himself known, grasp the situation, and expend all his energies upon the work. It is interesting to note the city work of Methodists under the time limits of the past. Dr. Frank M. Thomas finds from the census report of 1890 that Methodism stood third in the great cities of Brooklyn, Chicago, New York, and Philadelphia, being outnumbered in these cities by the Episcopalians and Presbyterians. Barring these, he says: "In all the cities of the United States of 25,000 population and upwards the Methodists led by a church membership of 427,630, the Baptists coming next with 350,444." This shows that outside of the four great cities mentioned above the Methodists were far and away the leaders. In spite of the cry, then, for a release from the time limit Methodism stood first. Methodism is still leading among the Protestant churches of the nation, and we may be assured that she has maintained her stand as first in the cities of the country. No government census of the city churches has been taken since then.

A six-year limit would preserve uniformity in Southern Methodism and still give as much time as one needs to accomplish his work in a charge. It seems that when a preacher stays at a church for a long time, the church loses its identity with its denomination and becomes more and more independent. One often hears people wonder who will be found to take the place of some great preacher when he is gone. Perhaps the unconscious reason behind it all is that this man has built up a church after his own order, and that it will be some time before its membership can get used to some one else. Should not the preaching of Jesus Christ stand out first of all? There are many who know Christ, and should they not be able to fill the pulpit? The writer noticed with interest some time ago a series of articles in the New York Christian Advocate entitled: "Unique Churches of Methodism." Does not the title sound somewhat peculiar? One of these articles told of a church with a vested choir, that had the recessional, and a form of worship bearing a twin likeness to Episcopalianism. The brother who was in charge of this church, had he been a Southern Methodist, would probably have been moved before he could have gone so far afield. One hears of high church and low church Episcopalians, and narrow and liberal Baptists. This is hardly possible under the Methodist itinerant system. A preacher is moved before he can completely individualize a congregation or so muddle the roll that it cannot be untangled. Southern Methodism has good statistical reports because of this constant check of one preacher upon the other. Proving the non-conformity of Baptists the following is quoted from a recent issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate: "The First Baptist Church, Ithica, N. Y., says the Continent, receives members from all evangelical Churches on certificate and without being baptized. Dr. R. T. Jones has been for thirty years pastor of this Church." This Church, it is evident, is no longer a Baptist Church, but is Dr. Jones' Church. Every one knows the leniency that a former prominent minister of the Baptist Church, Dr. Chas. F. Aked, practiced when in charge of a great Church in New York City.

A six-year time limit is possibly worth trying. Should there be signs of disintegration as a result of such an extension, the shift may be hastily made back to the four-year limit. The limit in the Wesleyan Methodist Church of England is three years, and there seems to be no thought of its removal. There is not much agitation of the subject of any kind in the Mother Church. Some are of the opinion that in the years to come it may be lengthened. The Southern Methodist Church has so far preserved all the qualities of the powerful Methodism of the past, and it will no doubt further distinguish itself by maintaining these noble characteristics.

FACTS ON THE BRIGHT SIDE.

A Generous Gift.

The gift of $50,000 for missions is not so common as to be prosaic. It has happened only once with us. It belongs to the missionary history of 1913. It was beautifully done by a member of another denomination in memory of a Methodist wife. The lofty evangelical sentiments expressed in the letter tendering the gift were as noble as the gift itself. "The Lydie Patterson Institute" in El Paso will stand not only as a worthy memorial to a Christian wife, but as an example of true catholicity and large liberality worthy of all praise. Mr. Millard D. Patterson, the donor, is a member of the Church of the Disciples. His generous gift made through Rev. J. F. Corbin is without conditions, accompanied only by the modest request that it be named for his departed wife and used for the education and evangelization of the Mexicans. This gift is timely. It meets a need and an opportunity created by the conditions in Mexico and the coming of Mexicans into Texas in such numbers.

I told the Secretary of the Board representing Mr. Patterson's Church about the gift. He replied: "I can match it. A good Methodist woman in Indiana has pledged our Board all we need for churches in Thibet up to the number of thirty." Surely we are progressing.

The Building Fund.

A quarter of a million for building and equipment is not a big thing for a great Church like ours. Yet it looks big until you have got used to it, and until you have really made up your mind not to just measure it, but to do it. Even then it continues to be worth while. At any rate, it thrills one to think of its possibilities in heartening and helping the missionaries, encouraging the native Church, and increasing the results. The fund continues to grow. The cause makes a strong appeal. We have recently held meetings in fourteen towns and cities in Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia and Tennessee. The results were more than $30,000 additional pledges to this fund, and some other pledges besides. Subscriptions have also been coming in by mail and from personal solicitations. The amount pledged directly to this fund at Junaluska was $113,270. The rest of the Junaluska offerings were for other objects. The amount subscribed since the Junaluska meeting is $41,270, making a total subscribed to date of $159,540. This leaves $90,460 yet to be secured. Shall we not definitely and unitedly and speedily finish what is so well begun? There had been paid on this fund in cash to March 1st $36,426. We are putting it into buildings as fast as possible.

The New Missionaries.

The Week of Prayer and Self-Denial has yielded to date, besides a joyous and cheering chorus of responses, a cash result of $10,328. Over $2000 of this came from one Conference, that of South Carolina. The money still comes in. In addition to this amount, there were numerous specials, including the support of some missionaries that came in as a direct result of this Week of Prayer. Altogether we find ourselves able to send out ten new missionaries in 1914, which is cause for great thanksgiving. The observance of this Week of Prayer next year should yield far larger results, both spiritually and financially.

Signs of Progress.

The support of more than half of the new missionaries to be sent has been provided for already. The demand for special objects was never so great as now. We assigned in January and February more than $12,000 in specials ranging from $25 to $1200. We recently wrote letters in one mail assigning four new missionaries. It is common for individuals to support their own missionaries, and quite common for them to support native workers. There are clear indications that a thousand churches in one connection will make the Every-Member Canvass this year. This will almost treble the number of those who did it last year, and will mean a great increase in the income for all the benevolences. By the way, why do not all our leaders, big and little, help us to stir up the churches on this subject of the Every-Member Canvass?

Quadrennial Facts and Figures.

The income from all sources, exclusive of that for Woman's Work, during the quadrennium, January 1910 to 1914, was $2,561,245, not including Mr. Patterson's gift of $52,000, which brings the total up to $2,613,245. This is an increase over the preceding quadrennium of $335,998. This is gain over the great financial outcome of a notable quadrennium, which itself registered by far the highest gain ever made in a quadrennium, and is, therefore, not insignificant.

The figures for Woman's Work when made out will be equally good if not better, and will put the total increase more than three quarters of a million for the quadrennium.

The income for 1913 was $749,055, including the Patterson gift. This is an increase over last year of $95,795.69, which is far and away the largest we have yet had. The income for the last year of the quadrennium exceeded that of the last year of the preceding quadrennium by $124,603. Yet the tide is not at the full. It is only fairly beginning to rise. And the needs, Oh, the needs; but that is another story with its dark side.

W. W. PINSON.

SOME REMINISCENCES.

Dear Doctor Meek: Sixty-five years ago I was quite a young boy. I lived with my parents in Griffin, Georgia. My father owned and operated the Planter's Hotel and also a plantation in Monroe County on which he raised everything good to eat that the land would produce; hence he never lacked for company—praying and otherwise. I do not remember dates, but it was near or during the Christmas holidays that an Annual Conference was held in Griffin. My parents, being true and loyal Methodists, entertained fifteen or twenty preachers during the Conference. I had saved up a few dimes from selling chestnuts to spend Christmas for firecrackers. I had made up my mind to have three or four of my friends to enjoy the fun with me. I would count those dimes over many times each day, and wonder if Christmas would ever come! One evening I buried my money to protect it from imaginary robbers. That night a heavy rain came and scattered my dimes from their hiding place. I found them all next morning, however, on top of the ground. The night came at last for the popping. My little friends and I were having a hilarious time when father sent me word to stop the noise, as he was afraid it would disturb the preachers. Even at this early age, I had great reverence for the preachers, but was disposed to censure them for being the innocent cause of interrupting my pleasure. I do not remember the Bishop, who presided at this Conference, but during the session and after, I heard much talk of the Bishop, and was anxious to see one, for I had no definite idea as to how one looked.

At this Conference a preacher by the name of Key was appointed to preach at Griffin. As the church had no parsonage, father gave him, his wife, and three children a home in his hotel. I often heard him speak of his preacher son stationed, at that time, in Savannah, Ga., and he appeared to be very proud of him; and it proved that he had a right to be, for he was afterwards elected to the episcopacy, and is none other than our honored Bishop J. S. Key, whom I saw for the first time in Alexandria, La., (which has been my adopted State since 1865), while he was presiding at an Annual Conference held there several years ago.

As I have stated, I was anxious to see a Bishop. During the latter part of the year mother called me and said that Bishop Andrew was in the house. I was greatly excited, and all during the day, at every opportunity, I peeped from concealed places at him, and was surprised to find that he looked very much like other men. The next day, with bare feet, I slipped up to where he and father were talking. I watched his every action and listened to every word. He said to father that he wanted to go out on the back porch where it was more quiet and take a smoke. I had heard father say that he had never smoked or tasted whiskey. I followed them to the porch. The Bishop was soon comfortably seated and puffing away. Father was pacing the floor to and fro and jocularly lecturing the Bishop for smoking. For a while he had nothing to say; then looking at father with one eye half-closed, he said: "Brother Freeman, you talk while I smoke." The last time I saw Bishop Andrew was about 1867, when he was presiding over an Annual Conference in Mansfield, La.

I was still a small boy, and seriously sick, when Bishop Pierce visited our family. He came into the room where I lay, placed his hand on my head, and spoke to me in a kind, sympathetic tone. He asked for a Bible, and after reading a few verses from one of the Psalms, prayed earnestly for my recovery.

When I had become much older father carried me to a Commencement at Emory College, at Oxford, Ga., having it in view to send me there to school at some time in the future. On that day the college hall, said to be at that time the largest in the State, was crowded with people like sardines in a box. Bishop Pierce and his father, Dr. Lovic Pierce, with others, were seated on the platform. One of the senior class stepped upon the platform and, facing the Bishop, presented him with a gold watch, accompanied with a few appropriate remarks. I do not remember anything of the Bishop's reply, but when I looked over that vast assembly two-thirds of it appeared to be bathed in tears, which made a lasting impression upon my mind.

The time having arrived for me to enter college, I secured board in the home of a Methodist presiding elder by the name of Yarborough. I think he has a son at this time in the North Georgia Conference. A young man was boarding there by the name of A. G. Haygood, and asked me to room with him, which I agreed to do. He was a senior and would graduate at the close of the session. He was one of the most thorough Christians I ever knew. He entered his closet six times each day for secret prayer—before and after each meal. He was studying for the ministry, and occasionally I would go with him to one of his Sunday appointments out in the country. At one of these I took my seat in the "amen corner." When the hymn was given out, I was the only one in that corner that made any effort to sing, and I flattered myself that I was making good music. After the services one of the members asked us to dinner. At the dinner table he wanted to know who it was "over in the corner that sang like his head was in a barrel?" Haygood and myself had a good laugh over it on our way back home. On one occasion I was sick in bed and was anxious to be quiet; but Haygood insisted on preaching me a sermon. He stood on the hearth facing me, and for ten or fifteen minutes put much animation into what he had to say. When he closed he wanted to know how I liked it. I replied that I thought it very, very good. He said he did not think it would do to preach to an intelligent congregation. I replied that it was saying very little for the intelligence of his present congregation.

On Sunday morning of the Commencement week, Mrs. Yarborough came to my room and told me if I would like to witness a marriage to step into the parlor. I did so thinking it was one of her numerous jokes. Very soon Haygood entered with Miss Yarborough, and they were married, to my astonishment. The next day he made his Commencement speech. His subject was "Mirabeau." This same A. G. Haygood was afterwards elected to the episcopacy of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Those of whom I have written were great and good men who made a lasting impression upon me for good. They have all "passed over the river" except Bishop Key, and I hope to meet him and them in that land where there "will be no night, and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign forever and ever."

DECISION AGAINST THE CHURCH.

of the Church to the University. This was in the nature of an arbitration tribunal appointed by the Church to settle, if possible, all disputed matters outside of the Courts. When, after hearing all the parties interested, the Commission rendered its decision, the Church accepted it fully and without reservation, and, as we have said, has adhered strictly to it ever since. Not a single new claim has been put forward. But the Vanderbilt Board of Trust passed an ambiguous resolution concerning the findings of the Commission, which was variously construed. To what extent it had accepted them could not be learned. Conflicting rumors were afloat as to the attitude of its members. Meantime, Dr. Kirkland tried to pass through the Tennessee Legislature a bill conferring upon the trustees of educational institutions strange and suspicious powers.

Such was the status of things when the General Conference met at Asheville, N. C., in 1910, and found itself confronted with a flood of memorials from all over the connection asking that the relations of the Church and University be definitely determined. This the Conference tried to do, but the Vanderbilt Board of Trustees refused to confer with its representatives, or to state unequivocally what its attitude was as to the findings of the Vanderbilt Commission. The only practicable alternative that the Conference had left was to elect three trustees to fill the vacancies then existing on the Board, thus forcing that body to take some definite position. The trustees referred to were elected, but to show that it was not revolutionary in spirit and only desired to settle the principle involved, the General Conference immediately delegated the right to name the trustees back to the Board and authorized the continuance of the old plan. When the Board of Trust met in the succeeding June, it refused to seat the men elected by the General Conference, denied that the Church had any right to even confirm the trustees, and actually went to the length of voting down a resolution declaring that, while it was independent, it held the University in trust for the Church. Then as a dernier resort—when every other effort had failed, when the charter rights of the Bishops had been trampled under foot, and when the flag of open rebellion had been hoisted—the Church reluctantly appealed to the Courts. These are facts which cannot be successfully controverted and they plainly show who was responsible for this litigation. The truth is, the Church had before her only two alternatives: one was to submit to being quietly thrust out of the University without exhibiting opposition; the other was to stand up for what she conceived to be her rights and make the best fight that she could. She pursued the latter course, and we respectfully submit that it was far the better and nobler one. It would have been an ignominious betrayal of a sacred trust committed to her hands and of the interests of future generations of Methodists to have allowed Chancellor Kirkland and his associates to carry forward their work of spoliation without a battle.

3. This assault upon the rights of the Church originated from within the Vanderbilt Board of Trust. Mr. Carnegie's millions were, in our opinion, what incited Dr. Kirkland and his coadjutors to want to get rid of the Church, but they themselves hatched all the schemes and started and fanned the flames of disaffection. There was no complaint from the Vanderbilts or any outside party that had any means invested in the institution. We do not doubt that if Chancellor Kirkland and two or three other persons on the Board had let the matter alone, the rights of the Church in the University would have gone unchallenged forever. But these men knew the ambiguities and weaknesses of the Charter, and we think that all the indications are that they felt that the Church's power in the institution was a hindrance to its growth and that they set out deliberately to curb and destroy it. So if this last decision is accepted as final, and the Church has lost her leading school, here is where the responsibility for the outrage should properly rest. She has been betrayed by those who claimed to be her loving sons and into whose hands she confidently committed her sacred interests. We challenge their partisans to show a single thing that the majority of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust has ever done to strengthen and safeguard the rights of the Church in the institution.

4. But was it not unwise for the Church to go to law and lose the recognition that was still given her in the University? We do not think so. If she had no charter rights in the institution that were indestructible, the sooner she was made aware of that fact the better. Any other sort of rights were but ropes of sand and were liable to be revoked at any time. There could have been no sound wisdom in letting her nurse a delusion and go on putting her money into an educational plant and building it up with her support and patronage when she could be ejected from it at the pleasure of those by whose sufferance she was there. Who would want to build houses on land to which somebody else holds the title? No, no; if the Church has gained nothing else by this suit than the knowledge as to how she stands with reference to the University, the litigation is worth all it cost. The thousands of dollars she has put into it in bygone days may have passed into other hands, but she will know better than to let her funds be thus swept away from her in the years to come.

Future Course of The Church.

But what of the future? Will there be further litigation? We do not know. If not, what attitude will the Church assume toward the University? That is a matter that must be determined by the General Conference. This much, however, we will say: It is inconceivable to us that the Church should allow her theological seminary to continue to have any connection with an institution in which the students could hilariously celebrate the destruction of every right that she had in it and the spoliation of her property. To permit our young ministers to be educated in such an atmosphere would be nothing short of suicidal. And personally, if the verdict of the Tennessee Supreme Court stands, we are in favor of the Church severing all connection with Vanderbilt University, and adopting some other central institution, such as Trinity College or the Southern Methodist University at Dallas. We do not think that the Church can afford to stand sponsor for things as they have been going on at Vanderbilt within recent years, and which she is now powerless to correct. And in view of the course which the people of Nashville have pursued in exhibiting their hostility toward the interests of the Church while they were pending in Court, we are not certain but that she would do well to remove her Publishing House to some other city where the property rights of religious denominations are more respected and better safeguarded.

Methodist People Should Express Themselves.

One thing more: this decision of the Supreme Court, if not appealed from, is liable to shift the whole line of battle concerning Vanderbilt issues at the General Conference. New questions are likely to arise, regarding which the delegates may not know the mind of the Church. We therefore respectfully suggest that it might be well for all District Conferences meeting before May to pass resolutions expressing their sentiments as to what ought to be done in view of the late developments that have taken place. We believe that a delegate to our law-making assembly ought to rightly represent his constituents, and if we know the view of ours, we shall either do this, or refuse to sit in the General Conference and let some one else who is more in accord with their sentiments have an opportunity to serve them.

We have now arrived at a crucial hour in which the rank and file of Southern Methodism—the plain preachers and people of the Church—who are sound in their faith and principles, should speak out and make their voices heard and their influence felt. They are in the majority and they should decide whether in the future the Church shall own and control her educational institutions and keep them true to Christian ideals, or whether she shall align herself with schools in the hands of others who look with tolerance upon dancing, theater-going, and other forms of worldliness, to say nothing of skepticism and higher criticism, and become corrupted and injured by them. Such is the issue that now squarely confronts us, and tremendous are the interests at stake. We stand at the parting of the ways.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT NOTES.

There is probably no part of the great State of Louisiana quite so busy and so thrifty today as that section embracing the progressive cities of Shreveport and Mansfield. God has marvelously endowed the whole State, and the people of this particular section are not only discovering and developing the rich agricultural resources, but the vast stores of oil and gas, as well. Property values, both in town and in the country, are rapidly increasing, and many people from different parts of our own State and from many other States are coming here to secure employment, to invest their capital, or to build homes. All this gives the church a large opportunity and places upon her a grave responsibility. My predecessor and his co-laborers had wrought well and the church had kept up with the progress in material things. At the beginning of the present year we saw still greater opportunities for extending our work, strengthening our organizations, and undertaking new enterprises; but above all we felt that our supreme need was a genuine spiritual awakening. The pastors and leading laymen of the district are heartily co-operating with the Elder in every forward movement, and all are uniting in earnest prayer and endeavor for a great revival throughout the entire district and the Lord is already answering our prayers. Centenary College has just closed a Y. M. C. A. revival in which many of the students were converted or led into a deeper experience. First Church, Mansfield has recently had a revival of two weeks resulting in much good to that church and community; and we are now in the fourth week of a revival in our Texas Avenue Church which has already resulted in 198 conversions and the bringing of new life to the church. And we have been rejoiced at the deep work of grace going on through the regular services and ordinary channels of work in many of the charges—conversions often occurring in the regular services and in-gatherings taking place from week to week.

Sexton is winning every heart at First Church and this great organization is destined to become a potent factor in molding the moral and spiritual life of this vigorous city.

Means is in high favor with his people and the J. S. Noel, Jr., Memorial Church is growing in membership and increasing in influence in the heart of that choice section of the city in which it is located. There is a splendid spirit of good-fellowship among the members, every department of the work is prospering, and we are confident of this becoming one of the great churches of Methodism.

Young took charge of Texas Avenue in the days of its seeming decadence, and with solid piety, deep consecration, and unshaken faith, he continues to work assiduously, and the Lord is giving him the victory and rejoicing our hearts in the new life that he is giving to this important church.

There is to be found nowhere a more diligent, efficient and well-beloved pastor than Morris of Mansfield, and no pastor has a more delightful charge among a better people. All debts on the property have been paid, a handsome donation is being made to Mansfield College, the assessments for the support of the ministry have been increased, all organizations are active and there is a rich vein of spiritual life in the church.

Brother Tucker, at Leesville, is demonstrating his usual ability as a leader and builder in many ways, one of which is in the rebuilding of the parsonage.

Alford, at Vivian, has won the high esteem of all the people of that thrifty little city and plans are being rushed to consummation for the erection of an elegant brick church this year.

The Ida charge, under the able leadership of Brother Crews, is making gratifying progress. Among other things of interest in that charge is the anticipated building of a church at Belcher.

Morris at Mooringsport, McCoy at Queensborough, Power at Logansport, Holiday at Couchatta, Staples at Greenwood, Price at Grand Cane, Henderson at Many, Henderson, Jr., at Pelican, Holiday at Pleasant Hill, Rousseaux at Zwolle, Napper at Anacoco, Roberts at South-Mansfield, Bolts at Lachute, and Anders at Wesley, are all proving themselves to be workmen that need not be ashamed. Space will not permit mention of their many good works at this writing. Brother Henry, who has recently taken charge at Westdale, reports gratifying progress there.

It would be a pleasure to mention the hospitable Christian homes in which the elder has had the privilege of being a guest, and the big-hearted laymen whom he has met; but this will have to be reserved for some future time.

Yours in the work, with brotherly love,
WM. H. COLEMAN, P. E.
Shreveport, La.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

In the burning of our church at Zachary on March 8 our membership have suffered a great loss, and as we are not able to rebuild without help, we have decided to make an appeal through the Advocate, and we hope that its generous readers and the many good friends in our former charges will help us in this time of need.

Your brethren in the Master's service

THE VANDERBILT DECISION.

The following dispatch, which we take from the Times-Democrat, was sent out from Nashville, Tenn., on March 21:

"Vanderbilt students to-night celebrated the sweeping victory given them by the Supreme Court of Tennessee in the celebrated lawsuit with the Methodist Church, by pulling off a monster torchlight parade through the streets of the city. Nearly 1000 students were in the line of march. The procession was led by a brass band in a tally-ho and following this came a long line of honking automobiles, and yelling, cheering, singing students. The boys called at the home of Chancellor J. H. Kirkland and serenaded him. The great crowd stood with bared heads and sang the Alma Mater and the Vanderbilt Ode. Chancellor Kirkland made them a speech of thanks and predicted greater things for Vanderbilt in the future.

"The decision of the Supreme Court to-day was a sweeping one in favor of the University and was unanimous. The opinion delivered by special judge W. R. Turner, who was appointed by Gov. Hooper to sit in the case because of the incompetency of one of the judges in the case, covered seventy-one typewritten pages and went into every phase of university history.

Says Vanderbilt Was Founder.

"The Court holds that Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt and not the Methodist Church or the Bishops or congregations, founded and made Vanderbilt possible; that the project attempted to be launched by the Church had failed for lack of funds when Vanderbilt came to the rescue. The Court holds that the General Conference of the Methodist Church had no right to attempt to elect members of the Vanderbilt Board of Trustees; that the Board itself has the right to elect its own members and perpetuate itself, its selections being subject to ratification by the General Conference of the Church through the General Board of Education of the Church, acting for the Conference. The opinion holds further that should the Conference attempt to exercise this power of ratification or confirmation in a contumacious manner, the right of approval or disapproval shall cease.

"The Court holds that the Methodist Bishops have no right to ex-officio membership on the Board of Trust and have no visitorial rights with respect to the affairs of the University."

Church Has Never Owned University.

The following is an extract from the decision of the Supreme Court:

"The second (Memphis) resolution, 'that the institution be called the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South,' does not necessarily mean ownership of the University by the Church. If it stood alone it might imply as much, but in connection with the other resolutions it is intended merely to define the character of the institution, and invite the affiliation and influence of the Church. Such, too, was the purpose of the fifth resolution as to its location by the Bishops, and the ninth, as to the relation of the Bishops to the University.

"At first the whole Board was made up of representatives of the several Conferences. Then, as these representative members were reduced in number, others were admitted who did not represent and were not named or confirmed by the Conferences. All of these changes were originated and made by the Board, but most of them, at least the more radical ones affecting the representation of the Conferences, were submitted to and approved by the Conferences. This arrangement from the first was referred to by the Conferences as a contract, and usually by the Board as a by-law relation between the parties. We think both were right, and that it amounted, in fact, to a trust relation between them. The relation, both by the Memphis resolutions, and the practical interpretation thereof by the parties, was not that of ownership by the Conferences, but of co-operation with the University and fair representation in its management."

DR. DUBOSE ON THE SUBJECT.

We take the following from the Nashville Tennessean of March 21, which was wired to that paper from Atlanta, Ga.:

Dr. H. M. DuBose, one of the leading preachers of Southern Methodism, and now pastor of an Atlanta church, said to-night in discussing the Vanderbilt University decision by the courts:

"The effect of this decision will be far-reaching on the fiscal and educational affairs of the Church. The theological school, which the Church has for forty years maintained at Vanderbilt, will, no doubt, be early removed to a more hospitable locality. Also it is more than probable that at the General Conference, to meet a month hence at Oklahoma City, a proposition will be made to locate in some other city the vast interests of the Church at Nashville.

"These are the Publishing House, the Mission Board, and other connectional interests representing an investment of more than a million dollars, and handling through the banks revenues that amount to $2,500,000 annually. These removals, if made at all, will be made as a matter of fiscal policy and necessity. The Church must have a university, and also a theological school, and wherever that is placed, its other interests will be gathered.

"That the Methodist Church is the founder and rightful owner of Vanderbilt University is the belief of 99-100ths of the members of the Church. The facts are too well known and the belief too deeply grounded to be dispelled by a technicality, though the decision of a Supreme Court be behind that technicality. There are many men living who know the facts first hand. For thirty years after its founding, the Church was in undisputed possession and control of Vanderbilt University. It was only about eight or nine years ago that this ownership and right of control were disputed, and then only after the great secular educational foundation of Rockefeller and Carnegie had entered into destructive competition with the religious bodies of America."

FEELING INTENSE.

The result of the decision of the Supreme Court to-day in the Vanderbilt University case may be the removal of the headquarters of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, from Nashville to Atlanta.

For all practical purposes Nashville has been the headquarters of the Church for many years, and if, with its Publishing House, it leaves Nashville, the loss will be felt.

In and around the Publishing House and in many Methodist homes in Nashville the feeling over the court decision was intense. It was looked upon as a blow at the Church in that it would divorce the great University founded by Commodore Vanderbilt presumably upon Methodist lines, which would drift away from the Church and become in part non-sectarian.

Many staunch Methodists were talking of the possibility of carrying the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, saying that nothing should interpose to prevent the Church from coming into its own. They seem to look upon the action of the Court as an attack upon the Church.—Nashville Dispatch to Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Bishop A. W. Wilson was reported to be seriously ill at his home in Baltimore, Md., last week, having had a succession of chills on Sunday, March 15. A press dispatch from Baltimore on the 18th inst., stated that he was thought to be somewhat better.

Dr. John R. Mott's course of missionary lectures, recently delivered at the Garrett Biblical Institute, at Evanston, Ill., drew audiences so large that it became necessary to leave the school chapel for the auditorium of the First Methodist Church of that city.

At a meeting held in New York City on March 13, the Trustees of Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn., decided to erect an observatory to cost $75,000, a new dormitory, a new library, a new chemical laboratory, and a fraternity house. The total outlay for these buildings is expected to be about $1,000,000.

It looks as if Mr. Bryan's proverbial bad luck is still with him.

According to the State Bureau of Vital Statistics, 21,306 persons died in Mississippi last year. Of these 7644 were whites and 13,662 were negroes. The white death rate was 9.3 per thousand, while that of the colored people was 13 per thousand. Of the total number of demises, 9012 are thought to have been preventable, or at least postponable. The leading causes of deaths are set down as follows: Tuberculosis—524 whites, 2041 negroes; pneumonia—510 whites, 915 negroes; pellagra—209 whites, 586 negroes. There were 447 homicides in the State, 162 being of white persons and 285 of negroes. This homicidal record is frightful, averaging more than five killings to the county. Mississippi has no more urgent need than a better enforcement of her criminal laws.

A LIST OF BOOKS FOR YOUNG PREACHERS.

There frequently come to Trinity College requests from young preachers to furnish a list of books on theological subjects. To meet this demand, Bishop J. C. Kilgo and Dr. F. N. Parker were asked to prepare such a list. They have tried to select books written by scholarly and devout men on the leading doctrines of the Christian religion and kindred subjects. Many studious young preachers are so situated that they have not the opportunity to select for their libraries the class of books which they should study. Care has been taken to put into this list only such books as should be diligently and repeatedly studied. Bishop Kilgo and Dr. Parker feel sure that such a study of these books by young preachers will not only widen their views and give them a sound knowledge of the deep truths of Christian doctrines, but will deepen their spiritual life and strengthen their faith.

The list of books referred to is as follows:

- "The Life of Our Lord" (Andrews).
- "The Divinity of Our Lord" (Liddon).
- "The Place of Christ in Modern Theology" (Fairbairn).
- "The Person and Place of Jesus Christ" (Forsyth).
- "The Virgin Birth of Christ" (Orr).

THE MID-YEAR MEETING OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS AND THE "EVERY-MEMBER CANVASS."

The mid-year meeting of the Board of Missions of the Mississippi Conference, which was held at Court Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., March 11-12, was well attended, and proved to be a highly enjoyable and profitable occasion. For perhaps the first time in the history of the Board, the attendance of the lay members exceeded that of the clerical members, and it was gratifying to note the deep interest taken by our laymen in the work of the Board and of our missionary campaign.

In addition to the members of the Board, ten pastors were present from the territory contiguous to Hattiesburg and appeared to enjoy the Conference heartily. We feel sure that they returned home with their hearts aglow with missionary zeal and with minds filled with fresh missionary information. Our Board of Missions greatly appreciated the presence of the four presiding elders, who, though exceedingly busy, so arranged their work as to co-operate in the holding of this joint meeting to pray together and to formulate plans for a forward movement in missions. If there is to be an advance in missionary offerings and enthusiasm in our Conference during 1914 over previous years, the hearty co-operation of every pastor and presiding elder and lay leader and steward is absolutely necessary. Let us make a strong pull, and a pull altogether for full collections, for a quickening of missionary interest all along the line.

"The Relation of the Presiding Elder to a Forward Movement in Missions" was impressively presented by Rev. Robert Selby, Presiding Elder of the Brookhaven District, who made it clear that the active co-operation of the presiding elder is absolutely necessary to success in the missionary campaign in each district. A presiding elder who is on fire with missionary zeal, and who pushes the missionary interest, which is the great driving wheel of the Church, will be sure to see his district move forward along all lines.

A carefully prepared address on, "The Need of Aggressive Missionary Evangelism in the Home Field" was delivered by Rev. Geo. H. Thompson, who made some startling disclosures regarding the spiritual destitution which prevails in some portions of the Seashore District. The fact was brought out that similar destitution, though not so extensive, prevails in one or two other districts. A specially prepared map was used in connection with the address, and served to make it more impressive. Prof. G. L. Harrell, of Millsaps College, Conference Lay Leader, delivered a thoughtful and helpful address on, "How May We Induce Our Laymen to Co-operate More Generally and Heartily in Our Missionary Campaign?" the key-note of his remarks being, "Give the laymen something to do."

The addresses delivered by our General Secretaries, Dr. John M. Moore and Dr. C. F. Reid, were thoroughly edifying and inspiring, and the round table discussions which they conducted provoked keen interest. In spite of the exceedingly inclement weather, a splendid audience assembled Wednesday night to hear Bishop Wm. B. Murrah, whose address on conditions and opportunities in the Orient was replete with interesting facts, and profoundly stirred all hearts.

The Conference closed with a season of prayer participated in by the members of the Board and the visiting brethren, a pledge being entered into to pray daily for our missionaries at home and abroad, and for larger success in our missionary campaign this year. To this end, let unceasing prayer be made by the brethren to the great Head of the Church.

A resolution was adopted fixing as the goal for 1914 for our Conference, which last year reported 57,367 members, the sum of $1.50 per member for all the benevolences, including home and foreign missions. This is far beyond what we are now doing, but with a united and persistent effort it can be realized.

The following resolution relative to the "every-member canvass" recommended by our General Board, was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, the great Foreign Mission Boards and Home Mission Councils of America are united in recommending the every-member canvass as the most effective method for securing an adequate revenue for our missionary enterprises, and whereas, our own Board of Missions has particularly requested that an every-member canvass be made in all Southern Methodist Churches during the month of March:

"Therefore, be it resolved, that the Board of Missions of the Mississippi Conference heartily approves of the every-member canvass as the best method for raising money for missions and the connectional claims; and that we urge all the preachers and lay leaders of the Conference to arrange for an every-member canvass in their respective churches within the next two months."

A vigorous educational campaign followed up by an every-member canvass, and a weekly or monthly offering for missions and the other benevolences is sure to bring about gratifying results.

SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

The Seashore Divinity School will open on the evening of June 23 at 8 o'clock, and will conclude its session on the 2d of July with the 11 o'clock service. It is with great pleasure that we announce that Bishop Candler will be with us, beginning on the Sabbath day of the session, as last year. It is also probable that we will have Dr. W. L. Watkinson, of the Wesleyan Church, for the entire time. This is good news for all the patronizing Conferences. We are looking for this to be the best year we have had, and the presiding elders are requested to make it possible for their pastors to attend. Bishop Candler says we are doing a great work for the ministry of our great Church. Other announcements will be made later. Brother H. M. Ellis will have something interesting to say. Let all the preachers prepare to attend.

ROBT SELBY, President.

A VALUABLE WORK.

If I were asked to name the most helpful set of books in my modest library, I should unhesitatingly say that the monumental work of the distinguished Dr. Joseph Parker, The People's Bible, has given me more comfort, more inspiration, more suggestion, perhaps more information, than any other work I possess, and that I would sooner part with any other than with it. If it contained nothing more than the matchless prayers of the great preacher, it would seem to me to be worth its cost. But here is wonderful insight into revelation, incisive exposition of the Word, abundant suggestiveness, clothed in superb language.

My attention has just been brought to a liberal offer being made by Messrs. Funk and Wagnall, the publishers of these volumes, who are offering the set in connection with The Homiletic Review for one year for $15. The original price of the twenty-eight volumes alone was $42, making the present reduction a decided one. My qualifications for forming a proper estimate of the periodical may be slender, but I will say that the magazine has never seemed to be worth much. For itself, I should not incline to advise anyone to subscribe, but when it comes along as lagniappe it is worth a little more than it costs. But I should certainly commend this great work of the great Parker to my younger brethren. ISAAC D. BORDERS.

NOTICE.

Our subscribers and patrons are requested to make all money orders and drafts payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate when remitting to us. If a personal check is sent, add 10 cents to cover cost of collection. We are willing to pay the exchange on checks of $5 or over, but if we are expected to give 10 cents on every small check sent us, it means a great shrinkage in our income.

THE WRONG BUTTON.

"Dear me," said little Janet, "I buttoned just one button wrong, and now that makes all the rest go wrong," and she tugged and fretted as if the button was at fault for her trouble.

"Patience, patience, my dear," said mamma, coming to the rescue. "The next time look out for the first wrong button, then you will keep all the rest right." "And," added mamma, "look out for the first wrong deed of any kind; another and another is sure to follow."

Janet thought for a moment, then she remembered how, one day not long ago, she struck Baby Alice. That was the first wrong deed. Then she denied having done it. That was another. Then she was unhappy and cross all day because she had told a lie. What a long list of buttons fastened wrong just because one was wrong.—Unidentified.

A BRAVE LITTLE ESKIMO BOY.

A true story has been told of a little Eskimo boy, about ten years old, who was walking with his little sister on the ice that forms for two or three miles in width along the shores of Hudson Bay in the far Northland. All at once the boy was frightened, for he saw that the ice on which he was walking had separated from the shore ice and was drifting out to sea. The lane of water between them and their home was every minute growing wider, and worse than all, a storm was coming up.

Many brave men started out in their little frail canoes to rescue the children. The storm made the heavy waves break the ice into a thousand floating cakes, which turned and tumbled over one another.

But this brave young boy knew he must cross these rolling, tumbling blocks of ice before he could reach the skin canoes of the rescuers. He knew their lives depended on his judgment, so he carefully picked his way from block to block.

At last one great block on which they stood tilted on its side and threw them in a heap, but the brave boy picked up the little sister in his arms, and staggering and plunging over the ice, which grew worse as he neared the outer edge, he managed to throw his little sister into the canoe and then throw himself. Both were picked up and were soon safe in their home. This little Eskimo boy certainly deserves to be called a hero the world over.—Christian Intelligencer.

GO AT IT AGAIN.

While young Theodore Edison was recently experimenting with a "glass-bottle bomb" in his father's laboratory, says an exchange, the contrivance exploded, and a few bits of the broken glass were imbedded in the hand of the youthful investigator.

"Some of your first inventions blew up, didn't they, father?" inquired the boy.

"Yes, they did," admitted the famous inventor, "but I went at them again."

There are two sides to an explosion, and, as a rule, we think only of the danger involved, which isn't the whole of it, by any means. When a thing "blows up," we lose the material we put into it, and we lose—or seem to lose—all the labor we have bestowed in thinking the thing out and putting it together. That is discouraging enough even if we get off without painful cuts and bruises.

Real explosions are comparatively rare, but many things besides gunpowder and dynamite have a tendency to "blow up." Outside a very narrow and well-beaten track of daily routine, failures outnumber successes ten to one, and the more important an undertaking is, the more likely we are to fail repeatedly in our first efforts. When this happens, we are too apt to lose heart, and turn our hand to something easier. If we can't do a thing the first time, we say, what good reason have we to think we can do it the second time or the third?

Nobody knows better than Thomas A. Edison that the way to win out in any undertaking is to "go at it again." He has scored so many marvelous successes in his particular line that enthusiastic admirers call him a wizard, but he himself persistently declares that his achievements are due mainly to hard work, and to a thorough study of every study he has taken up. That is the common story of every man who has been eminently successful in everything he has undertaken.

Cyrus W. Field went back to the Atlantic cable, amid the jeers of the skeptical, and in spite of the advice of faint-hearted friends, who believed that failure was a foregone conclusion. It was much the same with Fulton and his steamboat. Indeed, it is safe to say that if it were not for men of the persistent, "go-at-it-again" type, we should have neither telegraphs, nor telephones, railway trains, nor ocean liners.

The boy who leaves a difficult problem, after trying it once or twice, is starting on the wrong road to win success. The problem doesn't matter so much, perhaps, but the habit of going out of our way to avoid a difficulty is fatal. No man reaches an enviable eminence in any kind of work whose track is strewn with abandoned projects. If a thing is worth putting our hand to at all, it is worth going at it again.—The Comrade.

THE METHODIST HOSPITAL, MEMPHIS, TENN.

Just Stopped to Whistle.

What is the matter with the average Methodist? Why is it he will not believe in possible progress save as he hears the beating of gongs, the clanging of bells, or the screaming of whistles?

Neither my flowers nor my vegetables shout their development; but they do not fail to delight us, the one with beauty and the other with nutriment. I have not observed that the cry-baby invariably outgrows his silent brother, or that the boisterous pupil universally takes precedence over the quiet student.

Yet I am constantly meeting the clamorous demand: "Why don't you write up your Methodist Hospital work every week?" "Let the people know what you are doing!" "Keep the papers full of it!" "Tell the world about it!" etc., etc. The idea seems to be that the fuss made and the dust kicked up is the measure of success achieved. The brethren overlook those restaurants which furnish music with the evident intent of keeping the minds of their patrons off of what they are given to eat.

Now and then some long-visaged individual eyes me as if I were a sinner above all others (which is too true to be enjoyed when thus announced) and, poking his nose into my face, asks in dolorous tones: "Have you given up the Hospital?"

"Given up the Methodist Hospital!" Never in the world! The reason we haven't more time for bugle-blowing is just that we are so busy GETTING IT UP. Evidently such brethren are not of the helping "we."

Unfortunately there is only one of me, and that one is slow and dull. If there were only a dozen of me, or twins, at the least! Besides the field work I must do and the collection of the subscriptions as they fall due, over six thousand personal letters were sent out from my office last year.

I am just like Sam Jones' little steamboat which had to tie up to the bank whenever it wanted to whistle. Hence I prefer using steam for making headway. But it makes no difference if the boat must tie up and get delayed, she will have to whistle some for the sake of those dear fellows who will not believe she is getting anywhere unless she blows. So I tied up to-day to whistle. Listen!

The signed up subscriptions to the Methodist Hospital now amount to more than $111,000, of which $30,000 has been paid. This does not count between twenty-five and thirty thousand dollars which is promised but is yet on the cards.

We are sure to have as pretty a site as can be found, and we expect to be at work on the building before long.

"How long?"

Oh, that depends on what passengers come aboard and what headway we are able to make between the tie-ups for whistling.

LOOK AND SEE!

Have you renewed your subscription to the New Orleans Christian Advocate? If not, you should do so at once. The General Conference is almost at hand and there are stirring times ahead in the Church. This paper will be in touch with what is going on, and if you wish to keep up with what is happening, you cannot afford to be without it. But unless you renew your subscription, your name will soon be stricken from our mailing files and you may miss some important issues. We cannot always supply back numbers. Look at the little pink or yellow address label on the first page of your paper and see if your subscription is due, or past due. For instance, Sept. 13 would mean that your subscription is due for the time that has passed since September, 1913; and Jan. 14 would mean that your subscription expired on January 1, 1914. Please give this matter attention AT ONCE, and let us hear from you with a remittance. Do not wait for your pastor to ask you to renew, but act for yourself without further delay.

MENACING FOUNDATIONS.

(This editorial was written a week or ten days ago, which will explain why the decision in the Vanderbilt case is spoken of as being in the future. As the fact that it is adverse to the Church does not affect the principle discussed in that paragraph, we decided not to recast it. We stand squarely by the sentiments therein expressed.)

Time is the great tester of all things. Often that which looks fair and promising in the outset is discovered in the course of years to possess elements and to exert influences that were little dreamed of at first. Illustrations of this are found not only in history, but also abound in this day. For instance, up to the present there has been almost one universal concert of praise for the several Foundations that Mr. Carnegie has established and so largely endowed. Indeed, if a person has dared to even raise a question as to the wisdom and effects of these creations of the renowned multi-millionaire, he has been very generally looked upon as a mossback and a croaker. It is true that when in setting aside his pension fund for teachers he discriminated against religious educational institutions, there was a feeling of resentment and criticism upon the part of some of the Churches; but this was generally regarded by the public, and probably justly so, as being due to their disappointment in not getting to feed, along with secular colleges and universities, upon the bounty of this man of well-nigh inexhaustible means. Almost as rare as swallows in the early springtime, have been those who on the ground of principle have objected to Mr. Carnegie's unusual operations in the educational and other realms.

But the days are passing and things are happening as they go. Lately a group of experts connected with the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching have been investigating the schools of Vermont, and in a recently issued Bulletin they have ventured publicly to advise the little commonwealth that she ought to cease to appropriate any money to the higher educational institutions within her bounds, because they have been built up on antecedent private foundations and that she does not entirely own and cannot fully control them. Think of a Foundation representing ANDREW CARNEGIE giving such advice as this! When he butted into the Vanderbilt contest upon the invitation of Dr. Kirkland, he seemed to think it was all right for the Southern Methodist Church to continue in "sympathetic relations" with the University and support it, while under the management of a wholly independent board. Why does the Iron Master hold that what is good policy for a Church is bad policy for a State? We hope that if we are so unfortunate as to lose in our litigation for the control of Vanderbilt University that our people will remember this advice of Mr. Carnegie's representatives to the Vermont Government and wash their hands of that institution at once and forever. Surely, Dr. Kirkland and those who are co-operating with him on the Board of Trust could not find fault with Southern Methodists for appropriating to their own use this advice emanating from what they regard as such a high source, and given in a case in which there was no prejudice operating to influence the decision reached, such as the Laird of Skibo and his co-workers seem always to have when the interests of any religious denomination are involved.

But what of the work of the Carnegie experts in the Green Mountain State and of their advice to those in control of its affairs to get out of the higher educational business? We do not care to discuss now the question as to whether their suggestions are wise or unwise; but if their investigations were uninvited and their advice was gratuitous, as seems to have been the case, we do not hesitate to say that we think their action was a piece of officious impertinence. The New York Independent, which is almost continually singing Mr. Carnegie's praises, while looking with general approval upon the antecedent work of his Teaching Foundation, has spoken out strongly in condemnation of the course pursued in Vermont. We quote briefly from an extended editorial on the subject carried in its issue of March 9:

"These activities have given the organization great prestige, but they have also placed it in a position of dangerous influence. Its latest report, which not only threatens to throttle the higher institutions of a State because their organization is not of the approved sort, but also ventures to prescribe the curriculum of the elementary schools and to define just what kind of a high school each community shall have, will not contribute to allay the feeling of restlessness and will call to many minds the proverb of the Greeks bearing gifts."

But this is not the only one of Mr. Carnegie's Foundations that has lately been subjected to criticism. The Secretary of his Peace Foundation was in the limelight before the Lobby Committee of the United States Senate a few days ago, and it developed that it had spent $31,000 in distributing literature with a view to securing the repeal of the law permitting the vessels of the United States to pass through the Panama Canal without the payment of tolls. It is also well known that this organization has been exerting its influence freely and scattering appeals over the country against intervention in Mexico by the United States. Assuming that no harm has been done by its organized propaganda concerning these matters, it is easy to see how this Foundation, with millions of dollars under its control, may in the future be converted into a pernicious and dangerous lobby. A peaceful course is not always the one that a Government should pursue; nor is it always the most humanitarian and Christian. While war is ever to be regretted, if just and proper ends cannot be achieved in any other way, it is sometimes a painful necessity. We believe that it was so when Cuba lay prostrate and bleeding at our very door, and we know that this was the case when the Colonists, having exhausted every other possible means, finally appealed to the sword against Great Britain in 1776.

But here is a Foundation that is committed irrevocably and for all time to come to the active and unvarying advocacy of peace. If it had been in existence in Revolutionary times our patriotic forefathers would doubtless have had its stubborn opposition. Indeed, there were those in that stormy period who clamored for an ignominious peace, but they were brushed aside by the brave men who were weary of oppression and who were willing to die, if it need be, to throw it off. John Wesley, it will be remembered, appeared on the scene then as a pacifist (this is about the only discreditable chapter in his history), and as a result came pretty near wrecking American Methodism. Monopolists have always favored peace at almost any price, and always will—they do not want their property interests jeopardized and their money-making interrupted by war, however just and needful it may be. The Churches should stand resolutely for peace if it can be maintained upon honorable and righteous terms, but not when it means the continuation of despotism and wholesale cruelty and oppression. There is no divine law that forbids the heart of the Christian to burn with patriotic fire and his arm to strike a blow in defense of the wronged, the weak, and the helpless. The Wesleyan revival had not been going on long before it brought into "the Societies" the soldier Methodists.

As we see it, these Foundations of Mr. Carnegie are fraught with grave danger to the public welfare. Suppose one were to charter an organization and give it an endowment of $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 to improve the banking methods of the country, and set its representative to going about over the nation nosing into the affairs of all the banks, classifying them, and publishing bulletins concerning their ways of doing business—what would be the result? A ringing protest would be heard from Ocean to Ocean, and from the Lakes to the Gulf. The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching is doing even more than this. It is not only meddling with our educational institutions, public and private—both secular and religious—saying which ought to survive, and which ought to perish; but in some instances it is even plunking down the money to help some of them to overshadow and crush out others. If one of our great trusts were to undertake such a high-handed course toward smaller financial institutions, it would be arraigned in court within less than twenty-four hours.

And these Foundations, chartered and committed to a certain prescribed work, are to continue their existence forever. Thus Mr. Carnegie's hand will be powerfully felt in our educational and governmental affairs and the efforts to fasten his ideals upon the American people will go unceasingly on, long after he has passed to the tomb. Talk about MORTMAIN! In these perpetuated agencies, with enormous sums of money at their command, we shall soon have it in a form that is vastly more far-reaching, and which is liable to prove immensely more mischievous, than the landed type of it that stirred up so much dissatisfaction and strife in the nations of Europe in the ages gone. Yet most of us are sitting down complacently and applauding them as if they were gracious boons sent from heaven, capable only of scattering blessings abroad. Is there anything else known on earth that can so dim the mental and moral perceptions of men and confuse their judgments as the glitter of gold?

COMMENDABLE BORROWING.

In a free and informal talk a few days ago to the National Press Club of Washington City, of which he is a member, among other things, President Woodrow Wilson said:

"I was amused the other day at a remark that Senator Newlands made. I had read him the trust message that I was to deliver to Congress some ten days before I delivered it, and I never stop 'doctoring' things of that kind until the day I have to deliver them. When he heard it read to Congress he said: 'I think it was better than when you read it to me.' I said: 'Senator, there is one thing which I think you do not understand. I not only use all the brains I have, but all I can borrow, and I have borrowed a lot since I read it to you first.' That, I dare say, is what sometimes gives to my bearing the impression of circumspectness. I am listening; I am trying diligently to collect all the brains that are borrowable that I may not make more blunders than it is inevitable that a man should make who has great limitations of knowledge and capacity."

This is quite a suggestive statement. The man who has not learned the art of using the brains of other people neglects a tremendous source of knowledge and power. The truth is, great nuggets of wisdom, waiting only to be picked up, are scattered everywhere about us as we go through the world. In a sense, one would do well to make every person and everything his teacher. It is said that Daniel Webster used to enjoy greatly talking to the market men and women from whom he himself bought supplies for his table. Blessed are they who, having eyes, use them to see, and who having ears, use them to hear! And we may look and listen through many eyes and ears and think through many intellects not our own, if we only will.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Our esteemed friend, Rev. W. M. Young, of Amory, Miss., gave us on March 19 an additional list of 5 new and 5 renewal subscriptions. Brother Young is an all-round pastor, and believes in taking care of all the interests of the Church.

In a letter bringing us some subscriptions, Rev. W. L. Blackwell, of Vancleave, Miss., refers to his work as follows: "We are getting along very well. Our congregations are large and attentive, and all seem to regard the prospect of accomplishing a good work for the Master as highly encouraging."

The Baton Rouge District Conference will be held in the delightful town of Ponchatoula, La., where the best strawberries grow, May 26-31. We are grateful to Brother Bowman, the diligent presiding elder, for a cordial invitation to attend, and, Providence permitting, we hope to look in on the brethren while they are in session.

The storm-wrecked church at Provencal, La., has been rebuilt. Rev. W. R. Watley has been assigned to that charge, and has taken up the work of serving it.

Rev. R. E. Rutledge, of Indian Bayou, La., says: "The people of this charge have been very thoughtful of the preacher and his family. We are expecting a good year."

A revival meeting began in the First Methodist Church at Alexandria, La., last Sunday. The pastor of this strong congregation is Rev. G. E. Cameron, who is a preacher of force and eloquence.

The assessments for the support of the pastors in the Alexandria District foot up about $2500 more than they did last year. This is a fine showing for Presiding Elder May and the official boards of the various charges.

Rev. G. W. McLain states that he will be at Hot Springs, Ark., for some time, and has ordered his paper to come to that city. He says: "My health is fairly good, and God is blessing me with his presence and wonderfully leading me by his Word and Spirit."

We are in receipt of a most tasteful and attractive card from Rev. and Mrs. John W. Chisolm, of Jackson, Miss., which reads as follows: "It's a boy, born March 18, 1914; weight, eight pounds." Blessings on the little fellow, and also upon the happy parents.

The Nashville Tennessean of March 22 stated that the only Bishop present when the decision in the Vanderbilt University case was handed down in Nashville was Bishop James Atkins. Bishop Hoss was in Baltimore with Bishop Wilson, who for more than a week has been seriously ill.

Rev. B. P. Jaco, the capable presiding elder of the Winona District, has issued a printed announcement concerning his District Conference which will be held at Tutwiler, Miss., April 17-20, with Bishop Atkins presiding. Brother Jaco knows how to get things in readiness for such an occasion.

Dr. D. W. Coker, formerly an esteemed layman in our Church at Tunica, Miss., has been appointed physician and surgeon of the State convict farm at Parchman, Miss., and he and Mrs. Coker have moved their residence to the latter place. They will be much missed by the good people among whom they previously resided.

Rev. W. O. Wagoner, our stirring pastor at Isola, Miss., gave us a club of 6 renewals and 4 new subscriptions on March 17, for which he has our hearty thanks. In his letter he thus refers to his charge. Our work is progressing favorably. We are planning for our meetings, in which we hope to see many saved and built up in the faith."

Rev. C. A. Battle, pastor of the Felicity Street Church of this city, has announced an Every-Member-Present Service to be conducted at 11 a. m. on Sunday, March 29. He has sent out an appeal to every member of his congregation to be present on that occasion. Brother Battle is one of the growing young pastors of the Louisiana Conference.

We are indebted to the following brethren, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. W. R. Williams, Mt. Pleasant, Miss., 8; Rev. J. L. Lay, Simsboro, La., 10; Rev. W. E. Akin, Clay, La., 4; Brother J. L. Bell, Newton, Miss., 5; Rev. J. R. Jones, Meridian, Miss., 5.

Rev. J. J. Garner sounds an optimistic note from his charge at Kilmichael, Miss., where he has a delightful parsonage, a good prayer meeting, an excellent Sunday school; and a $1000 assessment has been made for his support. He has some as good people in his flock as can be found anywhere. We are grateful to Brother Garner for taking care of the interests of the Advocate in his rounds.

Rev. John W. Ramsey, of Mendenhall, Miss., reports that the parsonage at that place has been dressed in a new coat of paint, and that a new fence has been built around the property. Brother Ramsey is a wide-awake pastor who overlooks nothing that makes for the progress of his charge, and he is serving a most excellent people who take pleasure in co-operating with him in the execution of his plans.

Rev. P. H. Fontaine, of Clinton, La., writes: "Please announce that I have never been, and am not now, Secretary of the Conference Board of Church Extension. I acted as Secretary at the last session of the Louisiana Conference because Brother Hoffpauir, who held that position, was a presiding elder and was compelled to be absent most of the time from the meetings of the Board. He is still the Secretary."

The following are the Committee assignments of the Louisiana delegates to the General Conference: R. H. Wynn, Episcopacy and Church Relations; F. S. Parker, Itinerancy and Epworth Leagues; W. H. Coleman, Missions and Boundaries; J. M. Henry, Revivals and Church Extension; A. M. Mayo, Publishing Interests and Finances; A. P. Holt, Sunday Schools; R. O. Randle, Education and Appeals; W. A. McKennon, Moral and Social Reforms.

The Lexington (Miss.) Advertiser of March 20 says: "The contract for a pipe organ in the Methodist Church in this city was closed this week. It will be built and installed by the Pilcher Organ Company of Louisville, Ky. The money to pay for it is in hand, and it is expected to be set up and ready for use by July 1. The pastor, Dr. H. G. Henderson, and his members are to be congratulated upon this latest progressive step in their local church work."

We have received a copy of the program of the Second Annual Institute of the Wesley Bible Class Federation of the South Carolina Conference, which was held in Columbia, March 17-19. One of the chief speakers on this interesting occasion was Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, of Corinth, Miss., who was down for several addresses. Miss Kilpatrick is rapidly taking rank as one of the most efficient Sunday school experts in the Southern Methodist Church.

By authority of Dr. J. M. Henry, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, and Rev. Paul M. Brown, the Louisiana Conference Secretary of Education, we announce that the educational campaign that was expected to be conducted in this city the last of this month has been postponed until next autumn. Bishop Kilgo wired that it was necessary for him to cancel his engagement to come to New Orleans at the expected time, and the brethren decided that it was best to defer the contemplated canvass for funds.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Treasurer of the Sunday School Board of the North Mississippi Conference, reports that the following charges have paid their assessments for the work of the Sunday School Board: Shelby; Wood Street, Water Valley; Main Street, Water Valley; Benoit; Lula and Dubbs; Cleveland; Abbeville; Shaw; Grenada, and Corinth. It is hoped that many of the other charges will raise their assessments and send them in at once. The Board must have funds to pay its Secretaries and carry on the urgently needed work which it is seeking to do.

We had a delightful visit from Dr. George Summey, one of the Editors of the Presbyterian of the South, last week. The Doctor is this week at De Funiak Springs, Fla., where for the eighth time he has an engagement to deliver a course of lectures. The subject of the present series is "The Sextette of Johns," as follows: "John Chrysostom, the Preacher;" "John Huss, the Reformer;" "John Wycliff, the Morning Star of the Reformation;" "John Calvin, the Builder;" "John Bunyan, the Dreamer;" and "John Wesley, the Evangelist."

It is again necessary to state that free obituaries in the Advocate are limited to 200 words, and that we do not allow poetry to be placed in them. We mean what is stated in our regulations at the head of this "Column," and they are not to be taken in a Pickwickian sense. Anything that looks like a violation of these rules is due to the fact that the additional space used is paid for. Our patrons are not allowed to make a distinction between obituaries and tributes. Justice requires that we shall treat all persons alike and show partiality to none.

Rev. H. W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District sends us the following note: "The Missionary Institute for the West side of the Alexandria District will be held at Le Compté, April 1 and 2, and the one for the east side of the district at Jena, April 29-30. The lay leaders in the various charges are urged to attend these meetings. Hon. T. W. Holloman and Brother J. E. Williams are expected to deliver addresses in the interest of the Laymen's Missionary Movement at both places. The Woman's Missionary Societies are also requested to send representatives to these institutes."

Rev. B. P. Fullilove, of Rienzi, Miss., who four weeks ago reported that he was trying to launch a new church enterprise, states that the material for the contemplated structure is now being put on the ground. Brother Fullilove further says: "Brother V. C. Curtis was with us on Monday and Tuesday, March 16 and 17, and preached us three most excellent sermons, which had the old-time gospel ring. He greatly helped our Sunday school work, and a study circle was organized. He is emphatically 'the right man in the right place.' We regretted that Miss Kilpatrick, because of illness, could not be with us."

The following are the Committee assignments of the North Mississippi Delegates to the General Conference: J. R. Countiss, Episcopacy and Appeals; R. A. Meek, Education; H. S. Spragins, Itinerancy and Missions; B. P. Jaco, Revivals and Church Extension; J. G. McGowan, Sunday Schools and Epworth Leagues; J. H. Shérard, Boundaries and Moral and Social Reforms; E. V. Hughston, Finance and Laymen's Missionary Movement; G. J. Leftwich, Publishing Interests and Church Relations. It is due Brother Countiss to say that the Editor of the Advocate was at first also placed on the Committee on Appeals, and that later he took it at his request, in order that he might have more time to report for his paper.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the North Georgia Conference pledged its members to secure 200 new subscribers to the Wesleyan Christian Advocate. Verily, this is something new under the sun. As a rule, our sisters are willing enough to use the Conference organ, but they are too busy with the circulation of their own periodicals ever to lend it a helping hand. Our several Advocates serve the woman's work in their various fields as well as the other interests of the Church, and certainly ought to be entitled to some measure of favor from those who have it in charge. We are pleased to see that the women of Georgia are beginning to show some appreciation of this fact.

Dr. Walter Laidlaw, Secretary of the New York Federation of Churches, states that there are 75,000 fewer potential Protestants in New York City now than there were in 1900, due, he thinks, to the fact that immigration to the great metropolis is now almost exclusively Jewish and Roman Catholic. Of the 1,329,000 increase in the city's population since 1900, he classifies 654,000 as Jews, 462,000 as Roman Catholic, and 156,000 as Protestant. To this change in immigration, Dr. Laidlaw attributes the recent overthrow of Tammany, whose strength has always been with the Irish immigrants. He affirms that the Tammanyites did not lose a single Irish district when they were so overwhelmingly beaten in the election last November.

Rev. W. M. McIntosh, of Iuka, Miss., continues to evangelize in Oklahoma with gratifying success. Some of his meetings have been truly wonderful. The local paper at Davis, Oklahoma, a few days since said: "Mr. McIntosh continues to preach the gospel with power each day to large and listening congregations. Up to the present more than 75 have professed conversion and more than 50 have given their names for membership in the Church. Dr. McIntosh has the educational, pastoral, and experimental qualifications for the work. He knows men, the Bible, and the Lord. He is as tender as a woman and as simple as a child, but he has the faith and sincerity of a prophet of old. Mrs. McIntosh, his wife, is also a skilled and experienced worker, and is making her influence strongly felt in the services."

The first issue of the China Christian Advocate contained the following patriotic outburst:

"Japan's indemnity demands of China are simply preposterous. If China does not absolutely refuse to consider either the $11,000,000 demand for revolution indemnity and the $230,000 a head for the Nanking incident, she ought to. China is in an awkward place, and Japan knows it. That is why the little cocky Jap is playing the part of a big bully. Surely the other nations will not permit this bullying. If China was a little farther advanced and in a position to do it she might demand—let's say $500,000 a head for the Changli incident. What Japan needs is some one to take her down and give her a good old fashioned horse whipping. Perhaps then her head would not be quite so swollen, but her other parts would. It would do her a world of good."

A WORD OF TRIBUTE.

Dear Bro. Meek: The announcement of the going away of my friend, Dr. Chesley Daniel, has pained me no little. My feelings are inexpressible. His father's home was my first home when I entered the itinerancy in 1859. "Uncle Dick Daniel" was like a father to me, and his good wife was as careful of my wants as my own mother. Chesley, their only son, was like a little brother. He was good and affectionate, and I loved him as well as one boy could love another. I was only twenty years of age—he about ten or eleven. He was his mother's pet, and no son ever more amply repaid a mother for her love than he. For two or three years after I left the circuit (Holly Springs) I saw him occasionally. After that, the turn of the itinerant wheel threw me far away and we were separated for long years. Not until 1890 did I see him again. He was then in middle life, stately, dignified, a prominent and successful physician, the father of a lovely family, a Christian and a steward in the church, as his father was before him. The memory of him is pleasant. I hope to meet him in the better world. Amen!

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

If you care for heavy hair that glitters with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

Mr. B. T. HOOVER, one of the oldest and most prominent citizens of Pickens, Miss., died at his home on March 14, 1914, of pneumonia. Brother Hoover was a great and good man—great because he was good. We all miss him so much, but his death was so triumphant and glorious that in the midst of our sorrow, we rejoice. After arranging everything, even as to his funeral, his spirit slipped away and went home to God. His wife, two children, and a host of friends are left to mourn his departure. His pastor,
J. D. SIMPSON.

Death has claimed another Confederate Veteran from among us. Mr. D. A. WILLIAMS, of Lisbon, La., passed into the great beyond on Sunday, March 1, 1914, with the family and many friends at his bedside. Although he had had la grippe for some time, his death was not expected; but pneumonia developed and he was unable to rally from the attack. He was born in Meriwether County, Ga., on October 29, 1843. He came to Louisiana in 1856 and settled, where he lived until his death. He leaves one brother, three sisters and five children to mourn their loss. He was a type of man we should all pattern after. He was tender-hearted and affectionate to one and all; loved by all who knew him, and whose departure we regret. But the Father's will be done, not ours. He became connected with the M. E. Church, South, when very young and was an ardent member of it to the last, doing what he could for the Master's cause. That God may bless the bereaved ones, is our prayer.
O. L. WISE.

Mrs. MATTIE HICKS was born March 8, 1883. She died after reaching the age of 30 years 11 months and 13 days. She united with the Presbyterian Church some years ago, and later with the M. E. Church, South, at Rose Hill, Miss., where she remained a member until her death. She was married to Mr. C. P. Hicks ten years prior to her death. Sister Hicks leaves a husband and two little girls to mourn her early departure. She was a lovely character, quietly doing deeds of love and helpfulness, and hers was a Christian home. Brother Hicks, who is a faithful steward in our church, has lost a devoted companion, and the little girls, Eva and Blanche, a loving mother. On visiting her as her pastor, I always found her cheerful, though her sickness was lingering, as she succumbed to that dreadful disease, consumption. May the Lord bless and comfort those left behind, and keep them in the way that leads to the home of the soul, where they will find their loved one waiting and watching for them.
D. E. Vickers, P. C.

The subject of this sketch, Mr. H. R. LAWSON, who died at his home in Rapides Parish, La., Nov. 24, 1913, was born at Elmer, La., March 8, 1860, where he spent the greater part of his life. Later he moved to Glenmora, La., where he lived until the death summons came to him at the age of 56 years 7 months and 14 days. He leaves a broken-hearted wife, a son and a daughter and many friends, to mourn their loss. It can be truly said that he was a kind husband, a loving father, and a good citizen. He joined the Church about 24 years ago and was always a regular attendant at the church services, and no one seemed to enjoy them more than he did. He had a strong faith in God. He was always a good friend to the preacher. No brother could have received kinder treatment than the writer and his family received at the hands of this man during a spell of sickness in his home town a few years ago. May God's choicest blessings rest upon the broken-hearted wife and children, and may they have a happy meeting with their loved one on the other shore.

W. J. NEWSOM.

JOHN FREELAND HOUSTON was born on April 1, 1864, and died on January 28, 1914, at his home near Reed's, in Allen Parish, La. In early life he came with his parents from Claiborne Parish and settled in what was then Calcasieu Parish, where he continued to reside until the day of his death (a part of Calcasieu in the meantime having become Allen Parish, where his home was). John Houston was married to May Rosa Singletary on January 1, 1896, from which marriage there came eight children, seven of whom, with the mother, survive him. One preceded him to the Home Beyond. Three years ago Brother Houston was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, and lived a conscientious Christian the remainder of his life. He was a very useful man in the community where he lived, and was at the time of his death serving in the capacity of Parish School Director. The State has lost a useful citizen, the church a valuable member, and his family a devoted husband and father, and it is the unanimous testimony of the community that a good man has gone. His remains were buried in Hopewell Cemetery, after religious services had been held in his honor by the pastor of Hopewell church. Whilst we realize that earth has been made poorer by his death, we believe that heaven has been made richer.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

(Resolutions of the Home Mission Society of Black Hawk, Miss.)

Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom has called the gentle spirit of Miss Claudia Attneave, our beloved friend and co-worker, to the "home not made with hands;" therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in the translation of our precious sister, this Society has sustained a loss that can not be expressed.

2. That a great shadow has fallen upon her home, her Sunday school, her Missionary Society, her Church, and the entire community. Truly can it be said of her, she was a ministering angel to all with whom she came in contact, and only eternity can reveal the great work she wrought through a life of faith and love for her Master.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our Society, a copy sent to the home of the family, and one to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

A NOBLE LAYMAN TRANSLATED.

Dear Brother, Meek: We have just heard through a relative and friend at Potts Camp, Miss., of the death of dear Dr. W. R. Montgomery, of Cornersville, Miss. We can say truthfully that a great and good man has gone from the Cornersville M. E. Church, South, to heaven. He was a consecrated Christian gentleman. No Methodist preacher ever had a better friend than Dr. Montgomery. He was always ready to pray for and enter into the secrets and share the burdens of his pastor. He was a man that could be relied on at any time or in any kind of need. We have been informed that God transplanted him from earth to heaven on Feb. 21, 1914. It is said at least a thousand people attended the funeral services. He was a Dorcas in the form of a man, and we are sure that the poor as well as the rich have many things that they can hold up and say, "He did this." May God's richest blessings be upon his widow and sons and daughters. If my memory serves me aright, he had been a steward in the church at Cornersville for 56 years; and during all this time he never suffered his Church to be behind. He always saw to it that it paid the assessments for the pastor and presiding elder in full. We visited him often while serving the Potts' Camp Circuit, and it was always an inspiration to be in his home or company. My wife and I send our heart-felt sympathy to the entire family through the Advocate.

Tidings From the Field

Leland, Miss.

We had two splendid and largely attended services here last Sunday and received seven new members at the morning hour. Our church membership has been nearly doubled within the last fifteen months. We have arranged with Rev. Dan E. Kelly, Mississippi Conference Evangelist, to assist in a meeting to begin here on the first Sunday in May; and we are expecting large results. The church at Hollandale is doing good work. The meeting there will begin on the third Sunday in April. By the way, the people there gave us a tremendous "pounding" last week. They even included a dressed hog. Just think of it! We hope for great results from this meeting also.—L. Wesley Cain.

Athens Charge, La.

Mr. Editor: It was my pleasure to witness, on last Sunday, Feb. 22, the opening of a new church house, under the pastorate of Rev. W. R. Harvell. This new building was begun under the pastorate of Rev. J. C. Price last year. Brother Harvell pushed it on to a speedy conclusion, and preached an excellent opening sermon to more than three hundred people. This new building, in a new center, fills a long-felt want, as it may serve to consolidate three small congregations, thus making one strong rural church. The building is of late design and finished throughout in good style. Quite a number from the old place of worship agreed to consolidate at that point, and great things may be expected from a people so willing and ready to "build an house for the Lord." Brother Harvell has the work already well in hand, and is heartily received by the people. After the opening exercises, dinner was served, according to the old style, "on the ground," after which a splendid service was held by the pastor, resulting in the organization of a Sunday school, to be fully launched on the following Sunday. From what I see and hear, the Athens Charge is going to do great things in 1914.—Jas. A. Parker.

Florence, Miss.

The first quarterly conference for this charge this year was held on the 12th inst. Our presiding elder, Rev. Paul D. Hardin, was in his place, presiding with ease and ability. May I say that we have one of the best presiding elders to be found anywhere, and also one of the greatest preachers in the Mississippi Conference? He delivered to us two splendid sermons on this occasion. The attendance of the official board was good, some of them coming eight and nine miles on that cold, windy day. Notwithstanding the ravages of the boll weevil, the financial report exceeded that of last year at the first conference. This shows faithfulness and liberality on the part of the stewards and the people. One church, Monterey, paid in full up to date on the salary. Quite a number of our people have pledged themselves to a deeper consecration and a greater service to Almighty God. Our Sunday schools are moving on steadily. Our four superintendents are good and faithful men. The Woman's Missionary Society is having some really interesting meetings. The Epworth League is taking on new life, and we hope the time is near when all of our young people will take an active part in this important work. Pray that the blessings of God may abide with us, and that the unsaved may repent and accept Jesus as their Savior.—R. E. Rutledge, P. C.

Sardis, Miss.

Dear Advocate: I am glad to give you a dot from this corner. We closed the deal yesterday for a new parsonage at $3,250—every cent spot cash, with the insurance paid for two and a half years in advance. It is a splendid seven-room residence with hardwood floors, electric lights, water works, bath room fixtures, etc., modern in style and finish. The lot is a four-acre extension and is as rich as the Mississippi delta lands. We sold the old parsonage for $1000. Around that clustered many names and memories sacred to the years that have passed and that will live in the years to come; but it was in a state of "innocuous desuetude," or in simple, plain, Anglo-saxon, in a state of dry rot, wet rot—in fact, all the kinds of rot known to "rot-ologists." In location, appearance, and general principles of comfort, the people felt that to preserve it was to fly in the face of that strange doctrine, "the survival of the fittest." Yet, we gave it up with a pang, as we do all antique things. It was clung to kindly and tenaciously by some because of the longevity of its days, the quality of its memories, and the character of its associations, which had always been good, for some of the best loved names and most honored spirits of our North Mississippi Methodism live in its walls and resound in its sacred history. Ah, those names and those souls and that old house! Reverence, peace and love abide with the names and hallowed memories of those "far flung days" that can never return but still inspire the hosts in procession! All honor is due the good, progressive women who first led off in the movement and gave it the trend to success and raised most of the money. They hit the entrenched breast-works of the "money lords" like an invading army. They fought like soldiers; they worked like Turks. Even the rain and cold and slush did not depress their spirits or arrest their energies. The Methodism of Sardis has many choice and "elect" women. When the men saw that the thing was "foregone" and that it was "bound" to be, and they would have to furnish the "rocks," bless their souls, they came in a tilt, hopped into the hand-wagon and tapped the bass drum occasionally to let 'em know they were running the show, and when the fight was over, bless your life, they scuffled down out of the loft and yanked hold of the broom and yelled, "Look what a bear we killed!" Well, they really have a right to shout, for they did work heroically, many of them. The good women could never have done it without the men, for they had to furnish, in most instances, the "rocks." But it takes the women "to start things," yes, and do them, too. Now it is done, we are all proud and felicitate ourselves on the splendid work and everybody is glad. My faithful predecessor, Brother R. H. B. Gladney wrought well and left many, many warm, true friends who will never forget him. The good people here received us cordially and have treated us kindly. Many of them have remembered us in substantial thoughtfulness, in one way and another. We are praying for and working to see the kingdom of God come faster and truer and more potentially.—Lee W. Lipscomb.

Said Briggs to Griggs, "Rogers claims to be an agnostic, doesn't he?" Said Griggs to Briggs, "Only as to religion; as to everything else he knows it all." Which tells the truth. Almost to a man those who repudiate the faith on the alleged ground that they can have no certitude in religion, that in respect to it agnosticism is the only tenable position, are wiseacres as to everything else, are confident of their own ability and shrewdness, and are arrogant in their claims to almost universal knowledge and in their contempt for the knowledge of others.—Presbyterian of the South.

Pimples Gone in Seven Days

It Is Positive Joy to See Stuart's Calcium Wafers Clear Up a Pimply, Blotchy, Muddy Face.

Don't mind your friends' pitying eyes; don't feel ashamed when they turn away from your broken out face, but get right down to common sense and know that to cure pimples the blood must stop making them and the pores must be opened like they should be.

"A Beautiful Face May be Made from a Pimply Mass of Broken Out Skin by Stuart's Calcium Wafers."

Stuart's Calcium Wafers are perfectly harmless and may be taken freely by any one. They contain absolutely no mercury, no poisonous drugs, no opiates.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers contain Calcium Sulphide, and a mild alternative—every doctor prescribes them a hundred times a year. They are the most effective blood cleansers known to man.

It doesn't matter whether you have blackheads and pimples "something awful," or boils, tetter, rash, carbuncles, eczema, liver spots or a muddy complexion, try Stuart's Calcium Wafers and get a surprise in a short time.

These wonderful little Wafers contain the most effective blood purifier known to science—calcium sulphide. Every atom of impurity is driven from your system. With pure, vigorous blood coursing through your veins instead of a vitiated fluid, your whole body feels renovated, your face becomes as pure as a lily.

Go to your druggist to-day, no matter where he may be, and obtain a box of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. Price 50 cents.

SALTS IS FINE FOR KIDNEYS, QUIT MEAT

Flush the Kidneys at Once When Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers—Meat Forms Uric Acid.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids so they no longer cause irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

NOT AN EXPERIMENT.

Paint Lick, Ky.—Mrs. Mary Freeman, of this place, says: "Before I commenced to take Cardui I suffered so much from womanly trouble! I was so weak that I was down on my back nearly all the time. Cardui has done me more good than any medicine I ever took in my life. I can't possibly praise it too highly." You need not be afraid to take Cardui. It is no new experiment. For fifty years it has been found to relieve headache, backache, and similar womanly troubles. Composed of gentle-acting, herb ingredients, Cardui builds up the strength, preventing much unnecessary pain. Try it for your troubles, to-day.—Advt.

THE CLUB A GRAND SUCCESS

The New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club has proven a grand success from its very beginning and continues to grow in popularity and usefulness. The big saving in price on high-grade Pianos and Player-Pianos, which results from uniting our orders in a Club of 100 buyers, is the leading feature, but there are many other attractions. The convenient terms of payment make piano buying easy. The exchange privilege gives you the full and actual value of your old piano in exchange for a new Player-Piano. The free music roll service enables you to exchange your old rolls for the new compositions at a nominal cost. The insurance feature protects your family in the event of your death. The permanent guarantees insure the quality and durability of your instrument. In fact the Club plan gives you perfect protection on every point in piano buying.

Write for your copy of the Club catalogue to-day. Address the Managers, Ludden & Bates, New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.—Adv.

SUMMER COURSE IN CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

Many Music Teachers and Music Students are too busy in school session to study music. Therefore Meridian College Conservatory, one of the largest and best equipped in all the South, offers a six weeks course, beginning June First, including Piano, Pipe Organ, Voice, Violin, Cornet, Theory, Harmony, etc. Special attention is given to Music Teachers.

Beautiful surroundings, Athletic ground, Swimming pool, excellent board, dairy, poultry farm, vegetable farm, add to attractiveness. Write for particulars, Woman's College, Meridian, Miss.

We Want You to Know the Truth About Fertilizers

Our fertilizer book tells you what we manufacture, how we put it together, and what we use in the various brands. Then we go a step further and tell you how other practical farmers have made a great success of the use of Meridian Fertilizers. It isn't from any magic of our own that our fertilizers bring money to you. It is simply because they are the best value for the money. It didn't need any fertilizer legislation to get the best into our "Home Mixtures." We put it there because we wanted to make the best thing for use in this part of the country. And we made it, too. That is why one of every four bags of fertilizers used in Mississippi bears our red bag trademark.

All this is of interest to you, Mr. Farmer, only as It Spells D-o-l-l-a-r-s for your pocket book And Meridian Fertilizers do that very thing. Ask your neighbor what he thinks of any of these brands:

Meridian Home Mixture

Meridian Ham Bone

Meridian Potato Special

Meridian Corn Grower

Meridian Bone and Potash

Meridian Perfection Guano

Meridian Blood and Bone

Meridian Soluble Guano

Meridian Vegetable Grower

COMB SAGE TEA IN

LIFELESS, GRAY HAIR

Look Young!—Common Garden Sage and Sulphur Darkens so Naturally Nobody Can Tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and abundant with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and abundant.

PAINS ALL OVER.

Houston, Tex. — "For five years," says Mrs. L. Fulenchek, of this place, "I suffered with pains all over, especially in my back and side, and was so weak I could hardly do my housework. A friend told me of Cardui. Since taking it, I feel so much better! Now I can do all my housework and pains don't bother me any more at all." Cardui is a strength-building medicine. Fifty years of success have produced, amongst its many users, confidence in Cardui and what it will do. During this time Cardui has relieved the female ailments of over a million women. Why not yours? Try it, to-day. Your druggist sells it.

Woman's Missionary Work

Edited by Mrs. R. F. Harrell, Centerville, Miss.

Conference Publicity Superintendents:

Louisiana..... Mrs. A. C. McKinney, Ruston, La.
Mississippi..... Mrs. J. L. Neill, Laurel, Miss.
North Mississippi..... Mrs. Walter Campbell, Winona, Miss.

All communications for this department should be sent to the Editor at the address given above.

ITTA BENA AUXILIARY.

Mrs. I. E. Cockrell, corresponding secretary of the Itta Bena Auxiliary, writes: "The Woman's Missionary Society of this place, with Mrs. J. E. Thomas as president, is doing splendid work. The society is divided into four circles. These circles have pledged themselves to pay a debt that has been on the parsonage for some time. Since Jan. 1, $157.05 has been turned over to the treasurer. The Society has 45 members, 14 of whom belong to both departments, 8 taking the Missionary Voice. The society meets once a month, and after the business is disposed of, a literary program is furnished by one of the circles."

CORINTH DISTRICT.

Rev. S. A. Brown has organized a new society at Booneville—a boys' society. I am wondering if this is not the first of its kind in the Conference. Brother Brown is alive to every interest among our boys and girls. Iuka has adopted the pledge system, as has also Booneville with good results. New Albany has a wide awake Publicity Superintendent. Every week our county paper has a column of interesting missionary items. A new society has been organized at Corinth—girls of the teen age—under the management of Mrs. Lott.

CORINNE ROGERS,
District Secretary.

LULA HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

With a membership of only six, the Lula Home Mission Society has met all obligations—dues, $7.20; Conference expense fund, $1.80; Conference pledge, $16; insurance on church, $30; repair of parsonage, $8; for Week of Prayer, $7, and to Orphans' Home, $15. A good work for so small a membership, and they are hoping to do even better during the coming year.

MEXICO.

A conference was held in Laredo on Feb. 10 and 11 for the purpose of discussing the adjustment of some of the work in Mexico. It is considered advisable to turn over to the Home Mission Board and the Texas Conferences that portion of the territory of the Mexican Conferences located in the United States. Bishop Morrison, Drs. Cook and Moore, and several of the Mexican missionaries were present. The Council made such an adjustment nearly two years ago, the Foreign Department turning over to the Home Department the work at Laredo. Miss Case, the successful principal of our school in Mexico City, by the advice of the Bishop, secretaries, and missionaries at this conference, sailed from Galveston on Feb. 15 for Mexico. Letters are received often from our missionaries in San Luis Potosi and Guadalajara. Their schools are well patronized, and they themselves apprehend no trouble. Misses Wilson and Harper are happy in their school work, which has been transferred from Chihuahua to El Paso. They now have over one hundred pupils principally confined to the children of their patrons who had fled for refuge to El Paso.

CONSECRATION OF DEACONESSES

At the approaching meeting of the Council there will be thirteen deaconesses consecrated on Monday evening, April 13. At the same hour the foreign missionary candidates will be consecrated. Bishop Edwin Mouzon will perform the service.

THE COUNCIL DAILY.

Subscribe for the Council Daily so you can keep in touch with the Council meeting, which convenes in Fort Worth, Texas, April 8-15. The Daily is a vital force in connection with these sessions.

Presidents!

Have you done your part? Remember you cannot afford to be without the "Daily," nor can the members of your auxiliaries. Work unceasingly for subscribers, and once you obtain them you have won lasting friends for this great paper. Each year we find a larger number of interested women praying for the Council meeting that its plans and deliberations may be marked by power and a Christ-like spirit, and much of this interest has been aroused through the Council Daily. Price, 25c. Subscribe at once, and send orders to Mrs. A. L. Marshall, 810 Broadway St., Nashville, Tenn.

ON TO RAYVILLE!

The fourth annual meeting of the Louisiana Conference Woman's Missionary Society meets in Rayville, March 31, April 1 and 2. The Corresponding Secretaries call for one hundred delegates, and this call should be heeded. Indeed, it is a small number when compared with the membership of our Conference. Each department in the Conference has over a thousand members, and are not one hundred of them interested enough to make sacrifices to attend this meeting? You will get information, enthusiasm, and inspiration, for the Conference will have such speakers as Miss Daisy Davies, Mrs. S. S. Harris, Miss Nellie O'Beirne, Miss Martha Nutt, Miss Eliza Iles, and Miss Cora Godat, our new missionary. Dr. George S. Sexton, of Shreveport, will deliver the anniversary sermon. You cannot afford to let such a golden opportunity slip by. Send names of delegates to Mrs. J. C. Calhoun, Rayville, La. In securing your delegates do not neglect the Young People's Societies. A large representation from them is earnestly desired. Can not each Young People's Auxiliary in the State send one delegate? It means so much to our young people to be brought in contact with these inspired missionary workers, and specially with our new missionary, for her words of love and inspiration may touch their hearts and kindle the flame of love in them and awaken in them a greater desire for service. As our missionary, Miss Godat, goes to this annual meeting and then on to the Council meeting may she feel that she is encircled by the prayers of all the Louisiana women and young people who are engaged in this great work of sending the gospel of Christ to those who know it not. May our prayers be constant and never ceasing and, as we wait upon the Lord and have our strength renewed, may she feel the divine spark being rekindled in her own heart, and may she have increased power in her life to touch and win souls for her Master. May she so impress the needs of the work upon the indifferent that they will become interested and at last obtain the larger vision of the world's needs, and may many be inspired by her sweet spiritual life to consecrate their lives to the Master's service. It is a great privilege to have a part in sending this young woman as our representative to fields beyond.

SHOES TO THE CONSUMER AT WHOLESALE PRICES.

Since catalogue was issued, we have added a great many new styles to our line. It will be several months before a new catalogue will be ready to mail. We have found that with rubber soles on English last, are very popular. We can furnish the Russia Calf with rubber soles at $2.00 and $2.50 per pair, the kind that retail for $3.00 and $3.50. We have a complete line of Ladies' White Duck Oxfords, with rubber soles, at 90c., the kind that retail for $1.50,—at $1.10 and $1.50. The $1.50 is the regular $2.25 shoe.

It is about time now for the wearers of shoes to think about the spring and summer styles, or oxfords, and we would suggest to the readers of this paper that they forward their orders now while our stock is complete. We have all the new styles and if there is anything not mentioned in the catalogue we would suggest that our customers describe the shoe wanted, we have it.

DEAD-LETTER MAIL IN 1913.

The mail that reached the Dead-Letter Office during the year 1913 in the United States reached the almost unbelievable total of over 13,000,000 pieces. Enclosed in it were cash and negotiable papers to the amount of $7,584,437, and other valuable articles, totaling another $67,599.34. Of these "dead letters," over 6,000,000 never were delivered, for the reason that the senders failed to give their own addresses, and the addresses of the consignees were too imperfect to be traced. No article mailed should fail to have the name and address of the sender, as well as of the one for whom it is intended.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

FRECKLES

February and March Worst Months For This Trouble—How to Remove Easily.

There's a reason why nearly everybody freckles in February and March, but happily there is also a remedy for these ugly blemishes, and no one need stay freckled.

Simply get an ounce of othine, double strength, from your druggist and apply a little of it night and morning, and in a few days you should see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the light ones have vanished entirely. Now is the time to rid yourself of freckles, for if not removed now they will stay all Summer, and spoil an otherwise beautiful complexion. Your money back if othine fails.

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

A glance at the Louisiana Conference 1913 Minutes shows a gain of 11 over the preceding year in the number of Sunday schools; of 157 in officers and teachers; of 2,591 in scholars; of $102 in the amount raised for missions; of $434 in the Children's Day collections; of $3,537 in the amount raised for other objects; and a total gain in collections for all purposes of $3,912. This does not, except in rare cases, we presume, include the amount raised by the Treasurer for the support of a Field Secretary and on the previous deficit. If we are correct in this surmise as to this matter, then the Sunday schools and the friends who contributed of their means to support the Sunday school work, gave considerably more than $5,000 last year above what was given the year before. This is easily in the lead of any department of church work in the Conference. We wish that we had the record as to how many of the 1,876 members received into the church on profession of faith came from the Sunday school. This would no doubt reveal the fact that the most of our additions are first enlisted in Bible study and the fraternal fellowship of the Sunday school before they are led to confess Christ and join the church. And if our gains in efficient Sunday school management and teaching could be tabulated, therein, no doubt, would be shown decidedly our largest increase.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

After Easter comes Children's Day. Mark all these special church days with a red circle on your calendar and let that tie your memory to them.

Miss Ethel Golding, of our Orphanage, writes that 20 children have lately laid their young and tender hearts on God's altar. They are doing fine Sunday school, and League work as well, under her direction.

Miss Elie Willingham's progressive Morris Class had a delightful Sunday experience on March 8. They were the guests of Superintendent Wax of Mabon; a good and inspiring program was rendered, and a day of fine fellowship, information and inspiration was enjoyed.

President Wilson says that "Progressiveness means not being caught standing still when everything is moving." The Sunday school world from darkest Africa to the fairest city in our land is moving up and out; and the school teacher or superintendent who stands still cannot expect success or progress.

"Every teacher can succeed, if he or she is willing to pay the price—preparation." Mr. Marion Lawrance further says, "As feathers are to arrows, so training is to teachers." If a Teacher-training Class could be started in every Sunday school in this Conference, there could be no questions as to results. Many are beginning the 1914 work thus wisely—why not everybody?

It is encouraging to note that the world-wide Sunday school membership is 30,000,000 instead of 29,000,000, as was lately reported. The World's Sunday School Association has appropriated money recently for Spanish Lesson helps and Portuguese Teacher-training books for South America; they have also contributed $1000 to assist the Korean schools. Thus the world becomes bound together by a Christ-wireless, more wonderful than that invented by Marconi.

"The magnificence of the present opportunity to assist the leadership of Jesus Christ in all life, ought to be the mighty inspiration of the Church and Sunday school to-day." The leadership of Christ in appropriateness, in loving, in helping, in efficiency and character-forming and soul-saving, is the one vital need in every life and every school. We, too often, obscure this North Star by our selfishness, by our too close following of method, when the real Christ spirit should dominate us all.

Plan an attractive Easter program, and begin right now. The well-prepared and interesting program often wins to interest and service many who come for curiosity or pastime on these special days. Each class in a certain Sunday school is already arranging to bring a potted Easter lily on Easter Sunday. These will be used for decoration, and then carried to the sick, the sorrowing or the shut-ins, or to the hospital. By some such similar or varied plans, the Easter spirit may be continued long before and after the real Easter Day.

Mrs. Conger's Adult Class at Vaiden have chosen "The Truth Seekers" as their name. Their class officers are as follows: Mrs. P. F. Flowers, president; Mr. John Allen, vice-president and Mrs. V. A. Gee, secretary. All of their committees are at work and nine volunteered for any special service for the Master needed in town or country. Mr. J. W. Conger's fine class has honored itself by selecting as its name, "The Murrah Bible Class"—after our own beloved Mississippi Bishop. Miss Pank is president, and Miss Thomas, secretary and treasurer. There is really an inspiring spirit of rivalry between Mr. and Mrs. Conger's classes which makes them both do more and better work.

Testing the Teacher.

The idea of testing, in connection with teaching, is usually applied to the pupil, not to the teacher. If testing is good for the pupil, why not for the teacher? Will it not help to measure ourselves by some recognized standard? We can surely by it get some idea of the quality of the work we are doing and perhaps detect some of the weaker points, which is the first step in getting rid of them.

First—Is the Class Growing? This is the first question to ask. We must be tactful, however. If there is material for the growth of that class in the community, then if the teacher is all that a good teacher should be, the class will surely grow. If there is material outside that ought to be in the class, no teacher should be satisfied until every possible effort is made to put that material to use. "A growing class is a good sign of the right teacher in the right place."

Second—Is the Class Attending? Are your pupils attending Sunday school every Sunday? What is your attendance per cent? This tells whether the teacher is interesting the class or not. If the teacher does not interest her pupils there is a defect in the teacher.

Third—Is the Class Learning Anything? Are you really teaching anything? Reviews are a test of the teacher's work as well as that of the pupil. A teacher has taught only what the pupils have made their own and what they can reproduce. If pupils are not learning the teacher is not teaching.

Fourth—Is the Class Being led to the Confession of Jesus? Are the pupils entering the church? Do they attend the church services? A teacher is failing in these essentials if these things are not clearly kept in mind. All methods and effort ought to lead to this.

Fifth—Is the Class Taking any Part in Christian work? A great opportunity is open to the teacher to lead her pupils into service and train them for that service.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

AN APPEAL FOR THE ORPHANS.

As there are many Sunday schools contributing the collections on one Sunday in the month to our Mississippi Orphans' Home, why cannot all the schools in the two Mississippi Conferences do likewise, and thus place this noble institution on a solid financial basis? What is needed is a systematic plan of financing it. If such a system could be inaugurated, it would take care of practically all the wants of the Home, and only a little in the way of special effort would be required. Moreover, such giving would be educative in its influence, especially upon our children and young people. Who of our members contribute most to the Church to-day? Those who have been trained to give from their childhood. I visited the Home recently and saw evidences of need. The children looked well and showed that they were being cared for, but there were many needs. I have heard it said that the Baptist Orphanage is better supplied than ours—am I correctly informed as to this? Most of their Sunday schools are said to contribute monthly.

This is a missionary work, a charitable work, and to perform it is to fulfill a Divine commandment. Who knows how many good men and women may come from this institution? Brethren, let us pray and work to get every pastor and Sunday school superintendent to begin at once to take up regular collections for the Orphans' Home, so that Brother Williams may be relieved of the embarrassment of having sometimes to ask for extensions on outstanding claims, or having to borrow money or overdraw at the bank.

THE BATON ROUGE DISTRICT.

The work in the Baton Rouge District is moving along well. Brother Foster at Amite has captured the people, and is moving out on new lines. He is organizing his forces and planning for a great forward movement in his church.

One of the busiest men in the district is Brother Williams at Ponchartroula. With his faithful assistants he is doing a great and good work. The District Conference will meet there May 26-31, and Brother Williams will prove himself a capable host, as he has done before.

Our work at Hammond under the leadership of Brother Hunter is taking on new life, and at present is quite encouraging. Brother Lowrey at Kentwood, is laying broad plans for his people—plans which if they materialize, will mean much for our cause there.

Brother R. V. Fulton, of the St. Helena charge, has that field well in hand, and they think they have the man for the place.

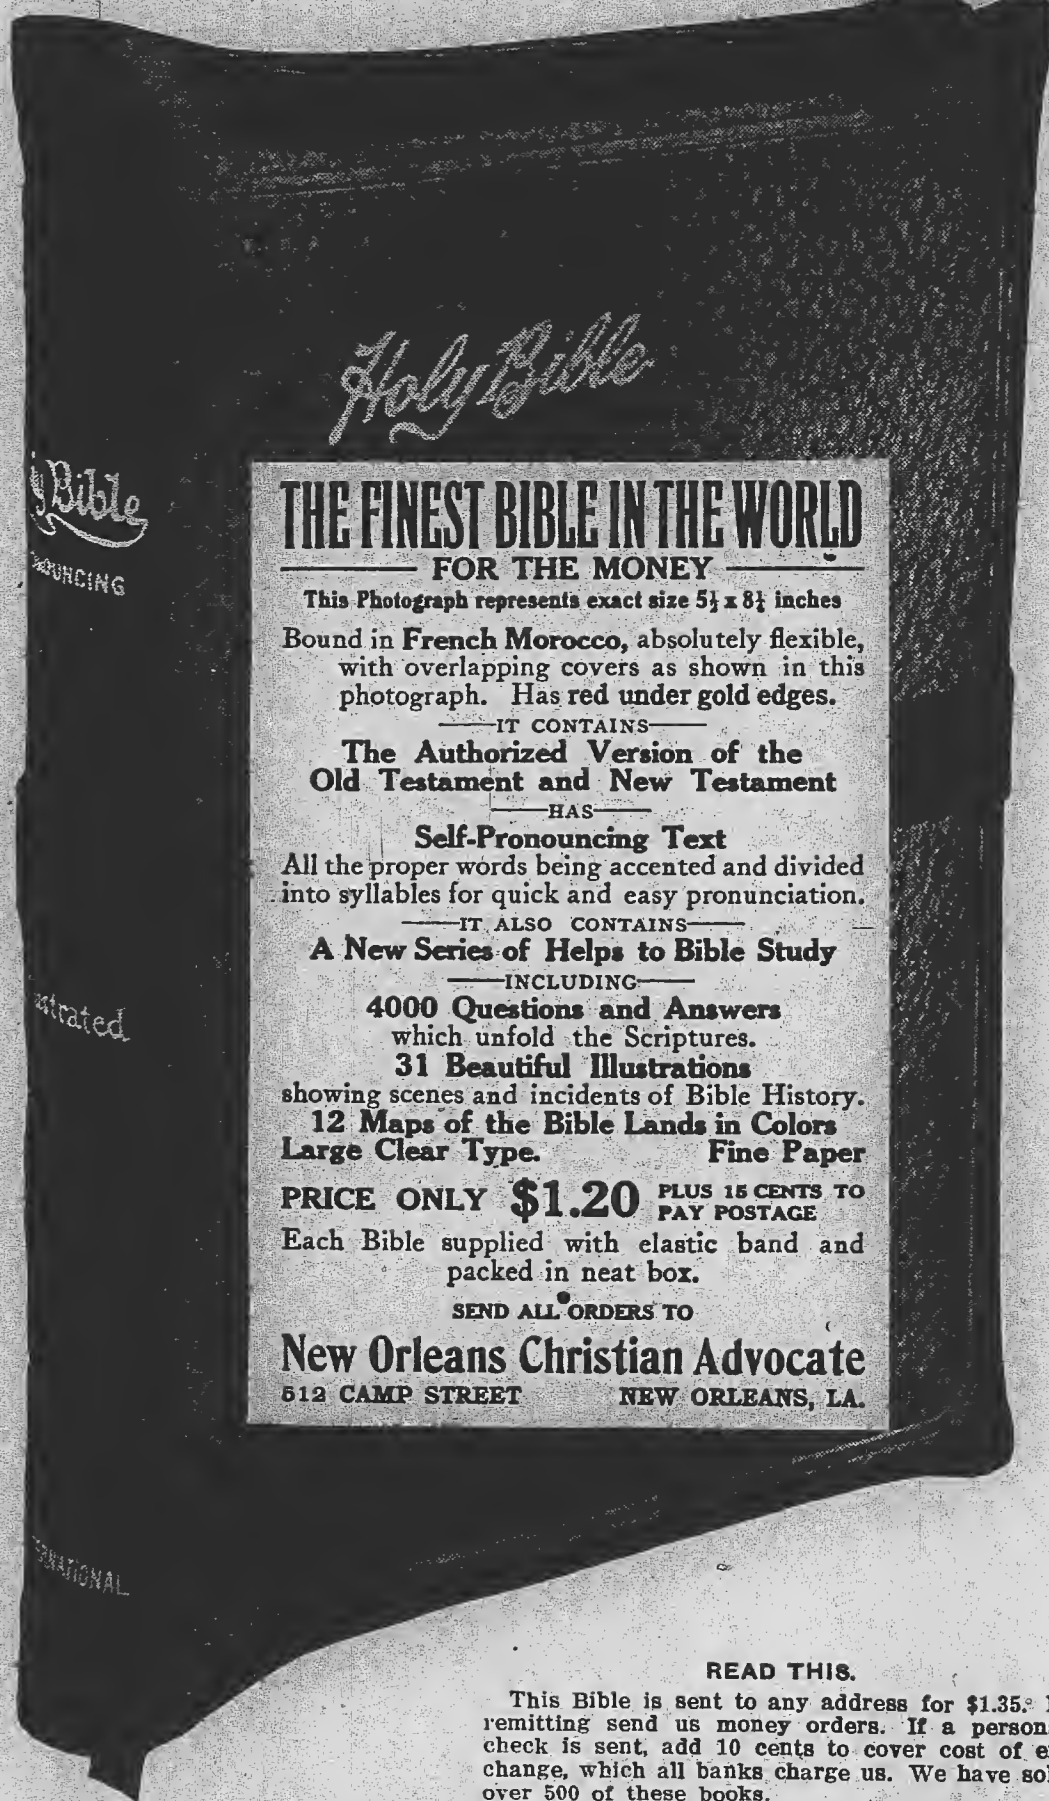

J. S. Rutledge, of the Pinegrove charge, is not satisfied with the boundaries of his field, and is reaching out into unoccupied territory. This spirit, however, is prevailing over the greater part of the district. A number of men are looking out on the "regions beyond" as fields to be captured for Christ. Lowrey, Foster, Hunter, Williams, Fulton, Rutledge, White, Brown, and Fontaine, each have taken on more work than was included in his appointment. In Baton Rouge, Drake and Mangum, are hunting for new fields to conquer. The spirit of missions is in the hearts of the preachers of the Baton Rouge District.

H. W. BOWMAN.

GREENSBURG, LA.

Arriving on the St. Helena Charge on Dec. 29, 1913, we were here "on time" to begin the New Year. We began the first round with the first Sunday, and continued moving until called upon to endure a siege of measles. My three children had it at once, and our entire town was likewise stricken. There have been no fatalities, and all goes well again. We have great reason for thankfulness. We have some of the best people in the world. They are ever mindful of the needs of their minister's home, and are not found wanting in supplying them. Greensburg has a good Sunday school. Brother W. T. Holland is our superintendent. We have an organized Bible class, with Brother L. B. Duke as teacher; and also other classes, using the graded literature. The out-of-town churches are all interested in the Sunday school work. Brother Peritt did a good work here last year, but there is yet a great deal to do. The people are interested and the prospect is fine for a good year. The quarterly conference held at Day's on March 14 and 15 was a delightful one. Our new presiding elder preached four times for us. His preaching is scholarly and forceful, and is of a kind that will do Methodists good. He looks well after all the interests of the Church, and is a good presiding officer.—Raleigh V. Fulton.

REVIVAL AT BUDE, MISSISSIPPI.

The meeting began on February 18, and on the following Tuesday Rev. D. E. Kelly took up the work and continued it through March 9. About 100 people were converted or reclaimed, and about ninety came into the Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist Churches, forty-five of whom were received into the one last named. Quite a number of family altars have been erected and several of our men have begun to pray in public and testify for God. Brother Kelly is a true evangelist, uncompromising, fearless and loving. He is doing a great work for the Church and God is honoring his labors in the salvation of souls and the upbuilding of the Divine Kingdom.

BIBLE BUYERS IN ITALY.

There is a marvelous awakening of interest in the Bible throughout Italy. I might mention many facts in support of this statement, but I am content to give but one, and that is that it pays a secular publisher to print and sell the Bible purely as a commercial speculation. Some years ago Signor Sonzogno, the proprietor and publisher in Milan of the Secolo and other newspapers, published a large illustrated Bible in parts at the equivalent of one cent each. Wherever his newspaper went his Bible went. When completed, the Bible cost 10 francs ($2). I have a letter from him in which he tells me that he sold 50,000 copies, bringing him in half a million francs, or $100,000. Since then a second edition was called for, and it, too, was soon exhausted, and now a third edition is coming out and is selling well.—Christian Herald.

DANGER OF BIBLE CRITICISM.

From the Presbyterian.

Need Bible criticism make the Church uneasy? This is the leading question in a recent editorial in "The Continent." The editor's chief purpose is not to set forth his own particular views, but he evidently favors certain critical conclusions, and so he puts the question in the negative. He also holds that the view which maintains Genesis, first chapters, to be an allegory, is not inconsistent with faith in the Bible as "the only infallible rule of faith and practice."

That devout criticism of the Bible, which often has received the name Introduction, and which deals with the questions of time, conditions and circumstances, under which the books were written, though it may encounter difficulties and meet with limitations, nevertheless has often been profitable in the turning up of important information, and has never in any way questioned the integrity of the Scriptures. But what has come to be called Destructive Criticism, by the presentation of insinuation, half truths and speculative non-truths, has been a real cause for anxiety in the Church of God. This anxiety does not arise from any fear for the Bible itself, but for the people and their faith and testimony.

The only authority for the sanctity of marriage between one man and one woman are the statements of Jesus Christ found in the first part of the tenth chapter of Mark. Take this away, and bigamy and polygamy have as much authority as monogamy. These statements in Mark, Jesus takes from the first and second chapters of Genesis. If these chapters are allegories, then Jesus rests his doctrine of marriage on an ancient allegory, originating with a nomadic people. Again, the Apostle Paul goes back to the same source for his doctrine of marriage. Again, this same apostle goes back to the third chapter of Genesis for his doctrine of sin and salvation, as taught in the fifth chapter of Romans. To say that Jesus our Lord, and the Apostle Paul founded their essential teachings regarding society, sin and salvation, on an ancient allegory, is to charge them with first making their facts, and then finding conclusions from them, a practice at once unreasonable and pernicious, and which is having a most deleterious effect upon the conscience. That there is thus cause for anxiety in the Church over the teachings of Destructive Criticism is further witnessed by the fact that beginning with the denial of the historicity of the Bible in early Genesis, the movement proceeds until it denies the historicity of the far greater part of the Old Testament, including the ten commandments, and finally winds up by denying the historicity of Jesus himself. Even if one granted the premises of Destructive Criticism, the mythical view of Jesus is almost a forced conclusion, with strong thinking minds. There are men to-day who started by denying the integrity of Genesis, and have ended by denying the reality of Jesus. There are also men of strong convictions who fully realize that if they were to deny the historicity of the Bible accounts, they would be forced to deny the historicity of their Lord, and all faith and all hope would cease.

The only complete testimony of Christ's historical existence and of his character is the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments. Jesus appeals to the Scriptures as his only and all-sufficient testimony. Destroy their reality, and we lose Christ. To all such minds the criticism of the Scriptures is indeed a cause for anxiety. There are devout minds which, in the confusion of the age, have not been able to think their way through to a fixed conclusion. We have strong sympathy with these minds, and hope that soon they may find the firm foundation.

There is one type of mind, however, which can persist in holding part of the Scriptures to be true, and part of them untrue, which can believe some things about Christ and disbelieve others. It is a type of mental vagrancy which never attaches to any conviction, which is never at home with any truth, but is always on the move, not knowing where it is, or whither it is going; ever subject to change and uncertainty; never able to define its position, nor to seize a conviction; "Ever learning and never coming to a knowledge of the truth." Such minds as these feel no disturbance in connection with any mental confusion. But for all those minds who hold truth in consecutiveness and conviction, the destructive criticism of the Holy Scriptures must be rejected, or faith must perish. To all such it is a real joy to know the evidence of God's Word is complete, and that no fact of science collides with a fact or statement of Scripture. The whole attack on the Bible proceeds from the presumptions of speculation, which change with every revolution of our planet.

"The Continent" quotes the Confession of Faith: "Our full persuasion and assurance of the infallible truth and divine authority of the Word of God is from the inward work of the Holy Spirit, bearing witness by and with the Word in our hearts." But it seems to have wholly overlooked the fact that the witness of the Spirit is "by and with the Word." Which makes it not independent, but corroborative.

The testimony of the Word is objective. The testimony of the Spirit is subjective. It takes the two to fulfill the law of testimony. The Word testifies of the Son. The Son bears witness to the Word by his very character, and without the Word and the Son, we should never have known there was a Holy Spirit. These three agree in one.

There are three which do not agree—those who reject the Bible and Christ's deity; those who reject part of the Bible, and part of Christ; those who believe the Bible is a supernatural revelation, and Christ is God and Saviour. This essential difference is a gulf which cannot be crossed. The divine Book and the divine Savior is the banner of the only true unity.

"Never believe anything bad about anybody unless you positively know it is true; never tell even that unless you feel that it is absolutely necessary and that God is listening while you tell it."

THE FARMER WHO IS SELFISH WITH HIS WIFE.

In the current issue of Farm and Fireside a contributor writes as follows:

"The farmer is ever ready to howl about oppression; but what would he think if, when tired out with his day's work and his own plans made, the wife should force him to make ice cream or go ten miles for lemons to make lemonade? This is just the sort of thing a man demands of his wife.

"On Sundays he will invite people home from church with hearty goodwill, and the women-folk, tired out with the week's work, must turn to and prepare dainty meals, most likely for tedious and unthankful company. I have known farmers' wives to have to work like slaves all day Sunday for twenty callers, use the last scrap of food and miss the church service, on which they had counted. And not a visitor lifted a finger to help! Mine is an established rule: A plain, substantial breakfast of fish, fried chicken, some cereal food or something similar; for dinner a cold lunch, and at supper either left-over bits or something easily prepared. So there is no great labor over the noon meal; but the visitor must take 'pot-luck.'"

JEFFERSON DAVIS AND THE LIARS.

The capture of Jefferson Davis is one of the rocky points of history. Northern historians are bent on getting a lie into history. Mr. Davis gave a clean and truthful story of his capture, and above all else, he was truthful and had no reason to misrepresent the facts. He says that he had on his person at the time of his capture a rain coat or "raglan" that was his wife's, and over his shoulders a shawl; that he was in no way attempting to escape until he saw that he was surrounded as he thought by regular troops. Then he says that he thought of unhorsing a cavalryman and escaping on his own horse.

He went out in the rain and had put on the raglan; and, as the morning was cold, his wife put a shawl over his shoulders as he went out of the tent. There was no woman's clothes on Mr. Davis and no misunderstanding about it. The lie lies in the heart of the writers, not in the mouths of the captors.

Mr. Davis was ready to die and expected to die. He would have scorned a suggestion of escaping in woman's clothes. The historians alone are the liars about the incident.—Birmingham Ledger.

Union Chapel, Islington, London, has extended a call to Dr. J. H. Jowett, now serving the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York. It is not likely that Dr. Jowett will abandon his present field of labor. Referring to Dr. Jowett's pastorate in New York, the Editor of the British Weekly says: "A few days ago he wrote us, 'I am giving my entire strength to the church at Fifth Avenue. I scarcely ever go outside of the city, and yet I find that every moment of my time and every ounce of my energy are required for the work.'" If Dr. Jowett needs to concentrate, what about the ordinary pastor?

PALMETTO LETTER.

Grand world, Meek, grand world, old fellow! The longer I live in it, the better I like it. It will always be home to me, no matter where the Lord may send me when I cross the "narrow stream of death." Of course, it is not what it ought to be, or will be, when it is brought up to the standard of God's divine purpose in its creation. But it is slowly rising out of the slime into which it slipped when Eve took that unfortunate walk by herself in Eden. I have just read Milton's poetical version of the sad event. What impresses me is that Eve got into all her trouble, and got us all in, too, by trying to run affairs by herself. If she had staid with Adam where God put her, she might never have met the devil. But no; she wanted to be independent. She was the first suffragette. And her first attempt to use the ballot turned the devil loose on this planet. Her modern daughters will do similar damage when they get it again.

This is suggested by a visit to Columbia of a noted suffragette leader to get our poor benighted women "to think." They regard me here as a sort of champion of the anti's, which I regard as a high compliment, and when they arranged for their meeting, the women began to bombard me through the 'phone to attend and "hear their side." So I blew on the little coal of chivalry left, and kindled up enough of the fire of old-time gallantry, which they are trying so hard to extinguish, and out of respect for my fair friends, went. "Hello! What are you doing here, Doctor?" asked Mr. Cain, the proprietor of the hall where they met. I told Cain the story told on Cottrell when he lived in Kentucky. The Republicans held a convention in the town where he was pastor. Though a rampant Democrat, curiosity prompted him to slip into the place to hear what was said. Someone saw him sitting in a corner, and said, "Come forward, Dr. Cottrell, and open the meeting with prayer." "She-e-e," replied Cottrell, "I don't want the Lord to know I am here."

What do you suppose that woman said? She said that the magna charta of the suffragette movement was in the first chapter of Genesis where it is said that God created Adam and Eve, "male and female created he them." But she said not a word about the passage in the third chapter of Genesis, where it says, "and thy desire shall be unto thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." Wasn't that like a woman! Quote what suits her, and ignore the rest. The whole Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, condemns the suffragette movement. But what cares Anna Shaw or Emiline Pankhurst for the Bible! As the Abolitionists in the North before the war said, "If the Bible is against them, they must get a new Bible." That is what they will have to do. A man met me and said, "Steel, it's coming." "That is just what Noah said," I replied.

The second annual Wesley Bible Class Conference for South Carolina has just closed a most successful meeting. Of course, Chief Bulla was at the head of the column. We had with us this time that gifted Mississippi Sunday school worker, Miss Kilpatrick, of Corinth. Of course, it was a case of "veni, vidi, vici." She came, she saw, she conquered. She gave great inspiration to our workers, and we all hope she will come again and again. It was a special pleasure to have her for a brief hour in our home and at our table. She is working herself to death, and yet we had no mercy, but insisted on hearing her when she really ought to have been in bed resting. She threw out several dares to South Carolina to keep the lead in Wesley Class work, and told us to look out next year, or Mississippi would take the colors, whereupon I had to discharge a "hurrah for Mississippi." The Hon. Walter M. Chandler, of New York, lectured before the Y. M. C. A. here recently on "The Trial of Jesus Christ," and made a great impression. It so happened that he and John Sharp Williams and I alighted on this planet not far from each other in Mississippi. When I mentioned the fact to a friend, he said, "How does it happen that all three of you had to leave the neighborhood?" What fool questions some folks will ask! "Pa, what is the color of the wind?" "The wind has no color, Willie; what do you ask such fool questions for?" "Well, I heard you talking about a sight draft!"

What do you think of Bishop Leete and his move to build a great Northern Methodist Church in Atlanta! That is fraternity with a vengeance. It makes your federation proceedings a farce. It is just like I told you all along. Meek, the Northern Methodist Church is not going to yield one foot of territory. They mean to crowd us everywhere, and we might as well make up our minds to that and quit fooling with the matter. Nothing but the absorption of the Southern branch of Methodism will ever satisfy the Northern Methodists. There are many noble exceptions, many to whom Bishop Leete's unbrotherly violation of all the proprieties of interdenominational Methodist courtesy will be very painful; but they are few compared with the great mass of the Church, who, let us charitably think, largely because they do not fully understand the case, endorse the policy of extending their work in the South.

For my part I don't blame them. What I blame them for is to keep pretending to be for federation, and then all the time disregarding it. That is not honorable. Let them build their big Church if they want to, right across the street from First Church. They won't get our folks, and we have so far got along without theirs; but for decency's sake, while they are doing that, don't let them make fools of us by our thinking they are sincere when they talk about being in favor of federation. They are not, and they never will be.

We have had a gracious revival meeting in our Washington Street Church. I had the very efficient help of Rev. Raymond Browning, an evangelist from North Carolina. He was so well pleased with Columbia that he has moved here to live. He is a strong preacher, and has fewer objectionable points as an evangelist than almost any man I know. He is very successful, and his work is deep and thorough. I commend him to our pastors who may want help. S. A. STEEL.

PRAYER.

By Rev. W. L. Duren.

If memory of public services is to be trusted, prayer has, perhaps, been the theme of more addresses than any other single theme I have ever heard discussed. I shouldn't wonder if this is a general experience. So I am aware of the difficulty and of what would almost seem to be the presumption of undertaking to write either entertainingly or instructively upon this much threshed subject. But in thinking of prayer in connection with the protracted services to which we are now looking forward, I find myself asking the question: "Do we really comprehend the meaning of prayer?" Do we understand it in its relation to Christian experience and Christian vocation? Do we not lose much of the strength and directness in the very form of our praying? Isn't it frequently true that prayer is a perfunctory performance rather than a heart exercise growing out of the consciousness of blessing on the one hand, and the consciousness of need on the other? If these and like questions may not be answered to our credit, I think we may dare to take another look into a matter which has become more or less unfamiliar through the very assurance of its familiarity.

In the opening verses of the eleventh chapter of the Gospel as recorded by St. Luke, we have what is to my mind the most luminous and comprehensive exposition of prayer to be found in the Scriptures. There is first the form, then an example of its application, and then its whole force is gathered into the epigram: "Ask and it shall be given you." Surely the purpose is to reduce our conception of prayer to the simplicity of uttering the heart's burden, and at the same time to fill the form with the force of personal petition.

Among the first thoughts which occur to me upon reading this passage is that prayer is a personal matter, a transaction between persons. And it directly controverts the idea which the Athenians seemed to have had as to a local or absentee god. It teaches the immediate accessibility of God. I have thought many times that we need to be told that God is not far away, but is a permanent presence and possession. Then, looked at in the light of this passage and of the other passages bearing upon this subject, do we really pray until a Name has been changed into a Presence? And after all is it far from the truth to say in the language quoted by Dr. Jowett in one of his books: "Prayer is the practice of the presence of God?" I do not speak of prayer as a form, but as a force.

I think another factor in real prayer, set forth here as elsewhere, is the consciousness of our dependence. Not a mere confession of dependence, but the consciousness of dependence. I do not think that formal confessions are at all dependable evidences of the deeper recognition of what we say. It has really seemed to me that sin and self-sufficiency are twin thoughts. It was through such an aspiration in man that sin found its introduction into the world—"... ye shall be as gods." The obstinacy of sin through the centuries in which human impotence and divine sufficiency have appeared in the most appealing contrast, is prima facie evidence of the persistence of that idea. And the uprooting of constitutional wrong is not to be accomplished by formality. But sure it is that prayer as a force comes out of the experience-wrought conviction of dependence. We do not ask others for loaves until our own pantry is bare; and we do not seek spiritual guidance until we have had discovered to us the inevitable falsity of our own philosophy.

Another element of real prayer is definiteness of petition. In my judgment the tendency to diffusiveness is a very common and serious fault in prayer. Furthermore, I think the concession that prayer is a special gift is one of the most unfortunate and lamentable concessions ever made. Such a concession may receive canonicity in our thought, but I think it has none in Scripture. For proof of this, turn to the picture of the Pharisee whose elaborate expression and immaculate formality is set over against the humble, heart-broken plea of the Publican. It is true now, I am sure, that this tendency to diffusiveness in prayer has scant approval among the rank and file of those upon whom it is perpetrated. On one occasion a gentleman was speaking to me of a prayer which he had heard, which he said was seventeen minutes in length, was a comprehensive resume of the history and work of the church, was an epitome of its prospects for all the years to come, and was hearable only because it was clad in choice English. The force of all this is that to that man who had heard, that prayer was little more than a literary essay upon The Church Universal; and public worship was the occasion, and it is to be hoped the excuse for its public deliverance. It is needless to say that such pointless wandering in prayer but little inspires the heart whose burden may be expressed in that declaration: "Sirs, we would see Jesus." And surely it but little agrees with the simplicity of that prescription: "Ask and it shall be given you."

Behind these elements of prayer is that vital element, Faith in God. Faith based upon the assurance that God notes human conduct, that he pardons sin, and that his love is unlimited. I do not think that our faith in praying is always either symmetrical or unmixed. Indeed, I think we often limp in our prayers. I remember to have preached upon Faith once, and at the close of the service a young woman put to me the question: "Do you not think that it somehow takes down your faith to pray 'Thy will and not mine be done?'" She asked that question out of a heart that yearned to know the whole truth. Is it not true that her faith was lacking in symmetry through her defective understanding of the indissoluble integrity and love of God? Might it not be true also that her thought was tinged, perhaps unconsciously, with selfish design? Many things might be said here by way of enlarging upon the thought indicated; but it is sufficient to say that the confidence which makes prayer possible is horn of faith in God.

But if many things are taught with reference to prayer, one thing is not taught, I think; and that is that prayer may be used as a preachment. I have heard such done, and I have always felt that it was really a sort of uncanny conjuring, or rather an effort in that direction. I have the recollection of a prayer in which God was besought in the interest of a riddance of troublesome elements by a method and after a fashion that would hardly square with the teaching: "If thine enemy hunger, feed him, and if he thirsts, give him drink." I do not mean to say that it is always true that personal animus is back of such a prayer, for I know that there are many who adopt forms without thought as to their content. But it is too frequently the resort of those who would "call down fire from heaven" upon offenders.

I have but touched upon a few of the things which enter into the make-up of a means of grace which we all too little understand and appreciate; but I cannot do more here. My hope in presenting these thoughts is that I may help to keep some one from letting familiarity with a term rob an exercise of its virtue. I am minded to say in conclusion that without such an apprehension as I have indicated all our eloquence in prayer shall be as a bag of wind that spends itself in an empty and meaningless blast, but with it stammering lips shall be filled and freighted with the fullness of God.

Columbus, Miss.

"THE CONFERENCE COLLECTIONS MADE EASY."

In a recent number of the Advocate there appeared an article under the above caption. The writer has received so many inquiries from so many different sources that a second article on the same subject seems necessary. Some of these inquiries have been answered by personal letters. There have come many letters from the circuits and small stations in Louisiana and Mississippi commending the suggestion of "A Conference Collection Day or Month" in the spring and one in the fall. I had not anticipated so many requests for samples of envelopes and consequently my limited supply has been exhausted. The envelope, however, is a very simple one—a common coin envelope, three by five and one-half inches, with opening in end. The printing on it should be sufficiently comprehensive, even were the letter accompanying it lost. At least three things should be made very plain on the envelope. First—What the offering is for. The words "Conference Assessments" should be made conspicuous. It is hard for some people to understand that they can pay on the Conference assessments at any other time except the last two weeks of the Conference year. Have printed on the envelope the different causes with the amount of the assessment opposite. Second—When the offering is to be made. Let there be no mistake about the day. If desired, the printing of the envelopes can be so arranged that with the offering a subscription can be made for the Conference collection day in the fall. Third—Who is to make the offering. A letter and envelope should be sent to every member of the Church. The children and the poor will appreciate the fact that they are not forgotten. The letter should be a brief explanation of the why of the envelope. By no means should the letter be too lengthy. It should have a personal-pastoral ring to it.

Let Conference Collection Day be a big day. Make the offering at the Church. The Missionary committee might count the money right there and then. Ten or fifteen minutes in a testimony meeting, telling how the money was earned, or with what spirit it was given, would not be amiss. It might be made a laymen's meeting—the laymen making short talks on the great causes represented. Certainly it ought to be a Thanksgiving service. When I was a boy in the country it was not an uncommon thing for children to be in partnership with the Lord for missions and education and the great work of the Kingdom. We had our chickens, gardens, cows, and cotton patches, and we tithed to the work of the Lord. I think the first five dollars I ever made was given to Millsaps College. Had I never given that five dollars I doubt whether I would have ever gone to Millsaps College or any other college. The gift of five dollars made with my own hands redeemed me from the curse of ignorance.

I am thoroughly convinced that if preachers and people would make an earnest effort to raise the assessment in full it could be done. What a difference it would make! The preachers would go up to Conference happy. The churches, by their splendid record, would be stimulated to larger achievements. Last year the Louisiana Conference paid just a fraction more than half the assessment. From many quarters there comes a complaint: "The assessments are too high." One thing is certain: "The payments are too low." What did the Methodists of Louisiana do last year for education and missions? We paid the great sum of ten cents a member for Education, fourteen cents for Foreign Missions, and eighteen cents for Home Missions, and this was done in the face of our greatest needs and our greatest opportunity. Our educational institutions, especially Centenary College, are in great peril because of the lack of financial aid. We just must come to their rescue. The assessments in full would help mightily. Both Centenary and Mansfield colleges are doing a most excellent work and have a great opportunity to render a real service to our Church and commonwealth. Large sections of Louisiana are churchless, so far as Protestantism is concerned. It is impossible with our meager gifts to Home Mission work to open up this new territory. And never before has the need in our Foreign Mission work been so great. The ends of the earth are coming to us—and all lands are open for the gospel—and yet we are playing with Missions and Education and all of the great causes that ought to stir our hearts and provoke us to sacrificial giving.

Twenty-one out of the thirty-eight stations in the Louisiana Conference paid the assessment in full last year. Only three circuits paid everything in full, viz.: Grand Cane, W. R. Harvell, pastor; Boyce and Lecompte, A. S. J. Neill, pastor; and Bayou Lachute, H. J. Boltz, pastor. These churches and pastors are to be congratulated. What they did, can be done by all the rest of us.

Several have written me that it is not so much the method, but a faithful, conscientious effort that makes the Conference collections easy. In this I agree. A poor method, faithfully worked, is better than a good method, left to take care of itself. However, those who are making the faithful effort with the poor method, will welcome a better method. I have found from experience in serving all kinds of churches, that "The Conference Collection Day" in the spring and in the fall is the best method for raising the assessments in full in the small stations and circuits. If my people were not sufficiently trained and educated in giving to pass directly to the use of the Duplex Envelope, I would for a year use twelve envelopes, one a month, instead of two.

The Duplex Envelope and Every-Member-Canvass for giving on the weekly basis is beyond doubt the best method thus far devised for financing the Kingdom of God. Every member of the Church should have his part in this great work, and he can do his best only when his gifts are made every week. A very large number of our churches ought to be in a position to use the Duplex method now. Certainly it ought to be the ultimate aim of every church. Brother W. S.

Holmes, Lay Leader of the Louisiana Conference, in his article titled "The Every-Member-Canvass," strongly urges that the duplex envelope be used in all our churches. The difficulty here is not in the duplex envelope, but it is in the church itself. I do not know, but I doubt very seriously, if half of our churches in Louisiana use any kind of envelope. I know of some few that have tried the Duplex Envelope and have made a miserable failure of it. They simply lacked education along the line of systematic giving—and method in giving. Again, I venture the assertion that half of our Methodist people, half the time, haven't enough money to make an offering every week in keeping with what they ought to give, especially those who engage in farm work. The best time for people to give money is when they have it. Farmers get ready money to run their farms. They might get money to pay the weekly assessments, too, if they were educated up to it. My suggestion as to a "Conference Collection Day" in the spring and one in the fall is the first step in giving this education. This method will succeed in many places where the Duplex would at first fail; in fact, it is a "near cut" to the Duplex method (the best method, when you have worked up to it).

A GREAT REVIVAL.

Dear Dr. Meek: I want to report a great revival at the Texas Avenue Church. We began on the fourth Sunday in February. Brother Geo. D. Anders came and did most faithful work for two weeks, at which time it was evident that the revival was on. Brother Anders could not stay with us longer, but as it happened our evangelist, Dr. A. C. Holder, was in the city taking a much needed rest before leading a revival campaign at Travis Street, Sherman, Tex. We prevailed upon him to "come over and help us." So for two weeks longer we fired away at the enemy. The slain of the Lord were many. Dr. Holder demonstrated that sometimes a prophet has honor in his own country. People came in crowds to hear him. Conversions were witnessed at every night service, and at almost every day service. One hundred and twenty-three stood before the altar and professed Christ as their Savior. Sixty-four joined the Methodist Church, and a number joined other churches. Perhaps as many church members re-consecrated themselves to the Lord. I am sure that many of the brethren will rejoice with us in the victory here. Of course, we lift our hearts to the gracious Giver of all these things. In appreciation to the men who assisted here in this work, we want to say that any pastor desiring good and efficient help in revival work will make no mistake in securing the assistance of either of them.

A PLEA FOR THE UNION OF THE TWO METHODISMS.

Mr. Editor: I have been reading lately in the Advocates of the organization lately created by the great Methodisms, namely, The Federal Council. It makes me feel good to read these expressions of brotherly love indulged in by each to the other. I read the official organs of both churches, and am also familiar with the Discipline of each of them, and I see no obstacle formidable enough to withstand the energy of either church if these energies could be bent toward organic union. I am forced to believe that the main trouble is prejudice, and, in my opinion, it is confined largely to our leaders. I venture the assertion that two-thirds of the lay members of both branches are not able to say what is keeping the two Methodisms apart unless it is prejudice. I am persuaded that other denominations look with disapproval on us, seeing that we have the same Articles of Religion; and as the difference in church polity is so little that they fail to find it at all. Still we stay apart, and in many places will not even work together in a meeting. Often there are two little struggling Methodist Churches in a town where the congregation is barely able to care for one pastor.

As I have said, the mountain of prejudice is all that I can see in the way. I am a native of the sunny South and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. I was reared among the colored people; my father was a slave owner. I think I understand the colored brother fairly well, and I think that the policy of our Southern sister toward him is good for the South; in fact for all places where the Negroes are numerous enough to support an organization. Let him have a separate organization, and let his white brother counsel and help him in the management of his church affairs. Where there are too few colored people for them to organize a church of their own, I see nothing wrong in allowing them a place on the roll with us, and I can see no reason why a united Methodism could not adopt such a course as I have suggested. If the colored brother is a true Christian and worthy a place among us, he would be happy in an humble place; otherwise it is evident that he is not worthy and should not be enrolled.

Our Southern brethren have had considerable discussion concerning a church name. I wrote the Nashville Christian Advocate and suggested the name, "Southern Methodist Church," dropping the word Episcopal. I think the word Episcopal is superfluous because it is generally known that the plan of the Methodists is to have Episcopal supervision over the Church. I think to change the name to "Southern Methodist Church" and our branch to "Northern Methodist Church" would make the way easy for the two to get together under the name of the "United Methodist Church." The two great bodies ought to be one. It is absolute folly to stay apart since both are in so many States, north and south, and the work could be done so much more economically if we were one. I have heard the matter of church property mentioned as a cause necessitating separation. It seems to me that the property could be cared for and used to better advantage in every way by a united Church.

I had given up hope of living to see a united Methodist Church, but late proceedings seem to point so much that way that the hope is beginning to revive in me that I may yet see the old antebellum prejudices cast to the winds and the two great branches of Methodism again united and pressing the battle against sin in one solid phalanx.

With this barrier arising from division removed, I feel assured that Methodism would double her speed in the great work of conquering the world for Christ.

TO SEEK A REHEARING OF THE VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY CASE.

The following dispatch was printed in the Times-Democrat last Saturday, dated Nashville, Tenn., March 27:

"Claiming that the recent decision of the Supreme Court is in error, and renaming the grounds on which the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, claim the ownership of Vanderbilt University for the Church, a petition was filed before the State Supreme Court to-day asking for a rehearing of the case.

"It is understood the answer of the Board of Trust to the Bishops will be filed before the Supreme Court to-morrow.

"The petition is a voluminous document of sixty pages, which assails every proposition laid down by the court in the last opinion.

"In the petition it is argued that the Board of Trust is not a self-perpetuating body, but that the Methodist Annual Conference had in the beginning the sole right as members of a corporation to elect the trustees, and that subsequently this right was vested in the General Conference.

"It is likewise claimed in the petition that Commodore Vanderbilt was not the founder of the University, but that it was founded by the Annual Conference of the Church, and that the Church is entitled to the credit for the funds obtained from Commodore Vanderbilt."

"EVERY MAN A BEAM."

Not what you have in your eye, but what you should have on your shoulder (2 Kings 6:2). The conditions that confronted the school of the prophets in the days of Elisha are confronting us in our educational work. Especially is this true of our school of the prophets at Shreveport. "The place where we dwell before thee is too strait for us." What we must have is means to make more room so that we can grow. We should view our work as a unit. We are the only Protestant denomination in the State who are now running a college for boys and another for girls. We alone are trying to meet our obligation in full to the youth of our State, in those things that constitute Christian education. This means much to them and to us. If the youth among the Protestants of Louisiana are to have the teaching and training that is to fit them for the best usefulness in life, for the present, at least, they will have to look to us for it. Shall we provide it? We can. Will we measure up to our opportunity and say we will?

The work that the Lord has cut out for us is not greater than we can do. This is not the way He does. And the fact that he has opened a large door before us is proof that if we will, we can enter and possess the land. The only giants that make us look upon ourselves as grasshoppers are our own selfish desires.

The call for men and women to come to the help of God in this great work is loud enough to reach every one, had we but "ears to hear." The trouble is that few ears itch for such a cry. A call to self-denial is not one in answering which people run themselves or other people down. But this lack of demonstrative willingness does not vitiate the call or take the edge off of necessity. If there ever was a day when our land needed men and women who know the right and have the courage to do it, it is now. The reliable man is in demand in the world as well as in the Church.

The place in which to educate the boys and girls of our land is not in the large State or greatly crowded college or university, but in the small, and what is termed by the educational egotist of this country, the insignificant schools, which are usually not greatly endowed with money or lands, but are generally headed by just as much brains as the other and endowed with the noblest spirits that adorn the world. Back of this statement, and the proof of it, is the noted remark of James A. Garfield concerning a log, a boy, and Mark Hopkins. What he referred to was the personal character and influence of the teacher. This is all lost in the great mass of the student body. You must ever bear in mind that character is caught and not taught. There has to be that thing known as contact one with another before there can come any revelation of one to another. The more intimate the contact or relation, the cleaner the insight and the greater the results from such association.

Now we have set aside to the furtherance of this good work three good men and true: Wynn, Bobbitt and Brown. Shall we as a church help them and thus bring the work to a completion? or shall we just let them stand in the breach until they are discouraged and are finally forced by our indifference to give up? If each of us will lend a hand and do what he can, then the plans and purposes of these leaders will be realized. The way to save a people is to save its youth. What will you give for the redemption of the youth of Louisiana? This statement has been made by one who claims to have studied the situation in the United States: "In 1900 this country paid eleven dollars per capita for the education of its school children and six thousand dollars per capita for its criminals, in trying and punishing them." How much better off we would have been if we had put $6000 on the boys and girls, preparing them for service to society, instead of spending it in protecting society from them!

CHANGE OF DATE.

The Greenville District Conference which was to have been held at Jonestown, April 14-16, is changed to Shelby, and will be held April 12-14. This change is made necessary on account of a destructive fire in the resident part of the town a few nights ago, and also an epidemic of whooping cough in the community. Please give notice of this change in the next issue of the Advocate.

HAL S. SPRAGINS, P. E.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Annual Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference will be held at Laurel on April 24-29. Final preparations for the program and order of work have not yet been sufficiently completed for publication, but a detailed account will appear in the Advocate at an early date. The Conference will be fortunate in having a returned missionary and one or more Council officers present.

Let all auxiliaries in the above named Conference take note of the time and place, and begin at once to prepare for a full representation. It is earnestly hoped by all interested in the coming meeting that it may be the best in every way, and to this end let us unite our prayers for God's especial blessing on all the efforts put forth for the carrying on of this particular branch of His work.

Begin at once to expedite matters for your delegates by looking up railroad schedules, connections, etc., and as early as possible send names of delegates to Mrs. J. L. Neill, Laurel, Miss.

MRS. R. E. JOHNSON, Pres.

MRS. H. L. McCLESKY, Rec. Secty.

NOTICE!

The Greenville District Conference will be held at Shelby instead of at Jonestown, April 12-14. Let every preacher in the District send me the names of delegates who are expected to attend; others, who are expecting to come. Please indicate same.

THEO. M. BRADLEY.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Publisher of the New Orleans Christian Advocate has installed a complete outfit for the execution of small job printing, and, with the aid of the Parcels Post, we are now prepared to receive orders from our friends for every description of stationery and printing. Those in need of service will confer a favor on us by sending us their orders.

Great hearts alone can understand how much glory there is in being good. To be and keep so is not the gift of a happy nature alone, but it is strength and heroism.—Jules Michelet.

One of the busiest men in American Methodism is Bishop W. A. Candier, of Atlanta, Ga. In a letter to a New Orleans pastor a few days since he stated that his time is crowded completely full of engagements up to July 1. Bishop Candier will write the address of the Bishops to our approaching General Conference. This is a guarantee that it will be a statesman-like and vigorous message.

Dr. J. W. Lee, the brilliant pastor of St. John's M. E. Church, South, of St. Louis, has organized a new society that he has named, "The Tabasophy League," which, when translated, is said to mean "Christianity in Action." The Wesleyan Christian Advocate states that this organization is an "Appreciation League." The principle is all right, but why a new society?

An anonymous gift of $500,000 toward the construction of a great National Protestant Episcopal Cathedral in Washington City was announced last week. The site of this structure is Mount St Albans, in the suburbs of the city, and it is expected to be, when completed, one of the finest religious edifices in the world. The Episcopalians have a National Cathedral Association, with chapters in various places, for the purpose of securing such buildings.

The Suez Canal, according to report, will be deepened and greatly improved with a view to enabling it to compete with the Panama Canal. Since it is stated that fashionable women are about to take up the wearing of wigs, having one to match the color of each dress, it may not be amiss to reproduce the following press dispatch, sent out from Berlin, Germany, on March 16:

"The wife of a government official at Danzig has been pronounced leprous and sent to a leper hospital. The infection has been traced to a wig made of hair recently imported from China."

Edwin Bjorkman, seizing upon the fact that there is a literary man in the White House, has written in the April number of the Century Magazine "An Open Letter to President Wilson on Behalf of American Literature," in which, without implying that the President is at the present time uninterested in the matter, he strongly urges him to foster the literature of America. He compares what we do for literature with the encouragement offered by a small country like Norway through national institutes, prizes, etc. This discussion is well worth reading.

The Pittsburg Christian Advocate says: "At Blackburn some English militant suffragettes waked up the town by firing off a big cannon, a Crimean war trophy, which for sixty years had stood silent in the city park." This is whooping 'em up some. Who knows but that in the near future our boasted civilization may evolve a whole army of Joan of Arcs? What then, we wonder, will become of Mr. Carnegie's Peace Commissions? By the way, why does not some one who is close to him call the Iron Master's attention to the importance of "pacifying" the fighting suffragettes? Here is a wide-open door of opportunity.

A manufacturing establishment in Chester, Pennsylvania, has fallen upon a new expedient for promoting sobriety among its employees. Instead of demanding that they refrain from the use of intoxicants, it offers an increase of ten per cent in wages to all who will voluntarily sign the total abstinence pledge and keep it. The basis of this action, of course, is that the drinking of stimulants decreases industrial efficiency. It is said that the operatives are pleased with this proposition and that a majority of them have acceded to it. If the financial loss entailed by the use of stimulants because of the impaired efficiency of labor in all the industries of the United States could be computed, we do not doubt that the figures would be staggering in their immensity.

The Youth's Companion says: "In 44 leading colleges and universities of the United States there are this year 2034 foreign students. China sends more than any other country, 438. Of the rest, 327 are from Canada; 263 from Japan; 102 from India; 88 each from England and Mexico; 85 from Cuba; 67 from Germany; 57 from Brazil; 53 from Turkey; 42 from Russia; 32 from Argentina; 25 each from France and Norway; 23 from South Africa; and the rest from almost half a hundred countries and islands. Columbia has the most foreign students, 183; but Pennsylvania, Cornell, California, Michigan, Chicago, Harvard, Illinois, Northwestern, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology have 100 or more each."

Wireless messages are now being sent immense distances. Last week signals from Canada were received on board warships in Chilian waters 4062 miles away, and a communication was sent from the German wireless station in Nauen to Windhuk, in Southwest Africa, a distance of about 6500 miles. Two other feats lately accomplished by Mr. Marconi were the lighting of an electric lamp six miles distant without any visible means of connection, and keeping warships in telephonic communication when in motion and as much as forty-five miles apart, without the use of wires. Truly, this is an age of marvels. Indeed, since luminiferous ether, the medium used in wireless telegraphy, is believed to pervade all space, communication with other planets, if they are inhabited, seems to be really within the range of possibilities.

EASTER SUNDAY DESIGNATED AS MISSIONARY DAY.

To the Pastors of the Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren: I desire to call attention to the fact that at our last Annual Conference we adopted the following important resolution, which was included in Report No. 1 of the Board of Missions: "Whereas, We are informed by Dr. W. W. Pinson, our General Secretary, that our General Board of Missions pays out annually upwards of $7,500 in interest on delayed collections, "Whereas, This sum is sufficient to support three married missionaries in the foreign field; therefore be it "Resolved, 1. That we, the pastors and laymen of the Mississippi Annual Conference, pledge ourselves to begin our missionary campaign in January, or as early thereafter as practicable. "2. That we designate the second Sunday in April as Missionary Day, and that we do our utmost to raise our assessment for Home and Conference Missions by April 15, and our assessment for Foreign Missions by July 1."

In behalf of our Conference Board of Missions, and in behalf of the great missionary enterprise of the Church, which is the supreme business of the kingdom, I respectfully ask every pastor who will do so to co-operate with us in observing the Second Sunday in April as Missionary Day, which this year happens to be Easter Sunday. Most pastors have larger congregations than usual that Sunday, and the people on that occasion are in a mood to respond cheerfully and generously to appeals for a worthy cause. Why not give them a chance to express the gratitude and joy and hope that fill so many hearts at Eastertide by making an offering for the propagation of the gospel of our crucified, but risen, Lord? Dr. L. C. Branscomb, Presiding Elder of the Birmingham District of the North Alabama Conference, who recently served four years as pastor of the First Church, Birmingham, states that for a number of years it has been his custom to preach a missionary sermon the Sunday before Easter, and take a missionary offering on Easter Sunday. He has been one of the most successful pastors in Southern Methodism, and his example is worthy of imitation.

The pastor who hesitates to observe Missionary Day because conditions are not altogether favorable will never find everything favorable for his missionary campaign, or for any other important work to be done. "Where there's a will, there's a way."

It has been suggested that much better results may be obtained by distributing envelopes for the missionary offering the Sunday preceding Easter. Envelopes for Easter are furnished by our Publishing House at 30 cents per hundred. Yours fraternally, M. M. BLACK, Conf. Miss. Sec'y.

TWO EPITAPHS.

Here lies a poor woman who always was tired, She lived in a house where help was not hired, Her last words on earth were: "Dear friends, I am going

To where there's no cooking, no washing, nor sewing;

But everything there is exact to my wishes, For where they don't eat there's no washing of dishes.

I'll be where loud anthems will always be ringing; But, having no voice, I'll get quit of the singing. Don't mourn for me now—don't mourn for me, never;

I'm going to do nothing for ever and ever."

The Contrast.

Here lies a poor woman who always was busy; She lived under pressure that rendered her dizzy. She belonged to ten clubs, and read Browning by sight,

Showed at luncheons and teas, and would vote if she might;

She served on school boards with courage and zeal, She golfed and she kodaked, and rode on a wheel. She read Tolstoi and Ibsen, knew microbes by name,

Approved of Delsarte, was a "Daughter" and "Dame;"

Her children went in for the top education, Her husband went seaward for nervous prostration.

One day, on her tablets she found an hour free— The shock was too great and she died instantly.

A $15,000 GIFT.

My Dear Dr. Meek:

My congregation was made happy on yesterday when I had the pleasure and privilege of announcing from the pulpit that the Dantzler brothers of the Dantzler Lumber Company, of this place, had donated the sum of $15,000 to us for the purpose of erecting a brick church here in memory of their sainted mother, Mrs. S. E. Dantzler. In addition to this the company will furnish all the lumber needed to be used in the building. The gift is absolutely free from any entanglements or conditions. As I finished making the announcement the congregation arose and amidst tears of appreciative gratitude, united in singing "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." The money is available at once—so work on the church will begin as soon as the plan is selected.

FROM THE DARK CONTINENT.

Luebo, Africa, Dec. 31, 1913.

Dear Folks at Home:

It seems very strange to be dating a letter from Luebo, but I am getting to be rather accustomed to have strange names at the heading of my letters.

We arrived here on the morning of the 26th, and received as cordial a welcome as one could wish to have. There were nearly all the missionaries and I should think as much as 1,000 natives down to the landing to see us come in. We had a very pleasant trip up the river, even if we did get on some rocks at a landing and got the rudder bent so as to keep us tied up two days getting it mended. I am very much surprised to find that there are so few disagreeable things to be encountered out here. I have not seen a snake yet, and Captain Scott of the "Lapsley," who has been here seven years, told me that he had not seen a half dozen snakes in that time. In coming up the river we were only one or two nights where the mosquitoes were at all bad. Of course, the Captain picked out as good places as he could for the camp but he had to stop where the natives could get wood, so it gave them a fair chance at us. The nights are quite cold, enough so to make a blanket very comfortable. And in the evening after 4 or 5 o'clock one wants a coat on to keep off the chill. I don't think that the thermometer has been over 90 more than one or two days, and am not sure that it has reached that at all since we have been in Congo. I have not seen it up to 90 myself yet.

Game is also very scarce. The only things that we have seen in that line as yet (aside from hippos which were in the river in abundance) were a few crocodiles (less than a dozen), about the same number of monkeys, and a few flocks of birds, such as ducks and geese, and last, but not least, three wild elephants about a mile away. The Captain shot in their direction with his rifle to make them run for our amusement, and they went lumbering off through the tall grass.

The rivers are very large and swift. I should think that the Kasai, which is only a tributary of the Congo, and much smaller than it is where they come together, is fully as large as the Mississippi at New Orleans.

It spreads out over an immense territory. In some places it is as much as 15 miles wide, and full of islands, but with a good current in the channel even in the widest parts. Dr. Lambuth hopes to be able to get a small boat that will go up the Lubeful river so that we can make Lubeful our base instead of Lusamba as it will be about a week shorter trip overland from there.

It has been decided to have our whole party go along and make the whole trip together, as it would make an extra trip for some of us and it would be more inconvenient for them to go later than to go on with us. If for any reason we cannot take them all on the march with us, then Mary Lou (Mrs. Stockwell) will go on anyway and Mrs. Mumpower and the baby and Mrs. Bush will stay at Lusamba with the Presbyterian mission there, and we will send back for them later, but we expect to have them all with us all the way.

The Presbyterians are certainly good to us. They are doing everything in their power to help us along, even to sending some of their best men with us. Mr. Martin is sending his "personal boy," who is really invaluable to him, along for the trip, and in all about 25 men are going with us.

I wrote you some time ago that we had received word from Wembo Niami that he was waiting for us, and since coming here have taken a picture of the four messengers who went to him with the message that we were going to be later than we expected, but that we were coming, and he sent a spear back by them as a token that he was still friendly toward us, and was anxious to have us come.

There is certainly wonderful results to be seen of the work done here. I have come a long way now and have seen a good many church services, but the largest attendance that I have ever seen at such a service, with the possible exception of some big convention, was at the regular preaching service here last Sunday. And the attention given to the preacher was as good as one would see at home anywhere. I went out to a village that is not Christian, and the difference is very marked between them and the others. And we saw a good many of them on the way up the river who have never been evangelized, and regular heathen cannibals, almost naked, and in every way one could see that they were as degraded as people get. There is a prayer meeting at sunrise every morning here and that is attended by the neighborhood of 500 natives. I would hate to try to get that many together for that purpose every morning in the home-land.

We are going to get a number of trees and plants to take with us from here. They have a great deal of fruit. Pineapples are so common that they are not thought of as a luxury as they are at home. They ripen all the year round, and the imported varieties are very large. I measured one that was 24 inches around one way, by 39 the other. They have lots of bananas, pawpaws, limes and some grapefruit, oranges, lemons, etc.

We had a Christmas dinner on the "Lapsley" that was quite a success. The ladies made a special dinner for us and gave us a good time generally.

One of the native men who is to go with us is to be married on short notice, so as to be able to go. Guess this African trip is giving the matrimonial market quite a boom.

We received the package from Lake Charles all right, as well as several very welcome letters, and a large bundle of papers. There is to be a mail in in a few days now, but we must leave here on Friday morning.

We were out to a little social gathering last night. There were 24 missionaries, and a judge of this district who is very friendly to the folks here, present, and had a very pleasant time.

Mr. Mangum (who is with Bishop Lambuth) is a very fine story teller, and has the Uncle Remus stories down to a fine point. We never get tired of listening to him.

The "Lapsley" will take us around to Lusamba, about nine days' trip, and we will take about a week there getting our caravan ready, then about 15 days on the road, so it will be up into February by the time we get to Wembo Niami. Bishop Lambuth is planning if possible to go home in time for the General Conference, which means that he must leave us in about ten days or two weeks after we get to our station. We are very sorry to have him go so soon, as we need his advice so much, but guess that it is necessary to have him get back if he can.

Mary Lou is well and contributing her share in fine shape. I think that the Bishop likes her pretty much. I don't blame him a bit!

Love from JOHN.

MRS. OLIVE STANDIFER BARKSDALE.

"Never yet did morning rise
But that some heart did break."

One more grave has been made in the earth's surface. One more life has closed and all of its activities and energies and wonderful powers are closed in the dark tomb of time. We could not endure this bereavement if it were not the common lot of all. She was severely simple in all things, and it is best that this notice of her should be severely simple.

Olive Welch Standifer was born in Trenton, in Ouachita Parish, La., on the 4th day of March, 1875. She was the youngest daughter of Col. Thomas C. Standifer and Mrs. Sallie Alabama Standifer, and was reared in Trenton and in Ruston, where her father was a leading merchant during the latter years of his life. Both her parents died in Ruston, and it was there in the home which she inherited from her father and mother that the subject of this sketch departed this life on December 27, 1913.

Her parents were life-long, sincere members of the Methodist Church and she followed in their footsteps in precept and example. In all her life, and in all her thoughts and words and deeds, she devotedly obeyed the commandment, "Honor thy father and thy mother." It was not a dream with her. She believed they were waiting to welcome her on the other side. There is no doubt but that the first words she uttered in the Spiritland were, "Mamma" and "Papa."

Olive was educated at Ruston under Prof. and Mrs. Sligh, under whom she afterwards studied music at McKinney, Texas. She taught music in Monroe and earned the reputation of being a most excellent teacher. In 1900 she married Joseph D. Barksdale, with whom she resided with her mother until the latter's death in March, 1908. Afterwards she resided at the old home with her husband until her death two days after Christmas, which resulted from a fatal stroke of paralysis.

Her funeral in mid-winter was a most touching testimonial to the friendly esteem and affection in which she was held by all the citizens of Ruston. Rev. W. W. Holmes and the presiding elder, Rev. Briscoe Carter, conducted the services with profound feeling. Rarest and sweetest flowers wrapped her coffin in the old library where her father and mother had lain. Sweet songs were sung, and in the end she was laid to rest as near as possible to her mother. It was no perfunctory funeral. There were tears, genuine tears, shed by strong men and noble women and loving children.

This is no place for eulogy, but the heart aches as we say good-bye. We shall miss her cordial greeting and her true love. Her exquisite taste, her gentle refinement and her bright intelligence would have made her remarkable anywhere. When Edmund Burke paid his immortal tribute to Marie Antoinette, he said she cheered and decorated and elevated the sphere in which she moved, and ennobled everything she touched. Our dear one did more than that. As a member of society, as a member of the literary club, the "U. D. C.," and other clubs which she was fond of serving, she was indeed an ornament to Ruston. But her fondest work was as a member of the Willing Workers—the band of good women who seek to relieve the poor and needy. Her heart was in this work. She always thought of some one that nobody else thought of. She loved everybody. She loved everything that is beautiful and true in art and in nature. She lived a beautiful life and treasured beautiful ideals and beautiful inspirations and aspirations. An invalid for years, a child of suffering and sorrow, she was always an optimist and with Browning,

"Never doubted clouds would break;
Never dreamed though nights were worsted,
Wrong would triumph.
Fie! we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better, Sleep to wake."

A FRIEND.

MRS. N. J. SHIVERS.

The most powerful individual influence for good in the world is the life of Christ being radiated through the personality of a good woman. A woman is endowed with more refined sensibilities than a man, and to her is given a spiritual conscience which receives most readily the thoughts of the Master and transmits them to the world. Her mind is not warped by business prejudices, and she can easily detect error and sin and point out the way of escape for the young lives dependent upon her.

A woman's greatest opportunity is in the home circle; there she has the direction of immortal lives that may be molded like her ideals. She is the architect of certain of the "Temple of God," and her greatest opportunity is a spiritual and moral one. She develops the conscience of her children. With our modern science of education, the schools are better fitted for the scientific and symmetrical development of the child's mind; but no school, church or Sunday school can give the moral instruction so well as a Christian mother. She can kindle and foster the religious life as none other. She can lead her child to Jesus Christ more naturally than any other. The mother's influence is now as ever the leaven which makes society rise from one moral level to another.

Sister Shivers was born in Harrison County, Miss., in August, 1844, to G. W. and Rebecca Killcrease. In her eleventh year she was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at the Old White Bay Church, near Hazlehurst. Her home was in Hazlehurst for several years, after which she moved to Sunflower County. She was twice married; first to William Beasley, and after his death, to G. W. Shivers. She was the mother of ten children, of whom five survive her, as well as a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Her last years were spent at Boyle, Miss., with her son, Dr. E. E. Shivers, where she was loved and respected. It is with regret that we give her up, but with resignation and with the hope of following her some day and finding her happy in the fellowship of our Lord. "She hath done what she could," was said by our Lord himself as the highest compliment he could pay a woman. We may well apply this commendation to Sister Shivers, for she was a faithful, persevering, loving follower of Christ, an inspiration to her friends and loved ones, and a staunch supporter of the Methodist Church.

HOW TO DO GOOD WORK.

This is the way to do a good day's work: Begin it with God; do all in the name of the Lord Jesus and for the glory of God; count nothing common or unclean in itself—it can be so only when the motive of your life is low. Be not content with eye service, but as servants of God do everything from the heart and for his "well done." Ask him to kindle and maintain in your heart the loftiest motives and be as men which watch for the coming of the master of the house. —F. B. Meyer.

THE DAUGHTER WORTH HAVING.

Two gentlemen friends, who had been parted for years, met in a crowded city street. The one who lived in the city was on his way to meet a pressing business engagement. After a few expressions of delight, he said:

"Well, I'm off; I'm sorry, but it can't be helped. I will look for you to-morrow at dinner. Remember, 2 o'clock sharp. I want you to see my wife and child."

"Only one?" asked the other.

"Only one," came the answer, tenderly; "a daughter. But she is a darling."

And then they parted, the stranger getting into the street car for the park. After a block or two a group of five girls entered the car. They all evidently belonged to families of wealth. They conversed well. Each carried a very elaborately decorated lunch basket. Each was well dressed. They, too, were going to the park for a picnic. They seemed happy and amiable until the car stopped, this time letting on a pale-faced girl of about 11, and a sick boy of 4. These children were shabbily dressed, and on their faces were looks of distress. They, too, were on their way to the park. The gentleman thought so; so did the group of girls, for he had heard one of them say, with a look of disdain:

"I suppose those ragamuffins are on an excursion, too."

"I shouldn't want to leave home if I had to look like that, would you?" This to another girl.

"No, indeed; but there is no accounting for taste. I think that there ought to be a special line of cars for the lower classes."

All this was spoken in a low tone, but the gentleman heard it. Had the child, too? He glanced at the pale face and saw tears. He was angry. Just then the exclamation: "Why, there is Nettie! wonder where she is going?" caused him to look out upon the corner, where a sweet-faced young girl stood, beckoning to the car driver. When she entered the car she was warmly greeted by the five, and they made room for her beside them. They were profuse in exclamations and questions.

"Where are you going?" asked one.

"Oh, what lovely flowers! whom are they for?" asked another.

"I'm on my way to Belle Clarke's. She is sick, you know, and the flowers are for her."

She answered both questions at once, and then, glancing toward the door of the car, she saw the pale girl looking wistfully at her. She smiled at the child, a tender look beaming from her beautiful eyes, and then, forgetting she wore a handsome velvet skirt and costly jacket, and that her shapely hands were covered with well-fitted gloves, she left her seat and crossed over to the little one. She laid her hand on the boy's thin cheeks as she asked his sister:

"This little boy is sick, is he not? He is your brother, I am sure."

It seemed hard for the little girl to answer, but finally she said:

"Yes, Miss, he is sick. Freddie never has been well. Yes, Miss, he is my brother. We're going to the park to see if it won't make Freddie better."

"I am glad you are going," the young girl replied, in a low voice, meant for no one's ears except those of the child. "I think it will do him good; it's lovely there, with the flowers all in bloom. But where is your lunch? You ought to have a lunch after so long a ride."

Over the little girl's face came a flush.

"Yes, Miss, we ought to, for Freddie's sake; but, you see, we didn't have any to bring. Tim—he's our brother—he saved pennies so as Freddie could ride to the park and back. I guess, maybe, Freddie will forget about being hungry when he gets to the park."

There were tears in the lovely girl's eyes as she listened, and very soon she asked the girl where she lived, and wrote the address in a tablet which she took from a bag on her arm.

After riding a few blocks she left the car, but she had not left the little one comfortless. Half the bouquet of violets and hycinths were clasped in the sister's hands, while the sick boy, with a radiant face, held in his hand a package from which he helped himself now and then, saying to his sister in a jubilant whisper:

"She said we could eat 'em all, every one, when we go to the park. What made her so good and sweet to us?"

And the little girl whispered back:

"It's 'cause she's beautiful as well as her clothes."

When the park was reached the five girls hurried out. Then the gentleman lifted the little boy in his arms and carried him out of the car across the road into the park, the sister, with a heart full of gratitude, following. He paid for a nice ride for them in the goat carriage, and treated them to oyster soup at the park restaurant.

At 2 o'clock sharp, the next day, the two gentlemen, as agreed, met again.

"This is my wife," the host said, proudly introducing the comely lady; "and this," as a young lady of 15 entered the parlor, "is my daughter."

"Ah!" said the guest, as he extended his hand in a cordial greeting, "this is the dear girl whom I saw yesterday in the street car. I don't wonder you call her a darling. She is a darling, and no mistake. God bless her!"

And then he told his friends what he had seen and heard in the street car.—Central Christian Advocate.

RESPONSIBLE FOR OUR BELIEFS.

One hears that a man is not responsible for his beliefs, but do you think that likely? The soul has an eye as the body has, and we are responsible for the use we make of both. Take out your neglected Bibles, put away from you skeptical books, pray for light, do God's will as it is at present revealed to you, and his eternal promise shall be true of you as it has been of thousands before you, you shall know of the doctrine.—Southern Churchman.

MRS. ELIZA EMILY PARNELL.

Mrs. Eliza Emily Parnell was born in Panola County, Miss., Nov. 27, 1848. The greater part of her life she gave to the service of God. When but a mere child she professed faith in Christ and united with the Methodist Church, living in that communion until her death.

With her home-going, the Church lost one of its most devout and loved members. Sister Parnell was a woman of solid piety. Her entire life was spent in a religious atmosphere. There was never any doubt or uncertainty as to her relation to God. He was very real to her; hence her fine Christian experience and exemplary life. She was married to H. H. Parnell on March 17, 1869. To them were born eight children, five of whom survive. Since the death of her husband on January 9, 1908, Sister Parnell's health gradually declined. She was homesick. Her heart's treasure was "in the better land." She was none the less loyal to obligations here, but over there was her companion of thirty-nine years. And what years they were! Years wholly given to God—building a Christian home, serving the community in which her family lived, and making the Church more effective by their faith and godly example.

Sister Parnell was thoroughly consecrated. She willingly and gladly gave herself and her means to the cause of Christ. She went until physical strength failed her, and when the body could no longer respond to the impulse for active service, she served from her home, giving, praying, and radiating the helpful influences of a consecrated personality.

She possessed that wisdom which cometh from above. She knew just what to say and how to say it. She always had a good word for everybody. You might be discouraged, but her words of counsel always inspired strength and courage. She did not appreciate a fault-finding or critical spirit. Not given to such herself, she made you feel that such a spirit was wrong, very wrong. And yet, she did not scold. It was done just by her gentle spirit and sense of fairness. How kind she was! No wonder she had such influence and was loved and served so faithfully by children and friends. I never heard her speak evil of anyone. She endeavored to put the best interpretation upon every word and act. She was a good woman.

The last year of her life was one of intense and constant suffering. Through it all, her faith never wavered. She beheld "a city that hath foundations whose builder and maker is God." The end came peacefully. She was in a happy mood when she fell asleep. Death came to disturb her dreams and bear her away to the mansions of God. In the early morn of Oct. 30, 1913, she passed from earth into the glory land.

The funeral service was conducted at her home in Memphis by Rev. A. C. Bell and Rev. Geo. H. Martin. The remains were carried to Mississippi and interred in the old Peach Creek Cemetery near Sardis, Rev. W. G. Roberts of Crenshaw conducting the service. God bless the family and save them in his upper and better Kingdom!

A FRIEND.

"Let us rise as the sun rose and help to make the world glad. If we could but cultivate the habit of cheerful welcome to each new day, and rise with a determined purpose to look for good and pursue it with all the vigor of our renewed strength, it would make not only our own but our neighbor's lives far better worth living."

METHODISM'S OPPORTUNITY AND PERIL.

The following from Mrs. Corra Harris concerning the fashionable churches of New York City appeared in The Independent of March 16:

"The fashionable churches are nearly all in the same district as the fashionable theaters. The music is exceptionally good in all of them, and the sermons are—exceptionally—short. I came out of one last Sunday where we had listened to a sort of sacred opera for three-quarters of an hour and to a sermon of about fifteen minutes' dreary duration, and I wondered how that congregation would have listened to the last sermon I heard, in a mountain village, of an hour's length upon the text, 'Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.'"

"The stranger may know a fashionable church by the fact that the best pews are always locked. Late one afternoon I made a pilgrimage to a number of churches along Fifth Avenue. Those that could be entered at all (it was a wicked weekday!) had most of the pews locked. These people are afraid of catching disease from the casual occupant, or being contaminated with his dirt. They are afraid of every microbe except the bacillus of selfishness and pharisaism. At last, I climbed over the back of a very elegant pew upholstered in velvet. I did not do it to pray, but merely to set an example of courage to the scandalized publicans kneeling in the dingy ones in the back of the church.

"There is one church on the Avenue which bears this legend upon its doors: 'Come in and Rest.' It is a legend, by the way; doesn't mean anything, or the people outside would have found it out and gone in. Doubtless it is crowded on Sundays, but during the week I have never found a soul there. Meanwhile there are scores of cold and hungry men and women sitting in a park nearby, forlorn, haggard creatures, very much in need of that church to rest and warm themselves in. This is an indictment not only against this church in New York, but against fashionable churches everywhere. They are all quarantined against the very people most in need of them. The 'missions' they support only beg the question—Ellis Islands of Salvation."

The Trouble with These Churches.

We read in some of our religious papers some months ago a discussion of the question, "What Is The Matter With The Church?" It is not difficult to tell what is the matter with these churches described by Mrs. Harris; they have become utterly destitute of the spirit of Christ—of him who recognized the immeasurable worth of every human being and who defined his mission to be that of seeking and saving the lost. Such organizations as these are a travesty on Christian churches, a shameful reproach to the Master's cause. For them to plant a symbolic cross upon their towering steeples and have their godless choirs to chant hymns concerning our ascended Lord is the shallowest and most hollow mockery. If God should speak to them at all, it would doubtless be in much the same language that he used in speaking through the Prophet Isaiah to Israel in the olden time when, though their lives were putrid with sin, they continued to offer to him their meaningless sacrifices and the empty form of a pretended worship: "When ye come to appear before me—who hath required this at your hands to trample my courts? Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me. * * * It is iniquity, even the solemn meeting. Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth; they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them. And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear. * * * Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil—learn to do well; seek judgement, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow."

Should be a Warning.

We would do well as a denomination to take warning from the pitiable spectacle presented by such churches. There seems to be somehow a sort of natural tendency upon the part of Christian organizations and institutions to become aristocratic in their feelings and aspirations and to drift away from the common people. There is a transforming and refining power in the religion of Christ that soon improves and elevates its votaries, and too often they forget from whence they sprang and lose sight of their debt of obligation to their less favored fellow-beings. There is really nothing great on earth except men, women, and children, and when governments and churches cease to concern themselves with the masses, no matter what else they may undertake to do, they are but dawdling, and their glory will soon depart. Institutions, whether secular or sacred, can be great only as they serve mankind. To narrow their missions is to dwarf themselves. And as for an individual, a culture that makes him feel less sympathy for the lowliest of the race and that renders him less capable of helping them, is a loss rather than a gain.

The Modern Macedonian Call.

The Macedonian call to Methodism to-day is to go with the glorious message of salvation and the lifting arms of a Christly love to the unshepherded, perishing sheep of our ascended Lord, wherever they may be. From the crowded tenements of our cities; from their restricted districts where the red lights gleam; from noisy factories where weary toilers, old and young, are wearing out monotonous lives; from sinful pleasure's many haunts, where Satan reigns and souls are wrecked; from pioneer settlements and from mountain districts; from the farm, the mine, the lumber camp and the prison; from the cabins of the black man, spiritually destitute at our very doors; from the thousands of immigrants crowding to our shores, and from the suffering millions in heathen lands; yea, and also from the palatial homes of the rich and the high social circles where vice, petted and pampered, parades itself arrayed in the attractions of wealth—from all these places and many others comes the silent, but pathetic and appealing call for the assistance which the disciples of Christ, carrying with them the mighty power of the Holy Spirit, alone can give.

To Whom the Appeal Comes.

And this call is to every worker and agency in the Church: to our Bishops who should look upon the white harvest fields and lead the way in thrusting in the sickle, that others may follow their example; to our presiding elders, who ought to push out into the highways and hedges and sound loud and clear the evangelistic note; to the pastors in high steeple churches, who should cease their profitless philosophizing and speak as mighty prophets in touch with God; to the ministers in smaller places and on the circuits, who should tarry before the throne until they become flames of fire and push out to warm and light other hearts; to the lay members of our congregations, every one of whom ought to be a winner of precious souls; to our choirs, who ought to quit singing operatic tunes to win applause for themselves, and sing songs freighted with gospel truth that the people can understand; to our Sunday schools, that ought to cease wasting time upon ephemeral fads and labor to bring their pupils to a saving and increasing knowledge of Jesus; to our theological Seminaries, that ought to quit teaching higher criticism and other useless rubbish and seek to equip our young preachers for the true work of the Christian ministry, and to inspire them with a consuming evangelical aim; to our colleges and other institutions of learning, which ought to be permeated by an atmosphere of deep spirituality and which should strive to confer upon the largest possible number of our young people the blessing of a sound Christian education; to our connectional officers, who ought to democratize the departments under their supervision and endeavor to make them effective in helping the great masses of the Church; and to our periodicals and other publishing interests which should make it their mission to try to minister to the many, and not merely to the few.

Which Shall We Do?

Oh, if our Church, in every department of its organization and in every portion of the field, could catch a new vision of the unsaved millions of our own country and in foreign lands, and if sinking all else out of sight, she would address her vast energies to the one task of bringing them to Christ and building them up in him, what magnificent achievements for our Lord would follow, and how splendid and inspiring would be her history in the years yet to be! Will this vision come to her and will such be her future? or will she, like most other religious organizations have done, and like we fear she herself has to some extent been doing in the late decades, drift away from the great body of the people, and under the strange spell of a fancied respectability, restrict her operations to the so-called better classes, while others enter the door to noble service that Providence has opened and take her crown? To hear and hearken to this call that comes from the perishing multitudes of earth is Methodism's glorious opportunity, and the possibility that she may be deaf to it and disregard it is her gravest peril.

THE PARABLE OF THE GREAT SUPPER.

As told in this parable of the fourteenth chapter of Luke's Gospel, when all preparations were made for the great supper and the guests were expected, they sent in their excuses. But that large number of people, "the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind," flocked without much solicitation to the feast. In the case of the first mentioned, those alluring things pertaining more closely to self, cast a shadow over the offerings of their would-be host. But the pains and woes of the latter magnified the bounties to be had.

Doubtless those of the number represented as having bought a piece of ground, having acquired five yoke of oxen, and having a newly married wife, were in a position to congratulate themselves upon possessing large material holdings by which they laid much store. These personal interests shut out appreciation for the courtesy of their friend in extending this invitation, which would mean a happy occasion with neighbors and acquaintances. These were men of some strength of mind and character and of value as citizens. It is improbable that a like aggregation of people could be formed under favorable circumstances without some good results. Social functions have always been considered one of the boons of civilization. Besides the joy of the occasion much talk on questions naturally before the public produce results that cannot be without effect. Especially in the time of Christ when facilities for disseminating news were poor such an occasion meant much. But the ones invited forgot these benefits and would not accept an invitation to the great supper.

The blessedness of a calm and peaceful relationship with God may be obscured by selfish considerations that ultimately result in poverty of goodness and worth. The piece of ground and other values that were named are good to have, but they should not depreciate the value of Christian fellowship and belittle the virtues of citizenship in the Kingdom.

Christ's mission was purposely directed to "the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind." He meant by these that throng of people who labor for their living, and who are often brought to extremities by disease and other trials without a great store laid by to alleviate hardships. These did not find their selfish interests so engaging, and they flocked to the feast. Is there not some necessity, then, that men he afflicted with woe? Especially is this so when suffering results from indifference to God's laws, for it may drive one into accepting spiritual gifts that have often been refused. God does not set aside the natural order to afflict men, but there are blessings to be had from the natural woes that befall humanity. There being no human power to fall upon in the time of calamity, one may more earnestly turn to the source of all strength, acknowledge his weakness, pray that he and his family be protected from harm, and realize more clearly the necessity of a spiritual life. Then our God, who measured and built the universe and stored in the bosom of the earth its untold treasures, befriends this man!

OPPOSITION TO DR. C. F. AKED.

The Presbyterian of the South remarks: "The protest of the Presbyterian ministers against Dr. Charles F. Aked as head of the Council of the San Francisco Church Federation, after his Unitarian outbreak, did not seem to avail. But it makes us proud of them just the same." So our contemporary has a right to be. By a tremendous amount of wiggling, Dr. Aked managed to hold on to his position, but we dare say that he will be somewhat more careful about his utterances in the future. We have seen no account of what the Methodists did in this fight, but if they did not stand shoulder to shoulder with the Presbyterian brethren, they ought to be heartily ashamed of themselves.

VIGOR IN THE KINGDOM.

Christ intended that those who were to propagate his cause should be vigorous. Conversion from a life of indifference means more than mere passive salvation. The qualities of goodness and purity can hardly be found among humans in a state of inactive existence. The parables that Christ drew in teaching the nature of his kingdom showed that he did not conceive of its future without that vigor of activity characterizing all life. He said as a branch that did not bear fruit was cut off, so was a member of the kingdom pared away when activity ceased. The idea of growth in the kingdom was multifold. The grain of mustard seed soon sprang up into a tree. The leaven soon permeated the whole three measures of meal. The seed sown in good ground produced some an hundred, some sixty, and some thirty fold.

The lack of vigor explains the dormant state of the people of some eastern countries throughout the past centuries. There seemed to be just enough vigor to maintain actual existence, but no activity to promote progress. Individuals are found content with surroundings and imparting no life-giving vigor to the community interests. The deceitfulness of this state relative to the subject is that it is impossible for him to see his deficiencies as they really are. It often takes an outside source to call into activity the latent powers. Extraordinary activity does not impress some as being of great value. But notice the mental vigor of famous men who have rendered great service to humanity. Not that these men have qualities so far above those possessed by some others, but they are constantly active. Many feel poetic and dream those things found expressed in books, but the world does not know it. A man's greatness lies more in his vigor than in the extraordinary quality of powers. Had Tennyson merely felt his poetry without the vigor of expression England would not have become acquainted with its greatest poet-laureate.

The Master desires that the same vigor expressing itself in modern life with inventions for travel, for spreading news, for communication, and for hundreds of other worthy ends, will be manifest in multiplying the numbers in his kingdom. The trend of modern affairs should not retard the progress of Christian work by detracting from it. The vigor displayed in secular things as cities are built and new nations are formed should be matched by the disciples of Christ.

The day of the dormant church member and the satisfied preacher will never come. The very vigor of Christianity should be contagious. Ever since the thousands were converted at Pentecost it has weathered persecutions, stood the storm of inner controversies, bridged the breaking up of nations, and reaped its harvest of millions. And still there are vast multitudes in this day that should come into the ranks of the army of God.

THE EDITOR ILL.

The Editor was stricken with a very malignant attack of la grippe on Wednesday evening, March 25, and has not been able to leave his bed since. His temperature every day has ranged from 100 to 104 or 105 degrees. His right lung has been considerably involved, and the physician and nurses have been very strict in guarding against the least exposure. He is not allowed to see either his newspaper or his letter mail, and is being kept as quiet as possible. There seems to be little prospect of his being able to come to his office within a week or ten days. He asks the brethren and readers of the Advocate to be patient with him in the midst of his sore afflictions and to remember him at the throne of grace.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Easter Sunday has been set for Orphanage Day in the Louisiana Conference.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, President of Millsaps College, was in New Orleans the latter part of last week.

The Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference began at Rayville March 31, to be in convention three days.

We have been informed that Rev. S. S. Bogan has been transferred from Bernice to Winnfield, La. We wish for him the best of success in his new field of labor.

A new church, and also a quarterly conference has been organized recently at McNary, La.; and this good people expect soon to worship in their new church house.

We appreciate the fine list of subscriptions, received by us within the last few days, from Rev. C. F. Staples, at Greenwood, La. He has our hearty thanks for thus caring for the interests of the Advocate.

Brother S. H. Frazier of Rio, La., asks us to make the following statement: "I am desirous of a work and would be glad to correspond with any presiding elder having an opening."

A list of eight subscribers for the Advocate has been recently received from Rev. W. B. Waldrop of the Braxton, Miss., charge. We thank Brother Waldrop and extend to him our best wishes.

The Rev. H. M. Young, our efficient pastor at Coahoma, Miss., has recently sent us a list of eleven subscribers, for which we thank him and trust others may imitate his activity.

Rev. J. L. Waltman, at Gilbert, La., sends us 3 new and 1 renewal subscriptions, with the promise to do all he can for the Advocate this year. We thank Brother Waltman for this encouraging message.

Rev. H. S. Spragins, presiding elder of the Greenville District, North Mississippi Conference, informs us that our church at Shelby, Miss., is to be dedicated on Sunday, April 12, by Bishop Atkins.

The Rev. F. N. Sweeney of Wilson, La., observed Old Folks Day last Sunday. He reports that Rev. J. S. Petty, who is eighty-six years old, preached a great sermon. We appreciate hearing of such refreshing occasions.

Rev. J. M. Alford is planning a new church building on his circuit; and our people at Jena, La., are arranging to pay a small debt on the Richmond Nolly Church which is expected to be ready for dedication in July.

We publish elsewhere a statement from Rev. B. F. Jones, our pastor at Moss Point, Miss., relative to the unconditional gift of $15,000 for the erection of a church there. We rejoice with him in this great evidence of success.

We are pleased to receive from Rev. T. J. Hopper at Cedar Bluff, Miss., 5 new subscriptions and 2 renewals. Brother Hopper says that the work in his charge is moving along nicely, and that there are prospects for a good year.

The Rev. H. W. Bowman, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, was in the city last Monday and dropped in at the Advocate office. Brother Bowman reports that things are moving along nicely in his district.

Rev. C. H. Herring, in sending us 2 new subscriptions from the Woodville Circuit, Miss., reports having received into the church 7 new members on profession of faith since Conference, together with an increase in attendance on all of the church services.

It is gratifying to know that a new church has been organized at Oberlin, the parish seat of Allen Parish, La., where Rev. B. H. Sheppard is in charge. Brother Sheppard will soon occupy our new church at Oak Dale also.

Rev. T. C. Gregory, at Tyro, Miss., writes: "We preached on repentance last Sunday and received one new member. I took a copy of the Advocate along and secured 4 new subscriptions, and 2 renewals. Everything seems to be going on well with us up here."

Rev. H. Wade Cudd, pastor of our church at Alberta, La., in sending us a new subscription and 2 renewals, writes as follows: "We are planning to dedicate our church here on Easter Sunday; and also to have an Easter program for the benefit of our Orphanage."

We acknowledge with thanks a kind letter from Mr. J. C. Cavett, General Agent for the Union Central Life Insurance Co., at Jackson, Miss., and one of the laymen of our Church, stating his commendation of our editorial on the use of tobacco. It is worth while that laymen express themselves.

A second list of six subscriptions has been received from Rev. Joseph B. Randolph of Como, Miss. Brother Randolph expresses himself as being very much disappointed with the decision in the Vanderbilt University case. He attended Vanderbilt and is in a position to keenly feel our loss.

The Greenville (Miss.) District Conference as announced elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate has changed its place of meeting from Jonestown to Shelby on account of a fire at Jonestown which destroyed a number of residences. The time for the meeting has also been changed from April 14-16 to April 12-14.

In a letter bringing us 8 subscriptions, Rev. J. D. Wroten, at Tunica, Miss., makes the following good report: "All things go well with us on Tunica charge. We are glad to state that we have let the contract for the building of a church at Evansville. The church when completed will cost something over $2000."

Our grateful thanks are due Rev. Wm. C. Carlisle at Guntown, Miss., who sends us 3 new subscriptions and 6 renewals with the promise of more soon. He says that the work on this charge is progressing nicely, and that they are preparing to improve three churches, and also to build a new one.

We are indebted to Rev. G. W. Gordon, our pastor at Sherman, Miss., for a list of 11 subscriptions which he sent in from his charge. This faithful work on the part of Brother Gordon for the Advocate is greatly appreciated.

The Advocate extends its sympathy to Rev. and Mrs. T. D. Lipscomb in their bereavement upon the death of Mrs. Lipscomb's father. Brother Lipscomb sends us this notice from Chattanooga, Tenn., where he has gone to attend the funeral.

In an appreciated note from Brother S. B. White, of West Point, Miss., he makes these encouraging remarks: "We have a new church building on hand, and expect to have the plans in about two weeks. We are meeting with good success in raising funds. A modern church will be built, with plenty of Sunday school accommodations."

With some words of commendation and with the report of two new subscriptions, for which we thank him, Brother E. H. Cunningham, of Myrtle, Miss., also states that Rev. V. C. Curtis spent two days at Myrtle and conducted a fine Sunday school rally. He was sorry that Miss Kilpatrick could not be present, she being prevented from coming on account of illness.

From Enterprise, Miss., Rev. J. M. Corley, sends us several subscriptions, and in his letter says: "We are getting along finely on the Enterprise and Stonewall work, notwithstanding the closing down of the mill and the failure of the bank. Our church is doing much better both financially and spiritually than at this time last year. We are hopeful for a good and prosperous year."

We are indebted to the following brethren, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. M. B. Sharrbrough, Columbia, Miss., 5; Rev. T. C. Wier, Starkville, Miss., 10; Rev. W. W. Cammack, Gloster, Miss., 5; Rev. A. F. Moore, Eudora, Miss., 5.

We wish to repeat the announcement, made in these columns last week, of the Missionary Institute for the east side of the Alexandria District, at Jena, April 29, 30. The lay leaders in the various charges of this district are urged by their presiding elder, Rev. H. W. May, to attend this meeting. Hon. T. W. Holloman, and Brother J. E. Williams are expected to speak to the laymen on the Laymen's Missionary Movement. The Woman's Missionary Societies are also requested to send representatives to this institute.

Among several subscriptions sent to us by Rev. George D. Purcell at Oak Grove, La., was one from Rev. T. B. Reneau, a local preacher 86 years of age. Thus the old as well as those younger continue to favor us, and we trust that the Advocate will be a real blessing in this brother's home. Brother Purcell adds the following appreciative words: "You are giving us an excellent paper. I am always anxious for it to come. I am sorry indeed that I am not able to put it in more Methodist homes."

We regret to learn that Rev. J. C. Nelson, pastor of Cambridge charge, Miss., is very low with typhoid fever, having been confined to his bed for about three months. We hope it will not be long till Brother Nelson is well on the way to recovery. We trust that the brethren will remember to pray for this brother and those who are dear to him. This information comes to us through Rev. P. M. Franklin at Delay, Miss., who encloses to us 3 renewal subscriptions, for which we thank him heartily.

Rev. H. W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District of the Louisiana Conference, is ambitious to have a revival in each charge of his district during this year, and is striving for an increase in the benevolent collections. He says further: "We will have a church in readiness for the Quarterly Conference on the Indian and Mexican Mission in May. Brother Phillips is succeeding admirably. The people of the mill towns near by have given material and he opened his church a few Sundays ago. We will organize a church and quarterly conference for him not many days hence. I am planning to have four churches dedicated in July."

Rev. Robt. O. Wier, writing from Anderson, Texas, sends us a check to apply on his subscription to the Advocate and states that he enjoys its visits. He announces the marriage of his daughter, Miss Laura F. Wier, to Dr. Byron O. Griffing of Mangham, La. They were married on March 19, at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. C. P. Hagewood, at Victoria, La. This happy couple will reside at Mangham where Dr. Griffing has a lucrative practice in dentistry. Brother Wier reports a wet time in Texas, because of the frequent rains. He, however, declares that Texas is to be dry before long. He is hoping for another chance to vote on statewide prohibition in that State. We will be glad to see Texas line up with the dry States.

The subject of this sketch Mrs. KATE BIGGS THIGPEN of Beauregard, Miss., was born on July 7, 1889; and died at the home of her father at Beauregard, on March 15, 1914, aged 24 years 8 months and 7 days. She joined the Methodist Church, South, in her twelfth year, and lived a consistent member of the same until she died. She leaves a husband and one child, 3 years of age, and quite a number of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. They mourn not as those who have no hope, for they have every reason to believe that she is to-day in the land of eternal happiness. May the grace of God sustain the bereaved in this hour of sadness!

J. H. FOREMAN, P. C.

On Feb. 24, 1914, the death angel visited the home of Brother John Kimbrough, at McCool, Miss., and bore away to the better world, his mother, who was a member of our Church at Liberty Hill. In Sister Kimbrough we lost one of our oldest and most faithful members. She died in her eighty-fourth year, having spent more than seventy years of her life as a faithful member and a willing worker in the M. E. Church, South. She leaves to mourn their loss, four children, several grandchildren, and a host of relatives and friends. We extend our sympathy to the entire connection. May God bless and help us all to live the life she set before us, is the prayer of their pastor.

G. L. LAUDERDALE.

On the evening of Feb. 27, 1914, the death angel came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Blakeman and bore away the sweet spirit of little JAMES LEWIS, who was spared to them but eight months. In so short a time he had won his way into all our hearts. He was very bright and attractive. His sweet little ways endeared him more and more to the hearts of the fond parents. We shall miss him, but heaven seems nearer, and a new link has been forged to bind our hearts to Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Weep not, dear parents, for though the baby is gone you will see him again by and by in that home where there is no more sorrow, and where partings will be unknown. So press on with renewed determination to meet him where you may be with him forever. We extend to the grief-stricken parents our deepest sympathy.

J. B. KING.

On March 7, 1914, Mrs. CORNELIA McKENZIE (nee Atkins) passed away from this earthly life. She was the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Atkins. She was born in McNary County, Tenn., Aug. 16, 1887. She leaves a lonely husband, a mother, and four brothers to mourn their loss, all of whom are heartbroken—her father preceded her to the heavenly land several years ago. She was a true and faithful Christian, having professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when a girl. Her sufferings were intense during her illness, but she bore them patiently and was perfectly submissive to the will of the Father. She would often tell her mother and loved ones not to grieve for her. Our loss is her eternal gain. Her remains were laid to rest in the Box Chapel Cemetery in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. Mother, weep not, Cornelia is not dead; she has gone to live with God, some day you will meet her where partings will be no more. Her pastor,

C. A. NORTHINGTON.

Mrs. C. A. HORTON (nee Hough), was born in Union County, N. C., Sept. 29, 1850. At the early age of 10 years she was awarded by the Sunday school as a prize for memorizing four thousand, four hundred and fifteen verses in the Scriptures, a beautiful Bible, which she appreciated and loved and read with pleasure. In November, 1865, she was married to James S. Horton, of Chesterfield County, S. C. She joined the M. E. Church, South, at Fork Creek Church, in 1866. She was loyal and true to her vows and obligations. In 1890, she came to Louisiana and spent her remaining days in Red River Parish. She was kind, forbearing and charitable; and was true to her church, family and neighbors. Her children, are all members of the M. E. Church, South, save two and they are members of the Baptist Church. Sister Horton's last days were her brightest and happiest. She was translated on March 8, 1914. She leaves 9 children—5 sons and 4 daughters—who sorrow for her departure but with the expectation of meeting her again. A large concourse of kindred and friends attended her funeral conducted by the writer. Rev. THOS. J. MARTIN.

The death angel visited the home of A. G. and Effie Pace, on Nov. 1, 1913, and claimed our precious little girl, CAMILLE, aged 8 years. She was a great comfort to her parents, especially to her mother, being always at her side. She was a regular attendant at Sunday school, prayer meeting, and the Epworth League. She was also dedicated to the W. C. T. U. as a White Ribbon Recruit. Two years prior to her death she gave her little heart to God and joined the Church; and she lived up to her childish faith in God to the end, passing away with a prayer on her lips. Our earnest desire was to train our little one for the kingdom of God and his service. But he saw best to call her on. The funeral service was conducted by the pastor, Rev. W. W. Perry and special songs were sung by the little girls of her classes in the Sunday school and in the public school. Her remains in snowy white robe and casket were interred in the Tulip Cemetery, there to await the resurrection morn. "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord."

Her mother, EFFIE E. PACE.

Our community has sustained a great loss in the death of Mrs. HATTIE HENDERSON, wife of Dr. C. R. Henderson, to whom she was wedded in 1864. Sister Henderson had been in declining health for nearly three years, and at the age of 72 years, she passed away in her home at Vaughan, Miss., on Feb. 4, 1914. She often spoke of death and the nearer she came to the end the more resigned she seemed to become. A few weeks before she died she seemed to realize that it would not be long till her spirit would leave the temple of clay and go home to God who gave it. She told the family to have everything ready when she passed away so that they would have nothing to do but to prepare for the funeral. She requested her husband to have Rev. J. P. Hickman, her pastor for twenty years, and myself to conduct the funeral services. She was a member of the Baptist Church, having joined that church in early girlhood. She was a devout Christian, her charity being known and felt among all classes. It was a pleasure for the writer to be in her home, for she loved all ministers of the Gospel. I always felt that I was greatly benefitted by being in her company. If she had enemies, she never spoke of them as such, but always spoke in high terms of every one. Weep not, she has gone home.

Tidings From the Field

Byhalia, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: I am a Confederate Veteran; and served during the war under Lee and Jackson in Company "C," First N. C. Infantry. In all the battles in which I took part I was never wounded so as to have to leave the firing line. Two weeks ago I was so unlucky as to fall through a space of seven feet with the result that I have been confined to my bed ever since. As the Irishman expressed it: "It was not the fall that hurt me; but the sudden stop." Well, these times of helpless suffering are sometimes blessings in more ways than one. While we lie and suffer we have time to take stock of our own condition and realize what a small speck a man is among the atoms that make up the great Universe. It helps us to know Christ in his suffering, and when friends come to us in sympathy and love we are brought to understand more fully the force of the expression, "the Brotherhood of man." This expression has the masculine form, but refers equally to women, God bless them, for they are always present when suffering humanity calls for help. We have the good fortune to have Rev. Robt. Davis, a veteran of the Cross, who has labored long and faithfully in the service of the Master, living in our midst. He is loved by all and his daily walk among us is a benediction. Unsteady as he is on his feet he was among the first to call, walking a mile over the hills. He is at church and Sunday school every Sunday. What an example for younger men! There are others I should like to speak of by name but refrain because it would extend this communication too long; but there is one other that I shall mention—our beloved pastor, Rev. L. A. McKeown, who is laying himself out, as it were, for Christ. By his daily walks as he goes from house to house looking after his people one can but recognize him as one who has seen the Light. He is Christ-like and wherever he goes the light shines. He is doing a great work here and on every hand there is evidence of spiritual uplift among the membership; and I trust and believe that during this year many sinners will be brought to accept the salvation which he is so earnestly preaching each Sunday to large and interested congregations.

MARCUS D. HERRING.

Vancleave Circuit.

Dear Brother Meek: Guess a few words from this section of the Master's vineyard will not be out of place. I wish to say first, that you can scarcely imagine my surprise when the Bishop read out Vancleave to be looked after by this pastor. After a long, tiresome journey, we reached the work assigned to us by the Bishop, and found some of the elect ladies of Vancleave awaiting our arrival at the parsonage. They had everything in readiness for us to take charge, which we did gladly, more so, because of our former acquaintance with the good people of this circuit. Well, fourteen years make a vast difference in a country. I had the privilege of serving this work in 1899, and it was then composed of nine regular appointments, besides the school-house appointments. At that time, we took in everything west of the Pascagoula River, reaching from the county line north, to the coast; and west, as far as the Harrison County line with some members in that county. Now, we have six regular preaching places, with about half the membership as it was fourteen years ago. There have been some wonderful advancements along all lines. We have better churches, more spiritual, better Sunday schools, better day schools, better roads—for we have the graded road system here—the country more thickly populated, a better class of people; all things considered, it is a country that is fast becoming the garden spot of South Mississippi. Pecan and orange groves are plentiful, both young and old ones, and more are being set out almost every day. Lands are constantly advancing in price. CORN? My! I have seen some as fine, corn here as ever I saw in a regular farm country. Corn that will easily shell a bushel and a peck to the barrel. As fine syrup as the country anywhere can afford. Potatoes? No trouble to raise more than you can consume. No BOLL WEVILS HERE. Well, Mr. Editor, the brethren at different places have been telling about the good things that have befallen them, I wish to say they have not got all the goodies. We have had some good favors shown us. They have not only pounded us; but they just keep the good work going. Indeed, the lines have fallen unto us in a pleasant place. While we left some as good people at Hermanville as the country affords, some that were and are our very best friends, yet we found some mighty good friends here. And this friendship is growing. Our first quarterly conference convened at the time and place mentioned, but our sorrow was expressed in that we were so badly disappointed in not having our much beloved presiding elder with us. But his sorrow and sadness was even greater than ours, for he had been called upon to give up a very dear loved one, in which he had the heartfelt sympathy of the entire official board of Vancleave charge. We did the best we could, held our own quarterly conference, as directed by the presiding elder. Assessment made was nearly a hundred dollars less than that we received last year.

Well, lest this writing finds its way to the waste basket, guess I had better come to a close. In conclusion, permit me to say, that we are not neglecting the affairs of the church. We have received some into the church, dismissed others, taken subscriptions for the Advocate, distributed Missionary leaflets, trying to work up more interest in all that pertains to the church generally. It is our purpose to bring up all claims in full, the Lord helping us. We hope to have revivals at all our churches, and do a great work for the cause of the Lord and his glory here in Vancleave charge. Brethren pray for us, that our most sanguine expectations may be realized. Our second quarterly conference is to be at Red Hill, we hope, about the last of May.

WOMAN'S GREATEST TROUBLE.

Big Sandy, Tenn.—Mrs. Lucy Cantrell, of this place, says: "Every two weeks I had to go to bed and stay there several days. I suffered untold misery. Nothing seemed to help me until I tried Cardui, the woman's tonic. Although I had been afflicted with womanly weaknesses for seven years, Cardui helped me more than anything else ever did. It is surely the best tonic for women on earth." Weakness is woman's greatest trouble. Cardui is woman's greatest medicine, because it overcomes that weakness and brings back strength. In the past 50 years Cardui helped over a million women. Try it for your troubles to-day.—Adv.

SALTS IF KIDNEY

OR BLADDER BOTHER.

Harmless to flush kidneys and neutralize irritating acids—Splendid for System.

Kidney and bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast; continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids so they no longer are a source of irritation to the bladder which then acts normal again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink, which quickly relieves bladder trouble.

The Sunday School.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Mr. R. A. Maddox.

"The Truth Seekers Bible Class," in the Sunday school at Forest, have pledged themselves to give as a special this year fifteen dollars to the Sunday school work toward keeping the Field Secretary in the field. This is a worthy thing to do. Why should not others "Go and do likewise?"

Brother O. H. Wingfield, teacher of the Men's Bible Class in Capital Street Church at Jackson, has issued a card calling on all the members of the class to be more active, and urging those who are not members to become so at once. Those out of Brother Wingfield's class have no idea what they are missing, for he is one of the best Bible teachers I have found.

A grand service was held at Brandywine on last Sunday. Brother Chas. Schultz had called all his Sunday schools to meet at that place, and the Field Secretary was there to help them. Every Sunday school on the Barlow charge was represented, and one on the Hermanville charge. Brother Schultz told the congregation of the imprisonment of our great and good missionary worker in the foreign field, and asked all those who could and would pray for the release of this great man to come to the altar and engage in prayer, and it was a great pleasure to see how the people responded. Prayer was offered by two good ladies who were followed by Brother Schultz. It seemed that God was there with us. We made a talk at the eleven o'clock hour, and in the afternoon just let those workers present ask questions, and for one hour and a half they fired questions at the Field Secretary on all the different phases of Sunday school work. Great good was accomplished.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Brother Holloman, the treasurer, reports a Children's Day collection of $3 from the Floyd Sunday school, and $2 from Pleasant Hill; and he mentions the fact that the total for last year was more than $1000, as against $606 the previous year. This reminds us that we should begin to plan for the Children's Day program, and that the time should be arranged so as not to conflict with our public school concert rehearsals, nor should we delay till the summer exodus before the program is rendered. Give the children of even the smallest school a chance to be trained in the special exercises of this occasion; and aim to send up a more liberal contribution than that of last year to the Sunday School Board.

Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, pastor, reports from West Monroe as follows: "On the second Sunday in March the new annex to our church, the dimensions being 20 by 30 feet, was opened. It is furnished with benches and desks, the proper height for children of the Primary department. There were present at the opening about 227. Our school is well organized, and last Sunday quite a number were given certificates of promotion from the Cradle Roll to the Primary department. A Home department has been started, and five classes are well organized with regular business and council meetings, and our teachers are doing excellent work. Our church membership is 95, and our Sunday school membership is nearly two and a half times that many. Mr. Wm. H. Kirkpatrick is our faithful superintendent and Mr. C. E. Faulk is our alert secretary. Our school has had a steady and marvelous growth both in numbers and in accomplishment of good work for the last eight or nine months. While at Conference the pastor purchased 'The Worker and his Work' series for his school." Where is there a record that excels this?

AN ACTIVE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

To say that the First Church at Water Valley has one of the best, most interesting, and enthusiastic Sunday schools in the Conference would not be saying any too much, for we have a real live, working school. Along with 17 teachers, the officers and pastor, we have 430 members, 230 of which are active workers. We may also add to this 100 members of an excellent Home Department which is in charge of a most faithful superintendent. We have not only members to be proud of, but a great work is being done. Most of the classes are organized to do systematic work. We have the Young Men's Bible Class, that is doing noble work. They have something over 50 members, with an average attendance of 30. On last Sunday morning they had 46 present. Each class is doing its work well, all climbing toward a higher mark; and before the year has come to a close we hope to have 700 in the school.

When you read of this excellent school and the work it is doing, remember that there is some one at the head, to lead and guide, and this individual is our learned, and high minded superintendent, a man of noble ambition for his church and its work. The school is proud of him, and he of the school. The school is not only beneficial to the members, but is an inspiration and help to the pastor in his work. Our aim is to do still greater things for the Master we are serving. And we ask for your most earnest prayers.

A WORKER.

AN INTERESTING MEETING.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

All Methodist, and specially all Wesley Adult Bible Class, eyes have looked with interest toward Columbia, S. C., March 17-19, to see the result of the second meeting of the Wesley Adult Bible Class Federation of that great State; and could those eyes have really seen the great crowd of enthusiastic delegates, the many fine ministers, presiding elders and college presidents present, surely they would have realized the weight and worth of this great movement to our loved Church.

Mr. J. M. Way is the fine and capable Field Secretary for the entire State and had so well planned and advertised this great meeting that the numbers, possibilities and fine enthusiasm were all there. The 1915 Federation goes to Spartanburg with a goal for doubling the already 410 organized, registered Wesley Adult Bible Classes, and also doubling the delegates and visitors, and any one who has once seen Mr. Way, the Sunday School Board and those progressive South Carolina delegates, will know that the goal was won ere it was made.

Dr. Bulla, our Church's successful and loved Wesley Adult Bible Class leader, was present and made many splendid addresses and assisted along all lines in shaping the future work, policy and good of the Federation.

This is pioneer work and South Carolina and Mr. Way, as well, deserve the highest praise for their skilled work and great results, which will help other Conferences to see the light, and better still, show them the way to follow it.

Our Dr. S. A. Steel made a brilliant address on Isaiah, and Dr. Bulla and the writer enjoyed a delightful dinner in his home with his interesting family. He is vitally interested in all Mississippi affairs and has won a high place in South Carolina.

Dr. Snyder, of Wofford College, gave an illuminating and inspiring address on Bible Study and it should be copied in all of our Church periodicals for it was well worth the hearing and following.

So many of the star South Carolina pastors were foremost in the fray—Mr. Speake, of Anderson; W. I. and G. D. Herbert, of Columbia; Peter Stokes, of Bennettsville, and a whole line of others, whose full-length portraits would be interesting, but the stories of their achievements would be more so.

Columbia is a rarely attractive city, with the glamour of history, poetry and sentiment clinging about it that its great progress has in no wise altered—a city of colleges, schools, fine places of worship, a great Y. M. C. A., and is withal a lovely place in which to live.

Dr. Bulla has written a Wesley Adult Bible Class prayer that should be used in our opening or closing exercises and in our own individual visions as well, and it reads like this:

"Our Father, bless our Wesley Class to-day; Holy Spirit, send a revival and begin in me right now."

Hon. C. C. Featherston, former prohibition candidate for Governor of South Carolina, was made President of the next Federation to be held in 1915, and a splendid choice it was.

It was a wonderfully gracious experience to have been present at this great meeting, and it will be a continued pleasure to anticipate returning to the great 1915 meet at Spartanburg, for such a hearty welcome as was given the writer is an experience one would like to live over again every single day.

EXCHANGE YOUR OLD BODY FOR A NEW ONE.

You can do it in three weeks and thereby regain your health. This article is written by a physician who has seen it demonstrated in numerous cases and explains how it is done.

Listen. If your weight is one hundred and thirty-three pounds your body contains eighty pounds of water, for, according to standard medical books, the human body contains sixty-seven and one-half per cent of water. Now disease is invariably caused by impurities which we call poison, and these are readily dissolved by the right kind of natural mineral water. Drink ten gallons (eighty pounds) of Shivar Mineral Water (use no other water for twenty-one days), and you will have exchanged your old body for a new one, so far as the soluble part of it is concerned. The impurities will be dissolved and pass away. If you suffer with dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, gall stones, kidney or liver disease, uric acid poisoning, or other conditions due to impure blood, accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer which appears below. Read the following letter carefully; then sign and mail it:

Shivar Spring,
Box 17G, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

SKIN TROUBLES FROM SCROFULA

Among the many manifestations of scrofula are eruptions on the face and body. These are both annoying and disfiguring. How often the complexion would be perfect if they were not present!

Other manifestations are bunches, inflamed eyelids, sore ears, wasting of the muscles, and general debility.

Ask your druggist for Hood's Sarsaparilla. This great medicine completely eradicates scrofula and builds up the whole system. Get it today.

BEST FARMERS WILL WIN
$2,500 IN CASH FOR YIELD
Two good prizes offered in each State for the best cotton yield and the best corn yield—Open to Five States.

To stimulate the interest in larger and better crops of cotton and corn in this section, the Meridian Fertilizer Factory, one of the best known and largest concerns in the Middle South, will offer this year, in each of five States, prizes of $150 and $100 for the most productive acre of cotton and prizes of $150 and $100 for the most productive two acres of corn in the crop of 1914.

These prizes are open to all who will comply with the conditions laid down in a booklet sent on request. That proper control over the contests may be had, all who enter enroll in the Two Bale per Acre Cotton Club or the Two Hundred Bushel Corn Club. No admission fee is charged.

THIS HELPFUL BOOK FREE

As a help to contestants the Company will send each member, free of charge, a book on the cultivation of corn and cotton. This book tells of the successful experiences of farmers who have won prizes heretofore and contains expert advice and suggestions from the Agricultural Department and experimental stations.

Not only are you sure of a better crop from following the plans outlined, which in itself pays for all you may do, but you have an excellent chance to win a substantial prize for yourself.

Write for full particulars regarding the contest to the RIO.

The great desire of the women to purchase property in Rio for the purpose of establishing a large girls' school in that benighted city of a million souls, which, like the boys' school of the M. E. Church in Rome, shall be "a light upon a hill," has again been delayed by the action of the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions. At one time, under favorable conditions, the school increased largely in attendance, and numbered among its students girls from some of the best elements in the city, including members of the President's Cabinet, senators, influential doctors and lawyers. The house was sold and no place adequate to meet the demands could be found, consequently the school shaped itself to its limited quarters. Miss Glenn begged for an appropriation and the other missionaries in Brazil added their earnest appeals in behalf of this special school. Its importance loomed up even greater than their own needs. The women of the Board have not failed to be interested in this object. What, then, has been the cause of this long delay in trying to purchase suitable property? Lack of necessary funds.

"Hands that open but to receive Empty close; they only live Richly who do richly give."

There has been contributed and appropriated nearly one hundred thousand dollars, but a much larger amount will be needed for the erection and equipment of a first-class school; and would we consent to having any other kind? The field is left open to Southern Methodism, and surely we desire a monument worthy of this grand old church of ours! If we had had an up-to-date, thoroughly equipped school ten years ago we could have led the educational movement in this rapidly growing city. Misses Bennett and Gibson have just returned from Brazil. They came recommending the purchase of a certain piece of property situated on the principal boulevard of the city and facing the bay. However, the Executive Committee of the Board, by a majority vote, deferred the matter to the Board in annual session in April.

MONTHLY MEETING AT CLEVELAND, MISS.

Mrs. J. R. Brinson sends an account of a very interesting monthly meeting held in February by the Cleveland Auxiliary. The usual devotional services were conducted. Several members gave Scripture readings, culminating in a talk upon the lesson by the president. When the dues were collected it was found that for the home department they amounted to $22.10, and $6.10 for the foreign department. The first vice president reported that a meeting had been held at the church and at this meeting a Junior Missionary Society had been organized and the necessary officers appointed. Twenty-one members were enrolled. All mothers are asked to take part in the work. The fourth vice president reported a visit to the parsonage to see what was needed, and as a result of this visit it was decided that three rooms be papered and all the woodwork painted. The visiting committee reported 22 visits made. When the new committee for the month was appointed, a phoning committee was also selected. A live society, is it not? A cap and apron sale was suggested and plans immediately set on foot for its accomplishment. Twenty-six were present at this meeting, of whom three were visitors and two of these became members. Several select readings were given and then all adjourned to the dining room where dainty refreshments were served.

PORT GALVESTON.

There were over 19 immigrant vessels to enter Port Galveston with 10,489 passengers in 1913. Of these 7352 were strictly immigrants; the others were Americans who had been abroad, or aliens who were returning from a visit home. Our port missionary, Rev. J. F. Reifschneider, married 10 couples and buried 9 children (four in one family). He found employment for 112 men and assisted 27 young women to secure positions and homes. He helped put 4000 on board trains to various destinations. He shipped the baggage for these people—some as baggage, some by freight, and some by express. The local pastors have assisted in taking the immigrants from the immigrant station to the pier. If you had been one of these immigrants, don't you think you would have welcomed such a friend and helper? "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Those who have made it possible to help the port missionary at Galveston are among those who did it unto Him.

NOTICE!

We have no record books for united societies at present. The supply of record books for the treasurer of the Home Department is exhausted, and we are waiting until after the Council meeting to order new ones, which will be for united societies. In the meantime, will you not improvise a treasurer's record for your auxiliary by ruling a blank book to suit your purpose? You may obtain perforated sheets for report blanks by writing to Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb. These blanks can be used for either department of the Society. Price, two for 5 cents.

FROM WESSON, MISS.

Mrs. H. H. Edwards, Press Agent, sends the following account of a social evening given by the members of the Wesson Missionary Society. Can you spell? Our Society propounded this question to the scholars of Wesson, both old and young, on the night of the 13th ult. in the nature of an old-fashioned spelling bee, and at which quite a neat sum was realized by the Society. A program composed of vocal and instrumental selections, recitations, and a number rendered by three young men who played upon the violin, mandolin, and guitar, was the first feature of the evening, and was greatly enjoyed by all present. Immediately following this program the captains were announced and sides chosen. Twenty-five to a side responded, and then the spelling began in earnest. When each side was reduced

Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Remedy.

Trial Package Mailed Free to Any Sufferer.

If you have catarrh of the head, nose, throat; if catarrh has affected your hearing; if you sneeze, hawk or spit; if you take one cold after another; if your head feels stopped up; you should try this Remedy discovered by Dr. Blosser, who has made a specialty of treating catarrh for over thirty-nine years.

This Remedy is composed of herbs, flowers and seeds possessing healing medicinal properties; contains no tobacco, is not injurious or habit-forming; is pleasant to use and perfectly harmless to man, woman or child.

Catarrhal germs are carried into the head, nose and throat with the air you breathe—just so the warm medicated smoke-vapor is carried with the breath, applying the medicine directly to the diseased parts. If you have tried the usual methods, such as sprays, douches, salves, inhalers and the stomach-ruining "constitutional" medicines, you will readily see the superiority of this Smoking Remedy.

Simply send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you a free package containing samples of the Remedy for smoking in a pipe and made into cigarettes, together with an illustrated booklet which goes thoroughly into the subject of catarrh. He will send by mail, for one dollar, enough of the medicine to last about one month.

Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!

NEW START DAY.

Booneville Methodist Church, Booneville, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have been long a subscriber to the Advocate but have never ventured to write for its columns before. With your permission
I want to tell the readers something of our great day here last Sunday.
Those of us who have long known and worked in the Church here think last Sunday was an especial occasion and is destined to bear fruit abundant.
Our pastor, Brother Brown, announced on the Sunday preceding that, "Next Sunday has been designated as New Start Day," and he wanted all Methodists to take a new start indeed and in earnest. He announced that he had little regard for "Go to Church Sunday" as that was a spasmodic movement, but "New Start" means to take hold anew and persevere. The day was ideal, the brightest Sunday we have had in a long time, the air was balmy and everything seemed favorable to the day. At 10:50 a. m. the entire board of Stewards met (excepting two or three who were unavoidably detained at home) in the League hall and were ushered into the Church and occupied seats in a body.
The Woman's Missionary Society met in the Ladies' Parlor and were ushered in and seated in a body. It was an inspiring sight to see forty-five ladies file in under their banner. Next followed the Girls' Missionary Society under their banner and they were seated together; and then came the newest organization of the Church, the Boys' Missionary Society, composed of twelve enthusiastic boys between fifteen and twenty-two years old. This society has recently been organized and is under the immediate management of the pastor. Every pew in the large auditorium was filled and the aisles filled with chairs. This was the largest audience ever assembled in the Methodist Church when there was service at the other churches. The choir under the direction of Mrs. J. J. Taylor had anticipated the wishes of the congregation and sang as never before. From opening Doxology to closing song, the music was the most delightful. The pastor preached an appropriate sermon from the text "It is high time to awake out of sleep." At the conclusion of the sermon, just as a closing hymn was announced, Dr. D. T. Price, President of the Board of Stewards, interrupted the pastor and asked permission to speak. In a few well selected words he heartily endorsed
"The New Start" movement and asked the board to show its appreciation of the special effort and commit themselves to the policy outlined in the sermon by a rising vote. Whereupon every steward rose. Then the Sunday school superintendent, Mr. J. J. Taylor, spoke in enthusiastic words of commendation and made an appeal to the Church in behalf of the Sunday school. Mrs. W. T. Johnson, President of the Woman's Missionary Society, then rose and stated the aim of the society, endorsed the policy and had the ladies to stand as an act of committal to it. Mrs. J. B. Alexander, Lady Manager of the Girls' Missionary Society, followed the example of the others and her girls endorsed it by a rising vote. Mr. Hill Hodges representing the Boys' Missionary Society approved the "New Start" and his society committed themselves by a rising vote. Mr.
Hardy W. Rees spoke words of encouragement and appealed to the congregation to join him in an endeavor to be more faithful to the Church.
Thus closed the morning service. The evening service was largely musical, interspersed with short talks by Mr.
James A. Cunningham, active chairman of Board of Stewards, J. J. Taylor, Mrs. A. R. Bynum, Sr., and T. Ed.
Spain. We all returned to our homes feeling grateful to God for the blessings of the Sabbath and the Sanctuary. Truly a new start has been made and there are yet better things ahead for us. All departments of our Church are doing splendid work now.

Twenty-four members have been added this Conference year. We are all anticipating a great revival in May when Rev. J. A. Bowen will be with us. Thanking you for this space and assuring you that we mean to "Keep it a going." Mrs. L. L. BROWN.

MAYERSVILLE, MISS.

This is our first year on the Mayers-ville Charge. It is but fair to these good people that we say, through the columns of the Conference organ, which is read by a goodly number of them among whom its circulation has increased twofold since the beginning of this year, that we were well received upon our arrival. We will not burden the readers with details, but the reception was warm and brotherly. The warmth and brotherly feeling did not pass away with the first few days. But has continued, and has increased as the days have gone by. We feel very much at home and have many reasons to hope for a good year's work. I wish to give a few facts concerning the work. These I think will be of some interest to the former pastors and to others who are familiar with general conditions in this community.

Upon my arrival I realized at once the need of a revival effort. I at once took steps in this direction, and upon calling a meeting of my Board of Stewards found them in full accord with my views. We arranged with Brother J. E. Williams, our pastor at Gloster, to hold a meeting for us. We began this meeting on March 11, and ran through the 18th. In some respects this was the best meeting I have ever attended. In the first place, the preaching was of the highest type.
Sin was condemned in no uncertain terms; and the truths of our religion were set forth in such simple terms as to be readily understood even by the children. There was so much of the "Spirit of our Lord" about it that none could take offense. Brother Williams proved to be the man for the place. I am sure that you cannot select a man for revival services who will help the pastor more than he does.
This we, as pastors, know, is one of the most important features of a revival service. Only the pastor can know what remains to be done by himself after the meeting is over.
This feature of Brother Williams' work was true in a large degree in his visit to us.

All who are familiar with conditions throughout this section can appreciate the difficulties of this situation. We realized from the first that we could not reasonably expect a large ingathering because of the limited number of people in the community, but I must confess that the results surpassed our expectations. As a result of the meeting we received eight members on profession of faith. Another very gratifying result was the reclamation of some of our best men who had grown indifferent to their church duties. During the meeting we held special services for the men.
These services were held in the Pythian Hall, and were largely attended.
From the first, it became apparent that there was strong conviction among these men. They fully realized that the time had come for a decisive stand touching the moral welfare of the town. As a result they passed resolutions asking for, or rather demanding, a strict enforcement of the law with reference to places of gambling and other forms of vice. We feel sure that this demand by a large number of our very best citizens will not be ignored but, on the other hand, will be complied with by our officers.
Already I see strong evidences that this will be the case. We are glad to note that some great temptations have been removed from our boys. Well, we have a better community—a better feeling in general—and surely a better church, which since the close of the meeting we find has been greatly improved. E. J. COKER, P. C.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once.
When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

SAGE AND SULPHUR

DARKENS GRAY HAIR

Brush this through faded, lifeless locks and they become dark, glossy, youthful.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair.
You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

FIRST CHURCH, ALEXANDRIA.

Dear Dr. Meek: I am sure you and the readers of your excellent paper will be glad to know of the progress and development, along all lines, of the work of our Church in this city. Rev. G. E. Cameron and his family came promptly to their appointment right after Conference. They received a cordial welcome and were very soon most amicably installed in their new home. Our people have responded enthusiastically to the ministry and efforts of our new pastor, and the older members of the church state that he is preaching to the largest congregations ever assembled in this city. The church is also delighted with the fact that the pastor and his wife seem thoroughly at home and pleased with their work. Last Sunday (the 22nd) was a "Red Letter Day" in the history of the Sunday school movement in this city. A special Sunday school service was held at our Church and it is estimated that there were not fewer than eight hundred people present. The partition doors were raised and both church and Sunday school auditoriums thrown into one. In fact, all available floor space was exhausted, many standing in the aisles. A most beautiful, instructive and devotional program was rendered. The work is being well organized and the campaign for growth and development along all lines is being persistently waged. It is expected that the recent location of the Superintendent's and Chief Dispatcher's Offices of the T. & P. Railroad in this city, with something like thirty families, will bring an increased strength to the Methodist Church. The new pastor enjoys the thorough co-operation and most considerate treatment at the hands of every member of his official board. The Epworth League is growing every Sunday. They are holding a regular business meeting once a week for choir practice, and to form plans for growth with Mr. J. R. Stanley, president. They have a nice League choir of young people outside of the regular church choir, the newly erected platform clear across the Sunday school room being used by them for this purpose. A complete analysis of the New Testament is being conducted in the regular mid-week prayer meeting, somewhat in the manner of a Teacher-training Class, each attendant filling a blank book with outlines and notes. Hoping this will be the best year yet.

WILMER W. WILLIAMS.

CELEBRATED NINETY-FIRST BIRTHDAY.

Dear Editor: Hale and hearty, John Bowie, the oldest citizen of Attala County, celebrated his ninety-first birthday, March 8, 1914. His native home was in Alabama, but he moved to and settled in this County in his youth. He and his saintly wife, who is in her eighty-second year, now live on the farm near the place where he first settled. Brother Bowie laid the foundation of his substantial fortune in farming. When the Civil War broke out he was at the battle's front for his country. At the close of the war his energies were devoted to his children's future. He reared six boys to manhood and three girls to womanhood.

Longevity, in nearly every respect marked by unusual mental and physical endowment and his long and successful sojourn on this earth is very remarkable. Brother Bowie has been prudent in all things, and his excellent health and preserved physique is an object lesson to the young men of the present day.

A number of friends and a host of relatives enjoyed the day with Brother Bowie and his good wife. May God bless and prolong the lives of this couple is the wish and prayer of all who know them.

G. L. LAUDERDALE.

AN APPRECIATION.

On February 3, 1914, Albert R. Dirksen of Slidell, La., fell asleep in Jesus, his brief illness being from pneumonia. He was 23 years 5 months and 6 days old. All that could be done was done for his recovery, but God called him home. Brother Dirksen was saved during our revival conducted by Brother Riggs in 1912. Immediately thereafter he entered actively into Christian service, as a teacher of boys in the Sunday school, and as a leader of cottage and other prayer meetings. He was always ready for service for Jesus. He was a living epistle, known and read of men. A favorite song of his was: "We'll work till Jesus comes," and he never spent an idle moment. He loved God's Word and soon became familiar with it. He rose early to study the Bible and carried his Testament daily. His faith was bright and clear. It was a great joy to him to testify to a saving knowledge of Christ. He had the courage of his convictions, and stood firmly against evil regardless of criticism. He was a faithful steward, a friend to the preacher, and he loved God. The funeral was conducted by his pastor, Rev. D. C. Griffin, assisted by Rev. F. Talmage, the Presbyterian pastor, Rev. L. W. Sloan, the Baptist pastor, and the writer. Several friends in the congregation spoke in appreciation of Brother Dirksen, the grand climax being reached when the only brother of the deceased, who is a man full of the Holy Spirit, stood resting his hand upon the casket and plead with the unsaved friends of his sainted brother to accept Jesus. Loved ones, you have a triumphant hope, for Albert is with God.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Adopted by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church, Richton, Miss.:

Whereas God in his wisdom and love has taken out of this world to a brighter home in heaven the devoted sister of our beloved president, therefore be it resolved:

First—While we bow in humble recognition of the fact that an all-wise Providence attends our lives and orders all things for the best, and while we know that Mrs. Milner's loss is her sister's eternal gain, nevertheless we realize her deep sorrow and extend to her our sincerest sympathy.

Second—That to the heart-broken father who bears so bravely the taking away of Miss Helen, we offer our tenderest sympathy.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and one also to our home paper.

Signed: Mrs. J. A. Russell, Mrs. G. P. McKeown, Mrs. Charles Gurganus, Committee.

NOTICE 1

To the Presiding Elders, Pastors and Epworth Leaguers of the Mississippi Conference.

The Mississippi Epworth League Conference will hold its next session at Meridian, Miss., June 17-21. It is our purpose to make this the best conference we have ever held. We are anxious to have the largest attendance we have ever had and will ask the presiding elders and pastors not to arrange for their district conferences nor protracted meetings on our dates, if at all possible to keep from it, in order that they may attend and encourage the attendance of the leaguers in their districts and charges. We are making an effort to have Bishop McCoy with us for this meeting and announcements will be made later as to whether he can attend or not. The following are the officers elected at the last meeting place for our Conference at Laurel:

League Officers—President, W. D.

Hawkins, Meridian; 1st Vice-President, C. H. Poythress, Meridian; 2nd Vice-President, Miss Laura Rankin, Gulfport; 3rd Vice-President, Miss Bertha Mitchel, Lanrel; 4th Vice-President, Miss Addie Greely, Hattiesburg; Secretary, Miss Erskine Thompson, Hattiesburg; Treasurer, A. R. Campbell, Sumrall; Junior Superintendent, Mrs. T. B. Clifford, McComb City; Era Agent, Miss Agnes Arnold, Hattiesburg; Editor of "Era Column" in Advocate, Dr. H. W. Featherstun, Newton.

District Secretaries—Brookhaven, Mrs. Sidney Hopkins, Hickory; Seashore, Mrs. R. E. Johnson, Gulfport; Port Gibson, Clifford Fields, Natchez; Newton, Roy Stumbough, Laurel; Meridian, Miss Mabel Holliday, Meridian; Jackson, J. E. Ridgeway, Jackson; Hattiesburg, Rev. W. B. Amesworth, Silver Creek.

District Junior Superintendents—Brookhaven, Miss Virginia Powell, Fernwood; Seashore, Miss Corine Avery, Gulfport; Port Gibson, Miss Jessie Porter, Natchez; Newton, Mrs. H. L. Tolle, Newton; Meridian, Miss Ida Curtis, Meridian; Jackson, Miss Florence Granbery, Jackson; Hattiesburg, Mrs. Dan Gilman, Hattiesburg.

We would earnestly request that pastors where there are no Leagues will strive to organize Leagues before our Conference and elect delegates to attend; their attendance will inspire them and the information they get help them to establish the newly organized Leagues on a firm basis. We would urge the pastors who have Leagues to see that there is a good delegation to attend the Conference. Our Church has no other organization that is adapted to the young life of the Church to develop and train them for service and the Epworth League is worthy of our best efforts. Since 1908, I have not been connected with the Conference League work in an official way, and I am a little behind on its plans and work; and I earnestly crave the help and co-operation of all, in order that we may do our best for the young life of the Church in making the coming Conference a success. W. D. HAWKINS, Pres. Miss. Conf. Epworth League.

TETTERINE TURNS THE TRICK.

W. B. King, Wrens, Ga., writes: "I used a box of Tetterine on a case of itching piles of 5 years' standing. I spent $50 for different kinds of remedies and the skill of doctors, all for no good until I got Tetterine. I am now well." Tetterine is an enemy to all diseases of the skin, such as Tetter, Eczema, Ringworm, etc., going right to the root of the trouble and by eliminating the cause, removes the effect. A BLESSING FROM HEAVEN.

In this money-mad day so many remedies are being offered the public that it is extremely difficult to find the right one. When we do find such, it is like a blessing from heaven. If you suffer from boils, bruises, burns, old sores, abscesses, carbuncles, poison oak and the like, waste neither time nor money in experimenting with other remedies, but get a box of Gray's Ointment at once, an old reliable remedy which originated in 1820. For the purposes mentioned it has no equal. To test its value before you buy, write Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., for a Free Sample postpaid. 25c at druggists.

"Character is higher than intellect. A great soul will be strong to live as well as to think."

Piles Cured in 6 to 14 Days

Your druggist will refund money if PAZO OINTMENT fails to cure any case of Itching, Blind, Bleeding or Protruding Piles in 6 to 14 days. The first application gives Ease & Rest. 50c.

NEARLY SMOTHERED.

Chandler, N. C.—Mrs. Augusta Lomax, of this place, writes: "I had smothering spells every day, so bad that I expected death at any time. I could not sit up in bed. I suffered from womanly troubles. My nerves were unstrung. I had almost given up all hope of ever being better. I tried Cardui and it did me more good than anything I had ever taken. I am better now than I ever expected to be." Thousands of ladies have written similar letters, telling of the merits of Cardui. It relieved their headache, backache and misery, just as it will relieve yours, if you will let it. Try.—Adv.

THE INSPIRATIONAL VALUE OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE RESURRECTION.

By Rev. G. W. Henry.

To write or speak, for edification, on the subject of the resurrection we must have a specific point in mind. Vague generalities may entertain, but they do not necessarily instruct. We could approach the subject as a scholastic critic or as a sermonizer. We could view it as a prophecy as found in the Old Testament, as the development of a doctrine, as a doctrine in Apochryphal literature, as a doctrine taught by Christ, as a doctrine taught by the disciples, as a doctrine taught by the post-apostolic Church, as a dogma found in the creeds, et cetera. Let us consider the resurrection of Jesus as a doctrine of inspirational value.

The thought of a resurrection was permanently fixed in the sacred literature of the Hebrew people, as is clearly supported by documentary evidence. Herod thought that Jesus was John, who had come back to life. But, like many another wholesome and helpful doctrine, the resurrection was only imperfectly and partially interpreted. There was the thought in the Hebrew mind of a national resurrection, then the thought of a figurative, national and individual resurrection, then the individual, then the idea of a present resurrection as taught by Christ in a conversation regarding Lazarus, who had been in the grave.

The New Testament will warrant the belief in two types of resurrection, viz: one for the just, and one for the unjust. These differ both in kind and in time. The millennium doctrine—whether pre or post—will raise a point of only minor consideration in the matter of Christ's reign and the time of a resurrection.

We will assume that the "times" the Father holds in the secret of his own counsel. The Prophet Habakkuk says: "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." But the "time when" is left as indeterminate. Christ's body was raised the third day. But the "time when" our body shall be clothed with incorruption and immortality we know not, but we abide the time which is in the keeping of Him over whom death hath no power.

There is no dissertation, however impelling in logic or pleasing in diction, that has the irresistible appeal of the gospel. But its power, like the secret of the Lord, is with them only who believe. The gospel of the resurrection, like any other phase of the gospel, rests the question of life on belief.

The historicity of the resurrection is attested to by many infallible and incontestable proofs. He was seen of Mary, then he appeared to Simon, then to the two on their way to Emmaus, then to ten, then to the eleven one week later, and also to Thomas, then to seven by the Sea of Galilee, then to a company (Paul says five hundred), then to James, then to the disciples at Jerusalem just before the ascension, then to Paul. These are, however, but some of the fragmentary accounts of Christ's appearances. These were testimonies to an observed fact, and not a fact to be demonstrated. These incidents were recorded by believers for believers. The belief in an event so sudden and so startling is conditioned on its reality. So the apostolic teaching took this form: "If Christ be not risen from the dead then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." Furthermore, all that was preached as necessary to be believed in was Christ as Lord and the matter of the resurrection. (Romans x, 9.)

The primary and the abiding fact of the resurrection event gave to the believers a unity of doctrine. They went everywhere preaching the resurrection, but those only who were witnesses of the resurrection could be apostles.

Again, it gave boldness to the witnesses. Not only did one say, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ who has begotten us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus from the dead," but he further said, "for there is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved."

Again, this idea gave to the disciples a spirit of authority. The thought was brought forth to occupy an important place. Through the good news of the resurrection, life and immortality are brought to light. Forgiveness of sins were to be obtained in the name of Jesus. Prayers were made in his name. "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, walk," said Peter to a lame man. Yea, his very divinity stands or falls according to the veracity or falsity of the claim. Says Paul, "I * * * declared to be the son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection of the dead * * *."

The crowning glory of such a doctrine is the inspiration that it gives to me. It gives to life a value that nothing else can impart to it. As I labor, assurance is given that the labor of my hands will be established. Therefore every ministry to the poor, every prayer for the sick, every exhortation to the wayward, every word of consolation to the broken-hearted, is a sacrament. We thus live each day in the full consciousness that when this earthly tent is taken down we shall be clothed upon with our house which is from above. Thus we face death with no sense of gloom or despair, but "in hope of eternal life" we move on, borne up by these words: "Because I live, ye shall live also." Let men who can be comforted with their doctrines of falsehood and skepticism get whatever satisfaction they can, but let me live to preach and believe in the well attested truth, confessed by an innumerable multitude through thousands of years that we shall rise from the dust and be with our Savior and our loved ones. A glorious triumph is that obtained through the power of the resurrection!

Jackson, Miss.

Beyond all doubt the teachings of the Bible furnish the best and most unerring guide to the performance of public duty and the discharge of personal obligations. I earnestly hope that God's day may be hallowed and His word studied through this whole land, till their obligations are felt and acknowledged by all its people.—General Lewis Cass.

THE NAME ABOVE EVERY NAME.

If history be the biography of a few great men, the history of the world cannot be known without the study of Christ. It is his hand that has "lifted the gates of the empires off their hinges and turned the stream of the centuries." Not a century has passed since his birth on which his hand has not been laid. The impress of his spirit is on the world's greatest civilizations.

Though he did come from a hated race, meanly born and humbly bred, all civilized nations bow to the sceptre of the Christ. Without letters, he has the first place in all the libraries of men. Coming out from Joseph's workshop, in the early morning of his life, living but a brief period, meeting a malefactor's death, he has come to a throne and dominion such as no Caesar ever had. He, who never had a dollar in his hands, has created values in all the marts of earth. He never wielded a sword, but he has come to be the Conqueror of men. Born in a manger and buried in a borrowed sepulcher, with a life as obscure as short, and a death of unpitied shame, men write of him in histories, praise him in song, exalt him in theology, interpret him in philosophy, and worship him in temples. The peasant of despised Nazareth leads captive all civilized nations.

Christ did not bring his religion to men as the Mormons made known their faith, saying an angel wrote it on a gold plate. Nor did he bring it as Moses brought the Moral Law from the fiery Mount. Our religion has come to us in and through Christ; in his life, person and words. Christianity is Christ among men. It is his life lived in the lives of men.

No other fact in history has for nineteen centuries met such a light of scientific research and critical investigation as the fact of Christ. The result is that His name is the most permanent one in history. To no other fact does the human mind such homage pay. As the circle of human learning widens, Christ becomes better known. As nations advance in the amenities of life and in the arts of civilization and in true refinement, the higher do they life the Christ on the throne of worship. Lifting him, in turn he lifts us.

The name of Christ gives unity to history. As the planetary bodies are bound together in one splendid whole by the central sun, so the name of Jesus unifies all history. Could such a Name come by chance? Could such a Life be the result of fortuitous circumstances? One increasing purpose (and Name) runs in the history of men and providence of God.

Christianity has now overcome the subtle skepticism of Hume; the destructive criticism of Renan and Straus; the meanness of Issinglin; the shame of its founder's death; the poverty of its unlettered propagators. It is like the anvil that wears many hammers out. Like the impregnable Gibraltar, it can safely stand the beating billows of criticism. "His name is above every name."

"His name, like sweet perfume, Shall rise with every morning sacrifice."

—Rev. C. F. Sherrill, in Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate.

EASTER MORNING.

"Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou?" She, supposing him to be the gardener, saith unto him, "Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away."

Where turned he first his newly risen feet?

Towards that bright city where the base is gold,
And as it were transparent glass, the street,
And every several gate a pearl? Behold,
He standeth where the stone was late unrolled:
"Whom seeketh thou?" Thus in the dawn-light dim,
He seeketh her who, weeping, seeketh him.

The old, sad question no more quivereth
Upon our lips unanswered: Will the dew
Of memory dry amid the dust of death?

Love's stricken leaves fall, withered, where they grew?

The old things be less precious for the new?
Lo, in the garden, in the dawn-light dim,
He seeketh her who, weeping, seeketh him.

AN EASTER MEDITATION.

By Rev. C. F. Sherrill.

The free gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ. So rings the note of the New Testament. Christ came to bring life in its fulness and sweetness; and to enter into that life makes this lower life divine and noble. Since Christ on the first glad Easter morn went through the grave and made it a skylight, light from the higher life falls upon our path and glows in our hearts. Earth is more beautiful and life sweeter, because the upper world is so near. The heavenly home imparts its joy to the earthly home. The joy of Easter is the joy of this life—the joy of living in view of the unending life.

This full life here and hereafter is the gift of God. It comes not by human toil and exertion, but by divine regeneration. It is not the carving of a faultless statue, but the germination of the seed. However perfect the piece of statuary, it is lifeless, and must forever remain so. The seed has God-given life, and under the divine care comes to the fragrant and beautiful flower. Eternal life is not culture; but conversion. Not refinement, but regeneration. Not renaissance, but spiritual resurrection. Not renovation, but re-creation. It is not new clothes, but a new birth.

How beautiful is the world under the touch and glory of Spring! New and glorious life is everywhere. This is the resurrection of nature. This life is the gift of God.

How beautiful in the fields of earthly toil is the resurrection of the human life! Paganism is exchanged for Christianity. Peace takes the place of battle-fields. Oriental harems are turned into Christian homes. A Gladstone steps in the place of a Draco, who wrote his laws in blood. A McKinley rules instead of a Nero. The sweet flowers of gentleness and kindness steal into bloom. It is the new life that follows Easter. It is the gift of the risen Christ.

How beautiful and glorious will be this life in its fulness! The songs of the angels, the White Throne, the fellowship of the saints, the smile of the Father, the River of Life! Life in its fulness. Eternal life.

And when we have been there ten thousand years.

Bright shining in the sun,
We will have no less years to spend
Than when we first begun.

THE PERSONAL METHOD OF WINNING SOULS.

By Rev. James W. Lee, D.D.

Not during the history of St. Louis has there been so sane and well-planned a religious campaign looking to the salvation of the people as the churches have organized for this Lenten season. All Protestant churches of the city have entered into it, but it is a source of joy to the Southern Methodists that our preachers were the first to develop the programme for the movement. Rev. Luther E. Todd had tested the new method thoroughly while pastor at Centenary Church, and again just after the last Annual Conference he had tried it in his new church at Wagoner Place, with such amazing results that no doubt was left in any mind as to the value of the personal method in reaching the people.

Recognizing, as we now do, how successful the modern line of evangelical activity is, it is strange that it has not occurred to us all along that this is the simple and Scriptural way to win the careless and indifferent to the Church. This was really the plan followed by our Savior himself. He did not seem to attach much importance to crowds as such. He shunned crowds. He singled out and called and won to himself first one individual and then another. Nathaniel, the woman of Samaria, Nicodemus, the nobleman from Capernaum, the man at the pool with an infirmity for thirty-eight years, the man who was blind from his birth, etc., are typical cases and indicate that Christ was constantly on the lookout for individual persons to heal and save.

Now, the preachers of our Protestant Churches in St. Louis have simply returned to the way of winning souls followed by the Lord Jesus Christ. Of course, the gospel as preached from the pulpits Sunday by Sunday is not discounted, but modern sinners are shy and elusive and hard to reach. So, after firing into the multitudes from the pulpits on the Lord's Day, St. Louis preachers have found it necessary to fix bayonets, move out into the highways and engage in hand-to-hand contests with the rank and file of God's wandering children in the week days. Nor do the preachers go alone into these week-day battles with sin and hardness, as found walking about in men and women. Each preacher seeks to enlist every able-bodied person in his congregation in the same work. Thus ministers and laymen are fighting side by side for victory, and they are succeeding splendidly.

It is thought 2000 persons will be won to our Southern Methodist churches in the St. Louis District alone. We have 10,000 members, say in round numbers, and an ingathering of 2000 will give us a 20 per cent increase in six weeks. This carried out in the whole Southern Methodist Church of 2,000,000 in round numbers, would give us an increase in six weeks of 400,000 new Southern Methodists, and this can be done if the preachers and people all through the South will together enter into the personal kind of religious work now engaging the efforts of all our St. Louis Protestant churches. Of course, all this means prayer and consecration and vast determination, but what are we in the world for, and what reason can we give for being alive and for being members of Christ's Body, which is his Church, if it be not that we may concentrate all our might and prayer and thought to the salvation of men and women for whom Christ died.

St. Louis, Mo.

ABOUT PREACHERS AND PREACHING.

Dear Brother Meek: I have been thinking for some time that I would write you a line and tell you how much we appreciate your splendid work as editor of the Advocate, but one thing after another has kept me from doing this. A business man these days has about all he can do to look after himself and his interests. That is one of the objections I find, if you please, to this age in which we live. We are all living and leading strenuous lives, crowding every moment full of labor and toil. I sometimes think a Roman galley slave was no more of a slave than the average business man.

And that reminds me just here of the mistake our preachers sometimes make in trying to entertain the average business man at the 11 o'clock service on Sunday by talking much of the great business enterprises of this country, and the growth and development of the same. Had you ever thought about how far that is from preaching the Gospel, and how tiresome it is to the modern business man? He does not want to hear anything about business from the pulpit. The fact is, he has studied business all the week, and really learns more about the great business enterprises of this country in an hour than the average preacher knows in a week.

That poor fellow who has worried over business problems all the week wants to hear something about the doings and sayings of Jesus on Sunday. He wants to renew his spiritual life with the pure Gospel. To tell a weary soul the simple story of the crucifixion—how Jesus wore the crown of thorns, how his persecutors spat upon him and buffeted him on every hand; how he bore the cross to Calvary's summit; how he prayed for the thief, and the promise he made to him; and then how he died! He did all this that we might have rest from the burdens of the day, and life free from the blight of sin. Such, in my humble judgment, is far better preaching than the stories of all the successful business men of all the ages.

I very well remember that on one occasion I happened to be in one of the good towns of North Mississippi on a Sunday, and as my usual custom is to attend church service on Sunday, I did so on that day, and invited several of my drummer friends to go with me. They went. To my utter astonishment, the preacher, who was well able to preach a good Gospel sermon, spent the whole hour discoursing on the achievements of modern science. My friends were disappointed, and so was I. We left that church as hungry for soul food as when we went.

Nothing will take the place of the Gospel. Tell scientists, tell business men—in fact, tell all the world of Jesus and his love. That is the only thing that will fill and satisfy a hungry human heart. But I did not intend to say this when I began.

The Amory and Nettleton charge, at its first quarterly conference of this Conference year, increased its pastor's salary to $1500 per annum. We pay this as it comes due. We thought that, inasmuch as the Conference was good enough to send us one of the best men in its bounds, that we would in a measure try to reciprocate their kindness by giving him and his family an ample support.

I hear some very glowing reports from both Brother Bell, of the Aberdeen District, and Brother Woollard, of the Columbus District. Brother Borders is doing well at Aberdeen, preaching to fine audiences. I also hear that Brother Duren is much appreciated at Columbus, and is preaching to fine congregations.

You know, I think a great deal of Duren, Woollard, Park, Young, Bell, Felts, and Borders. The fact is, if ever I saw a Methodist preacher that I did not love I do not know it. Every day I feel the good influence of these men as they go in and out among the people of this country.

Methodist preachers are a peculiar set, anyhow. They can stand more wetting and more drying, more feasts and more famine, more staying and more moving, more poverty and more wealth, than any set of men on earth.

Brother Park made a fine beginning at Tupelo, but I am sorry to tell you, he has been recently very much indisposed. From what I could learn of him, I am sure that he stood for several days where he could almost feel the lashing of the waves of the Jordan, but you and I know they had no terrors for him. He is better now, and I hope he will soon be himself again.

You are giving us a most excellent paper. You dash just enough sauce into the editorial dish to make the food taste spicy and good. The quality is par excellence and the flavor is fine. Let the mill continue to grind. J. A. LOWE.

A WORD TO THE CHURCH.

By Bishop E. E. Hoss.

By the decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee in the Vanderbilt case, the Church has lost everything that is worth having. To use one part of a famous saying of John Randolph, of Roanoke: "We are all broken down and cut up, horse, foot, and dragoons." The statement published in some of the papers that the Church is left just where it has been for forty years is too absurd to merit reply. For seventeen years Bishop McTyeire was president of the Board, with a power of absolute veto. Up to 1905, with the full approval and consent of the Board, the Bishops shared unrestricted rights as trustees. The only thing now decreed to us by the Court is a right of confirmation that is less than the shadow of a shade, for the Trustees elected by the Board are to enter upon their office without waiting for confirmation. Even in the exercise of this limited right, the Church is humiliated by having held over it, as if it were a band of lawbreakers and anarchists, the threat and menace of "contumacy."

The decision of the Court is the law of the land. It is a complete and final denial that the Church has any trace of ownership in the University. The whole thing belongs to the Board of Trustees. There is no earthly way in which the Church can have the slightest voice in controlling even the Theological Department. Hide and hair go together. The Church is out from Dan to Beersheba and from the rising of the Sun even to the going down of the same. The slightest effort on our part to exercise any real authority would inevitably end in another lawsuit. Nothing can change the status. The Board itself cannot trade off nor concede away any part of the power adjudged to it by the Court. It is just as well to look that fact fairly in the face.

The shriveled remnant of confirmation that the Church still holds is just enough to enable it to worry the Board without benefiting itself. But that is neither a dignified nor a Christian thing to do. If the institution belongs to the Trustees they are entitled to take it and manage it to suit themselves, and I, for one, shall never consent to engage in any spiteful interference with their performance of the task.

The Church must quietly submit to existing conditions with Christian dignity, not for wrath but for conscience sake. Any attempt on our part to evade the decree of the Court, or to seek to recover by methods of indirection, the position which we have lost, would be in the highest degree unethical and improper. This does not mean, however, that we are in the slightest measure compelled to admit that the opinion of the Court is either a just and righteous exposition of the law or a fair statement of the facts in the case. We bow to it simply because it is the voice of organized authority, and for no other reason.

It is a time for serious thought. The doctrine that men may organize and control corporations for everything from making soap to running railroads, but that Christian Churches may not do so for the promotion of Christian education, is one that cannot permanently stand. It is a destruction of religious liberty. The sweep of the ages is against it; the very genius of our Government is at war with it. Let us not be cast down. The Lord still reigns, and He will not vacate His throne.

ANENT VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

Dear Dr. Meek: It is only a short time until our brethren meet in General Conference—about a month. In this time the Church has to determine what shall be her attitude toward Vanderbilt University. The decision just handed down by the Supreme Court of Tennessee has made it impossible for any self-respecting Methodist to advocate the continuance of the relationship which has existed there from the foundation of that institution 40 years ago. In a court of last resort our ownership and management has been annulled. That which is left us is a mere shadow of what through the years we have felt to be ours in substance. No one had ever denied it. But denial came at last, and those who have fought the Church have won. Their glory is their shame. We have been despoiled of our own by those whom we have honored and trusted. Whatever the ambiguity of language may make possible, or the law may decree, yet in equity and by every moral consideration, Vanderbilt University is, and will be ours eternally. The Church, indignant at this outrage, will never hold the despoiler guiltless, be he high or low; nor view his deed as less than vandalism.

The little salvage of authority left us from the wreck is not worth the holding. With the University, let it go! We have not the time nor the disposition to be searching among the flotsam and jetsam. A scavenger is always detestable.

While our soul will rise in eternal protest against the wrong, we are powerless before the law. But no thought of gain to be won, nor of advantage to be held, will allow us to fawn upon or treat with those who have thus wronged us. Let them go with their wrested authority and rights. The Church is seeking to give Christian education. To give this in partnership with those who have thus violated a sacred trust is preposterous. The Methodist Church neither wants nor needs such affiliation or alliance.

Let us again turn our attention to the establishment of a university. By our own gifts and the gifts of those who were friendly to us and to our cause, we have built one, though we have now lost it. We can build another. Shall it be at Dallas, or Durham, or elsewhere? With faith in God and our face to the future, let us press on, firmly fixed in a great purpose.

W. W. WOOLLARD.

THE LATEST TURN.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee has spoken. If the gentlemen that compose this tribunal suppose that the two millions of Methodists in Dixie will accept their dictum they have a surprise in store for them. Their word is law for the time; but "nothing is settled until it is settled right." Some two millions of the best men and women of America do not believe that this matter is settled right. I am not a lawyer; but I have studied the canons of evidence and for ten years taught logic; and I am utterly unable to see in the Supreme Court's decision anything other than a strange, illogical perversion of justice and an egregious blunder.

What must the Church do? Do what Chancellor Kirkland and his followers seem to think that it will do—tamely submit, and go on giving support and patronage to the University thus ruthlessly wrested from our control? We cannot afford to educate our sons and our preachers in an institution occupying the relation to the Church which this decision would fix. Hardly one in a hundred thousand of us, I think, would brook such a suggestion.

Whether or not it is wise to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, others must decide. If we do not, we should immediately remove our Theological Department to some other place and build for ourselves a great university so protected that this calamity can never occur again.

We need a better place than Nashville, and in a State with laws fairer than are those of Tennessee. And when we remove our educational center from Nashville, the Publishing House and accompanying interests should go also. The General Conference, fortunately so near at hand, will meet the issue squarely.

No other course would be sane—none other would be righteous. Loyalty to the great Church imperatively demands it.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

THE VANDERBILT CASE.

Dear Dr. Meek: I wish to say, for one, that I most heartily indorse your editorial relative to the Vanderbilt case and the Court's decision. The decision may be in accordance with a strict construction of legal technicalities, but it is a clear sweeping away of chartered rights and an ignoring of all equities. I mean no contempt of Court, but maintain the right to express an opinion.

Through the influence of Bishop McTyeire, Mr. Vanderbilt gave his money to the Board of Trust as representative of the M. E. Church, South. For about thirty years that fact was neither questioned nor disputed.

I do not believe Mr. Vanderbilt could have been induced to make his gift had he suspected that there would ever be an effort to set aside the chartered rights of the Church. It seems to me that Chancellor Kirkland was the prime instigator and chief conspirator in this scheme. His act seems shamefully traitorous to the Church whose confidence he enjoyed, and whose educational interests he was chosen to conserve and forward.

As the Church has no rights nor interest in this institution, it is sincerely hoped that she will set up one for herself, being careful to know whose are the vested rights. She cannot do less and maintain her self-respect, or that of others.

Since Nashville—not those loyal to justice—prefer Mr. Carnegie's million to all the interests of the Church there located, it is most fervently hoped the Church will seek a more friendly and appreciative location for her interests, if it be granted that she has such interests. I make no apology for what I have said. It is only a part of what I think and feel.

L. L. UPTON.

THE ONLY COURSE.

The only thing left for the Methodist Church to do now is to establish a new University. To lease out the instruction of her sons for the ministry and other work, to risk the influences that might enter into the scholastic and moral development of the rising generation, without the privilege of a word or action counteracting such as might be considered bad, is a condition not to be at all contemplated. A father would be a pitiable travesty upon that relation who would allow such a condition to prevail with his children, even though all the courts in the land should interpose their learned decisions. The responsibility of the Church is fully as serious. Not for a minute should she hesitate to open negotiations for the establishment of another institution of a similar kind, but not of a similar spirit of management.

It may be interposed that it is a matter of no small moment to build and equip a great University. True, but it is a matter of far graver concern to allow the young of the present generation to be trained without the supervision of the Church. The Lord will honor such an effort by raising up from among the people men who will munificently aid such a movement. Already the echoes are rumbling. A $1,000,000 here, another $1,000,000 there, only shows us what may be expected if such a course should be taken. Let the Church arise in her loyalty to God, declaring for such a purpose, and from unknown and unexpected sources money will come to place her right for her work. And when this has come to pass, then by all means let the elective phrases be written so lucidly that even a Supreme Court may see too plainly to be muddled by inordinate ambition, or to have their vision obscured by the dangling gold of anti-Christian sentiment. Then let the Church bid a final farewell to Vanderbilt and her little bunch of trustees.

J. W. DORMAN.

Memphis, Tenn.

THE VANDERBILT MATTER.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have just finished reading of the demonstration in Nashville on last Saturday evening after the Supreme Court had rendered its opinion in the Vanderbilt case.

Of course, every right thinking man in the Church is surprised at the outcome. Not only the Methodists, but other Churches in the country have expressed themselves as siding against the Board of Trust in their efforts to wrest the control of the University from the Church that founded it, and that has up to this time patronized it and believed she owned it. The conduct of the student body and faculty offered an unpardonable insult to the Bishops, and therefore to the whole Church, in the demonstration of Saturday night.

The decisions of a thousand Supreme Courts cannot change the fact that the Committee appointed by the Memphis Conference founded Central University for, and in the name of, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, this Committee being a representative body of the said Church. If the city of Nashville, through her newspapers, and the State of Tennessee are to combine with the Board of Trust to take away the University from the Church there is but one alternative, and that is, to pull up everything we have in Nashville and move to some place where we can have the sympathy and support of the city in which we locate. I have felt for some years that the University was slipping away from the Church, that it was out of harmony with our standards, and unless there was reform in the teaching force the sooner we got rid of the University the better.

The University has been in recent years gradually alienating from the standards of the Church the sentiments of the younger men preparing for the ministry who have attended there, and has also been creating among them a spirit of disloyalty. If the University is to control itself without hindrance on the part of the Church, or some responsible Board of the Church, the sooner we get rid of it the better.

It is to be expected that the approaching General Conference will take the proper steps in the matter. If it is impossible that we properly control Vanderbilt, we must have a great University which will be our very own.

WORK IN THE LAFAYETTE (LA.) DISTRICT.

All the preachers of the Lafayette District have their work in good condition. I think it is safe to report improvement at every appointment. We have had upwards of 200 accessions during the first quarter, and, in most instances, our finances are in better shape than at this time last year, notwithstanding the persistent cry of hard times. We have a company of true, faithful, hard-working men in charge of the various stations, circuits and missions of the Lafayette District, and it is difficult to make special mention of any one of them.

I have supplied the Vermilion Circuit with Rev. W. R. McPherson, a young man from Mississippi, and, if I am not mistaken, the Church will hear more of him in days to come.

Rev. A. A. Bernard, of Eunice, is in the midst of a church building campaign. It now looks very much like a success, and we will have the much-needed new church in Eunice in the near future.

At Kaplan, one of the appointments of our French Mission, Brother Hebert has good reason to believe a church will be built before the Conference year ends.

Our Lafayette congregation and Sunday school have outgrown their present quarters under the wise and faithful leadership of Brother Harrison, and they are planning enlargement.

Our French Mission work, under Brothers Hebert and Breithaupt, is yielding a rich harvest of souls, and if wisely and faithfully managed will result in great things for Methodism.

Brethren of the Louisiana Conference, snffer a word of exhortation: Do not hesitate nor be afraid to have your churches put their money into the French Mission work of south and southwest Louisiana. Already we are reaping a rich harvest, and if this work is backed up by your prayers and money, success is assured.

The outlook is hopeful over the entire district. Our men are at work, trusting in Him whose promises cannot fail. JAMES I. HOFFPAUIR.

A MAN FOUND, BUT NOT THE MONEY.

A good man, Rev. M. M. Marshall, has been appointed to the work in the Isle of Pines, but I have not secured the money needed to build the house at Neuva Gerona.

Brother Stewart, who has been on the Island for several years, writes me a letter under date of March 27, as follows:

"I am now in a position to say that I can raise four thousand ($4,000) dollars on the Isle of Pines for the Neuva Gerona work. As a further guarantee I agree not to call for what the church at home gives until I have this secured.

"Our people ought to remember that there are no well-to-do people in Neuva Gerona. While there are some wealthy people who own land in the Isle of Pines, they merely have their winter homes here and do not bear the burdens of the community. These fall on the poor.

"These American residents are taxed by the Government and yet they have to support their own schools by public subscription. The Cuban Government makes no provision for American schools. American boys and girls are going bad because we cannot get hold of them. My wife and I must live in Neuva Gerona where we can be in touch with them as they come in and reach them as they go astray. There are three American bar-rooms and about seven operated by Cubans in Neuva Gerona and there is nothing being done to offset this evil except preaching twice a month.

"We are distressed about the situation and unless the Methodist Church, South, responds to this, the accounting of our Stewardship will be sad indeed. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is responsible for the Isle of Pines. Our presence here keeps out the other evangelical denominations. We must meet the responsibility or make room for some one who will.

"I hope this will make it clear to the Church that we cannot recede but must go forward. Quarters and half-dollars, along with an occasional larger subscription, are coming out of the pockets of people who are heavily burdened now and have a meager income. What we need is something substantial from some who have an abundance.

"Yours in Christ,

"MALCOLM M. STEWART."

I cannot urge the case more strongly than it is presented in this brief, plain statement by Brother Stewart.

Surely there are those among our two millions of people who will supply the money required for this building at Neuva Gerona, which is so sorely needed.

A GLANCE AT THE JOURNAL OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To an interested layman, nothing is so instructive as the Journal of his Conference. There he will find the naked facts as they are without any one to apologize, explain or excuse—the facts as they go into the record of the year's work. It is an excellent index of the religious state of the Church, and rather suggestive as to the ability of the pastors, the loyalty of the laymen, and the fidelity of the people in general.

In the Journal of the Mississippi Conference recently held at Natchez, it is sad to find so many charges which failed to pay up everything in full. In one district only four charges are reported with a clear deck. The Seashore leads all the Conference, though in numerical strength it is the very weakest save one. In the amount paid the preachers, it is excelled by only two—the Brookhaven paying twenty dollars more, and the Jackson a little better. Yet more charges paid up everything in full in this weak district than in any other. The Meridian District shows a slightly larger gain in membership, but no other has so substantial a gain. There is a net gain of 1700 members in the Conference reported, though this appears to be an error, as there is a positive loss reported from four districts, and my addition refuses to agree with that of the Statistical Secretaries, in several places. Just for a comparison, I note that there are thirty-eight charges in the Louisiana Conference reported to have paid $1000 and over to the pastor, and only thirty-three in the Mississippi Conference, yet there is a loss reported from the sister State. I cannot think that the WORD has lost power or force, neither am I persuaded that the preachers are lacking in ability, industry, or consecration. What is the reason? Why does the Cause seem to be languishing? It behooves us as laymen, and preachers, as well as the presiding elders, to make an earnest effort to find the cause, and with all our powers put our shoulders to the wheel and force an advance in religious matters.

As Lay Leader of this (the Seashore) District, I have visited many charges, and hope to visit more during this year. At each place the people heard the message gladly and were most attentive to the subject presented. This speaks volumes for the faithful pastors who labor among them. No wonder this district stands first. Earnest pastors and listening people always make for better things. Dr. Huntley is always in the front of the fight, advising, helping, suggesting, and we hope that this year will be the banner year for this district in every way.

For various reasons it seemed best for me to remove from Bay St. Louis to Biloxi, and I am here now. The pastors who expect me this spring will make a note of my new address.

Biloxi, Miss.

WHY DISCONTINUE THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL FIELD SECRETARY?

Report No. 1 of the Sunday School Board of the Mississippi Conference, adopted at Natchez last December, asked for an assessment of 5 cents per Sunday school scholar in each pastoral charge in the Conference, and the collection on each of the four Fifth Sabbaths, in order to maintain our Field Secretary during the year 1914.

At the mid-year meeting held in Jackson a few days ago, so I am informed, action was taken removing our Field Secretary from the field before the end of the Conference year.

According to my humble judgment, the best work being done by our Sunday School Board is being accomplished through our Field Secretary. Then, why remove him?

I am not disposed to dictate, nor even suggest, to any Board how it shall run its affairs, but I am curious to know why this Board would ask help for an object and then, the first opportunity it gets, remove the object. Does this relieve the Mississippi Conference of its obligation to pay the assessment?

The Georgia Sunday School Convention meets at Milledgeville, Ga., April 14, 15, and 16. Mr. Asa G. Candier and Mrs. Mary Harris Armor are two widely known characters who will take important parts in the convention.

Egbert Le Fevre, M.D., LL.D., one of the most noted physicians of New York City, and prominent in the Reformed Church in America as one of the four medical advisers on its Board of Foreign Missions, suddenly died on March 30, to the grief and great loss of that Church.

It is gratifying for Christians to know that to-day there are 70,000 Protestant Christians in Japan, 200,000 in Korea, nearly a half million in China, and a million in India. A hundred years ago there was less than a hundred missionaries in all mission fields; to-day there are about 22,000.

Dr. Conrad, of New York City, is advocating what he calls the "Win-One-More" movement to the church life of the country. He says it increased the efficiency of his members as disciples of Christ and added great numbers to the church roll. Each person is supposed to determine to win another certain person, known only to himself and the pastor, into the kingdom.

Secular News and Comment

Frank M. Miller has been appointed United States marshal for the Eastern District of Louisiana in the place of Victor Loisel who was requested to resign from the place.

Over $400,000 is registered by the big clock on Canal Street, New Orleans, as having been subscribed to carry out the Exposition of Big Ideas that is being propagated for that city.

Another turn in Mexican affairs through the victory of the rebels at Torreon practically gives the Constitutionalists control over the whole northern part of Mexico. General Villa, one of the Constitutional leaders, estimates the total loss at Torreon at 1500 killed and 3500 wounded.

Much indignation is being expressed in New Orleans because this city is not to be made one of the reserve centers about to be established under the new financial system of the United States government. Dallas, Texas; Richmond, Va., and Atlanta, Ga., will be the reserve centres for the South.

The sealing-steamer, "Southern Cross," with 170 men aboard and with a cargo of 17,000 seal pelts, cannot be heard from off the coast of Newfoundland. It is feared that these men and valuables are lost, and that they may be victims of the terrible blizzard of Tuesday, March 31, when 77 of the sealer "Newfoundland" were lost.

E. F. Kearney, who has just returned to New Orleans from New York, brings news of critical stages in the railroad condition in the country. Mr. Kearney is vice-President of the T. & P. Railroad, and he says a move must be made soon to allow the railroads to increase their rates to avert serious financial trouble.

The Commissioners of the city of New Orleans have made a law that every one driving an automobile in the city must be licensed. A committee to pass upon the candidates for license has been appointed and it has been at work some time. The prospective chauffeur must demonstrate his skill before the committee, and must have his picture taken to be filed away for possible future reference. This seems to be a good move for the protection of life.

On last Sunday morning the Picayune printed its last issue as a separate and independent newspaper. For seventy-seven years the Picayune has been a factor in the public life of this great city; and after it rose to a place of influence, has had much to do with shaping the moral and political affairs of the community life. The Times-Democrat of New Orleans, the other powerful morning paper, absorbed the Picayune, and the first issue of the united paper invited the attention of the public on Monday morning, April 6.

The frequent and belated snowstorms, according to the Department of Agriculture at Washington, have rejoiced the farmers because they have stored up the moisture in the soil which promises splendid crops this season. The conditions for winter wheat are considered ideal, especially so in New York State and the Eastern States generally, while in the Middle States they are far better than the average. In the corn belt a far better crop is predicted this year because the moisture produced by the snows will more than counteract the persistent drouth which so depleted the corn crop of last year.

Commenting on our headlong recklessness of life as Americans and the fact that we are always looking for some kind of a machine to save our lives because we have no time to care for them ourselves, The Saturday Evening Post, for April 4, says: "Just now we are insisting on all-steel cars, which are no better than any other cars until after a collision or derailment caused by human carelessness has occurred. This is more or less like dressing pedestrians in motor proof steel armor, instead of requiring both chauffeurs and other pedestrians to go circumspectly. There is no question that carelessness of life is an American characteristic. So long as it remains one, no mechanical device will save us from a heavy mortality record."

A CORRECTION.

In my report of the mid-year meeting of the Board of Missions of the Mississippi Conference, which appeared in the Advocate of March 26, I notice the following error, which I desire to correct:

In a carefully prepared address on "The Need of Aggressive Missionary Evangelism in the Home Field," Rev. Geo. H. Thompson is reported to have made some startling disclosures regarding spiritual destitution in some portions of the Seashore District. In justice to Brother Thompson and to the brethren of the Seashore District I would say that the destitution of which he spoke, and which he graphically brought before us with the aid of a map, exists in the Hattiesburg District, of which he is the presiding elder. How I came to make the slip is almost unaccountable to myself. There is no question of the fact, however, that spiritual destitution, though not so extensive or startling, does exist in one or two other districts of our Conference.

CHILDREN'S DAY.

By E. B. Chappell, Sunday School Editor.

Because of inquiries recently received in regard to the future disposition of the Children's Day Fund, I deem it expedient to make the following explanation: The amount ordered by the General Conference to be raised by the Sunday schools for the endowment of a chair of Religious Pedagogy and Sunday Schools is now in the hands of the treasurer, with the exception of a few hundred dollars, and this deficit will soon be made up from accruing interest. All the money raised this year on Children's Day will go, therefore, to the Conference and General Sunday School Boards to be used by them in promoting Sunday school work. It is hoped that this announcement will encourage pastors and Sunday school superintendents throughout the Church to make special efforts to see that Children's Day is observed and an offering taken in every school in the connection. Our cause is suffering for lack of funds. For the first time in many years the way is now absolutely clear. Let us show our interest in the great work of Christian training by rallying to its support. All offerings taken on Children's Day should be promptly forwarded to the treasurer of the Conference Sunday School Board.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF LOUISIANA.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference held its annual session at Rayville, La., April 1-3, as announced in the issue of the Advocate of last week. The Advocate has not yet received an account of the proceedings of the Annual Meeting. This will be published in a later issue. Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, Chairman of the Social Service Committee, has very kindly mailed the Advocate a report of that Committee which was adopted at the Annual Meeting held at Rayville last week. The report is as follows:

The Committee on Social Service recommends:

First—That the subject of Social Service be made a feature of the program of every Annual Conference.

Second—That a Committee be appointed to assist the Fourth Vice-President in co-operating with all philanthropic and State agencies that have for their aim the bettering of social conditions.

Third—That the Committee shall study conditions and methods for the amelioration of same.

Fourth—Whereas there is a widespread effort on the part of the public toward the suppression of vice, and whereas the best thinkers, political and sociological, are agreed that segregation in our cities is not a remedy for the social evil; therefore, be it

(a) Resolved, that this Social Service Committee record its protest against this method of dealing with the evil, and determine to make every possible effort to abolish this legalization of crime.

(b) Whereas so many of our women and girls have unintentionally assumed immodest and improper dress, which tends to lower the esteem and honor of womanhood, we recommend a sensible reform along these lines, and ask the hearty co-operation of this body of women in this effort.

Fifth—That we declare our unqualified condemnation of the legalized liquor traffic, and do all in our power to abolish the same.

Sixth—That whereas the picture shows which could be a means of education and uplift are in many instances hurtful in their influence, Resolved, that the Fourth Vice-President of each auxiliary make personal investigation, and endeavor to establish a censorship of same.

Easter Bells,

Or

THE EASTER MESSAGE IN PROSE AND POETRY.

Compiled by Carl Theodore Wettstein.

"Fear ye not! For I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. 'He is not here,' for he is risen, as he said. Come! see the place where the Lord lay."—Matthew xxviii, 5, 6.

THE EASTER MESSAGE.

Matthew xxviii, 6, 7.

Brightly gleams this message glorious—
"He is risen."

Over every foe victorious
"He is risen."

Love receives its pledge and token;
All the power of death is broken;

From on high the word is spoken—
"He is risen."

Us from Him shall nothing sever:
"He is risen."

Precious is this truth forever—
"He is risen."

Where the darkness is oppressive,
Where the foe is most aggressive,

Truth proclaims in tones expressive
"He is risen."

This concerns each tribe and nation—
"He is risen."

This secures for men salvation—
"He is risen."

Soon shall errors old and hoary
Fall before redemption's story,

Which proclaims in power and glory
"He is risen."

This brings joy in days of sadness,
"He is risen."

This inspires all songs of gladness,
"He is risen."

Saints no more the future dreading,
Hail the light which He is shedding:

Now they sing, while homeward treading,
"He is risen."

—T. Watson.

EASTER DAWN.

May the dawn of Christ's arising,
Death and darkness both surprising,

Fill our souls with joy this day.
May His Resurrection Greeting,
Softly-spoken, heart-entreating,

Take Golgotha's gloom away.

May the Risen Christ appearing,
Like a benediction, cheering,

Make this day serene and bright,
And, His grace on us bestowing

Peace beyond all human knowing,
Flood our lives with Easter Light.

—John D. M. Brown

REJOICE!

Rejoice! The battle has been won;
Christ's mighty triumph has begun;

The power of death is now undone.
Hallelujah!

The hosts of sin have conquered long,
But now at last their power is gone,

Wherefore rejoice, and raise the song,
Hallelujah!

Their champion stood before the host,
And proudly made his evil boast,

But God's own Israel was not lost.
Hallelujah!

For David's Son has come to win
The crown from death, and silence sin,

Then let fresh hymns of joy begin,
Hallelujah!

All glory, praise and thanks to Thee,
Who from all sin hast set us free,
That we may sing eternally,
Hallelujah!

—John C. Mattes.

FILLS OUR HEARTS WITH JOY.

It is the universal presence of the risen Christ that fills our heart with joy. It is the eternal joy of the Church. It is the cause of the jubilant note of Easter. Easter is not so much the celebration of the fact that no tomb could hold Jesus Christ, as it is of the great wonder that He is alive for evermore. And our joy songs celebrate not His ascension out of the grave into heaven, but the fact that He came back from death to dwell with His Church through the Holy Spirit.—Congregationalist and Christian World.

FROM BROTHER BOWEN.

Dear Brother Meek: Please accept my sincere thanks for your clear, strong editorial of March 26 in the New Orleans Advocate on the Vanderbilt question. Just the words we need now. I am convinced more than ever that you must remain the Editor of the Advocate. God has bestowed upon you that wonderful gift. The Lord bless you.

The meeting in Houston, Miss., with Brother Neblett, from March 15 to 26, was a good success. This was the second visit I made to this fine charge in one year. The official board of the Church announced that they would make "it annual" and I was invited to be with them every year. This I do gratefully appreciate in my mother Conference. Brother and Sister Neblett are doing great work and command the love of all the people. I am here in a good meeting, and go from here to Lexington, Miss., thence to Okolona and Booneville, Miss., and then return to North Alabama. The Lord is blessing my work. My health is very good. Again thanking you for your personal kindness to me and also the valuable service you are rendering our great Church, I am yours faithfully, BROTHER SWARTZ'S DIFFICULTY RELIEVED.

Brother Swartz's discussion of baptidzo and the Greek prepositions in the New Testament has been well done. So far as I am concerned I feel proud of him. I feel proud of him for three reasons; first, his familiarity with the Greek language; second, his sweet spirit in controversy, and third, he is ours; our professor and our Methodist brother. His discriminations are nice and accurate but he fell just a little short in his philological conclusion which very likely was due to the text that governed him. Any one can see, when his attention is called to it, that any text that is not in harmony with itself, is not, and cannot be, as trustworthy as the one that is. The one Brother Swartz seems to have followed is not consistent with itself. This is evident from the fact that it declares that Christ went "up from" the water in Matt. 3:16 and in Mark 1:10 "out of the water." We all can see that that will not do irrespective of what any one may say. Now therefore what is the remedy? It is this: since all texts agree that it is "from"—Matt. 3:16 therefore those texts that declare that it is "from" in Mark 1:10 are more worthy of a following than those that have "from" in Matt. 3:16 and "out of" in Mark.

Again Brother Swartz says: "The circumstances under which some were baptized, as for example, the Eunuch, make immersion possible." We should like to know the circumstances for such a mode in the face of the facts, that no water has been found in the place where they were sufficient to immerse, and too, that they were reading Isaiah who declared the water would be poured and sprinkled, and also, that our Saviour had called "pouring" baptizing. It does seem to me that since all that was said about water when Christ should make his appearance on the earth was that it would be poured and sprinkled, and too after Christ did come and while here, he did declare "pouring" baptizing, and baptizo was used to express pouring as baptizing, that there are strong grounds for one to be rather dogmatic as to the Scriptural mode of water baptism.

EASTER MUSINGS.

By Mary F. Savage.

The bells are ringing! The children are gathering in the Sunday schools in city and country, and their sweet songs, mingling with the soft strains of the organ, ascend on high to celebrate the Resurrection! The tiny leaves and flowers of April have risen from their graves in new-born beauty! The birds are carolling anew sweet praises! All nature seems to whisper "He is risen!" Bells, children, flowers and birds tell the story of our risen Christ.

Some writer has said that "there are pictures in music"—that the sweet strains are not only heard but are seen, that the sounds possess color; and this is true, when the vivid imagination can draw the pictures as the ear listens to the tones now soft, then loud, now peaceful, then warlike. Thus from the bells, the music, the clear bird-notes, the sweet child-voices, pictures pass, panorama-like, before the mind's eye this Easter Day:

Gethsemane! Here, in the beautiful garden amid the pure white lilies, we see our Lord, sad and sorrowful, and hear his submissive prayer, "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt."

Calvary! Here the cruel and ignominious death upon the cross—the crown of thorns we see while we hear the cry, "Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit!"

The Holy Sepulchre! Here we see his body resting in the spacious tomb of Joseph of Arimathea through the Paschal Sabbath and two nights. What a strange silence seems to reign everywhere during this period!

The Resurrection! Now we see the angel give Jesus a robe as he lays aside the fine linen and carefully folds the napkin. It is early morning; the great stone is rolled away, and our Lord treads softly amid the flowers. He has gone only a short distance when the Marys are at the tomb—the angel speaks, "Behold the place where He lay!" Mary Magdalene, through falling tears, sees the empty tomb, then turns away to seek her dear Lord, pausing to ask the gardener if he can direct her; but lo! it is not the gardener—it is Jesus. He speaks, "Mary"—and we see the pierced hands uplifted to forbid her nearer approach as she utters the cry of "Master."

The agony in the garden, the death on the cross, the resurrection morn—each speak unto the Christian's heart to-day in mingled sorrow and joy. There are sorrowing ones here, there and everywhere, even amid the flowers and lilies of this Easter-tide, but their sorrows are not as was his in Gethsemane.

He arose from the dead! May we joyfully arise with him this Easter morning. Out of the tomb of too little brotherly love and too small activity of Christian labor, let us rise into greater love and sympathy for our fellow-beings and, with greater zeal, work for the Master, that we may "know Him and the power of the Resurrection."

MISSIONARY DAY.

To the Pastors of the Mississippi Conference.

Inasmuch as we adopted a resolution at our last Annual Conference pledging ourselves to observe the second Sunday in April—Easter Sunday—as Missionary Day this year, it is highly important and desirable that all our pastors unite in this observance, and thus co-operate in early missionary campaigning, and in utilizing the Easter anniversary to the best advantage. Such concert of action will mean much to the cause that is dearest to the heart of our Lord. Envelopes for Easter Missionary offerings have been sent by our Mission Board to a number of our pastors.

AN EASTER HYMN.

By Lucy Larcom.

Break the joyful Easter dawn,
Clearer yet and stronger;
Winter from the world has gone,
Death shall be no longer.
Far away good angels drive
Night and sin and sadness;
Earth awakes in smiles, alive
With her dear Lord's gladness.

Open happy hours of spring,
For the sun has risen!
Through the sky glad voices ring,
Calling you from prison.
Little children dear, look up Toward his brightness pressing;
Lift up every heart a cup
For the dear Lord's blessing.

THE STINGIEST MAN.

The minister's pale little wife grew more nervous still. She had only lately recovered from a severe illness.

Sunday school was over, and the organist had not yet made her appearance. Pretty, light-haired, thoughtless Kate Wallace held the position, but she came only when fancy or inclination prompted. Consequently in her absence some one had to take her place, and that "some one" was always the minister's wife.

The congregation were filing into their seats—still no organist. It was almost time to begin. Finally the minister's little wife turned again. Old Matthew Gordon, who sat next to her, looked at her.

"Ain't over that sick spell yet, are you?" he said somewhat gruffly. "You're nervous."

The minister's anxious little wife tried to smile. "Am I? I'm sorry, but the fact is, I keep hoping Kate Wallace will not fail to come to-day."

"Why?"

"Oh, she plays so much better than I do."

Matthew Gordon shook his white head. "She does not," he answered promptly.

"Thank you, Mr. Gordon, but you see, though I have a good musical education, I—I have no piano, and being without one, one misses the practice that is so necessary. That is what worries me about playing in public."

Old Matthew Gordon looked at her. He remembered suddenly how little there was in the parsonage parlor. Only a couple of chairs, and a table, and a few pictures. He remembered how pitifully small the salary was, and that it was never promptly paid. "No piano!" Of course, there was no piano!

And yet, as he looked at her he saw nothing but sweetness on the pale face. There was no bitterness there, no unrest, no lines of discontent. Evidently she did not mind being the wife of an underpaid minister, bless her!

He looked at her slender, well-shaped hands, real musician's hands, and he wondered why it had never come to him before, all that she was missing. The manufactories were turning out thousands and thousands of pianos every year, and yet, for this sweet, delicate, musical woman there was none. He was a close man himself. He gave little away to charities of any kind. He had the name of being the stingiest man in the whole village. He was gruff, he was taciturn; he was not always polite, and he loved his money, and the accumulating of it.

The minutes dragged, and still no organist; then, with a last look at the clock, the minister's little wife smiled a good-bye to the white-haired old man in the pew beside her, and went up into the choir.

Matthew Gordon listened, and he thought to himself that he had never heard her play so well. Somehow his soul rose on wings when she struck the chords of

"A charge to keep I have,
A God to glorify,
A never dying soul to save,
And fit it for the sky."

Somehow, as she played the old hymn so grandly, he forgot his sordiness and his love of money, and then it came to him what he would do.

She played the hymns, two of them, and one solo. The minister rose to begin his sermon.

It was the third day afterward. The minister, coming home from a call upon old Mrs. Tuiliver, who was sick, and who lived in the country, heard some one playing as he opened his gate.

He stopped. He was at the wrong house, of course—they had no piano! But no, there was the familiar little scarlet geranium in the window, the same curtains.

He opened the door and went in. There in the poor, plain little room that had held only two simple chairs and a table, stood a beautiful piano with shining keys, and before it sat his wife.

Somehow he had not realized before what a wonderfully sweet face she had. Just now it was radiant.

She saw him, and ran to meet him. "Something beautiful has happened," she cried. "Some one has given me a piano! It has been so long since I could practice," she added. "I've been here all afternoon," she went on, "playing over all my old music."

Her voice broke. "I don't believe I was ever so happy in my life!"

The minister went over and looked at it, touched it, struck a note. Tears came to his eyes. "It is lovely—lovely, Ruth," he said slowly. "Now tell me the name of this 'some one' who has done this."

For answer his wife put a card in his hand.

He read it, and started. "Matthew Gordon!" he cried; "Matthew Gordon!" The close, austere, old man who attended his church, and who gave to it so sparingly! He could not believe his eyes.

"Ruth," he added, "this is a miracle. He is the last man in the world I would ever have credited with such an act as this—the last."

His wife looked at him. Her eyes were full of tears. "How little we know," she said softly; and then she added: "Somewhere in the Bible it says: 'The first shall be last, and the last first,'—doesn't it?"—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

SOMEBODY'S GRANDFATHER.

Who does not love the boy who shows respect for old age!

Recently, in one of the waiting-rooms in the depot of a large city, there entered a bright-faced young boy, leading by the arm a man with snow-white hair.

The boy escorted him to a seat, and placed the basket and bundle he had been carrying on the floor beside him. Then, with a word or two, he went away. He returned presently with a porter, to whom he spoke some words about the one sitting down. Then, with a hearty handshake accompanied by a bright smile, he started in the direction of the door. A gentleman going out at the same time, who witnessed the advent of the boy and the old man said as the door was reached:

"Your grandfather, I suppose? Going on a journey?"

"Not mine, but somebody's grandfather," was the reply given with a little laugh. "Poor old gentleman! I found him on the corner as I was going to school. He had lost his way to the depot and was in a tremble. He's going to his daughter's in the suburbs. I wish I had time to put him on his train, but I should have been late for school if I had waited, so I gave him into the porter's hands."

"That was very right and kind of you," the gentleman said with an appreciative look that made the blood surge to the boy's face, but the latter only said, "Thank you, sir."—Author unknown.

SECRET OF ENGLAND'S GREATNESS.

Queen Victoria, of England, was once asked by an African Prince who visited her court on an embassy, what was the secret of England's greatness. The queen handed him a beautifully bound copy of the Bible and said: "Tell the Prince that this is the secret of England's greatness."

MRS. N. H. ABARR.

On February 28, 1914, Mrs. N. H. Abarr died at her home at Long Beach, Miss., having reached the ripe age of eighty-four years. In many respects Mrs. Abarr was a remarkable character. She was a woman of strong will and capable of coping with almost any combination of circumstances. Very seldom during her long and active life did she fail to accomplish an undertaking. A history of her experiences would doubtless read like a romance. In other days, long before she came to live on the Gulf Coast, she traveled in the Western Wilds. Through Kansas, the Indian Territory, Texas, and Northern Mexico she, with her husband and daughter, homesteaded land, camping out while doing so, in the open, living the life of the Plains. During that part of her life, she passed through many experiences which, when told by her, would bring up vivid pictures of the West as it was in the long ago.

Several years after they came to the Coast, Mr. Abarr died leaving Mrs. Abarr and her daughter, Miss Mary, who was for a long time on the staff of the New Orleans Picayune. Three years ago her beloved daughter died and Mrs. Abarr, weighted down with disappointment and sorrow in being left alone, had no desire to tarry here, but hoped and prayed for the time to come when she, too, might depart and be with those she loved. During the last months of her life she was confined to her bed, and when finally the end came, it was in the way of a promotion to a higher life.

To the congregations she loved so well and to which she was ever true—Long Beach and Sunshine—Sister Abarr left the bulk of her property here; this consists of two houses and lots in town and a well improved farm of 25 acres just outside the city limits of Long Beach. All told, the property is worth nearly $5000. Her property in the Northwest was deeded to the Northwestern University, the institution at which her daughter received her education. Some other property here in Long Beach was given to two worthy orphan boys.

Sister Abarr was a noble character. Peculiar she certainly was, but true as could be to the principles of righteousness. The world would be vastly better if more such lives had left their stamp upon it. May those who knew and loved her strive to emulate her virtues, trust in the Savior, as she did, and follow her home to heaven.

SOME REFLECTIONS AT EASTER TIME.

Again the peoples of Christendom rejoice on the return of the anniversary of the resurrection of our Lord. The South winds begin to blow, the trees to bud, and the flowers to bloom. The seeds that are sown germinate and the tender plants shoot forth green blades. What a happy time to commemorate the rising from the dead of our Lord!

Easter means that men know, through the risen Lord, that they have the gift of immortal life. The world had long cherished a hope of immortality when Christ came. Job had propounded the great question: "If a man die, shall he live again?" And he answered it: "I know that my Redeemer liveth." The Psalmist had declared: "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." However strong may have been the belief of the Old Testament writers in immortality, much life was breathed into the structure of faith when Christ stepped from the tomb and witnessed himself to no less than five hundred people after he was crucified. The credentials of the risen Lord made so emphatic the fact of immortal life that Paul eloquently preached: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." In the resurrection was the faith of Martha vindicated as evidenced at the grave of Lazarus when she said: "I know that he shall rise again at the resurrection at the last day;" and also were the words of Christ made potent to men as he confessed on the same occasion: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. For whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

The triumph over death in the resurrection was so complete that Paul joyfully challenged: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The new vigor that took hold of the little band of apostles after the resurrection was amazing. It was now evident to them what Christ had taught in many things he had said that at the time they did not clearly understand. Now it was plain he referred to his death and resurrection when he said: "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." Peter had confessed that he was the Son of God, but it is evident Peter did not understand the potency of this Sonship, for he afterwards denied the Master in a time of seeming danger. The disciples had heard and had seen as Christ forgave and healed the sick, and in a degree they comprehended the situation; but the illuminating power of the resurrection drove away all shadowing misunderstandings. In the fact of the resurrection their thoughts were quickened and what Christ had said in the past was remembered; their faith was strengthened and they believed his promises; their zeal was kindled and they were ready to preach his gospel. The kingdom has never ceased to grow where men realized the truth of the resurrection.

That the Lord's apostles be thus empowered the resurrection was necessary. Christ's persecutors might have gained confidence and put his fair name to shame had he not risen. He had been spat upon and reviled; and upon the cross he was insulted by these words: "Thou that destroyest the temple and rebuildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross." To have left his disciples to bear the weight of such injustice, and with the shadow of the cross hanging heavily over their saddened hearts, might have discouraged them in the great undertaking of preaching the forgiveness and atonement for sins. What they needed was encouragement, hope, enthusiasm. They needed assurance. This Easter time is the testimony over again for nearly nineteen hundred times that Christ is risen. His words ever echoed in the hearts of the disciples: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." And as they preached the gospel of repentance they felt justified to do so in the light of the resurrection; they felt the vital connection between a life resurrected from sin and the rising from the dead of Christ. The risen Christ was their authority for preaching the new birth from sin into a life of righteousness. Paul was filled with the thoughts of a risen Lord when he said: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit."

Happy is he who realizes that the soul will never die, but will live according to the gospel of the resurrection. That the eyes be lifted up from the sordid things of earth toward the great beyond is a blessed privilege. The hopelessness and worthlessness that look from the faces of many poor unfortunates evidence their failure to grasp the words of Jesus: "I am the resurrection and the life." The soul of a man who has seen the riches of eternity rebels at the thought of mere mortality. If the things which are material are so lasting, certainly the soul is more so. A particle of matter is never destroyed, the decomposed earthly temple continues in varied forms of existence after the soul has taken its flight. The same aggregate of atomic substance that formed the earth in the beginning still remains in changing forms of life. God's creative work in the realm of the material, from the evidence open to all, has been enduring throughout the ages. Certainly the soul of man, the most wonderful of all God's creations, is more permanent than the dust of the earth. That integrity of soul, born of the inner consciousness of immortal life, shall never suffer the humiliation of death. Upon the rock Christ Jesus stand we though suns are blotted out and worlds crumble. The resurrection of our Lord is the divine testimony that strengthens into absolute knowledge the predisposition to believe in immortal life. In Christ the human race has determined to live forever. The effect of this soul-exaltation upon the moral qualities of men is incalculable; for, instead of living as beings whose existence is but for a moment, every act assumes a moral color that adds to, or takes from, the opportunity of gaining eternal salvation. The hope of immortality sanctions goodness, preserves character, and explains the fact of human existence.

CHRIST AND REFORM.

When presented with a penny having the image and superscription of Caesar, and being asked if tribute money should be paid to this Roman potentate, Christ said that men must render unto Caesar the things that were Caesar's, and unto God the things that were God's.

Christ was not directly a reformer. Of course, his teachings taking effect upon the individual, indirectly worked reforms in government. But Christ came primarily to save the world in reaching each individual. He had a message of salvation that would reconstruct life in every one, and after a while would permeate the whole body of men. There is nothing that Jesus ever said or did that would make men believe he desired to lay violent hands upon the government of nations and control them. He refused the crown of a kingdom of earth when men marched triumphantly with him into Jerusalem. Jesus did not lift his voice to commend or condemn the rulers of the various nations coming under his observation. His great mission was to atone for sins and relieve the world of sin's awful guilt.

These are different times than those in which Christ lived. Christianity has laid firm hold upon the civilized nations, and it largely dominates the moral policy of these governments. This of course is as it should be. But still there is the danger of men mistaking the true mission of Christ. The one great object of saving from sin the individual man must be ever kept in view.

Those who desire reforms are trying in many instances to gain them through the promulgation of laws that will drive out certain evils. The statute books of the nation and the various states are being crowded with laws against evils that are working harm to humanity. But Christians may ever remember that to make a law is not always to work the proper reform. The law may be violated. In the case of prohibition, Christian people are wisely endeavoring to get Congress to pass a constitutional act prohibiting the liquor traffic; but let us not forget that the mere making of a law will not convert a nation and will not save it from drink. The mission of Christ is still to the individual. He expects every Christian to labor for the bringing in of sheaves into the kingdom. The passing of prohibitory laws is just the beginning of rescuing the unfortunate sinner.

C. A. B.

PENIEL.

A rift in the busy affairs of life reveals to a struggling heart the great necessity of help from a higher power. There are many longings and passions that sweep over the soul stirred by various presentations of attainment, as in music, eloquence, beauty, and art. There is scarcely any man who does not feel at times that he would like to be able to do other things than has been his lot that he thinks contains a large degree of value. Who is not moved by the achievements in the business world when men are able to handle much property? But perhaps it is not the utilitarian side of life that stirs the souls of others. Under the influence of grand music some feel ambitions awakened that have long been dormant.

We are placed in this world with hard tasks to accomplish, but with great sources of strength to help. It is possible that we mourn too much over the sufferings and hardships of life. There is a world of inspiration on every side that properly used will assist in the fulfilling of any obligation.

"Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day." And when the man-angel found it impossible to free himself from the grasp of Jacob he touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh with lameness. Still the struggle prevailed throughout the hours. And at last when the Hebrew said: "I will not let thee go except thou bless me," the angel blessed him there.

Where is our Peniel? The great need of this wrestle with God often is most evident to the soul of a godly man. The sense of sin, of unworthiness, sweeps into life and tends toward driving us to the mercy seat. But do we reach Peniel? Is it not often the case that on the very way to the private chamber of prayer other things press upon the heart and the matter of spiritual refreshment goes by? We call this a busy age. The tendency toward commercialism, toward industrial thrift, toward a fast and nervous life, is pressed upon every one. But to the Christian there is one thing that must not be forgotten, and that is the vital relationship with God. Many recognize this inner struggle toward God as the greatest source of inspiration; but, alas, some manifest a great poverty of spiritual life in neglecting to find Peniel.

We are pleased to state that the Editor of the Advocate is very much improved physically, and that the indications now point to his complete recovery within a few days. He has had no fever since Sunday, and is able to be up in his room. It is now thought that likely he will be at his desk in the Advocate Office by the time this issue of the paper is in the hands of our readers; but necessarily he will need to guard against overtaxing his strength for awhile, and he asks his correspondents to continue to be patient with him for a season.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We take pleasure in announcing that the Methodist Ministers' Wives' Club of New Orleans will meet with Mrs. R. H. Harper, 734 Nashville Avenue, in this city, on Friday afternoon on April 17, at 2:30 p. m.

Rev. W. A. Terry, our pastor at Madison, Miss., has had to remain indoors for several weeks on account of a severe attack of rheumatism. We sympathize with Brother Terry in his affliction, and we are glad to know he is much improved.

The Advocate has received a fine list of new subscribers and renewals, consisting of twenty names, from Rev. J. G. Johnson, of Black Hawk, Miss. It cannot but appreciate very highly the diligence of Brother Johnson exercised in behalf of the Advocate. He has our sincere thanks and best wishes.

Rev. C. C. Wier is conducting "Passion Week Services" at Morgan City and Berwick, La. He has sent out a neatly printed card to his people announcing the hour and place of each service. Brother Wier is one of the progressive pastors of the Louisiana Conference, and he succeeds wherever he goes.

The infant son of Rev. W. B. Waldrop, the pastor of Galloway Memorial Methodist Church at Jackson, Miss., has been quite ill for about ten days, and at this writing is very little improved. Brother and Sister Waldrop has our heartfelt sympathy in this trial, and we pray for the speedy recovery of their little son.

Our work on the Pickens Circuit is progressing under the leadership of Rev. J. D. Simpson. We are in receipt of an optimistic note from one of Brother Simpson's members, Mr. E. W. Burton, which we appreciate, and in which he tells of the fine prayer-meeting congregations at Pickens. We wish this charge and its preacher much success in Christian work.

Rev. A. H. Steel, of Oloh, Miss., has recently sent the Advocate a list of 7 subscribers. He has the thanks of the Advocate for his interest in its behalf.

A nice list of 7 subscriptions received from Rev. T. J. O'Neil, at Montrose, Miss., made us glad recently. We take this means of acknowledging them and also of thanking Brother O'Neil for his kindness in thus remembering us.

Rev. L. P. Wasson, of Shaw, Miss., sends the Advocate two new subscribers, and expresses his commendation of our editorial policy in the Vanderbilt matter. Brother Wasson reports that his missionary and Conference assessments for 1914 are all provided for.

We are in receipt of a postal card saying that Rev. N. E. Joyner, of Monterey, Mexico, will attend the coming session of the General Board of Missions in Nashville, Tenn., April 22. Many of Brother Joyner's friends will be pleased to see him in the United States.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, of Oxford, Miss., in a personal letter, commends the Editor in his recent strictures on the Vanderbilt case, and he also expresses his sympathy in the present illness of the Editor. Brother Lewis has the thanks of the Advocate for his kind words.

Two more subscriptions are reported to the Advocate by Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of Booneville, Miss., making a total from him of twenty-two new subscriptions. Sister Bowlin has been ill for the past three weeks with an attack of la grippe. We are glad to report her convalescence.

Any of the brethren who desire the services of an evangelist during the time between April 21 and May 21 may address Rev. D. A. Morris, at Eros, La. Brother Morris is holding a meeting at Eros, which has opened with much promise, for his brother, Rev. C. M. Morris.

We gladly give space to the following official announcement: "The Board of Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will hold its Annual Meeting in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, on May 1-4, 1914." W. F. McMurry is the Corresponding Secretary of the above Board.

The First Methodist Church, of Houston, Miss., held a Sunday School Institute with a fine program on April 6, 7. We trust it was productive of much good. We are indebted to Rev. R. P. Neblett for the receipt of this program. Brother Neblett is wide awake and is doing a fine work at the First Church, Houston.

In a personal letter to the Editor, written on April 3, upon hearing of his serious illness, Bishop W. B. Murrah expresses his sincere regret. He adds that his engagements make it necessary for him to leave home for several days. How precious are true friends, and how we appreciate their love and sympathy!

Rev. J. H. Bell has sent the Advocate a list of seven subscribers, for which he has the thanks of the Advocate. Brother Bell is doing a fine work at and around Glen Allen, Miss. He is establishing new preaching places and building up Methodism in that part of the country. Such news is encouraging and hopeful.

Rev. T. J. Durrett, of the North Carrollton (Miss.) Charge, is at Hot Springs, Ark., for his health. We sympathize with Brother Durrett in his trial, and we can appreciate his feelings in having to be absent from his work. We earnestly hope he will soon be able to resume his pastoral duties again.

A Ruston (La.) dispatch to the New Orleans Item, bearing date of April 6, reads as follows: "Bishop W. B. Murrah, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, preached at both services in Trinity Methodist Church here Sunday, and at 4 o'clock in the afternoon he dedicated the Edith Higginbotham Memorial Home at the Methodist Orphanage."

A note of optimism and progress is sounded by Rev. W. H. Saunders, at Fernwood, Miss. He says: "Bishop Murrah will dedicate our new church at Kokomo on the first Sunday in July. We had a fine quarterly conference at Kokomo, one of the best it has been my pleasure to take part in. Brother Selby, our presiding elder, makes things go, and looks after all the interests of the Church."

We acknowledge with thanks the invitation of the Galloway Memorial Sunday School class of the First Methodist Church, Houston, Miss., to attend its reception on the evening of April 6, given in honor of Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick and Rev. V. C. Curtiss. Such a reception must be very encouraging to our Mississippi Sunday school workers. We are sorry not to have been able to attend.

Rev. J. G. Snelling has arranged a service for next Sunday afternoon, at 3:30 o'clock, for the placing of the stone tablet, which takes the place of the laying of a corner-stone, in the new Carrollton Avenue Church of New Orleans. Dr. J. M. Henry will read the ritual service, and the music for the occasion will be under the efficient direction of Mr. and Mrs. T. O. Adams. Brother Snelling has about completed the building of his fine new church.

The following telegram has just been received from Rev. Paul M. Brown of Shreveport, La.: "Please announce in the Advocate the death of Mrs. D. A. Simpson, of Greenwood, La., one of the oldest and most highly esteemed members of our church in Caddo Parish. She died Sunday at six o'clock. She was the mother-in-law of Rev. A. S. Lutz." Both the Editor and the Business Manager of the Advocate extend their sympathy to Brother and Sister Lutz in this bereavement.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, our energetic pastor at Carrollton Avenue, New Orleans, has hit upon the unique plan of holding "heart-to-heart talks" during this week with the various classes that compose his church. One evening is devoted to the men, another to the women, another to the young people, another to the children, and still another to the Bible classes and Sunday school teachers. We are in receipt of his well-prepared folder, and we wish him much success in his church work.

We are pleased to make announcement of the program of the Whitworth College Commencement, as follows: Commencement sermon, May 17, 11 a.m., by Dr. B. F. Jones of Moss Point, Miss.; sermon before the Y. M. C. A., May 17, by Rev. T. B. Clifford of McComb City, Miss.; grand concert, Monday, May 18, 8 p.m.; graduating exercises, Tuesday, May 19, 10 a.m.; literary address by Dr. W. H. LaPrade of Hazlehurst, Miss.; delivery of diplomas by Hon. T. B. Lampton, President of the Board of Trustees.

Our hearty thanks are due Rev. T. C. Wier, at Starkville, Miss., who in a personal letter received a few days since sent us 10 renewal subscriptions to the Advocate and an interesting account of a meeting conducted by Rev. J. B. Andrews, which has just closed. The pastors of the Baptist and Presbyterian Churches united cordially with our pastor, Brother T. H. Lipscomb, the meeting being held in the Methodist Church. There were a number of penitents, of whom many were converted, and the members of the several churches were spiritually revived.

Dr. Beverly Carradine, one of the strong preachers of Methodism, and who held prominent pulpits in New Orleans in the years past, will be in the city soon. His program is as follows: Lecture at Felicity Church, Friday, April 17, at 8 p.m., on "Strange Characters;" sermon at Felicity Church, April 19, at 11 a.m.; sermon at Rayne Memorial Church, April 19, at the Vesper Hour; and a lecture at First Methodist Church Monday evening, April 20, 8 p.m., on "Some Old Acquaintances." No admission will be charged for the lectures and free-will offerings will be taken for the benefit of the churches.

Brother J. F. Foster, our live pastor at Amite, La., called at the office on Monday of this week and reports good progress in several ways. His Bible Study Class had an attendance of 66 last Wednesday night. A Protestant Ministers' Association has been organized at Amite, which meets regularly on Mondays. It includes besides the pastors of the town, the preachers who live and preach in the country near by. A Boys' Scout Troop is another good thing Brother Foster has helped to introduce into Amite. The boys hold their meetings in the Methodist Church, and each one is required to attend his own Sunday school, or in the event he is a Catholic, attend catechism at least twice a month.

In a personal note from Rev. Paul D. Hardin, the progressive presiding elder of the Jackson (Miss.) District, he states that the $1600 indebtedness on the district parsonage has been paid through the generosity of the laymen at Jackson and through the co-operation of the pastors and people of the whole district. We appreciate the kind words of Brother Hardin in his indorsement of our utterances on the Vanderbilt matter.

We rejoice with Rev. B. E. Meigs, our pastor at Rankin Street, Jackson, Miss., in the success of his revival services just closed. The news of old-time conversions is always cheering. We are glad to know that his new parsonage will soon be completed, which his good people are preparing for him and his family.

Rev. Chas. W. Crisler, at Hattiesburg, Miss., writes us that: "Rev. John B. Andrews, assisted by Prof. J. E. Thomas, director of music, and Mrs. Thomas, pianist, is in the midst of a great meeting at Main Street Church. The three Methodist Churches have joined forces in this evangelist campaign. The service last Friday night reached high tide. After a great sermon many came forward for prayer. Twenty-one professed conversion. We are without doubt entering on the greatest revival our city has ever experienced." We rejoice with Brother Crisler over the prospect of a revival at Hattiesburg and thank him kindly for his assurance of sympathy and remembrance of us in prayer in this our time of need.

Rev. Briscoe Carter, presiding elder of the Ruston District writes us that things churchly have started very hopefully in his district, and announces that Bishop Candler has appointed Rev. S. S. Bogan to the Winnfield charge, and Rev. S. H. Frazier to Bernice, La. For both of these good brethren we wish the best of success in their new fields of labor.

In sending us a remittance on his subscription to the Advocate, Brother Robert O. Randle, one of our zealous laymen at Monroe, La., writes: "Our work here in Monroe is progressing very nicely under the pastorate of Brother Miller. We have just closed a very beneficial meeting under the leadership of Rev. T. B. Price, and our church is being revived, and prospects for a good year's work are opening up." This is good news whereof we are glad.

It is with sincere regret that we learn of the death of Mrs. Walter J. Bolton, at Booneville, Miss. Brother Bolton is the efficient secretary and treasurer of the board of stewards of our church at Booneville, of which Sister Bolton was a devout member. She was only ill for several days and the end came unexpectedly. May the God of all comfort sustain the stricken husband in his hour of need, and bless him and the three children now motherless.

From Brother C. B. Ames, an able member of the firm of Ames, Chambers, Lowe and Richardson, attorneys and counselors-at-law in Oklahoma City, Okla., comes the following announcement to which we gladly give space: "The Committee on Assignments met last night and assigned the North Mississippi delegation to the Lee-Huckins Hotel. This is the largest hotel in the city and will probably be regarded as headquarters." We thank Brother Ames kindly for sending us the above information.

Rev. A. W. Turner, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of this State, called at our office in passing through the city last Tuesday. Brother Turner seemed to be much encouraged, and reports good interest at each place where he held the following meetings: Roseland, Saturday night; Kentwood, Sunday morning; Amite, Sunday night, where the High School Hall was secured to accommodate the crowds; and Tangipahoa, Monday night. On Field Day at Shreveport, on the Fifth Sunday in March addresses were made in eight of the churches of that city, by such prominent speakers as Dr. Gambrell of Texas, Dr. Eichelberger, Superintendent of the Mississippi League, Dr. J. A. Wright of Columbus, Ohio, and Rev. A. W. Turner, Superintendent of Louisiana. The meetings were well attended and the results very satisfactory. As the date for the meeting of the Louisiana Legislature draws near interest in this great work is increasing throughout the State. The workers and friends of temperance expect to secure some needed legislation; and Brother Turner requests that pastors and other friends of the cause confer with their legislators with regard to supporting temperance measures.

THE NEED OF A METHODIST HOSPITAL.

The need for our Methodist Hospital in Memphis grows daily more apparent and urgent. Last week I brought a dear old Methodist preacher from one of the hospitals in our city to my own home. Two other Methodist preachers were in the institution at the same time.

Two days ago another Methodist preacher, fresh from evangelistic work in Arkansas, died at one of the Memphis hospitals after a very brief illness.

Rev. R. A. Clark, pastor of our First Church in Jackson, Tenn., has just undergone a serious operation in the same hospital.

Sister Sherard, wife of the president of our Hospital Board, is in another hospital at this time, having undergone a painful operation which will keep her in bed two or three weeks.

The hospitals of Memphis are full of our people, probably seventy-five or one hundred now, and Methodism is making no return of like service to others, nor can she till her own hospital is built and operating.

Can our Methodist people be indifferent to this situation? A contribution or subscription for the hospital of their own church will be the best answer.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR
FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

On March 17, 1914, the spirit of Mrs. ROWENA MAY passed from the tolls and sufferings of earth into the joys of the life beyond, in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lillian Doyle, at Hamburg, Miss., who had cared for her with a tenderness that could not be surpassed since last November. In her last conversation to the writer, she said, "My children are all so good to me, and the neighbors are so thoughtful." All that human hands could do was done, but God knows best. Sister May joined the M. E. Church, South, when a young girl and lived a consecrated life. Her home was always the preachers' home, and her company was an inspiration. She was born on Feb. 4, 1843, and was married to Mr. May on Nov. 7, 1867. Their home was blessed with nine children—six girls and three boys—all living except one girl, who preceded her mother to the better world. She leaves a husband, eight children, thirty grandchildren and many relatives and friends. Our heart goes out in sympathy to the bereaved ones; but let us not grieve, remembering that "Earth hath no sorrow that heaven cannot heal."

J. F. CAMPBELL, Pastor.

Mrs. MARY F. OWEN was born Sept. 28, 1846; died Feb. 23, 1914. When she was but a child her parents moved to Texas where she grew to womanhood and was happily married to Richard Owen at Clarksville, Oct. 10, 1865. Five children were born to this union, three of whom survive her. At her husband's death, she returned to Mississippi and spent the remainder of her life near Buena Vista. When quite young she united with the Methodist Church and consecrated her life to the Master's service. As its summer and autumn moved on each bore the blossom and fruits of its season. Too much cannot be said of the beautiful Christian character of this good woman, of her meek, Christ-like spirit hidden behind the cross, yet shedding its influence and radiance so abundantly in the home-circle and upon all around her. Hers was a life of self sacrificing devotion. She found joy in serving, never counting the cost of love. She will be much missed by the community, the church, and her family, but friends, be comforted for she, like Paul, was ready to be offered up. Her passing away was peaceful as that of one who "wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams." Some day, if you emulate her example, you will see her again in the love-land of God's dear long eternity. Mrs. E. H. ROOK.

MARY ADA PATTON was born February 21, 1869, and died March 3, 1914. She united herself with the M. E. Church, South, at Pleasant Valley, Miss., at an early age, and lived a consistent Christian life until God in his unbounded wisdom saw best to call her from her earthly home to join her loved ones in her heavenly home; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we realize her loss to the Church and community—a vacancy that can never be filled. Her Christian life is so impressed upon the minds of those who knew her, though she be dead, her influence still lives. To her Church she was ever a faithful member and always ready to give of her substance for its needs.

2. That our sympathy be extended to the broken-hearted brothers, sisters and relatives that are left to mourn her loss. We know your bereavement is hard to bear, but you have the consolation of knowing that she is one more link in the golden chain that draws you nearer the eternal home where all will be reunited.

3. That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the M. E. Church, South, at Pleasant Valley, a copy be sent to the family and one to the Gun-town Hot Times and the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed by: Mrs. J. F. Milam, Mrs. B. C. McCarley, Miss Ica Watson, Committee.

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. J. R. MOORE departed this life on March 5, 1914. She had lived to brighten this world for 67 years. Her Christian life was beautiful from its beginning to its close; and though her sorrows and troubles were many, her faith in God never wavered. She was twice married, first to Dr. Thompson of Ohio, and later to Dr. J. R. Moore of Meadville, Miss. One child blessed the first union, and of the second marriage three girls were reared to womanhood and three boys to manhood. The son of the first marriage and the six children of the second, all live to honor the life of their devoted mother. Her regular attendance and sympathetic attention at the church services were an inspiration to her pastor. Our church has lost a consistent member and our town a Christian life, but may we remember that "Jesus doeth all things well," and that we are separated only for a short time from one who was loved by all who knew her. We pray God's blessings on the sorrowing children. May the grace of Jesus be sufficient in this time of grief.

J. W. THOMPSON, P. C.

ANDREW JACKSON SULLIVAN was born in Jefferson County, Miss., July 15, 1833; and died at his home in Bude, Miss., March 14, 1914. Brother Sullivan was converted and joined the Baptist Church at the age of 22 years. Later, a Methodist Church was organized in his community, with which he united, and in which he served as steward before becoming a member, continuing to hold that office till his death—in all about 40 years. His life was exemplary and fruitful. He was faithful to every trust; and was never satisfied until his pastor was paid in full. He was married to Miss Lydia McKnight, in October, 1858. Two infants preceded him to the better land. His wife and nine children—one of whom is our beloved brother, Rev. W. M. Sullivan, now pastor at Shubuta, Miss.—are left to mourn their loss. During the last two weeks of his life he attended a revival conducted by Rev. D. E. Kelly, scarcely missing a service; and, being full of the Holy Ghost and faith, he was an inspiration to the preacher and a help to the congregation. His last days were doubtless his most fruitful ones. May God bless the bereaved family.

J. W. THOMPSON.

The subject of this sketch, NATHAN AUGUSTUS BALLARD was born on May 19, 1844; and died Feb. 12, 1914. He was married to Miss Mary L. Car-nth, which union was blessed with 8 children. His wife preceded him to the home beyond about three years ago. He joined the M. E. Church, South, while young and continued his membership with the same till death. The writer had the privilege of knowing him several years. He was a lover of Sunday school work, which seemed to be a great factor with him all through his life. He seemed to take a delight in the Children's Day services. Many were the trials of his life, but amid them all he trusted in Him who is able to deliver us when we are tried. His last days were days of suffering, but God sustained him and He, alone, knows how much he suffered. May the sorrowing ones look to him, who is able to comfort them and strive to meet their loved ones in that land where there is no sorrow and sadness, but all is peace forevermore, and where "We shall meet to part no more."

Tidings From the Field

Hollandale, Miss.

Dear Editor: On Sunday, March 29, the people of Hollandale, Miss., were very fortunate in having Rev. H. S. Spragins to preach for them. His sermon was an intellectual treat and was listened to with marked attention. His subject was "Lay up treasures in heaven." This discourse was pronounced by many the finest ever heard here. The Greenville District Conference convened at 3 o'clock p. m., Brother Spragins presiding. Reports on the general departments of the Church here and at Leland were very satisfactory. At Leland, our able pastor, Rev. L. W. Cain, has worked wonders having about doubled the membership in about 15 months. The Hollandale Church is growing, but not as fast in some ways as it should. On the third Sunday in April we will begin our revival and are hoping and praying for good and lasting results. In our Conference we had the pleasure of having with us Brother W. L. Hoy, and Brother J. T. Mathis both stewards of the Leland Church. Come to see us sometime, Brother Meek.—"Steward."

Oakdale, La.

Oakdale is among the new appointments of our Conference. But already it is an important charge. We have two preaching places—Oakdale and Elizabeth. We have about one hundred members, who are loyal and true. Our new Church at Oakdale will be completed by May 1, and will be a beauty. We hope to have one of our Bishops to dedicate it, as we feel that a visit from one of our Bishops would greatly encourage our people here. Our official board are a fine lot of men who know how to do things. The pastor and the presiding elder are both paid on the monthly plan. We have received about thirty members, but have held no revival to date. We hope to be able to hold our revival in May. We have organized a Church at Oberlin, the parish seat of Allen Parish; and hope to soon begin a movement toward the building of a new church in that town. This field affords a great opportunity for work and promises great returns in the salvation of souls. We hope to be able to report a field for two pastors at our next Conference.—B. H. Sheppard.

Louin, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: With great pleasure I am writing this letter for insertion in your next issue of the Advocate, should you deem it possible. I wish to extend my heartiest thanks and sincerest wishes both physically and spiritually for the welfare and success of the kind and enthusiastic little band of Methodists who reside in Louin, for their cordial hospitality and charitable acts of kindness to their pastor and his loved ones on their arrival in their new home among them. In a splendid manner did these worthy people minister to our necessities, gladdening our hearts very much. They had prepared an excellent dinner that awaited us when we dismounted from the train. But being tired, and having the little children with us, we decided rather to dine in our own home, to which the good people acceded, knowing that children demand attention. The ladies brought the finest of food-stuffs and delicacies; and at the same time, the brethren sent teams and hauled our household goods several miles over the rough roads. Then, Brother Meek, such a severe pounding as we received! The writer has not gotten over the effects of it yet. The pound-supper was heartily received, to which the grocer, the milkman and even the confectioner contributed. We were all happy, I can assure you. After reading from Rev. 2:21, I spoke on the future home of the saints in glory, concluding with prayer. Praise the Lord for moving these good people to help his servant! May his richest blessings crown their efforts in work for him. Pray for us, Brother Meek, that we may have a revival in our own hearts, and glorious results in the work of the year.—N. S. Loftus.

Baker, La.

It was my good pleasure to attend the meeting of our Annual Conference at Crowley. I enjoyed meeting my ministerial brethren and also quite a number of the laymen. Bishop Candler preached a great sermon on that Sunday. I was returned to the Baker charge, and was met with a cordial welcome. This makes our fourth year among this people, and there are none better in the Louisiana Conference. We have learned to love them and know it will be sad to say goodbye to them at the close of this year. We held our first quarterly conference on February 7 and 8. Our beloved and efficient presiding elder, Brother H. W. Bowman, came and preached three very strong gospel sermons to the delight and profit of all present. He presided over the conference with grace and ability and made a fine impression. The stewards raised the pastor's salary from $761 to $800 with the presiding elder's salary added. Our congregations have been larger, on the whole, this year than they have been since I came to the charge. Rev. J. M. Hamill of the Memphis Conference, came down on a visit and prospecting tour, and while in this community, preached three good sermons for the people of Baker. Well, I was surprised at the unreasonable and unjust decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee in the Vanderbilt case. The decision rendered was out of harmony with reason as well as the law in the case. It does not take a lawyer nor a judge to understand the fundamental principles of justice. It is a burning shame that a few men can find loopholes and mere technicalities by which to render a decision that will thwart every principle of equity and justice. Human courts are not always right in their decisions by any means. I think that the matter, should be, if necessary, carried to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Church cannot afford to surrender her rights in the matter until she has exhausted every means within her reach.—S. D. Howard.

A HINDRANCE TO PRAYER.

An unforgiving spirit is one of the commonest hindrances to prayer. Prayer is answered on the basis that our sins are forgiven; but God cannot deal with us on the basis of forgiveness when we are harboring ill will against those who have wronged us. Any one who is nursing a grudge against another has fast closed the ear of God against his own petition.

How many there are crying to God for the conversion of husband, children, friends, and wondering why it is that their prayer is not answered, when the whole secret is some grudge they have in their heart against some one who has injured them, or who they fancy has injured them.—R. A. Torrey.

—ONLY FIRST-CLASS WORK—CHARGES REASONABLE.

LOGANSPORT, LA.

Our work is moving on as well as could be expected under existing conditions, but there is room for great improvement. We have had many hindrances in the work since Conference. Among these—sickness, which, in some cases has proved fatal. One of our best and truest men of the Longstreet Church, Brother A. H. Thompson, was taken from us in January. He was ill about two weeks. Then in the month of February death entered the home of Brother A. M. Garret, of Logansport, and took from that home the head of the family. Brother Garret was himself not a member of the Church, but was one of the best and truest men I ever knew. It was hard to give these good men up, but we humbly bow in submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, and pray His blessing upon the bereaved ones.

Notwithstanding many hindrances our work in some respects has gone forward. The Sunday school at Logansport has on a membership contest which is proving a great success under the wise administration of our energetic Superintendent, Brother C. Price. Our Church at Logansport has ordered a new organ, and we are planning to order new pews in the near future. We also expect to build a parsonage during the year, and at the fourth quarterly conference we plan to ask the presiding elder to send a resident pastor to give full time at Logansport next year. But what most concerns us is a general revival of religion. We expect to hold our meeting at Logansport in June, and at the other points later in the summer. We are having congregational singing at Logansport, and I have ordered fifty copies of the "Little Hymnal" for that Church, and find there are some people who can sing the old time hymns.

Will not the entire Conference pray that we may have a great revival of religion in the Logansport Charge this year? Especially do I ask your prayers for myself. It is a tremendous task to carry a college course and serve as pastor at the same time.

Mr. Editor, I think you are correct about the Vanderbilt matter. The Church has suffered a grave injustice in the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee.

FRANCIS R. POWER.

HOWELL F. WEST.

The death of this sturdy layman occurred at his home in Natchez, Miss., on the morning of February 14, 1914. This announcement is, to those who knew him, sufficient to indicate that Mississippi Methodism, and our Jefferson Street Church at Natchez particularly, has sustained a great loss. He was born near Fayette, in Jefferson County, March 28, 1853, and was the son of Thomas West and Martha Foreman. His sterling ancestry had much to do with the early history of Mississippi. His great-grandfather, Cato West, was from 1803 to 1805 Acting Governor of the Mississippi Territory. Judge Richard Reed of the present Supreme Court is his cousin. He was for many years a druggist and was located at Fayette until the year 1886, and later at Natchez, and the last years of his life were spent as a traveling salesman for a firm in New Orleans.

He assumed obligations early in life, and was always faithful to every trust. Brother West was a life-long and an ideal Methodist, typically loyal to his Church and his pastor. More than that, he was a devout man of prayer, and the family altar occupied an honored place in his home. During his life he held all the places of trust a congregation places in a layman's hands, his death making a sad vacancy on the official Board of his Church. His wife was Miss Emmie Whitney, of Fayette, who, with her surviving children, is now in the shadow of this sorrow. Their children are Howell, Whitney, Martha and Thomas. Besides these, two little girls, Alma and Marie, had gone on to the better world. His sister, Miss Emma, and his brother, Dr. T. C. West, mourn him who was to them both brother and father. Looking backward to his true life terrestrial, or forward to the union celestial, dear friends, more than ordinary comfort is yours.

WHEN NOTHING TASTES GOOD TO YOU

You eat simply because you must. You are troubled with dyspepsia. It makes your life miserable. You have a bad taste in your mouth, a tenderness at the pit of your stomach, a feeling of puffy fullness, headache, heartburn, and sometimes nausea.

Ask your druggist for Hood's Sarsaparilla. It acts on the stomach through the blood and also directly. Its beneficial effects are felt at once. It makes the rich red blood that is needed for perfect digestion.

HEAVY MEAT EATERS

HAVE SLOW KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble—Take a glass of Salts.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

THE SMALL AUDIENCE.

The small audience is neither insignificant nor negligible. The man who despises such an audience is himself small. Henry Ward Beecher said that he could preach as well to six people as to six hundred. He could say that with truth, because he was a large man. A numerically small church is a microcosm, containing representative strains and streaks of all phases of humanity. It may be a harp of a few strings, but a David can play divinely upon it. Then, too, in any little church or community there may be in training to-day some lad who to-morrow will be a Luther, a Wesley, a Moody, or a Grenfell.—Zino's Herald.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

COULD NOT WRITE.

Versailles, Ky.—Mrs. Elisha Green, of this place, says, "I could not write all the different pains I had when I first tried Cardui. I could scarcely walk. Now I am able to run the sewing machine and do my work; and my neighbors tell me the medicine must be good, for I look so much better." Cardui is a specific, pain-relieving, tonic remedy, for women. In the past 50 years it has been found to relieve women's unnecessary pains, and female misery, for which over a million suffering women have successfully used it. Try Cardui for your troubles. It will help you. At the nearest drug store.—Adv.

FRECKLES

Now is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from any druggist and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than an ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful, clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

CHRIST IS RISEN.

O! I hear the children crying,
Crying near and far away.
O! I hear the children crying
On this blessed Easter day.

Lord Jesus loved the children;
"Let them come to me," he said.
To-day with joy we celebrate
His resurrection from the dead.

See the children go in thousands
To the whirling factory mills;
Sometimes broken by the wheels,
Starving when the wheels are still.

God of our righteous fathers,
How wide this wail of woe!
And must man live in luxury
While the child is slaughtered so?

Great Easter day has come again,
(How loud the children cry!)
Lord Jesus, make men hear the pain
That rings out plaintively.

O! I hear the children crying,
Crying near, and far away,
But the Spirit of the Lord has come
To plead their cause to-day.

SOCIAL JUSTICE.

One point of social justice that is beginning to be regarded as a human right is that those who labor for daily bread shall have reasonable working hours, in order that they shall not be so overworked in the shop and factory that they shall be unfitted for all the other demands of life.

President Wilson and the national law-making bodies have done themselves credit and the world a real service by passing and signing a bill for an eight-hour working law for women in the District of Columbia. This seat of the capital of the nation may reasonably be expected to lead all the States in measures to promote public health and welfare. However, up to this time thirty-seven States have been far in advance of it in protecting women from excessive hours of labor. Four States, viz., Arizona, California, Colorado and Washington, have before this provided for an eight-hour day for working women.

Congressman Peters, in his speech before the House last March, took such a high stand, that we quote him here. He said: "during nearly twenty years men employed by the Government as laborers or as mechanics have had the eight-hour day, and in this very Congress a law has been enacted extending this limitation of hours for men to laborers and mechanics employed by contractors doing work for the Federal Government. This is largely a physiological question. Since we consider it wise to protect by an eight-hour day, so far as we can, the men working directly and indirectly for the Government, how much more necessary it is that we make every effort to give similar protection to as large a proportion as possible of the future motherhood of the citizenship of this country."

We rejoice that our Nation has come to realize that the conditions of labor that affect women—wives and mothers—is of concern to the whole Nation, and in protecting their health and welfare they are but rendering social justice to a part of the great whole and building a safer foundation for the future.

FACTS ABOUT THE SOUTHERN MISSIONARY NEWS BUREAU THAT WILL INTEREST YOU.

The Southern Missionary News Bureau began operations on Sept. 15, 1913. At the expiration of three months, on Jan. 15, 1914, 450 newspapers had accepted and were using all or a part of the missionary news letters each week. The actual circulation of these papers is approximately 1,750,000. Therefore, approximately 7,000,000 readers were being reached with missionary news through the secular press each week.

Within three months, through the efforts of the Southern Missionary News Bureau, news items relating to mission work had been printed 18,750,000 times.

Allowing the advertisers' estimate of four readers for each paper printed, the conclusion follows that mission news has been read within three months 75,000,000 times.

If you do not see missionary news in your local papers, ask the editors why.—Southern Missionary News Bureau, Nashville, Tenn.

NOTICE, YOUNG PEOPLE.

The special for the young people for 1914 is the Laredo Seminary, at Laredo, Tex. The amount to be raised, $10,000. Auxiliaries would do well to take the support of one teacher per month—that is, make a special of a teacher whose name will be given you along with the needed amount by Mrs. F. F. Stephens, the Council Second Vice President. The auxiliary can select the teacher and fix the sum for one, two, or three months' salary as the object for which you are to work. The beauty of this plan lies in the assurance that the missionary teachers will be upheld by the special prayers of the young people during the period through which they are carried by the different auxiliaries. Repairs, furnishings, and incidental expenses, along with the current expenses, call for an appropriation of $10,000.

FROM THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY OF THE HOME DEPARTMENT OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The following letter has just been received by us. Illness in Mrs. Cunningham's family, we feel sure, is the cause of the delay.

Dear Sisters: $2025 was pledged to the Home Department in 1913, but the report for the year shows that only $1615.40 was collected. This leaves a balance of $409.60 unpaid. These figures show that some one did not bring their gift of love to the Giver—was it your auxiliary?

If you refuse to pledge anything to your Home Department this year, you are voting to recall every deaconess and close up St. Mark's Hall, French Mission, and all the work done in our Home Department. If you give the same as in 1913, you show that you are opposed to the work growing in your State, and in other fields. I believe you want to see the work advance, and that you will increase your Love Offering. Your district in 1913 pledged — and paid —. Your auxiliary paid in 1913 — on the Home Department pledge. Are you satisfied with your gift to the Master? Please pray and plan for larger gifts this year and write your district secretary and me just what you will pledge for 1914. We must have this information before March 15, 1914. Don't throw this letter aside, but act on it at your next meeting; and thus strengthen, instead of weakening the

SHOES TO THE CONSUMER AT WHOLESALE PRICES.

Since catalogue was issued, we have added a great many new styles to our line. It will be several months before a new catalogue will be ready to mail. We have found that with rubber soles on English last, are very popular. We can furnish the Russia Calf with rubber soles at $2.00 and $2.50 per pair, the kind that retail for $3.00 and $3.50. We have a complete line of Ladies' White Duck Oxfords, with rubber soles, at 90c., the kind that retail for $1.50,—at $1.10 and $1.50. The $1.50 is the regular $2.25 shoe.

It is about time now for the wearers of shoes to think about the spring and summer styles, or oxfords, and we would suggest to the readers of this paper that they forward their orders now while our stock is complete. We have all the new styles and if there is anything not mentioned in the catalogue we would suggest that our customers describe the shoe wanted, we have it.

PLANTING CORN FOR MISSIONS.

Planting corn for missions is something new, but if the 600,000 Southern Baptist men and boys in the rural districts of the south fall in line and comply with requests being made by one of the missionary leaders, and plant one ear each for missions, the proceeds of a single year should reach $1,800,000.

The plan is a big one, but it is simple, and those who are interested in it believe that, aside from its financial advantages to missions, it will be of inestimable value in educating the people as to the great mission enterprises of the denomination as well as deepening the spirituality of those who plant corn for missions.

"Literally planting the missionary spirit into row after row as he goes," said a missionary leader in speaking of the plan, "and at the same time planting mission seeds in the heart and brain. Do you think a man could plant the 800 grains of corn on an ear for missions without holding in his mind thoughts that will uplift him and feeling his heart throb with the love that grows out of a conscious service rendered to his fellow-man."

"And then," he continued, "the educative value—don't you know that missions is going to be thought about and talked about in that home by every member of the family from the time the grains are planted until the harvest is over and the money sent in?"

It is estimated that each ear planted on this plan should yield one bushel of corn, and that its value would average $3.

An interesting feature is the fact that the very best corn obtainable is to be given out to those who will plant it for missions. Every farmer who accepts an ear of corn on this basis will be placed on the regular mailing list to receive the valuable bulletins of the Department of Agriculture at Washington.

This plan is the carrying out of the scripture contained in I Corinthians xvi, 2. It asks only that men give as the Lord prospers them.—Southern Missionary News Bureau.

SAGE TEA PUTS LIFE AND COLOR IN HAIR

Don't Stay Gray! Sage Tea and Sulphur Darkens Hair so Naturally That Nobody Can Tell.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost overnight if you'll get a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old, famous Sage Tea Recipe are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray, becoming faded, dry, scraggly and thin have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful—all dandruff goes, scalp itching and falling hair stops.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

The Sunday School.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES BEWARE—THREE WARNINGS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

By R. A. Maddox.

Did you take that 5-cent assessment collection? If you did not, why not? What is the matter?

The Sunday schools on the Taylorville Charge are taking on new life. The Field Secretary recently spent a week with them. They have a great worker in their pastor. Brother O'Bryant has ten appointments in his circuit.

The Truth-Seekers' Bible Class at Forest has sent in $5, one-third of their pledge for the expense of keeping a Field Secretary in the field. This class is putting their church first, but we should not be surprised since Miss Carrie Pevey is their teacher.

On the Oloh Charge we find some of the best people in the Conference, and they love the Church. It is a small country charge, but they have paid the 5-cent assessment; and at Oloh they are organizing a Teacher-training Class, with Mrs. Allen Simmons as teacher.

Listen to what Frank L. Brown has to say: "A pastor, with educational ideals, with any sense of his responsibility, will not trust the molding of his flock to untrained hands without some effort to assist in the selection and training of teachers." Now, the only way I see out of it is to organize a teacher-training class.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Rev. A. R. Beasley, at Lexington, Miss., has three "very good" Sunday schools as he calls them, in his charge and when sickness and bad weather are all over he expects to have the others come up to this estimate.

Mr. Curtis' tour through the Sardis District was quite successful. The other secretary was really grieved at not being able to be present. Out-of-the-State engagements and a severe and constant toothache kept her in daily attendance upon the dentist.

Miss Daniels, Corinth's competent and appreciated Deaconess, while busy with the Co-operative Home for Working Girls, still finds time to teach a great and growing Teen-age class at Southside, Corinth. She has 45 enrolled, has good attendance and a social meeting every week at Friendship Home.

The First Methodist Church, Indianola, Miss., has gotten out a most attractive pass-book and pass-card. Mr. B. H. Trotter is president, and Mr. J. H. Purl, teacher of this fine and progressive Wesley Adult Bible Class; and the technique of this attractive advertising would do credit to the best Wesley Adult Bible Class in the country.

Rev. E. D. Simpson is a very happy pastor, as on March 29, he will move into his commodious new church at Mathiston, Miss. Many notables will be present, and there will be a good program. The Adult Bible Class will be re-organized at this time, the study circle is complete. Similar circles are being organized in the country charges. It is a delight to see a charge blossom like a rose as this one has.

Miss Willingham writes so interestingly of her Class Day at Maben, that everybody will enjoy hearing of the success of that day. Superintendent Wax had a reception committee meet the early train, the church was fragrant with beautiful flowers, the music excellent and the whole atmosphere seemed to breathe the resurrection. "Let us worship God," all the Adults recited together, and Mr. McCafferty gave his preaching hour over to the Sunday school service. Superintendent Wax anticipates soon reaching "the Standard of Excellence."

1. Beware of the Unprepared Lesson.

No teacher can keep the confidence of his class, to say nothing of impressing the class, who has fallen into the habit of an inadequately prepared lesson. There are four degrees of knowledge: (a) Recognizing what another calls to your mind; (b) recalling upon your own motion; (c) securing a mastery of the subject matter; (d) mastered by the truth, so that you become a voice.

2. Beware of the Unfamiliar Language. Two preparations of the lesson are necessary—the one for your own sake and the other in the terms of the pupil's thinking. Many a good lesson is lost because it sails above their heads and fails to relate itself to their lives.

3. Beware of the Failure to Win the Co-operation of the Pupil. There is no education except self-education. No teacher is worthy the name, no matter how much a master of the subject, how fine a disciplinarian or how pleasing a personality, who cannot interest her pupils in their study task. The teacher should seek to awaken in every scholar a purpose to possess God's Word for himself, which, in most cases, means the spiritual awakening of conversion.

Resolutions Adopted by Class No. 2. of the Methodist Sunday School at Webb, Miss.

Whereas Almighty God in His wise Providence has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved friend and teacher, Mrs. Lula Hurt; and,

Whereas: By her faithful leadership, unselfish interest and faithful exposition of the lessons she hath endeared herself to us be it, therefore, Resolved:

First—That we have lost a faithful teacher and devoted friend, that we bow in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things for the best, knowing that our loss is our eternal gain; and although we miss her presence, her influence shall ever be felt among us.

Second—That we, the members of her class, do emulate her example and strive to meet her in the bright beyond.

Third—That we hereby extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy in this hour of sorrow.

Fourth—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and that they be spread on the minutes of our Sunday school.

Signed: Carroll Commander, Marcus Sharp, Louie Turner, Inez Cowan, Thelma Crain, John Cossar, Jr., Joe Sullivan, Thelma DeLong, E. C. DeLong, Supt.; E. B. Sharp, P. C.

Invigorating to the Pale and Sickly

The Old Standard general strengthening tonic, GROVE'S TASTELESS CHILL TONIC, drives out Malaria, enriches the blood, and builds up the system. A true Tonic. For adults and children. 50c.

IF YOUR CHILD IS CROSS, FEVERISH, CONSTIPATED

Look Mother! If tongue is coated, cleanse little bowels with "California Syrup of Figs."

Mothers can rest easy after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless "fruit laxative." Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

In 48 hours your corns will be gone if you use this simple method.

Apply Blue-jay tonight. Tomorrow you will not even think of the corn. Day after tomorrow the corn will be loosened. Simply lift it out.

Some people keep corns year after year, merely paring them once in a while.

Some people use old-time treatments, and think corns can't be ended.

They wrong themselves. A famous chemist has solved the whole corn problem. And his invention—Blue-jay—now removes a million corns a month.

Go try it. Note how the pain stops instantly. Note how gently Blue-jay undermines the corn. Note how soon the whole corn comes out, without any pain or soreness.

Next Sunday you can be as free from corns as a barefoot boy. And, so long as you live, you will never again let corns bother you.

JOIN THE NEW ORLEANS Christian Advocate Piano Club

AND THE WHOLE WORLD OF MUSIC IS YOURS

If you secure your Player Piano through the Club you not only obtain the best instrument on the market at a big saving in price, but you also enjoy the special privilege of exchanging your old music rolls for new compositions at any time and at a nominal cost to cover postage and the mere expense of handling. This splendid SERVICE is FREE to every Club member and is one of the most attractive features of the Club, for it makes our big stock of music rolls available to you at all times. When you tire of one selection you simply exchange it for something new and in the course of time you have enjoyed all of the world's best music, from the old-time melodies and love songs to the master pieces of the world's greatest composers.

Think of the tremendous saving which this splendid service effects for each Club member in the course of a lifetime. It may even equal the price of the player-piano itself. Then do not make the serious mistake of purchasing your Player from a house which cannot give you a comprehensive and inexpensive service in the exchange of music rolls.

EXCHANGE YOUR OLD PIANO FOR A NEW PLAYER

If you have a piano which is not being used, or which is used by only one or two members of the family, why not exchange it for a new Player Piano which every member of the family can play and enjoy? The Ludden & Bates Player Piano is really two splendid instruments in one, a regular piano for the educated musician and a Self-player for those who enjoy, but have not learned the art of music.

The Club has made arrangements by which you can exchange your old piano for a new one, or a new Player Piano, on the most attractive terms. You will be delighted with the plan. Write the Management describing your old instrument and they will send catalogue and full information.

THE ONE GREAT THEME OF THE PULPIT.

Writing of President William McKinley, in the New York Christian Advocate of March 5, Dr. C. E. Manchester, who was his friend and pastor at Canton, Ohio, during the memorial presidential campaign of 1896 when he was the candidate of the Republican party for the chief magistracy of the Nation, says: "Having been his army comrade, and more or less acquainted with him since the war, I was naturally disappointed when, on my first Sunday after the Conference had sent me to first Church, Canton, I did not find him present at the service. Knowing his dislike of anything like fulsome eulogy, I sent him word, by a mutual friend, that he need have no fear so far as the new pastor was concerned. He acknowledged the receipt of my message, and remarked that he felt that 'Christ and Him Crucified' was the only suitable theme for the pulpit. He said on another occasion 'We look for preachers in the pulpit; we can hire business men, but God calls men to preach.'"

This brings out forcibly the truth that we have so often tried to emphasize in our columns that the Gospel should never be retired from the pulpit to open the way for the discussion of any other subject. It is the one theme that never wears out and it is always pertinent. None of the current topics are any thing like so vital; nor can they stir the hearts and grip the consciences of men like the Divine Word faithfully presented.

The Editor of the British Weekly, in a recent issue of that great journal, made the following utterance:

"Even the Church can become infected with a disquiet spirit. Preachers of the eternal Gospel will advertise attractive services, and deliver discourses which bristle with the topics of the hour. James MacDonell, the distinguished journalist, used to say about certain sermons that it was hard to have to listen to a leading article on Sunday after writing leading articles all the week. Multitudes of jaded souls betake themselves to Church in the hope that they may escape from every-day cares and controversies, and find refuge in the God of peace. When will ministers understand that sermons about 'the present crisis' carry no specific for the tempests and wounds of the heart? Some of us are old enough to remember a good many crises, and we can appreciate what Wordsworth wrote to his friend at a time of public excitement: 'After all, the affairs of the world will be carried on as heretofore—by the foolishness of man, and the wisdom of God.'"

SEEKING TO DISCREDIT BISHOP HOSS.

An effort is apparently being quietly made throughout the Church to discredit the leadership of Bishop E. E. Hoss because his contentions in the Vanderbilt controversy have been overruled by the Supreme Court of Tennessee. But there is no justification for such an attempt and there is little likelihood that it will succeed. Bishop Hoss's brave and able fight has been wholly unselfish and entirely in the interest of the Church. Personally, he had not a thing to gain by the contest and it was for others—for the denomination that he loved and whose servant he is—that he took up the gage of battle and bared his bosom to the storm of opposition that he knew would have to be encountered. And from the beginning to the end of this contest, he has had, with a single exception, the approval of his episcopal colleagues and the well-nigh universal endorsement of his fellow-Methodists of the South.

Nor is the outcome of the Vanderbilt controversy in any true sense a disparagement of the judgment of Bishop Hoss. On the contrary, it shows that he was not mistaken as to the spirit and attitude of Dr. Kirkland and his associates, but that he understood aright their purposes and intentions. The alarm that he sounded was fully justified by the conditions existing, and his efforts to protect the imperiled interests of the Church were certainly most urgently needed. Indeed, if the battle in her behalf had been made eight or ten years earlier, before the Board of Trust had been manipulated out of the hands of those who were loyal to her, it is not at all likely that she would have lost the University. Her great mistake was that of trusting too fully and too long men who were in reality hostile to her claims and who were unworthy of her confidence.

But was not Bishop Hoss wholly in error as to the rights and powers of the Church in the University? According to the decision of the Tennessee Supreme Court, yes; but according to the opinion of the Vanderbilt Commission, composed of five able lawyers, and headed by the brilliant Chief Justice of the State of Kentucky, according to the decision of Chancellor Allison of Nashville and the views of many of the ablest attorneys in Tennessee and the South, he was right as to every important point involved in the litigation. And that he is fully sustained by the history of the founding of the University and the equity and moral obligations arising therefrom, there is not the slightest doubt. This is perfectly obvious from the fact that there has been no man among those who have been arrayed in opposition to the Church who has had the temerity to undertake to debate this phase of the issue before the intelligent Christian public. When it has been raised, the best that they have been able to do has been to take refuge under the shelter of a cowardly silence. This much at least must be said for Bishop Hoss: When the principles for which he contended went down, every right of any consequence that the Church had in the University ceased to exist. As we have before stated, to him is chiefly due the credit that this outrageous result was not accomplished without a vigorous and determined fight upon the part of the Church to protect the sacred interests committed to her hands.

BISHOP E. E. HOSS

The extent to which Bishop Hoss has been made to suffer because of his fearless and manly struggle to safeguard the rights and property of the Church ought to doubly endear him to the hearts of Southern Methodists. From the very incipiency of the long contest his motives have been impeached and he has been severely arraigned and misrepresented. Both times that the case was argued in Court, he was assailed by the lawyers of the trustees with great bitterness and branded as an agitator and disturber; while on the day following the Saturday when the Tennessee Supreme Court rendered its decision, he was caricatured in the Nashville Tennessean in a most blasphemous and scurrilous manner; and a few days later he was arraigned in The Hustler, a Vanderbilt University publication, in an editorial which for coarseness and brutality, we have never seen surpassed. Out of this fiery storm of vituperation and abuse, our peerless leader has come with head unbowed, and spirit undaunted, and heart unembittered. There has been no nobler figure in the history of American Methodism, and his record and fame are secure. Defeat, when one has stood uncompromisingly for truth and right, does not with right-thinking people dwarf one's character or lessen the measure of one's manhood. Is Robert E. Lee any less a patriot and hero because the flag of the Confederacy went down to be unfurled no more on the field of Appomattox? Is there anywhere a hand so impious that it would seek to tear a single laurel from his brow because, with all his splendid bravery and generalship, he could not lead the Southern arms to victory?

As an illustration of the knightliness and magnanimity of Bishop E. E. Hoss, though it shines with the glittering flashes of the keen scimeter that only he can wield, we reproduce from the Nashville Banner his defense of the young Editor of the Vanderbilt Hustler who had so bitterly denounced him that his attack had reacted upon himself and involved him in trouble:

"I have not read the Hustler editorial concerning which the Banner speaks in its article of yesterday afternoon, but some friends have informed me of its contents. In my judgment, the effort to make a scapegoat of a thoughtless young man is a piece of very grave injustice. He really said no more than has long been current talk in the circle in which he has moved. If all the things alleged against me in the pleadings, briefs and speeches of the lawyers for the trustees are true, then the youthful editor was fully justified in his utterances and denunciations. Moreover, it is a little strange that his former allusion to 'Hoss bones' as having been found in the ashes of the campus bonfire, and his description of 'the new dance' invented by the students on the evening of their carousal through the streets of the city as 'The Bishop's Squirm,' were apparently passed by unnoticed as mere bits of delicious humor; and I cannot see why there should be such an ado over the more recent offense. It is my sincere hope that the matter will be dropped, and the young man allowed to complete his course without interruption. From my inmost heart I forgive him and wish him well. He simply did not know what he was doing. Let me advise him, however, that it is not a good beginning in life to assail opprobriously an old man who inherited a decent name and the traditions of gentlemanliness, and who during a public life of nearly fifty years has succeeded in maintaining a reputation for probity and uprightness. If the Banner will silence the mud batteries which it has allowed to play on me through its columns, it will be in a better position to give counsel to others."

OPEN TO ALL.

"It has been rightly said that 'the fortunate people—the truly fortunate—are not so much those who succeed in life as those who succeed in living.' Right living is a beautiful art, made up of courage and kindness and hard work and true religion; and it is open to everybody."

THE MESSAGE OF EASTER.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

We meet on this Easter morning to commemorate in service and song the supreme event in the faith and history of the Church. The lesson of this day—its message of life and hope—means much to the men and women who have passed the meridian of this earthly day, and whose gaze is bent toward the westering slope where the sun is setting. Beyond the gray and gold of this fast declining sun of life, is there another summer land of which this is a promise and an assurance? Philosophers have taught us of the life beyond, poets have sung of its realities and joys in sounding numbers, saints have believed in it with all the powers of an invincible faith; but Jesus the Christ, Lord of life and death, has declared it in tones as clear as the clarion notes of a silver bell.

Memory weaves her garlands of greatest hue, from out of the sadness and sorrows of the past, now chastened and pure as scented petals to which yet cling fragrance, though withered and dried. The dream and vision of fair fields through which in days long gone we wandered come back, all rich and abloom anew. Instinct, intuition, reason, revelation, lift up their voices to-day and bear indubitable testimony of a life beyond life. Over pathless stretches of field and forest, through the viewless reaches of air, the call of southern plashy fen and reedy brake is heard by the wild bird hatched on Hudson shores. The chill of October days sends these messengers of winter to the South. Surely, our imprisoned soul shall some day find a fairer summer land, and greet its own in meadows of asphodel. Psychology within recent years has awakened to the immense value of intuitive processes. Of one thing we are persuaded—it is far surer and more infallible than its twin brother, reason. Some mysteries of life are understood when we recognize them as intuitive facts and are willing to rest upon this truth. Life itself is intuitive—it defies analysis, yet we live. Love is intuition, and so with many things that cross the threshold of our conscious being, at which we stop and gaze like children at a strange guest. Yet the friendly smile reassures the child without reason or speech. "Simon Peter, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? * * * Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest I love thee." There was no need of further conviction. Both Master and disciple knew by intuition the secret of their souls, and this was final. Wordsworth in his Ode to Immortality is in accord with the teachings of modern mental science when he makes the intimations of the child an assured prophecy of deathless life.

Again on this Easter may not the magic wand in memory's hand touch our sometime dormant souls and we awaken to a renewed knowledge of childhood's days, untroubled by the thought of life's end. If the Master of all life's curriculum named children as vested heirs of the kingdom, may there not still be a yet deeper meaning in the prophecy which declared: "A little child shall lead them!"

"Be brave, and strong, and free,
O struggling soul of mine,
For midst the seething storm, now see
The essence real, divine;
Far, clear within the bar
Shines pure a splendid star,
With radiance bright,
Immortal light."

Since the days of Bacon, Locke, and other philosophers in the wide realm of inductive reason men have essayed to prove all things thereby. No man, even with a slight knowledge of the world's progress in many departments of human activity, would grudge these magnificent thinkers their due share of credit. The planets in their courses; suns so distant that thought is wearied by trying to bridge the abyss; laws and principles so wonderful as to fill us with awe—these and countless other inventions and discoveries bear witness of the fruits of earnest labor on the part of men who saw effects and found the causes. But the dictum of reason cannot be absolute in the wide realm of spiritual life. This captain general of the mind's powers can only marshal his troops and point the way. Men can weigh the earth, but cannot weigh the soul of a child. They can measure the distance to Arcturus, but cannot mark the viewless pathway of a departing soul. Sad, sad, indeed, is the history of those titanic thinkers who fondly imagined that reason could not lead them astray. I would rather, like Socrates, listen to the voice of the spirit within, than follow some modern thinkers to the cold heights of spiritual barrenness. Wonderful old Greek! He knelt at the shrine of his very soul and calmly told his enemies they must catch him before they could kill him. True philosophy after all is more intuitional than a process of reason. We fall back to the witness of the inner voice, when reason, like a wearied eagle, rests on a crag of its own lonely desolation. Instinct is universal, necessary, inclusive—belongs alike to bird and beast, to the turtle placing her eggs in the sand and the young seeking the water, to the fledgling bird and the nursing; but intuition bears testimony in the soul of man of God, of righteousness, of a life beyond—even immortality.

Supreme above all these witnesses, yet in perfect accord with their collateral evidence, is the Word of Him who stood at the gateway of death with its frowning arch above him and its dark portal wide open and said, "I am the life." This was and is the gladdest note in all human history. He who had been dead four days now lives in faith and memory in the heart and mind of the Church, through the far reaches of the centuries. For the life given to Lazarus was a promise and assured prophecy of the life perennial, immortal, eternal.

"O Love that wilt not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in Thee;
I give thee back the life I owe,
That in thine ocean's depths its flow
May richer, fuller be."

WESLEY IN SCOTLAND.

By Rev. Jas. W. Lee, D. D.

Some interesting glimpses of John Wesley in Scotland are given in the new volume of the Standard Edition of Wesley's Journal, just published under the editorship of Rev. Nehemiah Curnock.

In Edinburgh.

John Wesley, on Sunday, May 29, 1763, was in Edinburgh. He writes in his "Journal:"

"I preached at seven in the High School yard at Edinburgh. It being the time of the General Assembly, which drew together, not the ministers only, but abundance of the nobility and gentry, many of both sorts were present; but abundantly more at five in the afternoon. I spoke as plain as ever I did in my life, but I never knew any in Scotland offended at plain dealing. In this respect the North Britons are a pattern to all mankind."

At Inverness.

He was at Inverness and Nairn on Monday, June 11, 1764.

"After Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen, I think Inverness is the largest town I have seen in Scotland. The main streets are broad and straight; the houses mostly old, but not very bad nor very good. It stands in a pleasant and fruitful country, and has all the things needful for life and godliness. The people in general speak remarkably good English, and are of a friendly, courteous behaviour."

"About eleven we took horse. While we were dining at Nairn the inn-keeper said, 'Sir, the gentlemen of the town have read the little book you gave me on Saturday and would be glad if you would please to give them a sermon.' Upon my consenting the bell was immediately rung, and the congregation was quickly in the kirk. Oh, what a difference there is between South and North Britain! Everyone here at least loves to hear the Word of God, and none takes it into his head to speak one uncivil word to anyone endeavoring to save his soul."

Wesley's Influence on Scotland.

Mr. Curnock has this interesting note on Wesley's influence on Scotland:

"The reception Methodism met with in Ireland and Scotland is an interesting study. Across the Tweed it might seem to have comparatively failed. Scotland did not approve Arminian doctrine of the Methodist itinerancy. A wider outlook leads, however, to an opposite conclusion. In no part of the Empire was its success more remarkable, but it differed in character. It did for the Church in Scotland that which Wesley hoped for in the Church of England; it leavened the three measures of meal, on the testimony of impartial witnesses, 'until the whole was leavened.'

"It never attacked Presbyterianism, but, treating it with high courtesy, eventually kindled its coldness into fire. One of the earliest and most striking results was seen in America, where Scotch and Irish Presbyterians hailed Irish and English Methodists as spiritual kinsmen and created the 'camp-meeting.' In Scotland itself the movement became to a considerable extent a religious movement 'within' the Scottish Church."

SOME COMMENT ON THE VANDERBILT DECISION.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have just read the decision of the Vanderbilt case, and, in order to arrive at that decision, it seems to have been very necessary to make Mr. Vanderbilt instead of the Church the founder of the University; and next to dispose of the ownership of the Church in a very peculiar way.

To accomplish the first object the decision, in speaking of the Board of Trust appointed by the Memphis resolutions, says:

"It was authorized and enjoined on this Board of Trust, when so incorporated, to seek and, if possible, find a founder or builder, who would supply the necessary funds to accomplish its objects. In pursuance of this authority and injunction, the Board of Trust at first sought this founder, etc."

The Memphis resolutions are printed in full in the decision, but no such language can be found in them, nor any language remotely akin to that used above. The words, "seek," "find," "founder," "builder," do not occur in the Memphis resolutions at all. They are not therein printed; and the only language of the most attenuated kinship is found in the 6th resolution, which is as follows: "Board of Trust, with power to solicit and invest funds, etc." Bishop McTear wrote these resolutions and his hand never penned any such language. Why was it necessary TO SEEK AND, IF POSSIBLE, FIND A FOUNDER OR BUILDER? The answer is from another part of the decision:

"At common law, visitatorial power was a property right, belonging to the first donor and founder of a charity, and arose by implication from the gift, or it might be vested by him in his appointee."

Therefore, Mr. Vanderbilt, being the assumed founder or builder, made so by language read into the Memphis resolutions, there could be no visitatorial powers of the Bishops, and the 9th resolution is wiped out.

The decision again says: "Bishop McTear had not solicited this donation;" and, in speaking of the conditions imposed by Mr. Vanderbilt, the decision again says:

"The chief of which was that Bishop McTear, through whom the gift was communicated to the corporation, should he made president for life, etc."

So Bishop McTear just went North and stumbled up against Mr. Vanderbilt, and did not solicit the gift, which was simply communicated through him, and yet Mr. Vanderbilt made some of the most remarkable conditions in favor of the Bishop, clothing him with power which amounted almost to a veto in the Board of Trust. Why minimize the influence and weight of the great Bishop, lest it be feared that he might have solicited the donation as a representative of the Church? Is it possible to believe that Bishop McTyeire ever did anything else but wield his great personality to solicit for the University which he had founded for his Church?

But suppose we let Mr. Vanderbilt speak out his mind in the first sentence of his letter to Bishop McTyeire, as follows:

"I make the following offer through you to the corporation known as Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South." Then among other conditions; "First, that you are to accept the presidency of the Board of Trust, etc."

No living person, perhaps, knows what went on between these two men up there in New York in Mr. Vanderbilt's home, but it is fair to assume that Bishop McTyeire, who wrote the Memphis resolutions creating a Board of Trust with power to solicit and invest funds, did solicit this donation.

What about the ownership of the University by the Church? A little thing like that needn't bother anybody. With the same ease and complacency with which language may be read into the Memphis resolutions, language may be read out of these resolutions and also out of the first sentence of Mr. Vanderbilt's letter to Bishop McTyeire. The decision is quoted as follows:

"The second resolution, that the 'institution be called the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South,' does not necessarily mean ownership of the University by the Church. If it stood alone, it might imply as much; but in connection with the other resolutions it is intended merely to define the character of the institution and invite the affiliation and influence of the Church."

In other words, it invites the adoption, the sonship, the heirship, and the favor and power of the Church to give it character; but after a while it repudiates all this. The University grows up to manhood and finally says to the Church: "All I wanted was a name and a family status and character. You are my adopted mother. I am really illegitimate, but that cuts no particular figure in this day of higher thought. The forces, which once set in motion man's material organism, are perpetual, and, in order to attain unto man's highest intellectual development, he can not subscribe to the idea of responsibility to governing causation and supervision. I must go out into the world of broader usefulness and higher efforts, so I return to you, Mother, the Book you gave me, as a light to my feet and a guide to my pathway. It is a mere fable. I have been associated for many years with men of profound thought, who tell me that the regenerate notions contained in the Book are mere vagaries of a super-sensitive imagination, and are displaced by material progress and by the evolution of the human mind, so that I cannot afford to be restricted to its teachings, if I would aspire to accomplish the great work for which I was destined." FACTS ON THE SHADY SIDE.

By Rev. W. W. Pinson, D.D.

There is no dark side to missions. There is a bright side and a shady side. There are some facts on both sides. Those on the shady side can be relieved. They will be when we get a square look at them, never if we hide them in the glamor of the more alluring facts. There are three classes of people looking at the facts.

One class look at the encouraging facts and act as if there were no others. They are visionaries. Another class look at the forbidding facts and act as if there were no others. They are pessimists. Another class face all the facts without blinking and still hope and strive. They are optimists.

REV. A. F. WATKINS, D.D.,

Secretary of the General Conference and leader of the Mississippi Conference Delegation. Dr. Watkins is the accomplished President of Millsaps College.

It is only a little more wholesome to forever sing with the lark, "All's well with the world," than to mope with the owl in "The City of Dreadful Night." People with warm blood and healthy brawn should face the steel of grim reality without flinching.

Here are facts to face and remedy:

1. Lack of Unification.

There is a lack of unification and co-ordination on the fields. The different lines of work, the various institutions, the missionaries and stations are too independent of each other. There is a serious lack of any unified and continuous policy. A great church ought to be able to so co-ordinate all its agencies on a given field as to make them count for the largest contribution to its one aim. This we are not doing, and the result is lost motion and reduction of the net result.

The remedy is a continuous, resident superintendence. It cannot be remedied by the missionaries. The means is not at their disposal. When they have tried, it has been to meet with difficulty and discouragement. Hence they plead almost with one voice for a resident superintendent. The General Conference will have to face this (the most important) question affecting our missionary interests. Important as it is to give and spend missionary money, it is far more important to so administer what we do raise and spend as to make it count for the largest and best results.

An annual visit of a few weeks, without previous knowledge of or experience in the work of a given field, then the attempt to decide questions and determine methods and policies at a distance of thousands of miles is not satisfactory and cannot be made so. Why should we continue it longer?

2. The Assessment.

We are not paying now for both Foreign and Home Missions as much per capita on the assessment as we were twenty-four years ago. In 1890 we reported an average of 24 cents a member on the whole assessment for this Board. Ten years later it had dropped to an average of 16 cents per member. We never got back to 24 cents again until 1908, and during six of those eighteen years we only paid an average of 16 cents a member. Last year we only paid on the assessment for both Home and Foreign Missions 22½ cents per member.

True, we have a large income from specials, and but for this source of relief we could not carry on our work. But it should be remembered that these do not always answer existing needs, for often new ones are created. To illustrate: between 1890 and 1901 two new missions were opened, and yet during those same years the annual income from assessment fell off more than $50,000, and in 1899 the total income from all sources, including specials, was about the same as that from the assessment alone in 1890. The increasing income from specials had not more than made up for the loss on the assessment, and yet we were carrying one new mission and projecting another. The result was inevitable indebtedness.

In the second place, the income on assessment represents the missionary liberality of nine-tenths of our people. A recent investigation showed less than 700 specials listed for last year. This is about one to every ten charges, and yet many charges carry more than one special. Two years ago, when the assessment for foreign missions was reduced $65,000 by its transfer to the assessment for home missions, the income from that source instantly fell off $41,000, showing that a vast majority measure their giving by the assessment. The income from the assessment goes down when the amount assessed stands still, owing to the multiplication and increase of other assessments. Is it not a sad fact to discover that nine-tenths of our people are not giving as much to foreign missions in this time of prosperity and missionary enlightenment as their fathers gave more than two decades ago? This should give us pause, and we should find a remedy. The base line of our missionary support must be strengthened.

3. The Income from Sunday Schools.

There is no more encouraging fact than the growth of missions in the Sunday schools. During this quadrennium the amount reported in the minutes of Annual Conferences from that source has gone from $125,000 to $200,000. Yet the sad fact stares us in the face that this has not materially added to the income of the Board. It has gone into the assessment, without even increasing that—indeed it decreases—and into other things after it has been raised for missions. Last year the total reported in the Conference minutes was $200,000. The total coming as a separate amount to the Board of Missions was $21,000—one-tenth of the whole amount. The fine effective work which has been done by our Educational Department in the past eight years counts for almost nothing in income to the Board. Many pastors and superintendents are seeking to remedy this. It ought to be remedied.

4. Lack of Method.

We are Methodists. Are we? For six or seven years we have been urging, pleading and working for a method that would reach the rank and file. In common with every Church in America, we have urged the Every-member Canvass as the latest, best and most effective method. We have set it forth not for missions only, but with the co-operation and backing of all our connectional Boards. Yet not one in ten of our congregations, perhaps not one in twenty, has even seriously attempted it, and so far as the facts indicate no adequate substitute has been found. True, it is beginning to find favor. There are indications of a great increase in the number of Churches using it this year. Yet many, many will not. How are we to account for this? Why are we so slow to adopt a method that has abundantly proven its effectiveness and which other people are using with such splendid results?

5. The Needs Unprovided.

The most painful fact of all is the inability of the Board to meet even tolerably the needs at home and abroad. We are now in the midst of the annual agony of trying to make one dollar do the work of two. The heart-breaking cry of missionaries for help and equipment must go unheeded. The growing work and glowing opportunities must be denied. The clamor and sore straits of the missions on the one hand and the meager income and threat of deficit on the other—the pity of it! How long shall it continue so? When will our great Church awake to a sense of its power and its obligation?

Church News

Fannie J. Crosby, the famous blind hymn writer, celebrated her 94th birthday on March 24.

Our handsome new church in Orlando, Fla., where Dr. J. E. Wray is the accomplished pastor, was formally opened last Sunday by Bishop H. C. Morrison.

Bishop R. G. Waterhouse is writing an interesting series of articles for the Pacific Methodist Advocate under the caption, "Our Pacific Methodist Pioneers."

Dr. W. L. Watkinson, the distinguished Wesleyan preacher, has recently brought out another volume, entitled, "The Moral Paradoxes of St. Paul." It is highly commended by the Methodist Times.

It is stated that a monthly publication to be known as "The Texas Methodist" will be issued by the Methodist Episcopal Church in the interest of the work of that denomination in the Lone Star State.

Because of the illness of Bishop A. W. Wilson, Bishop Collins Denny presided over the recent session of the Baltimore Conference. Bishops Hoss and Candler were also present a part of the time during the session.

The Trinity College Alumnae Association has announced that it will inaugurate a campaign in North Carolina to raise $100,000 for a Woman's College to be maintained in connection with Trinity College, but not made directly a part of that institution.

The March number of the China Christian Advocate says: "The latest news is that he (President Yuan) has issued a mandate saying that while Confucius will be honored as under the Tsing Dynasty, and his ethical teachings will be taught in the schools, Confucianism will not be made a State religion." According to this periodical, the influences which have given Confucianism this boost are chiefly political.

The Woman's Auxiliary to the Wesley Memorial Hospital of Atlanta, Ga., has succeeded in raising in the city of Atlanta alone $25,000 of the $50,000 that is needed to secure Mr. Asa Candler's gift of $150,000 to that splendid institution; and the Wesleyan Christian Advocate is now exhorting the Methodists of Georgia to take up the work and increase the property holdings of the Hospital to $1,000,000. This would indeed be a great achievement.

Dr. W. P. Lovejoy states that between 70 and 80 preachers of the North Georgia Conference have volunteered to render service in revival meetings at such places as the Conference Committee on Evangelism may designate. We dare say that much good will result from this campaign of pastoral evangelism. It has been largely by the use of such methods that the brethren of the Holston Conference have succeeded in making such a gratifying showing in the work of winning souls to Christ.

In their recent meeting at Alexandria, La., the Baptist laymen of Louisiana adopted a resolution requesting Mr. John D. Rockefeller to consider the needs and opportunities of this State as a Baptist mission field. We do not think it is to the credit of the Christian Churches that they are so ready to stretch out itching palms to multi-millionaires seeking their money, regardless of the methods that they have used in obtaining it. This mendicant spirit has already, in our opinion, hurt the Churches vastly more than we yet realize. But the Baptists are not sinners above others in this respect.

Through the bequest of a Roman Catholic woman who died in Norfolk, Va., a few weeks ago, Cardinal Gibbons has lately received $265,000 for mission work in Virginia and the two Carolinas. It is stated that none of this money will be used for educational purposes, but that it will be applied to the strengthening of weak parishes and the establishment of new ones. It must be set down to the credit of the Roman Catholics that they seem to love their Church and to be ever ready to stand up vigorously in its defense. Would that Methodists were more like them in this respect!

There is so much wretchedness in the world that we may safely take the word of any mortal professing to need our assistance; and even should we be deceived, still the good to ourselves resulting from a kind act is worth more than the trifle by which we purchase it.—Hawthorne.

FAMINE CONDITIONS IN JAPAN.

Our Board of Missions has just received from Rev. S. H. Wainwright, Chairman of the Publicity Committee of the Conference of Federated Missions in Japan, a statement with regard to the distressing famine now prevailing in the northern districts of Japan, and the request that the information as to these conditions be given to the Churches of the United States in order that all who desire to help in this crisis may have an opportunity to do so. The statement is signed by ten other members of the Committee which represents thirty or more Boards at work in Japan.

Owing to unseasonable weather which resulted in the almost complete failure of the rice crop, and to an unusually small catch of fish on which a large part of the people depend for their living, it is stated that nine million people, who were extremely poor to begin with, are wholly unable to tide over this time of unusual scarcity. Business is paralyzed in a large degree and in certain localities the population is menaced with the spread of epidemic diseases. Reports are quoted from missionaries in a number of Provinces as to the extent of the need. Rev. W. T. Johnson says:

"Men are subsisting on straw, the bark of trees, unmatured daikon, acorns powdered and made into gruel, buckwheat chaff powdered and made into gruel by pouring upon it hot water. Mothers living on such food have been unable to feed their babies and have made a milk substitute for the babes out of the hulls of rice which they heat into a powder and mix with boiling water. The young men have left home in search of work, while the aged and the children are left behind to freeze and starve unless outside relief is brought to them. The committee that went from Sapporo to examine the conditions in three of the worst villages found one woman out of fifteen who was able to nurse her infant."

"The Japanese Christians are contributing generously, but their numbers are limited and their resources scant. The government has appropriated three million dollars, which, however, will be used not for direct relief, but in supplying funds for the maintenance of relief works and capital with which to prepare for future farm work."

"It is safe to say," says the report, "that the funds contributed will fall far short of the amount needed. For this reason it has been deemed necessary to appeal to the Churches abroad for help. A famine relief committee has been appointed by the Conference of Federated Missions, an organization comprising some thirty or more missions working in Japan. All funds entrusted to this Committee will be used, in co-operation with others engaged in the same good work, in bringing aid to the famine sufferers."

Dr. Wainwright, one of our Southern Methodist missionaries, who sends the appeal for the Committee, states, "We believe that a kindly ministry at this time on the part of the American people will do much to soften the ill feeling in Japan. The main thing, however, is the relief of the famine sufferers."

The Board of Missions will be glad to receive and transmit without expense all contributions that our people desire to make to this cause. Remittances should be made to J. D. Hamilton, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

LET THE ISSUE BE KEPT CLEAR.

The Vanderbilt situation is one of great importance to the Church, and we wish to keep our readers correctly informed upon the principal points. An effort will doubtless be made to becloud the issue. Do not be deceived at this one point: If the present decision shall prove to be final, the Methodist Church has absolutely no control over the policies and work of Vanderbilt University. We note that a motion has been made before the Supreme Court of Tennessee for a new hearing. What the issue of that will be we cannot, of course, foretell. We have seen no expression from the representatives of the Church as to the possibility of having this decision reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States. There seems to be the assumption in some quarters that the present decision is final. In that event it is our firm conviction that the Church cannot afford to continue in any sort of relationship with the University. We cannot be responsible for any institution that we cannot control—still less with one that has already thrown defiance into the face of the direct orders of the Church and pursued a policy that would forever stain the Church with dishonor. At this point the path of duty is clear. There may be some subsidiary questions that remain to be settled. Not even the Board of Trust, we suppose, could question that the Church has been maintaining some direct and vital relations with the Theological Department. We have some things in the Discipline about it that will need to be revised or eliminated. The Church cannot afford to send its young ministers to be trained in that atmosphere and to get their ideals of life from those who are now dominant there. We wish to say in this connection that we do not know the attitude of the Dean and faculty of the Theological Department toward the course of the Board of Trust. Dean W. F. Tillett, a native North Carolinian and a man for whose ability and Christian character we have ever had the highest estimate, has been wondrously quiet during all this controversy. The situation has been a delicate one, and he has probably acted wisely in that matter. But, when the shock of the present crisis has passed, the Church must know the attitude of the men with whom she is to co-operate in the future for the training of her ministry. And this pronouncement should be in accents so clear as to leave no shadow of doubt. We must know the ground of our confidence in the future. —Raleigh Christian Advocate.

WANTED—ADVICE.

It is of course earnestly desired that our METHODIST HOSPITAL, Memphis, Tenn., be so administered, or "run," as to perfectly meet all necessities and fully satisfy and delight all patrons. It should not have a defect or make a mistake.

In order to achieve this high ideal we shall have to have advice—the very BEST advice.

But, that we may secure only the best, it will be well for us to apply the following test to the intellectual capacity of the adviser: Only such persons are capable of giving the kind of advice we need as prove by their actions that they have sense enough to appreciate the following most fundamental and evident facts, namely:

1. The METHODIST HOSPITAL must be BUILT before it can be "run" at all; and,
2. It takes "COLD CASH," rather than sympathy and "hot air," to build it.

Of course we need advice, but NOT—advice only.

Send on your contribution, or your subscription, at least. We need it now.

Your advice may follow—there is no hurry for that.

Secular News and Comment

James Gordon Bennett, the distinguished Editor of the New York Herald, has lately been seriously ill at Cairo, Egypt.

The United States Senate Committee on Public Lands has reported in favor of having the Government acquire Monticello, the old home of Thomas Jefferson.

It is stated by Mr. Featherstun, the Street Cleaning Commissioner, that the removal of snow from the streets of New York City this winter has cost approximately $2,500,000.

A dispatch from Portland, Me., a few days since, announced the serious illness in that city of Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, President of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. (Since the above was written Mrs. Stevens has passed to her heavenly reward.)

Mr. John Lind, President Wilson's personal representative in Mexico, has been granted a vacation, which he will spend in the United States, and it is stated by some of the secular papers that he may not return to Mexican territory at all.

According to the press dispatches, Mr. Julius Rosenwald, President of the firm, Sears, Roebuck & Co., will pay the largest income tax of any citizen in Chicago. His yearly income is reported to be $1,320,000 a year, and on this sum the tax will be approximately $70,000 per annum.

London (England) has an underwriters Syndicate that has been insuring persons against an operation for appendicitis at a yearly premium of $2.50 for every $500. Lately, however, this Syndicate has advanced its premium to $5 because of the increased number of operations now taking place in the British Isles.

According to the New York World, Mr. Edward Ray, a blind lawyer and lecturer, will be a candidate for the United States Senate in North Carolina, to succeed the Hon. Lee S. Overman. Mr. Ray, though he has been blind since he was ten years of age, is said to be an A. B. graduate of a North Carolina College, an A. M. of Harvard University, and an honor graduate of the Chattanooga Law School.

A report recently gained currency that the Hon. W. J. Bryan is in danger of losing his voice. This rumor brought Mrs. Bryan so many letters telling of cures for lost voices that it became necessary for the Secretary of State to make a statement informing the public that his vocal apparatus is still in fine order. Let us hope that many years will pass before the nation's greatest orator suffers any impairment of his wonderful powers as a public speaker.

In the year 1911, Mrs. Jane K. Sather left the University of California $700,000 to be used for certain purposes, and Mr. Earnest V. Cowell, a wealthy cement manufacturer, left it $750,000 to be applied as his will directed. Within the past few days, however, the heirs of the persons mentioned have instituted legal proceedings to prevent the University from receiving these bequests, on the ground that the laws of California forbid any decedent to bequeath more than one-third of his estate to any benevolent institution when there are rightful heirs.

NEW TESTAMENT BAPTISM.

A Baptist preacher at Philadelphia wrote under the above caption to the Mississippi Baptist. In his article he said, "A Conference Evangelist of the Methodist Church occupied two hours in a sermon defending this very practice" (infant baptism). The Evangelist to whom he alluded never preached two hours at one time on Infant Baptism in his thirty-six years' ministry, and yet our brother does not hesitate to write that he did. Again, he said in speaking of baptism taking the place of circumcision: "Augustine of Hippo, a staunch defender of infant baptism, was the first to put forth this teaching."

The brother seemed not to know that Augustine mentions it as a fact in his works that baptism took the place of circumcision, and hence not as a thing of his own making; and also, he seems not to have known that Justin Martyr wrote of it in the same way in his Dialogue with Trypho. Justin Martyr died 100 years before Augustine was born. He had much to say about household baptism, but he did not, neither can he, disprove the point made with oikos, a Greek word employed in the New Testament for household, that it includes all of a family, even infants. He did not tell the people that infant baptism was the practice of the whole Christian Church for 1500 years, and too, that if the Baptist Church was in existence then it baptized infants and has since departed from the faith of our blessed Lord.

If the Baptist is the only true Church of God on earth, and has never baptized infants, then there was no church of God on earth till the 17th century; and hence the gates of hell did prevail against it if the Baptist claim be true.

Will our brother please to tell us where his Church was during that long time of infant baptism in the church of God everywhere? The people, and even the sincere people of his own Church, would like much for him to give that very necessary information. He has much to say about the truth and about being truthful; therefore, let him give to the people waiting, hungering for the truth, the truth about where his Church—the Church that claims to be the only true Church of God on the earth—was when every branch and the whole true Church of God baptized infants. Where, Brother, oh, where was your Church? Please tell us where it was and what it was doing while infant baptism was being practiced everywhere. What was your true Church saying about infant baptism in those days? Give us the name of one great scholar and writer that made a regular Baptist racket about infant baptism. What was his name? In what country did he flourish and what books or book has he left us by which we may know what the true Church was doing against infant baptism when it was the practice everywhere?

Now I leave just two points for our truthful brother to meet, and then we shall be qualified to study God's Word on the subject. Now, truthful brother—the brother that deals with nothing but the truth—please answer just the two points:

1. Where was your church for 1500 years after our blessed Lord ascended to heaven? In what country or countries was it doing the will of God? What great scholars or writers did it have that kept infant baptism from being practiced within its bounds? Let him inform us as to the place where we may get their works.

2. Does the Greek word oikos, used for household in the New Testament, for the whole families baptized, include little children and infants at all? Did it ever include them? and if so, please to tell us and the whole world how you know that it did not include them when it is used for the baptism of whole families in the New Testament? Let us have the truth and no inferences.

SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

The Sixth Session to be Held at Seashore Camp Ground, Biloxi, Miss., June 23 to July 2, 1914.

Speakers—Our Bishop W. A. Candler will be there. Probably, also, Bishop F. J. McConnell of Denver, and Dr. J. Gregory Mantle of England.

Place—Beautiful for situation, delightful for health and comfort. Nature built here the best. Others spend thousands for a pond and trees, here is an ocean and the native forest growth. Come and see.

Time—8 p. m., June 23 to noon, July 2, 1914. Just preceding the "revival season" and a genuine preparation for it.

Undergraduates—Four helpful instructors for each class and final examinations for those who study the course before coming.

Expense—A fee of $2.50 for the session with excellent board and lodging at $1 to $1.25 a day. Incidentals as much or as little as you wish.

We want you, unless you know it all or have been finished up. We have something worth while for the growing man.

Note—Rich and potent personality is not possible by cheap and shiftless methods.

A BRIEF TRIBUTE.

"He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." Men like J. H. Murphy never die. We laid his body away in a grave of flowers at the Ruston Cemetery on March 25, 1914, but to-day he is alive. His faith was in Christ, so death could not rob him of his immortality. He was an enthusiastic member of our Trinity Methodist Church, a steward, and a Sunday school worker—a Christ-man.

Ruston never had a better citizen, and the large concourse of people who attended his funeral was a partial evidence of the high esteem in which he was held. He had a cheer word, a glad hand and a warm heart for everybody, rich and poor, old and young alike. Ruston is not the same without him—and because we miss him so, he lives here yet. He made himself such a friend, so absolutely essential, that in the very missing of him his influence with us abides.

His wife and six sons survive him. He was a faithful husband and a good father. May the God of the widow and the fatherless give comfort to these hearts that are lonely and sad.

J. H. Murphy was my friend. I loved him. Peace to his ashes! His kingly spirit has triumphed over death. In the sweet bye and bye I hope to see him again. Till then, my friend, farewell. His pastor, W. W. HOLMES.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Wesson, Miss., May 5, 1914.

The conference will be called to order at nine o'clock on the morning of May 5, at which time all the members are requested to be present to answer to roll call.

The following committees are appointed: License to preach—W. H. LaPrade, B. F. Lewis, T. B. Clifford; Orders—W. H. Lewis, J. H. Grice, T. H. King; Quarterly Conference Records—J. V. Bennett, C. A. Schultz, C. E. Downer.

Rev. W. H. Saunders will preach the opening sermon at 11 o'clock a. m., Tuesday, May 5. The pastors will please send me names of delegates and local preachers at once. Also send names to Brother Forman, pastor, at Wesson. Let us have a great conference. ROBT. SELBY, P. E.

PAPYRUS STILL USED.

The Papyrus plant, which once flourished in large quantities in Egypt, but is now almost extinct there, still abounds in the Jordan valley, as well as in the neighborhood of Jaffa and Sidon.

It grows best in a marshy soil, easily attaining a height of eight to ten feet. The stems of the plant, which are hollow, like bamboo, are leafless, and as thick as a man's arm at the lower part, tapering away to a point.

This wood is used to-day in the East for a variety of purposes, both ornamental and useful. At Jaffa it is converted into sandals, boxes, various articles of furniture, and even into boats.

In ancient times, particularly when the Pharaohs reigned in Egypt, the papyrus was cultivated and converted into paper, and many museums can boast of specimens of these ancient papyri manuscripts.—Wide World Magazine.

A WOMAN'S SUGGESTION ABOUT THE VANDERBILT MATTER.

Dear Mr. Editor: Please do not think I am clamoring for "laity rights" and consign my communication to the waste-basket without a thought. I have never heard the faintest call "to sit in the conference," as Samantha would say. I am a plain busy house-wife and mother, who could never before this, summon courage to even make an effort to appear in print. I have read your paper and the Nashville Advocate and everything else that came my way, on either side, of the Vanderbilt controversy, and, I want to say, that my sympathies have always been with the College of Bishops and the Church at large. I felt proud and gratified, beyond measure, that the Church, so dear to my heart, had given no uncertain sound and that the Conferences so far had refused to be bought by Mr. Carnegie's millions.

But some thoughts have come to me lately, borne in upon my mind I believe by the power of God's Spirit, which I feel impelled to place before our Methodist people. I have a son, a mere boy, in a preparatory school not far from the city of Nashville. A few days after the "monster torchlight" parade of which you published an account, copied from the Times-Democrat, and, the noise from which, probably at second hand, reached him in his country school, he wrote me a letter containing a query about the matter. Now, Mr. Editor, noise rhymes well with boys and counts for much in their ideas of life. So, anxious that my son should not be misled or biased by a superficial view of the suit, I wrote him a letter giving him my views on the matter, in the course of which I used these words: "Poor Carnegie! I would not exchange places with him for the world. I have my Father's promise of an eternal life of happiness in heaven with him, while he has only money, and that can buy him nothing in that dread world to which he will surely go, unless he repents." Instantly the question came to my mind, why has not Mr. Carnegie your inheritance? Have you prayed for his salvation? Conscience smitten, I went at once to prayer, and, while pleading before a throne of grace, for the conversion of this poor rich man, who, I am told, is an unbeliever, I was impressed with a desire to write these few thoughts for your paper.

Our Lord says, "Pray for those who despitefully use you and persecute you." Mr. Editor, does not this apply to the Church as a body as well as to individuals? I look upon this command as the supreme test of love and obedience. Are we as a church living up to our duty toward Mr. Carnegie? I, for one, plead guilty to years of neglect of my duty. I had resented with some bitterness his attitude towards our Church in this controversy, and had felt keenly the slap in the face, to which you alluded in your recent editorial. Beyond these feelings, I fear that we are giving little thought to our duty to him. He looks upon Christians as too narrow and ignorant to control higher institutions of learning, and he is trying to develop these institutions by removing them from sectarian rule. Should not the Church be as active and earnest in trying to lead him to the light, as he is in trying to correct the Church's mistakes?

I want to suggest through the columns of the Advocate that the M. E. Church, South, make it a subject of special prayer that God will lead Mr. Carnegie to see himself lost, and that he may repent and be saved. Would not the opening of his eyes and Dr. Kirkland's do more to settle this dispute than all the courts of our land? Mr. Editor, let us pray for Mr. Carnegie. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." We know that God will not save a man against his will, but who knows but that even this hard-headed Scotchman is waiting to be led into the kingdom of heaven by the hand of some one chosen of God for the work? We have read of the conversion of ex-Governor Patterson because one faithful minister did some personal work. Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost and he has committed this work to us as his representatives in the world to-day. Let us not neglect our duty. Mr. Editor, you know how to put your thoughts into forcible, convincing words. Pray over this matter; write it up, urged our Methodist people to make it an object of special prayer and fasting, both before and during the session of the General Conference, and perhaps a merciful God will cast out the demon of agnosticism from this poor man. If he cannot save Mr. Carnegie, he can settle our dispute in his own good way. Let us carry our case before a court where justice never miscarries and the judge is not blinded by gold.

REV. J. R. COUNTISS,

President of Grenada College, who is the leader of the North Mississippi delegation to the approaching session of the General Conference.

We accept the writings of St. Paul as prompted by the Spirit of God. Surely, if any part of it bears the mark of inspiration, it is the 12th chapter of Romans. No finite mind could originate such a code of Christian duty. And the climax of this wonderful chapter is reached in the last verse: "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Good is the only weapon that never fails to overcome—God giving it to us, not our goodness but his with which to fight evil. Let us use it to overcome the wrong Mr. Carnegie is doing, not to our denomination alone, but also to others.

Evidently some one has long neglected his duty, or this poor rich man would be using his millions to God's glory in fulfilling the command in Mark 16:15, instead of tempting Christian people to sell their birthright. Let us pray for Mr. Carnegie. Yours in the good work,

Mrs. FLORENCE ELLIS.

Florence, Miss., April 3, 1914.

A VOICE FROM THE OUTSIDE.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee recently rendered its decision in the Vanderbilt University case. The decision was adverse to the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and through them to their Church. It cut off Vanderbilt completely from Church ownership or control, declaring its Board of Trust to be a self-perpetuating body. True, it put in the decree the clause that the trustees elected by this Board of Trust must be confirmed by either the General Conference of the Church, or in the interim of the Conference's meeting by its Education Board; but this provision it proceeded to make absolutely worthless by decreeing that any "trustees elected" shall sit in the Board of Trust and act as trustees until actually rejected by the General Conference or its Education Board, and only when so rejected shall there be a vacancy, which the Board of Trust itself shall proceed to fill. Thus the Board of Trust has the power to fill its membership with its own appointees and to have them act, with no further result from the veto power of the Church than a shortening of the term of such trustees' service. And still further, as if to clinch the matter of the Church's complete separation from ownership and control, the decree provides that the Church's veto, if given in a contumacious manner, shall not be accepted. The Board of Trust, it is supposed, will be "the judge" of such contumacy on the part of the Church! The whole decision is a blow to Christian education and to the giving of funds in trust for the purposes of Christian education. Commodore Vanderbilt made his great donation to the institution which the Methodist Church, South, had started, organized, chartered and partly equipped, and the name of which was changed out of compliment to him. Pending the suit Mr. Carnegie promised a large sum of money for one department of the university, and actually delivered a large portion of his gift, reserving the balance to be given in case the decision of the court would be favorable to the Board of Trust as against the Bishops.—Presbyterian of the South.

GRANDPA'S APRIL FOOL.

"Pooh! no one can fool me," declared Roy, pouring the cream over his oatmeal. "It's one, two—no, three years since any one fooled me; and I was only a little fellow then."

Grandfather's eyes twinkled behind his glasses. "So no one can fool you," he said slowly. "Well, we'll see. I am going to invite you and Doris to drive to town with me this morning when the farm work is finished, and perhaps we'll succeed in fooling you there."

"No danger," replied Roy, "I never forget what day is. That's why I'm not fooled, you see."

"Well," laughed grandmother, "I think I will go along, too, and see the fun. Grandfather won't rest now until he has fooled you, Roy, so beware."

"I wish grandfather could fool him," sighed Doris. "Roy's so terribly superior over not being fooled. I always forget and get caught every time."

"You may all try," said Roy confidently, "but you'll see I will be too smart for you."

Grandmother and Doris washed the dishes, and put the house in order, while grandfather and Roy were busy in the barn.

Then grandfather harnessed Jupiter, the old gray farm horse, and with grandmother, Doris, and Roy started for the city.

"Now," said grandfather, as he gathered up the reins, "let us all keep our eyes open. Mother, you count all the red calves you see, Doris, you count the red colts, and Roy the white colts. I will give a big box of candy to the one who sees the most."

"Do you mean honest candy?" asked Roy, suspiciously.

"I mean honest candy, not the April Fool kind," laughed grandfather. "Do you want to try the game, Roy?"

"Yes, sir-ee!" answered Roy, "and I'll beat the others, too; see if I don't."

It was a beautiful spring day, blue sky with fleecy, white clouds floating here and there, and the grass showing green and tender.

Pretty soon Doris cried out, "Oh I see a dear little baby colt, and yes—it is—it is red. That is one for me."

"And there's a red calf, too," exclaimed grandmother. "That is one for me."

"Two-three-four," cried Doris again, as they passed another large stock farm.

"Two-three," counted grandmother a little later, and grandfather put the numbers down as they called them.

At last they came within sight of the city, and grandfather looked at his record.

Doris had found six red colts, and grandmother five red calves, but Roy hadn't seen a single white colt. He had seen plenty of colts, but none of them were white.

Then grandfather laughed, and cried, "April Fool, April Fool!"

"How, where, why?" asked Roy, half inclined to be angry.

Grandmother smiled and said, "Grandfather fooled you, dear. There isn't such a thing as a white colt. Even when they are going to be white horses, they are not white until they have shed their first coat of hair."

"Yes, I fooled you," said grandfather, laughing again, "although it was hardly fair to take advantage of what you didn't know. But after this remember that no one knows everything, no matter how wise he may be."—Emma Florence Bush, in Sunday School Times.

THE GOOD WIND.

When you think the wind blows a little too hard, if it blows your hair into your eyes or mouth, just brush it back. Or it may even blow the dust into your eyes. Don't fuss and fume at it, though.

Wipe your eyes out and laugh, for just listen to the good things a wind can do, and I know that you will agree with me that the winds are good in spite of the dust they kick—no, blow up.

Early in the spring the wind begins to blow, and it blows hard, too; and if you will watch the trees bend and bow before it, you will say, like a little boy I knew: "See how the wind whips those trees!"

And bless you, the wind does whip the trees, so as to shake them up and make the sap run faster.

You see, when the cold winter comes, the sap in the trees runs into the ground, where the roots are, to keep warm, for it would freeze like water if it stayed up in the trees.

Then in the spring it comes slowly up into the trees again. This is when the wind whips the trees and makes the sap hurry; and when it is all through the limbs and branches, the tree is ready to send out its pretty green buds that make the leaves.

Another thing that the wind does is to ride all the different seeds of flowers and trees on its back and take them to different places.

And when it drops the seeds to the ground, they take root, you see, and make more flowers and trees.

Then, again, when the wind blows a certain way it brings the rain and that waters the trees and the flowers and makes the things you eat grow. And it keeps the air clean and fresh, and carries the sweet perfume of the flowers to you.

Some people say the wind "howls." I do not think so. I think it is a music that it makes, and I like to hear it.—Child's Gem.

Editorial

GOD INFINITELY GREATER THAN HIS WORKS.

(We think there is little doubt that the greatest preacher that the world has had since the time of John Wesley was Charles H. Spurgeon. His simple, childlike faith, his deep spirituality, and his wonderful power of statement and expression cannot but impress any one who reads his sermons and writings. But it is not so generally known that Mr. Spurgeon also sometimes wrote poetry. A few days since in reading the comments on the Eighth Psalm contained in his excellent work, "The Treasury of David," we became much interested in the poem published below. Referring to the circumstances under which he composed it, the great preacher says: "When wandering amid the Alps, we felt that the Lord was infinitely greater than all his grandest works, and under that feeling roughly wrote these lines.)

Yet in all these, how great soe'er they be,
We see Him not. The glass is all too dense
And dark, or else our earthborn eyes too dim.

Yon Alps, that lift their heads above the clouds
And hold familiar converse with the stars,
Are dust, at which the balance trembleth not,
Compared with his divine immensity.
The snow-crown'd summits fail to set Him forth,
Who dwelleth in Eternity, and bears
Alone, the name of High and Lofty One.
Depths unfathomed are too shallow to Express the wisdom and knowledge of the Lord.
The mirror of the creatures has no space
To bear the image of the Infinite.
'Tis true, the Lord has fairly writ his name,
And set his seal upon creation's brow.
But as the skillful potter much excels
The vessel which he fashions on the wheel,
E'en so, but in proportion greater far,
Jehovah's self transcends his noblest works.
Earth's ponderous wheel would break, her axles snap,
If freighted with the load of Deity.
Space is too narrow for the Eternal's rest,
And time too short a footstool for his throne.
E'en avalanche and thunder lack a voice,
To utter the full volume of his praise.
How then can I declare Him? Where are words With which my glowing tongue can speak his name?

Silent I bow, and humbly I adore.

LET US NOT BE TOO SEVERE ON THEM.

Did the Church ever own Vanderbilt University? If we mistake not, it was once universally thought so. Such was the opinion of Bishop McIntyre, Chancellor Garland, and the Vanderbilts. Dr. Kirkland repeatedly so declared prior to the establishment of the Carnegie Foundation for Penitentiary Teachers, and it cannot be forgotten with what splendid emphasis Bishop Hendrix in reading the Episcopal Address to the last General Conference (which he himself had written) rolled out the words: "OUR VANDERBILT—we call it ours, because it is ours in law and morals." Indeed, prior to the time that Mr. Carnegie began to make it to the financial advantage of educational institutions to break away from their denominational moorings, if the Church's ownership of Vanderbilt University was ever called in question by anybody, we are not aware of it.

But the Supreme Court of Tennessee has now decided that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, does not own Vanderbilt University and has never owned it. According to the ruling of that tribunal, not a dollar in the institution is hers, or is legally held in trust for her. When the majority of the Board of Trust filed their bill in Court and we called attention to the denial of the Church's ownership made therein, if our memory serves us right, there were some persons on the Board who loudly declared that there was no possibility of the Church's losing a dollar. Yet between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 worth of property has passed absolutely out of the Church's hands into the possession of some thirty-three men, who are not even legally required to hold it in trust for her. There is not the slightest guarantee that in the coming years a majority of this governing body will continue to be Methodists.

But let not the Christian public be too hard on these gentlemen who were so glib in affirming that there was no chance for the Church to lose anything at all as a result of the contentions of the Vanderbilt trustees. Perhaps they were sincere. The truth is, there are quite a few men in the world who are not nearly so wise as they think they are; when they imagine that they are playing a leading part in the management of things they are mere puppets in the hands of others. Though essaying to parade as leaders and speak with authority, they do not know the real significance of what is taking place. They have the strut of a giant, but the stride of a dwarf. Possessed of a megalomania that is amusing to everybody except themselves, they are more to be pitied than censured. We can well afford to judge them leniently, remembering that "but little should be required of persons to whom little is given."

MR. J. A. TOWNES DEAD.

A dispatch from Rev. W. M. Campbell, of Minter City, Miss., bearing date of April 13, reads as follows: "Mr. James A. Townes died at Battle Creek, Mich., Sunday morning, April 12, 1914, at 10:30 o'clock. Will be buried here Wednesday at 10 o'clock a.m."

We are deeply pained to be informed of the death of this worthy and useful man, whose influence for many years has been so widely felt for good. Viewed from any standpoint, he was a remarkable character and rose far above the commonplace. As a planter and business man, he had no superior in the entire Mississippi Delta. His relation to the negroes on his large plantation was almost patriarchal, and his interest in them and kindness to them was active and unceasing. Some years ago we met Bishop Galloway, just after he had been on a visit to Brother Townes, and the gentleness and considerateness that he observed him showing to his tenants, had thrilled and powerfully impressed him. The Bishop stated that he intended to write an article for some of the leading Northern journals to give the people of that misinformed section some idea of the extent to which some noble-hearted employers were still interesting themselves in the welfare of the colored people of the South, using the deceased as a shining example; but before his eloquent pen could perform this intended service he was taken from us.

Mr. Townes was a Christian in the highest and best sense of the term. He was not an eloquent talker about the gospel, but he exemplified its great truths in his daily life. He believed in the Church, and gave every year hundreds of dollars to its support. Of all the laymen in the North Mississippi Conference, we dare say that he was by far the most liberal giver. His generosity extended to the colored churches, as well as to his own. He was his pastor's unfailing friend, and always claimed the privilege of well-nigh feeding and clothing him and his family. Our church at Minter City and our Mississippi Delta Methodist have sustained a great loss. That this great-hearted and broad-minded layman was ready for the Master's summons, we do not at all doubt. As a father, husband, citizen, and disciple of the Master, he served his day and generation well, and has passed to his reward, leaving behind a name that will long be remembered and cherished. We extend sympathy to the bereaved, and pray that the Heavenly Father may graciously comfort and sustain them by his Holy Spirit.

DEFEATED BUT UNDISMAYED.

In the recent election held in Alabama, the Hon. Oscar W. Underwood defeated Congressman R. P. Hobson for the United States Senate by a majority of approximately 25,000. We have not a word to say against Mr. Underwood, whom we regard as a worthy and able man who measures fully up to senatorial size; but we deprecate the disposition that has been shown in some quarters to belittle Congressman Hobson. There is no braver act in American history than that of this young man when, with a few gallant companions, he sank the Merrimac in the Santiago harbor with a view to bottling up the Spanish fleet, and since he has been a member of Congress he has exhibited ability of a high order. When Mr. Hobson realized that he was defeated he chivalrously congratulated his distinguished opponent, and gave to the press the following ringing statement:

"Please say to the liquor interests of America for me and for Mr. Musgrove and for the legions of undaunted Alabamians standing with us that we have only begun to fight; that the work we have done can never be undone; that we will meet them again on the battlefield of Alabama and on a hundred other battlefields, and we expect, under God's Providence, to be in the battle when the thirty-sixth State ratifies the Hobson resolution placing national prohibition in the Constitution of the United States."

We predict that those who think that Mr. Hobson has reached the end of his public career will find themselves very much mistaken. He is a man of convictions and the courage to fight for them, and in our opinion he yet has a brilliant future.

SENATOR CHAMBERLAIN ON MR. CARNEGIE.

Senator George W. Chamberlain, of Oregon, in a brilliant speech delivered in the United States Senate against the repeal of the bill allowing the United States vessels engaged in coastwise trade to pass through the Panama Canal free of charge, made the following reference to Mr. Andrew Carnegie:

"Mr. President, if men in other countries than this were guilty of the things that Andrew Carnegie has been guilty of to-day, they would be charged with treason and their estates confiscated by the Governments under which they live. Why, Mr. President, he has sown more trouble in this country than any other one man in it. He is obsessed with the idea that there shall be a United States of Great Britain and the United States. He has been obsessed with that idea for a long time, and he has not hesitated to spend his millions to undertake to create a reciprocal feeling in the minds of all the people of the United States. His tainted money reaches out to the children of our country through the universities and schools. It plies its unworthy vocation in pulpit, press, and platform."

SEEMS TO BE THE END OF THE LITIGATION.

The motion of our lawyers for a rehearing of the Vanderbilt case by the Judges of the Supreme Court of Tennessee was denied last week, and we understand that it is the opinion of our counsel that there is no ground upon which to appeal the case to the Supreme Court of the United States. We take it, therefore, that an end of the litigation has been reached. Henceforth, the only question that is likely to be before the Church is that of its future relation to the University. On this subject we have very decided convictions which it is our purpose to state more fully than we have yet done in the Advocate in the near future.

If the Church had lost this suit in a contest conducted in a straightforward and high-minded manner, we could be reconciled to the outcome, feeling that she had had a fair deal; but when we take into consideration Mr. Carnegie's interference and the other undedanded expedients that have been resorted to, we cannot but be indignant at the treatment that has been accorded her. Those who wish to do so may prate about charity and magnanimity, but facts are stubborn things and such outrages ought not to be forgotten. Even a religious denomination should have some self-respect. Men who have shown themselves capable of doing what the majority of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust have done are unfit to conduct any school, whether denominational or secular.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Columbus District Conference will convene at Brooksville, Miss., this week, with Bishop W. B. Murrah presiding.

Rev. W. W. Bruner has our thanks for a club of subscriptions sent from Wall Hill, Miss., on April 6. He states that the work of his charge is progressing favorably.

The Southern Sociological Conference will be held in Memphis, Tenn., May 6-10, and the National Sociological Conference will be held in the same city May 8-15.

Rev. S. S. Bogan writes: "I desire to announce through the Advocate that my address is now Winnfield, La. My reception by this people has been very kind, and we are hopeful of a good year."

Rev. Paul F. Daniel, of Liberty, Miss., says: "This is an excellent people and they are treating their preacher royally. We are working and praying for a revival, and are expecting a year of progress."

Brother Whitman Davis, of the Agricultural & Mechanical College at Starkville, Miss., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, takes time to add a few commendatory words, which are much appreciated. Blessings on this friend of other days!

Dr. W. L. Clifton has announced that he will not continue as President of Southern College at Sutherland, Fla., and Rev. R. H. Alderman, of the Western Virginia Conference, a former citizen of Florida, has been chosen to succeed him.

Writing from Coldwater, Miss., under date of April 11, Rev. T. W. Dye stated that he had been physically unwell for about two weeks. We trust that he will soon be rid of all traces of his illness and thoroughly at himself again.

We acknowledge ourselves indebted to Brother S. O. Andrus, of Opelousas, La., for the renewal of his subscription and some generous words of commendation. He has been a friend and reader of the Advocate for many years.

In the "Personal" appearing in the Advocate last week, Rev. W. B. Waldrop was spoken of as the pastor of the Galloway Memorial Church of Jackson, Miss. This was an error. That distinction belongs to Rev. W. G. Henry. Brother Waldrop is serving the Braxton charge.

Bishop James Atkins, of Waynesville, N. C., is holding the Greenville and Winona District Conferences in North Mississippi this week. He dedicated our Church at Shelby, Miss., last Sunday, delivering a strong and impressive sermon on that interesting occasion.

Rev. T. L. Porter, of Courtland, Miss., sends us some names for our subscription files and makes the following reference to his work: "Things are moving along nicely with us. Thank God, there is a sound of a going in the mulberry trees."

Rev. A. H. Steele, of Oloh, Miss., reports an interesting meeting at the great Southern Camps, in which he had the efficient assistance of Rev. W. W. Huff. Many were anxious for the services to be continued longer, but Brother Huff had another engagement and it was not deemed practicable to prolong them.

Rev. T. H. Dorsey, our capable pastor at Water Valley, Miss., favored us a few days since with 2 new and 12 renewal subscriptions to the Advocate. It is Brother Dorsey's habit to look well after all the interests of the Church committed to his hands. He is doing a fine work in his present responsible field.

In a note bearing date of April 7, Rev. L. I. McCain, of Bogalusa, La., says: "We are in the midst of a great meeting in our church at this place. The Lord is doing great things for us. I am being assisted by Rev. G. S. Harmon and Rev. O. C. Seevers, two members of the Mississippi Conference."

We are grateful to Mrs. L. J. Abel, of Phoenix, Miss., for some subscriptions recently sent us and for kindly words commending the Advocate. It is such friends who make possible the maintenance of our paper, and though we do not personally know them, we hold them in high appreciation.

In a letter to the office enclosing three renewal subscriptions received recently from Rev. A. L. Davenport, pastor of Chalybeate Circuit, Miss., he says: "I hope to send more soon. The outlook is good for a successful year. The Lord bless you, and may you continue to give us a good paper." We extend to Brother Davenport our thanks for both his kindly aid and helpful words.

We were pleased to receive last week an interesting letter from Rev. J. C. Park, our efficient and popular pastor at Tupelo, Miss. Brother Park was some weeks ago seriously ill and much solicitude was felt concerning his health, but we are delighted to know that he has recovered from his recent attack and is again busy and happy in his "loved employ."

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgement has not elsewhere been made, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. A. J. Davis, De Soto, Miss., 4; Mrs. William N. Thomas, Daleville, Miss., 9; Rev. J. Y. Bowman, Utica, Miss., 6; Rev. Hayes Howell, Arcadia, La., 2; Rev. J. A. Biffle, Arkabutla, Miss., 6.

Through the courtesy of the pastor, Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, we have received a copy of the Official Directory of the First M. E. Church, South of Greenville, Miss. It is admirably arranged, and is up to a high order in every respect. Most of the names on the membership roll look quite familiar to the Editor, who has a warm place in his heart for the city of Greenville and its generous, kindly people.

Dr. James Cannon, Jr., who is one of the ablest of Southern Methodist preachers, has been placed in charge of the campaign for State-wide prohibition in Virginia, and will have his headquarters at Richmond from now until the 1st of October. As is generally known, Dr. Cannon is at the head of the movement to establish a great Southern Methodist Chautauqua at Waynesville, N. C., and has been residing in that city for some months.

Rev. H. M. Ellis, Field Secretary of the Memphis Methodist Hospital, states that the subscriptions to that commendable enterprise have gone beyond $115,500, and that work on the building will be commenced in the near future. This is indeed gratifying news, and we congratulate Brother Ellis upon this fine showing. Let the brethren everywhere open their pulpits to this faithful and energetic worker, and lend him a helping hand.

Rev. Thomas H. Mills, who is serving the South Side Church of Corinth, Miss., is seeking to place the Advocate in the homes of his people, with gratifying results. Of his work, this faithful pastor says: "We are pleased with the outlook in this charge. We have had eight additions to the Church since Conference. Our Sunday school shows some improvement. We are fortunate in having Miss Daniels, our deaconess, as the teacher of our young people."

Rev. N. B. Harmon requests us to remind the brethren that the fourth Sunday in April (the 26th) is Galloway Memorial Day in the Mississippi Conference, and that programs are now being prepared and will be sent to all the Sunday school superintendents in the various pastoral charges. It is to be hoped that this day will be generally observed, and that this deserving cause will be greatly helped by the services held and the collections taken. Let every pastor bring this important matter to the attention of his people.

In a note bringing us some subscriptions on April 7, Rev. M. L. Burton, the pastor of our First Church at Gulfport, adds: "I am now able to get out, but am very weak. I held services last Sunday for the first time in three months." We are very glad indeed to know that Brother Burton has recovered sufficiently to take up his work again and we pray that he will rapidly regain his strength. He has wrought splendidly in his present important field, and he has been sorely missed by his flock during his long-continued illness.

Brother J. E. Walker, of Rockwall, Texas, a former Louisianian, in ordering the Advocate to be sent to his home, says: "I suppose that most of the old ministers that we knew have crossed over the river, but we feel that any news from our former State will be of interest. We are living within the bounds of the North Texas Conference, in which the Church is doing a great work. This (Rockwall) county was the first county in Texas to go dry, and we expect to elect a Ball that will continue to roll forward to victory the cause of prohibition."

The many friends of Brother and Sister W. S. Shipman will regret to learn that James, their sixteen-year-old son, who, with his two brothers, has been attending Millsaps College, has recently been seriously ill with pneumonia at Jackson, Miss. Writing on April 3, Brother Shipman stated that the physicians and nurse attending his stricken son thought that he was decidedly better, and that they were much encouraged about his condition. We have had no later news, but we trust that the dear boy has continued to improve, and that ere this he is well past the danger mark and is on the road to a safe and complete recovery.

If you desire a trip to the mountains and a delightful ten days of study and rest as well, why not attend the great Interdenominational Summer Conference for the South, to be held June 26 to July 5, at the Blue Ridge Association Grounds, in North Carolina? Practically all phases of church work, especially the missionary activities, will be thoroughly discussed by men and women of national prominence in religious work. The location is ideal, three miles out from the little village of Black Mountain, with the "everlasting hills" on every side, and with excellent hotel accommodations. For further information write to the Educational Department, Board of Missions, M. E. Church, South, Box 218, Nashville, Tenn.

In a card written on the 9th inst., Rev. J. H. Holder, our pastor at Okolona, Miss., says: "I am now on my way to visit my wife in the Baptist Hospital in Memphis, Tenn., where she underwent a very serious operation ten days ago. Her condition is very encouraging, and we hope that in about two weeks she will be able to return home. We have every reason to think that she will completely recover in a few months." We regret very much indeed to be apprised of Sister Holder's illness, but are happy to know that she has the prospect of being perfectly restored to health. May the Heavenly Father have these worthy itinerants in his gracious keeping in this season of suffering and anxiety!

Rev. B. E. Meigs, the pastor of the Rankin Street Church of Jackson, Miss., under date of the 8th inst., writes as follows: "We have just closed a very successful revival in which Brother D. E. Kelley did most of the preaching. It was done well, and 22 members joined during the meeting. Forty-one have been added to our roll since the Annual Conference. Our Sunday school is doing the best work that it has ever done in its history. We have just completed and moved into a very comfortable parsonage. Brother Meigs has also added 14 to the number of Advocates taken by his members, and states that he is resolved to increase the list to at least 20 at an early date. We scarcely need to say that we highly appreciate this fine service rendered the Conference organ."

Brother G. G. Yeager writes of the misfortunes that have lately befallen the town of Hermanville, Miss. About 50 per cent of the business houses in the place were destroyed by fire some time since, and to this grave disaster was also added a bank failure that inflicted losses upon many of the people. We deeply sympathize with our brother and his flock in the adversities that have come to them, and we pray that a favoring Providence may soon smile upon them and usher in a brighter and better day. Particularly do we regret to be informed of the continued illness of Sister Yeager, who has lately found it necessary to return to a hospital in Jackson, Miss., for another operation. Let the brethren remember this anxious pastor and his stricken helpmeet at the throne of grace."

The corner stone of the new Carrollton M. E. Church, South, was laid with impressive ceremonies last Sunday afternoon by Dr. J. M. Henry, presiding elder of the New Orleans District. The following other ministers were present on that interesting occasion: Rev. F. R. Hill, Jr., Rev. W. L. Doss, Dr. J. T. Sawyer, Dr. S. H. Werlein, Rev. R. H. Harper, Rev. R. W. Vaughan, Rev. W. G. Evans, and the pastor, Rev. J. G. Snelling. Among the articles placed in the receptacle were a Bible and hymn book formerly owned by Bishop J. C. Keener, the gifts of his granddaughter, Miss Mary Wilkinson; a copy of the Discipline, the last Minutes of the Louisiana Conference, copies of the New Orleans and Nashville Christian Advocates, the Epworth Era, and Missionary Voice, and a full list of the membership of the Church and the contributors to the new church building. It is expected that the new house of worship will be ready for use about June 1.

THE LESSER EVIL.

"At the Battle of Cedar Creek," said the veteran captain of a company in one of Virginia's bravest regiments, "my company, which generally wasn't afraid of the archfiend himself, grew demoralized and panic-stricken. Despite all my efforts, they broke and started pell-mell for the rear."

"As one fellow, whom I knew was as fearless as a lion, dashed by me, I drew my revolver and cried:

"Halt, and return to your place! If you don't, I will shoot!"

"Shoot and be hanged!" he replied, never slackening his pace. "What's one bullet to a basketful!"—The Youth's Companion.

Obituaries not over 200 words in length will be published free of charge. All over 200 words will be charged at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around. Otherwise the obituaries will be edited down to 200 words.

The spirit of BENNIE SMITH took its flight to the Father who gave it, on March 26, 1914. He suffered much as the cause of his death was blood poison. He professed faith in Christ in August, 1911, and joined the Pleasant Grove M. E. Church, South. During his sickness he called for the writer to pray with him several times and he talked about his sins being forgiven. Just before leaving earth he lifted his hand toward heaven and said, "I want to go;" and when some one asked where he wanted to go, he exclaimed "To papa." His father died some years ago. Bennie was only 14 years old when he died, but best of all he had made his peace with God. He leaves a host of friends to mourn their loss. May God help us to meet him in heaven. His pastor.

The subject of this sketch A. J. SULLIVAN, was born in Jefferson County, Miss., July 15, 1833. He had resided within four miles of his birth place until a few weeks before his death, when he removed to Bude, Miss., about twelve miles from his old home. He was married to Miss Lydia C. McKnight Oct. 13, 1858, and departed this life March 14, 1914. "Uncle Jack," as he was familiarly called, was our leading member at Providence Church, having been a steward for over 40 years. He was a great churchman and exemplified the true spirit of the Psalmist when he said, "I was glad when they said unto me let us go into the house of the Lord." He was faithful to all duties committed to his care, and was a father indeed to his younger colleagues in Church work. That his mantle may rest on his children is the prayer of one who loved him.

J. M. GRIFFING.

In the early morn of March 10, 1914, a loved one passed through "the gates ajar" and entered into the rest that remains for the people of God. Sister M. F. RICHARDSON died at the age of 73 years. Her life was one of sacrifice and heroic efforts for the good of others. She was left motherless at the tender age of 10 years, with the care of four younger sisters. What a responsibility! Yet she faithfully stood by us and bore her cares without a murmur. She joined the church in early life and proved her faith by her works. Her calm and serene life and death were alike wonderful; and will ever remain an inspiration to her children and loved ones while fond memories last. I know that each one will feel that heaven is nearer and dearer, since she has gone to join mother and grandmother there.

Her sister.

MRS. J. A. STEPHENS.

H. MONTIE WRIGHT, son of R. J. Wright, Jr., and Mrs. Minnie L. Wright, was born on May 3, 1891. He was a grandson of the honored and loved physician of Roxie, Miss., Dr. R. J. Wright. He was dedicated to the Lord, on June 6, 1892, joined the M. E. Church, South, on May 14, 1904, and lived a consistent life till his death, on March 31, 1914. Montie was one of the most self-sacrificing young men I ever knew, and he was always ready to assist his fellowmen in any laudable undertaking. He was honest, truthful, brave and industrious. These virtues coupled with his humility and strong faith in God made him one of Franklin County's best citizens. In his death Mississippi lost one of her noblest sons, his Christian parents a loving son, his relatives a worthy loved one, and the Church a faithful member. He was buried in the Methodist Cemetery at Roxie, Miss., the funeral services being conducted by the writer. The funeral

Col. THOMAS HARDEMAN LEWIS was born June 16, 1836, and died June 30, 1914, after an operation at Touro Infirmary in New Orleans. Col. Lewis was the grandson of Seth Lewis, who for a generation was the chief support of the Methodist Church in Opelousas. Col. Lewis inherited the aptitude of his father and grandfather for the legal profession, and he was eminently successful as a practitioner. When quite a young man he enlisted in the Confederate Army and was a brave and faithful soldier. After the war he made a useful citizen, taking part in all reformatory movements, which sought to better civil conditions. He is said to have been a "pioneer in some of the most important movements in the State." He was immensely influential in the anti-lottery movement. He is called "the father of the Good Government League." He led the fight against liquor in St. Landry Parish and helped to make that parish dry against great opposition. He was always ready to throw himself into every movement for the improvement of the moral and material conditions of the people. He was of the temper to support what was right without counting the cost to himself. His generous soul was too magnanimous to allow personal advantage to sway him in a contest between right and wrong. He was moral to the center, and this

He was loyal to the center, and this determined his attitude towards men and movements. In spite of the fact that he had great influence as a citizen and was on the State Democratic Committee for a generation, he never held an office except on the State Board of Education a short while without pay. He steadfastly refused to be a candidate for any office. When offered a place on the appellate bench of the State he declined it. He wished only to be a useful citizen. He had a mind capable of great achievement. He would have more than filled the office of Governor, or U. S. Senator, and his high character would have adorned either position. With the great superiority of personality, he was a man of singular simplicity. Seeing him after half a century of separation, I was profoundly impressed with his greatness and his simplicity. His gentleness was beautiful. He was very affectionate with his family. For many years his eyesight was so impaired that he could not read, and he depended on his son, who was his partner, to read law to him and so continued his practice. I had much conversation with him on the vital subject of religion two years ago, when I visited him; and I was not surprised to learn that he was ready to go when called away from this life. He calmly spoke to his wife and children. With his arms folded about his wife, with whom he had lived in accord for over fifty years, he told her that he was ready. He bade them an affectionate farewell, then "fell on sleep," quietly and peacefully. He was an affectionate father, devoted to his children and grandchildren. He was a model husband, as tender as he could be. His ministries to a delicate wife were un-failing and affectionate through long years of suffering and his patience and sympathy were inexhaustable. He was for years an officer in the Church and his liberality was large and generous. He leaves a good name, and his loved ones can rejoice in it.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father, in His wise Providence, has seen fit to call to his reward our beloved brother, Dr. Chesley Daniel; and Whereas, Dr. Daniel has been for many years a devout member of our Church and an honored member of this Board of Stewards; therefore be it Resolved, 1. That we feel sorely bereaved in the death of Dr. Daniel, that we greatly miss his genial presence and wise counsel in our Conference sessions, and that our Church has lost one of its most efficient and loyal members.
2. That we hereby extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and assure them of our love and true esteem.
3. That we request our Secretary to send a copy of these resolutions to the bereaved family, that a copy be spread on the minutes of this Conference, and that a copy be forwarded to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.
R. A. TUCKER, President.
C. H. CURD, Secretary.

THE PASSING OF A LOYAL LAYMAN.

On March 16, 1914, James Paris Goodnight met instant death by accident while in the discharge of his duties as timber dock foreman for the Bowman-Hicks Lumber Company, at Oakdale, La.

Brother Goodnight leaves a wife and three small children to mourn his untimely death, together with a host of friends. The M. E. Church, South, and the great cause for which it stands, has not had a more loyal layman to fall within her ranks. His energy was untiring and his faith was of such magnitude that it made him a workman that needed not to be ashamed. He loved his home and his church above all. We are building a new church here, and to honor God with a modern temple of worship had been his chiefest ambition. He had planned every detail, given his time, prayers and money, that our new church might be a garner for the field here, that is white unto harvest.

Inasmuch as it pleased the Father to call our friend and brother, seemingly before his task was done, we pray that we may imitate his strength of character and Christian example, bringing honor and glory to the God of our Church. He was well read, intelligent, busy and useful. There was nothing in his life hidden, and his daily walk was above reproach. In private conversation he often spoke in the most positive language of his firm foundation and faith in his inheritance referred to by the Savior in the fourteenth chapter of John. We shall meet hereafter; but we shall miss him here. In the home, the Sunday school, the church choir, the preaching services, and in the business of the church, there will be a vacant chair.

We extend our love to the bereaved family, and mingle our tears in our common loss, but we remember that earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot cure.

Signed by: B. H. Sheppard, pastor;
J. W. Hughes, and A. W. Bryan.

IN MEMORIAM.

This world is the garden of God, and here are planted many flowers; some at once respond to the Florist's care, attaining the full blush of matured beauty, while others are still striving to bloom. God is attracted by the exceptional loveliness and purity of this flower, and commands that it be gathered and given a place in his mansion, there to adorn and cast its sweet fragrance. This flower never wilts, but continually gives off its sweet perfume, which is wafted throughout the heavens even reaching again its earthly nursery where it reinvigorates other flowers encouraging their petals to swell, their buds to open, unfolding the full beauty of God's flower. God again sends his angel florist to pluck these other flowers and place them as companion flowers of the first making of God's house something not only angelic in beauty and purity but angelic in fact, for these rare flowers are transformed and made into the angels of God retaining their eternal beauty, never fading.

It was once our pleasure to be chosen as the keeper for a time of one of these rare plants. We placed it in the sunny isles of God's own royal garden—the Church—where it absorbed a portion of the vigor and loveliness of others already there. It continued to grow in favor with God and in the love of its companions until the 7th day of February, when nearing her twenty-second year, we surrendered up to God our sweet charge. God sent his angel florist with command to pluck this lovely flower and bring it to his house to adorn and delight the same. So passed Mrs. Eugenia Smith of Myleston, Miss., only child of P. Y. and Josie Miller. Her life was beautiful, her disposition lovely, obedient, ever thoughtful of the happiness of father, mother, and husband, true to her loved ones, true to her neighbors and to God—faithful and true unto the end. She is now forever at rest with her Lord and Savior from whence her beautiful influence reaches earthward inviting us to be of good cheer and follow her to where there is no death, no sorrow, never any more parting, where all is love.

THIS GIRL IS A WONDER.

You can make dollars and dollars selling Pure Fruit Candy; so if you want more money than you ever possessed, send forty-eight two-cent stamps to cover expense of mailing seventy-seven Pure Food Formulas, and a set of assorted bonbon moulds. I will help you start in business. I am glad to help others, who, like myself, need money. People say, "the candy is the best they ever tasted"—therein lies the beauty of the business. You don't have to canvass, you sell right from your own home. I made $12 the first day; so can you. Isabelle Inez, Block 1484, Pittsburgh, Pa.—Adv.

"What I can promise you from God is that if you have made up your mind to come from that far land, where you have been trying to satisfy yourself with husks, back to your Father's home, He will receive you with a Father's welcome, will forgive you the whole of the past; and there will be joy in Heaven."

GLASS OF SALTS IF YOUR KIDNEYS HURT

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble—Salts fine for Kidneys.

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges.

To neutralize these irritating acids get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonfull in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive; harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithiawater drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

DREAD OF AN OPERATION.

N. Manchester, Ind.—Mrs. Eva Bashore, of this place, says, "I suffered female misery of every description. Two doctors attended me, and advised an operation. I lost weight until I weighed only ninety pounds. I dreaded an operation, and, instead, began to take Cardui. In a short time I gained 25 pounds, and feel as well as I ever did. Cardui, I am sure, saved my life." Cardui is to-day used in thousands of homes, where it relieves pain and brings back strength and ambition. It is a woman's medicine, for women's ailments, and you are urged to try it for your troubles. Ask your druggist. He will tell you about Cardui.—Adv.

FRECKLE - FACE

Sun and Wind Bring Out Ugly Spots. How to Remove Easily.

Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-face, to try a remedy for freckles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is trifling.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from any druggist and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of the homely freckles and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

YOU NEED MEDICINE AT THIS TIME

Everybody is more or less troubled at this season with loss of vitality, failure of appetite, that tired feeling, or with bilious turns, dull headaches, indigestion and other stomach troubles, or with pimples and other eruptions on the face and body. The reason is, that the blood is impure and impoverished.

Hood's Sarsaparilla relieves all these ailments. Ask your druggist for this medicine and get it today. Nothing else acts like it. Get Hood's.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Where are we spiritually to-day? Has a knowledge of the deep things of God ceased amongst men, or become the possession of a chosen few? These are questions that some of our preachers and members are honestly trying to answer. Amongst Methodists, if we were to measure religion in Canada by attendance upon class-meeting and prayer meeting, or even by the willingness to speak of one's personal experience in public, we would be led to conclude that in many cases experimental religion has decidedly decreased.

But these are not the only signs of spiritual life, and we are glad to recognize some most encouraging features in the life of to-day. We are glad to note Bishop J. F. Berry's answer to the question recently propounded to him as to whether a revival of religion was near. In answer the Bishop gave the following facts which he has observed: The remarkable revival of Bible study, the extraordinary interest in temperance and moral reform, the many young men who are turning toward the ministry, the fact that religion has suddenly become a popular topic of conversation, the present remarkable evangelistic activity, and the spirit of interdenominational co-operation now dominating most of the churches.

It is well for us, as we note the unfavorable signs in our religious life, to note also the unmistakably favorable ones.—The Christian Guardian.

"The best way to break a bad habit is to put a good one in its place. It is the surest and safest antagonism."

A little thought will show you how vastly your own happiness depends on the way other people bear themselves toward you. Turn the idea around, and remember that just so much are you adding to the pleasure or the misery of other people's days.—Southern Churchman.

One of the first principles of conduct is obedience. If we do not learn when young to honor our parents and obey those who are set over us, to give precedence to age and to admit the sacred claim of suffering, no perfection of soul will ever for us be possible.—Southern Churchman.

A DOCTOR'S ENDORSEMENT.

Physicians as a rule are rather slow to endorse proprietary remedies, but they are quick to recognize real merit and often give their highest endorsement to a preparation by prescribing it in their practice. Dr. M. L. Fielder, Eclectic P. O., Ala., says this of Tetterine: "I know it to be a radical cure for tetter, salt rheum, eczema and all kindred diseases of the skin and scalp. I never prescribe anything else in all skin trouble." 50c at drug stores or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

MIGHT BE DEAD-TO-DAY.

Garden City, Kan.—In a letter from Mrs. James Hamner, of this city, she says: "I firmly believe that I would not be alive to-day if it were not for Cardui. I had been a sufferer from womanly troubles all my life, until I found that great remedy. I feel that I can't praise it too highly." Are you a woman, suffering from some of the troubles to which a woman is peculiarly liable? If so, why not try Cardui, the woman's tonic? You can rely on Cardui. It is purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, and acts gently, but surely, without bad after-effects. 'Twill help you. Ask your druggist.—Adv.

REPORT OF THE LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Seventy-nine delegates and nine visitors met in Rayville, La., March 31, and April 1, 2, and enjoyed the greatest missionary meeting in the history of our work in the State.

Mrs. Harris brought the "Heart of China" so near to our hearts that it can never seem "foreign" any more. Miss Tommie Foster added her message from the same country, and as these two devoted missionaries told of the "awakening," and how much depended on us as a nation and as individuals, we felt constrained to ask, "Who is equal to the task?" But God has answered us before we call, and truly may we echo: "He is able," and upon him alone can we rely.

Mrs. Marshall is a remarkable Bible reader and has the rare gift of imparting to others the beauties of its teachings.

Dr. Sexton's sermon on "The Talents" was a new revelation of an old text, and left all without excuse should we fail to use the talents God has given us, whether it is one, two or five, and encouraged us to faithfulness even though ours be the smallest gift.

With radiant face and burning words Miss Isles told of her work among the French Catholic people of our own State, their heart-hunger for the "old, old story;" while Miss Nutt plead most eloquently for St. Mark's Hall, New Orleans, to which we pledged ourselves anew.

Miss Cora Godat, our new girl missionary, won all hearts. There will soon be a new "tie that binds" us to another clime, and the Louisiana Conference can boast of three foreign missionaries. Gladly we pledged our prayers and money to their support.

We are proud of our State officers; they are giving good service. We did nothing amiss when we re-elected Mrs. Bliss as president; she has served us faithfully and well in the past. Every woman who was in Rayville would "bolt" if you should criticize Mrs. Holt. And, I declare, Mrs. Cunningham can make the troubled waters calm. With Mrs. Holmes we feel quite sure our monthly payments are secure.

The reports of the vice-presidents and district secretaries proclaimed the fact that we have lived up to our watchword, "Go Forward," and that they at least had anticipated the recommendation of Mrs. Bliss and had added "efficiency."

Mrs. Kennedy's exegesis of Social Service was a marvel of simplicity and truth, and evoked much favorable comment. All these reports will be printed in the Minutes and every woman will do well to read them.

Rayville proved to us that the old-fashioned "hospitality," for which our Southland has always been noted, still lives. Brother Townsley made a model host, ably assisted by the charming hostesses of all denominations. But the enforced silence of three days was beginning to tell on Brother Townsley, and when last seen he seemed to be making up for lost time, his conversational powers having returned.

New Orleans was chosen for the next meeting place, Rayville following as a close second. We all wanted to be delegates to the Board meeting now in session at Fort Worth, Texas.

We would unhesitatingly recommend the new Voice hat exhibited by Mrs. Marshall. Every local agent should have one as an advertisement of our goods.

The women promised that our editor-in-chief should no longer have to "make bricks without straw" in the publicity department, and we are looking to a fulfillment of these promises. Mrs. A. C. McKinney.

ANNUAL WOMAN'S MISSIONARY COUNCIL.

All our women have become apprised of the great gathering that began on April 8, to continue to April 17, at Fort Worth, Texas. New Orleans was a sort of clearing house for the delegates from the Southeastern sections of our Church, and many of the prominent women of Methodism were through that city recently on their way to Texas. A right interesting gathering took place in the Union Depot in New Orleans after the arrival of a train bringing Mrs. MacDonel, Miss Davies, and Mrs. Ross from Nashville, and Mrs. Luke Johnson from Atlanta. Several of the New Orleans women conferred with them relative to the French Mission work in Louisiana. Brother Breithaupt, who is in charge of this work at Houma, spread a map on a table before the assembly and showed them the territory that was being evangelized. Mrs. Lewis Clark, Mrs. Crow Girard, Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, Miss Nutt and other New Orleans workers were present. The little conference between trains was most effective and probably saved much expense in "getting together" to make plans and talk about our problems.

Among those of the Louisiana Conference that are at Fort Worth this week are Mrs. A. F. Godat, of New Orleans, Mrs. A. P. Holt, of Crowley, and Mrs. Abel Bliss, of Shreveport.

Much is expected of our great Southern Methodist woman's assembly this year. Large problems face them, and we feel sure they will be met with calm judgment and prayerful deliberation.

THE SILENT PIANO.

Is there a silent piano in your home? If so, why not exchange it for one which every member of your family can play, no matter whether they have ever taken music lessons or not? Even little children of five or six years can be quickly taught to render the sweetest music on the Ludden & Bates Self-Player Piano. And the same instrument can be used by musicians just as they would use an ordinary piano. It is therefore two instruments in one, a self-player for those who do not know one note from another, and a regular piano for use by musicians.

If you secure your Player piano through the Club you have the special privilege of exchanging your old music rolls for new compositions at any time, at a nominal cost to cover postage and the mere expense of handling.

Write for the Club catalogue and full particulars of the exchange privilege, free music roll service, big saving in prices, convenient terms, etc. Address the Managers, Ludden & Bates, New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club Department, Atlanta, Ga.—Adv.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Quarterly Conference of the Pickens (Miss.) Charge, March 23, 1914.

Our honored brother Britton Thomas Hoover has "fallen on sleep," and we, his fellow stewards, miss him from his place to-day, in which he served so faithfully for many years. Also we shall miss his counsel and service in all departments of our church work; therefore, Resolved,

1. That we officially express our appreciation of his long and useful life, his Christian zeal, his simple faith, his love for his Church, his family and his friends. May the memory of these traits inspire us and others to higher living.

2. That we tender our sincere sympathy to the bereaved family and commend them to the God whom he served.

3. That these resolutions be spread on our minutes and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" FOR LIVER AND BOWELS

Cure Sick Headache, Constipation, Bilioussness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath—Candy Cathartic.

No odds how bad your liver, stomach or bowels; how much your head aches, how miserable you are from constipation, indigestion, bilioussness and sluggish bowels—you always get relief with Cascarets. They immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the constipated waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your liver and bowels clean; stomach sweet and head clear for months. They work while you sleep.

Live always in expectation of the King's arrival, and you will be ready to greet Him when he comes.—Southern Churchman.

Colds Cause Headache and Grip
LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE tablets remove the cause. There is Only One "BROMO QUININE". Look for the signature of E. W. GROVE on each box. Price 25 cents.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

WE MUST HAVE THE EXPOSITION.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to bring back color, gloss, thickness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant, remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.

The Missionary Institute for the western half of the Alexandria District was opened here last Tuesday night with a good sermon on "Isaiah's Vision" by Rev. G. A. Morgan and closed last night with a stirring sermon by Rev. W. H. Long.

This was the first of two such Institutes arranged for by our energetic presiding elder, Rev. H. W. May, the one for the eastern section to be held at Jena, April 29, 30. To the mind of the writer this plan of dividing the territory thus, was wiser and better than it would have been to have had one institute for the whole district, which covers such a large scope of territory.

It was a matter of regret that several of the pastors were unavoidably detained at home and that only one layman, Hon. T. W. Holloman of Alexandria, attended the meeting. It would be a splendid investment if the pastors in the other part of the District can each induce, at least one layman, say the lay leader, to attend the Institute at Jena. Suppose you try it, brethren!

Brother May had a well-arranged program which was carried through as well as it could be with several persons absent who had been assigned to places on it. Most of the topics had been given out as symposiums and, I believe, on all except, perhaps, one, there was at least one of the speakers present who had had opportunity to make preparation for the discussion; then others "filled in" to make up for the absentees, and Brother May had some good helpful, thought-provoking remarks to make on each topic. He also gave us a splendid and helpful sermon suitable for the occasion. We had good sermons by Revs. G. E. Cameron and W. S. Henry. I wish to say that I received personal help and inspiration from each of the sermons and addresses and am sure that all who heard them were likewise helped; and doubtless each of us resolved, with God's help, to strive the harder to awaken a larger interest in the cause of missions among our people, and to extend Christ's kingdom in these borders. To this end, I think every pastor present at the close, proffered his services to the presiding elder to assist in one or more revival meetings where he could be used to the best advantage.

The address of Hon. T. W. Holloman was very informing concerning conditions in the Louisiana Conference with special reference to the Alexandria District. By carefully worked-out figures he showed what had been paid per capita for benevolences and the support of the ministry separately; then for all purposes combined last year; and what amount per member, per week, would be necessary to meet all our expenses and every claim this year. Then taking the number of the unevangelized accepted by the leaders of our Church as our share of the task he showed that this District would have to support only three missionaries, on a basis of $2000 for each, and that ten cents per member per week in addition to our other collections would put them in the field and sustain them. Then he closed by giving an inspiring vision of this District undertaking the task and thus provoking the other Districts of the Louisiana Conference to do likewise, and the inspiration spreading, from Conference to Conference, until the whole Church, having caught the vision, would fall into line, and then other churches, until the whole Christian world is enlisted and the vision of John R. Mott, of "The whole world evangelized in this generation," is finally and speedily consummated.

May the great head of the Church endue us with the power of his Holy Spirit to get the vision, and undertake and carry to final consummation this magnificent task!

A HEALING SPRING AT YOUR DOOR.

Here is a very unusual and peculiar offer—one that you rarely meet with. It evidences great faith on the part of its maker and inspires confidence. It is made by an earnest and enthusiastic man who not only thinks but knows that he is right. He proposes to give you the equivalent of a three weeks' visit to a Mineral Spring of most remarkable curative powers and he guarantees that you will be benefited, otherwise there will be no charge. His offer has been accepted by several thousand sufferers and his records show that only two-in a thousand, on the average, report no benefit.

If you suffer with dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, gall stones, kidney, bladder or liver disease, uric acid poisoning, or other condition caused by an impure blood, take Mr. Shivar at his word and sign and mail the following letter:

Shivar Spring,
Box 17H, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:
I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

OPENING OF THE BILOXI WESLEY HOUSE.

A formal opening ceremony at the Wesley House was held at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, April 3, to commemorate the completion of extensive improvements on the building which will make possible the extension and amplification of the mission work done at Point Cadet by this splendid institution of the Methodist Church. It was attended by about one hundred people from Biloxi, Gulfport and adjacent coast towns.

The work at the house cost about $1,500. A second floor has been added on which are situated the bedrooms, dining rooms and kitchenette for the mission work. The lower floor will now be used entirely for school and community purposes.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, head of the Seamen's Bethel at Gulfport, acted as master of ceremonies. The devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. M. L. Burton and Rev. W. H. Huntley of Gulfport. A vocal solo, "Abide With Me," was rendered by Miss Mary Wilkinson accompanied by Miss Willis Germany. This was followed by short talks relating to the work at Wesley House by Rev. H. W. Van Hook, Rev. M. L. Burton and Rev. W. L. Linfield. Rev. W. T. Griffin reported on the expenditure of the funds used for improving the property.

Another vocal solo, "Mother Machree," was sung by Mrs. J. A. Osolnach, who was accompanied by Mrs. C. P. Huggins. Dr. Werlein, pastor of the First Methodist Church in New Orleans, was the chief speaker of the afternoon and he talked earnestly of the mission work being conducted by the Church at this and similar institutions. Mrs. R. E. Johnson of Gulfport spoke briefly upon the work.

The work of this institution is in charge of Miss M. M. Long, deaconess, assisted by Miss Stubbs and Mr. Griffin and by the voluntary assistance of local ladies who give their time and services to the good work.—Gulfport News.

LAURENS INSTITUTE, MEXICO.

Regular class work at Laurens Institute was interrupted for only seven school days during 1913. The English department was not opened in September, when the new school year was begun, as the Americans had nearly all left for the States. The Spanish department gradually increased until we closed the year with about 125 pupils. The record the Institute has been able to make under such conditions will no doubt add to its usefulness in the future. My assistant, Professor Garza Leal, and the teachers have worked faithfully in spite of alarms and discouragements. We enrolled during the year 326 pupils—102 girls and 224 boys. Of these, 212 paid all or a part of their tuition, 43 had scholarships or were admitted free, being children of our church. We did not hope to have a large school as long as the war continued, but we were ambitious to keep Laurens Institute open. With the blessing of God upon us we were able to do so, and even succeeded in holding our students for the entire year.—N. H. Joyner, Monterey.

LINCOLN AT A SALOON DOOR.

Some years ago, at a Lincoln meeting among the old soldiers of a Michigan city, one of the battle-worn veterans gave the following testimony: "We have heard what Lincoln has done for all of us; I want to tell what he did for me. I was a private in one of the Western regiments that arrived first in Washington after the call for 75,000 men. We were marching through the city amid great crowds of cheering people, and then, after going into camp, were given leave to see the town.

"Like many other of our boys, the saloon or tavern was the first thing we hit. With my comrade I was just about to go into the door of one of these places when a hand was laid upon my arm, and looking up, there was President Lincoln from his great height above me, a mere lad, regarding me with those kindly eyes and his pleasant smile.

"I almost dropped with surprise and bashfulness, but he held out his hand, and as I took it he shook hands in strong Western fashion, and said, 'I don't like to see our uniforms going into these places.' That was all he said. He turned immediately and walked away; and we passed on. We would not have gone into that tavern for all the wealth of Washington city.

"And this is what Abraham Lincoln did then and there for me. He fixed me so that whenever I go near a saloon and in any way think of entering, his words and face come back to me. That experience has been a means of salvation to my life. To-day I hate the saloon, and have hated it ever since I heard those words from that great man."—John Talmadge Bergen, D. D., in Interior.

When you preach follow the example and precept of our blessed Lord and preach the Word. When you discuss other topics don't delude yourself into the belief that you are preaching; and don't expect from that sort of pulpit exercise the blessing and results promised to preaching.—Southern Churchman.

"I wish to attest my appreciation of your wonderful Gray's Ointment for the cure of boils, sores, cuts, etc. I have used it in my family for ten years and it has cured in every instance. I have recommended it so much that my friends all call me doctor."—W. Evans, Danville, Va. STRIKINGLY INCONSISTENT.

Human nature is full of inconsistencies. It is not uncommon to see men assume an attitude with reference to something which is in irreconcilable conflict with their bearing toward something else. For instance, we sometimes hear a person proudly affirm that he cannot accept religious teachings that he cannot understand, while in all nature about him he is accepting mysteries which are insolvable and working in harmony with them. He ridicules the doctrine of the Incarnation because it is beyond his comprehension, but he sows his grain in the spring and gathers it in the autumn, though the secret of life in vegetation is one which the grandest human intellects have never been able to peer into to the slightest extent. He decries a religion that conditions its benefits upon faith, but fails to see that all his labors and achievements are predicated upon faith in his fellow-men and his belief in the constancy of the laws of the universe. Indeed, people are, as a rule, remarkably credulous about everything except the existence and regnancy of God and the wonderful disclosures of the great written revelation that he has given the world. Even the life of the average Christian is largely made up of struggles with doubt, and is, to a considerable extent, impoverished and dwarfed by a lack of trust in the teachings and promises of the Heavenly Father. Truthfully does the poet sing:

"It is strange that we trust each other,
And only doubt our Lord;
We take the word of mortals,
And yet distrust His Word.
But, oh, what light and glory
Would shine o'er all our days
If we always would remember,
God means just what he says."

A LESSON FROM WESLEY'S JOURNAL.

"Monday, June, 15, 1767. * * * At the desire of a good old widow, Mrs. M—, I went with Mr. S— to C—. Lord and Lady M— were there before us, to whom I was probably, 'A not expected, much-unwelcome guest.' But whatsoever it was to them, it was a heavy afternoon to me, as I had no place to retire to, and so was obliged to be in genteel company for two or three hours together. O what a dull thing is life without religion! I do not wonder that time hangs heavy upon the hands of all who know not God, unless they are perpetually drunk with noise of one kind or another."

"Tuesday, Jan. 15, 1771. I dined at Mr.—'s, an upright man, willing to know and live the Gospel. I cannot but think he would be an eminent Christian, if he were not so rich!"

"Tuesday, Feb. 19, 1771. I preached once more at Welling to a larger congregation than I have seen there for years. And many seemed to be uncommonly affected; particularly one young gentlewoman, who had never heard any preaching of this kind before this evening. After struggling some time, she cried out aloud, and could not be comforted, although her mother told her, 'how good she was, nay, and had been all her life.'"

"Sunday, August 25, 1771. * * * In the afternoon I preached in Monkton church (one of the three belonging to Pembroke); a large old, ruinous building. I suppose it has scarcely had such a congregation in it during this century. Many of them were gay, genteel people. So I spake on the first elements of the Gospel; but I was still out of their depth. O how hard it is to be shallow enough for a polite audience!"

These extracts from his Journal show how little the great Founder of Methodism was blinded and influenced by the blandishments of the world. He saw the vanity and emptiness of its pleasures, riches, and honors, and appraised them at their true value. He perceived that they were generally an obstruction to the Christian life and lamented the spiritual destitution with which they so often afflicted their possessors. Such a thing as toadying to the titled and wealthy and running after them, Mr. Wesley never remotely thought of. His only desire, as he chanced to come into contact with them, was to lift up Christ before them, that possibly He might save them.

And Mr. Wesley's view was also that of our Lord when he was upon earth. He dwelt among the poor, and sought nothing at the hands of those who had great estates. How very impressive is that event in his life recorded by Mark and Luke: "And Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury; and many that were rich cast in much. And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing. And he called unto him his disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury; for all they did cast in of their abundance, but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living."

We fear that if some of the so-called Christians of this day had been present on that memorable occasion they would never have gotten their eyes off the gifts of the millionaires.

DR. CANNON'S VIEW.

We are publishing in this issue of the Advocate a somewhat extended discussion of the Vanderbilt situation by Dr. James Cannon, Jr., of Virginia, who is one of the ablest men in the connection and whose loyalty to the Church is beyond question. With Dr. Cannon's conclusions as to what the Church has lost by the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee and that her relation to the University as defined by that tribunal is an intolerable one, we are in the heartiest accord; but we are not disposed to give assent to the course of procedure which he has mapped out for the General Conference. To his proposed plan of action we have two objections: (1) It would have a tendency to make it appear that the Church is seeking further negotiations with the Vanderbilt Trustees. We fully agree with Dr. E. G. B. Mann, Editor of the Central Methodist Advocate, that the initiative, if there are to be any further efforts to reach terms of agreement, ought to come from the Board of Trust of the University and not from the Church. Having been insulted by Mr. Carnegie and by the Supreme Court of Tennessee by the language used in its decision, we think that Southern Methodism has been humiliated quite enough, and that we should be slow to place the Church in an attitude that possibly might lead to her being further ignored and spurned. Let Mahomet come to the mountain, instead of having the mountain to go to Mahomet.

(2.) We do not approve of the idea of creating a Commission to determine the future course of the Church toward the University, for the reason that it would tend to leave everything in a state of uncertainty. If there should be any negotiations between the Trustees and the Commission looking to the maintenance of the connection of the Church with the University, in the very nature of the case they would have to be largely tentative, for what the Commission would do, would be subject to approval by the next session of the General Conference. We have had eight or nine years of controversy concerning Vanderbilt University, and we think that is ample. Let the General Conference definitely settle the matter. In our opinion, there is little merit in any plea for delay. If the Vanderbilt Trustees have any proposition to make to the Church, let it come to the General Conference. By the time that body meets and adjourns, they will have had nearly two months to formulate any message that they may wish to send. It may be said that the Board of Trust of the University will not meet until June. To this we reply that it is a small body (composed of thirty-three men) and that they can have a special meeting at a small expense if they desire to do so. It is high time that the Church was ceasing to show undue consideration to these gentlemen.

In this connection, it may not be amiss to say to our readers that we have carefully read Dr. W. F. Tillett's lengthy article in last week's issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate and that we regard it as exceedingly fallacious in its contentions and erroneous in its conclusions. It may seem plausible to those who are not definitely informed concerning the history of the establishment of the University and the facts of the long-continued controversy over it; but in our opinion it will not at all stand the test of a careful analysis. Possibly we may review the Dean's discussion to some extent in the next number of the Advocate.

INFLUENCE OF A SPIRIT-FILLED SOUL.

A soul in which the spirit of a divine purpose is at flood glorifies everything it touches, enhaloes every place and act, lifts the meanest thing to be divine, sends the thrill of its energy through the dullest, puts life into that which seems death. Such a soul transfigures, if it may not transmute, everything it comes in contact with.—J. F. W. Ware.

DR. CANNON ON THE VANDERBILT SITUATION.

The decision of the Tennessee Court in the Vanderbilt case was published in the last issue of the Advocate. The argument of the Court in justification of the decision would take up nearly one-half of one issue of the Advocate, and for the present it cannot be published.

The Nashville Evening Banner, which has fought the Church, now turns about and calls upon the Church to stand by the University as a "Methodist" school, whatever that may mean to the Banner. The conduct of the Banner is not difficult to comprehend. It is always for what seems to it to be the best thing in sight. When Mr. Carnegie's million was at stake, the Banner could not see the Methodist Church for the glitter of the million. But now that the million has been safely landed, the Methodist Church is the next largest thing in sight in the eyes of the Banner, and it begins to flatter the Church. The Editor of the Advocate has sent an article to the Banner for publication and as it is a discussion of the Vanderbilt decision, it is published in the Advocate in the exact form in which it was sent to the Banner. The article follows:

That Astonishing Vanderbilt Decision.

Editor Nashville Banner,

Dear Sir: I have been a reader of the Banner for several years and have read with interest most of the news stories, communications and editorials concerning the Vanderbilt law suit. I have read the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee in full, and also your editorial of Monday, March 23, concerning the Vanderbilt decision. I do not know which is the more surprising, the decision of the Court or the editorial of the Banner. In view of the position which the Banner has taken heretofore, and in view of the decision of the Court, it is amazing that it should state in its editorial "the conditions are unchanged. Vanderbilt still remains a great Methodist University, and the Methodist Church should lose none of the interest and pride it has always felt in the institution." And furthermore: "The Methodist Church has lost nothing by the decision of the Court, since through it the Church's relation to the University is the same that it has been for forty years."

Has Church Lost Nothing?

These statements may be simply a play upon words, and the Banner may mean to say that the Church has lost nothing by this decision, because, in view of this decision, the Church actually had nothing to lose, although she may have thought she had. But if the Banner means to say that the Church has lost nothing by the decision of the Supreme Court in its reversal of the decision of Chancellor Allison, its statement is, indeed, amazing. Has the Church lost nothing? Does the decision leave the Church's relation to the University the same as for forty years past?

"Representatives" of the Church.

(1) The Church has always thought that the members of the Memphis Convention which drew up the resolutions setting forth the purposes and objects of the corporation, was composed of "representatives" of the various Conferences. But the Tennessee Court declares that the Memphis Convention was not composed of "representatives" of the various Conferences, but was composed of individuals acting on their own personal responsibility.

Furthermore, the Church has always thought that the charter which was granted by the Circuit Court of Davidson County, Tennessee, was granted to men who petitioned for the charter "as representatives of the various Conferences," and not as individuals.

But the Court declares that the charter was granted to these men as individuals, and this despite the fact that the charter itself declares explicitly that the petitioners were citizens and residents of various States and "representatives" of the various Conferences mentioned in the charter.

"Central University of M. E. Church, South."

Certainly the Methodist Church and the Court of Davidson County believed that at the time the charter was granted, it was granted to men who claimed to be "representatives" of the Church, and certainly none of the Conferences ever at any time repudiated the claim of these men that they were acting as "representatives" of the Conferences. And it is not denied that these men "prayed" to be incorporated under the name and style of The Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. If any body of men ever tried to incorporate themselves as "representatives" of the Church these men did, and the eminent Chancellor of the Court, in 1872, apparently thought that they had done so.

In view of these facts it is astonishing to very many persons that the Supreme Court of Tennessee, sitting as a Court of Equity, should brush aside the real purpose and intention of the incorporators as clearly set forth in the charter, and should decide on purely technical grounds that the Board of Trustees of Vanderbilt University is not a "representative" body, as the charter declares.

Does the Banner hold that the Church has lost nothing by this decision?

Church the Real Founder.

(2) The Methodist Church thought that through its governing bodies, the Annual Conferences, acting through their chosen representatives who were elected by these same Annual Conferences, it had founded the "Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South," and that it was, therefore, entitled to such consideration and authority as properly belong to the founder of the University.

But the Tennessee Court declares that the Church did not found the University, but that Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt founded the University. The Court admits that Mr. Vanderbilt was not the original "designer" and "architect," but that as he furnished the money to put into operation the plan of the Church, he was the founder. If this position be correct, then the founder of every great institution is not the man nor the body which designs and plans the institution and labors to secure the means to maintain it, but only the person, or persons, who agree to furnish the money to put the plans into operation. Not the inventor, nor the discoverer is the man to be praised and to be highly regarded, but the man who furnished money to put the invention on the market. The Church was not founded by our Lord and the apostles, but by the men who gave money to carry on its work. By this decision the Church is blotted out as the founder of the University, and yet the Banner declares that the Church loses nothing by losing the consideration and authority which properly belong to her as the real founder of Vanderbilt University.

Church the Real Owner.

(3) The Church has always thought the Vanderbilt University belonged to the M. E. Church, South, and that from the very beginning the University had been under the control of the Church through the trustees originally selected by the Annual Conferences, and in later years confirmed by governing bodies of the Church. But the Tennessee Court declares that the relation "was not that of ownership by the Conferences but co-operation with the University and fair representation in its management."

Church Did Patronize.

(4) Closely allied to the above and to be considered along with it is the fact that the Church has always believed that she has patronized and fostered the University.

But the Tennessee Court declares that the Methodist Church cannot even be considered as the patron of the University in the proper meaning of that term. The Court gives utterance to the following astonishing paragraph in support of these positions:

"The Church is not entitled to credit for the Vanderbilt gift. The original endowment was given by Mr. Vanderbilt through Bishop McTyeire, without solicitation, to the corporation itself. It was not given to or through the Church. Mr. Vanderbilt was not a Churchman. At the time of his gift he must have been acquainted with the charter, including the Memphis resolutions and the by-laws of the University. He made his gift to the corporation by corporate name."

Somewhat Contradictory.

This paragraph seems to contradict itself to the average reader. It states that Mr. Vanderbilt must have been acquainted with the charter, and that he did not give money "to or through the Church;" that he gave it to the corporation. But the very name of the corporation is the "Central University of the M. E. Church, South," and the charter stated that the trustees were the "representatives" of certain Conferences of the Methodist Church. The charter was branded all over with Church relationship and control. Moreover, he gave his money because a Bishop of the Methodist Church laid before him the plan of the Church for this University. Moreover, Mr. Vanderbilt's wife was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, from the State of Alabama, and was a cousin of Mrs. McTyeire, and Mr. Vanderbilt addressed the letter containing his proposition to give $500,000 to a Bishop of the M. E. Church, South, and made it to the corporation known as the Central University of the M. E. Church, South, through a Bishop of that Church. And according to the testimony of Gov. Porter, of Tennessee, he made it with the full understanding and expectation that the University was to have the backing and support of a great Church.

Of course, if the relation of Bishop McTyeire to the Methodist Church is to be blotted out; if the fact that Mrs. Vanderbilt was a Southern Methodist is to be blotted out; if the fact that the charter declared explicitly that the petitioners applied for the charter as "representatives" of the Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, and that the name of the University was the "Central University of the M. E. Church, South," is to be blotted out; if all these things are to be ignored and swept aside, then there is no contradiction in the paragraph quoted above from the decision of the Tennessee Court.

Church Is Entitled to Credit.

And, furthermore, if Mr. Vanderbilt was not acquainted with all the facts as to the relationship of the Church to the University and was not impelled to make his gift because he had been impressed with the purposes and plans and possibilities of the University as set forth by Bishop McTyeire, a Bishop of the Methodist Church, then the Court may be right when it denies that the Church is "entitled to credit" for the gift of Mr. Vanderbilt. But if Mr. Vanderbilt knew all these facts stated above, as he certainly did, then if the Church is not "entitled to credit" for his gift to the Central University or the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, it would be absurd for the Church ever to claim that any gift is made to the Church through the influence of its "representatives," unless the donor shall have made an affidavit to the fact that the gift has been made to the Church because of the solicitation of "representatives" of the Church. Literally millions of dollars have been given to the Church by men who are not "Churchmen" through the solicitation of ministers, Christian educators and laymen for the expressed purpose of building churches and church schools and church institutions of various kinds; but it has never been thought necessary to require men to make an affidavit to these things.

The Tennessee Court admits that the University has drawn probably more than half of its students from Southern Methodism. It admits that in addition to all the fees and tuition from Methodist students, $325,000 have been contributed to the University for specific purposes by members of the Methodist Church. It is not claimed by the Court that any other denomination has shown similar interest in the work of the University, but this Tennessee Court declares that because the Vanderbilts were not members of the Methodist Church, and because they furnished the largest sums of money for the University, that the Vanderbilts are the patrons of the University, and that the Church cannot claim to have patronized it in any proper sense.

Summing up, therefore, we are told by the Tennessee Court that the Methodist Church did not found the University; that the Methodist Church has never owned the University, and that the Methodist Church has never patronized the University.

Does the Banner hold the Church has lost nothing by this decision?

Church Relationship Not Vital.

(5) These findings prepare us for the climax in this decision. The Church has always thought that its relation to the University is a vital relation; that the Church really has had a voice in the selection of the trustees.

But the Tennessee Court declares that the relation of the Church to the University is merely incidental and perfunctory. This is not the language used by the Court; but this is the meaning of the decision as careful examination will disclose.

The decision of the Court gives to the Board of Trust the right to elect its own members, and gives to these members so elected the right to take the oath of office, and to act as trustees, without waiting for confirmation by the General Conference or by any agent of the General Conference. If the General Conference or its agent shall confirm the election, it will add nothing to the powers of a trustee by that action. Should the Board of Education decline to confirm a trustee, the Board of Trust can elect the same person again, if it so desires, and he can serve until he is rejected again by the Board of Education, and by this process the Board of Trust could continue indefinitely the activity of any person whom it might desire as trustee, and the Church would be helpless to prevent it.

What real power is given to the Church by this decision? What real control does she have? None, absolutely none. The relation of the Church to the University can no longer be called a vital relation, for it is not necessary to the life of the perpetuity of the Institution, according to the decision of the Tennessee Court.

Does the Banner hold that the Church has lost nothing by this decision?

Church May Prove "Contumacious."

(6) The most astonishing word in the decision is, that this Court of Tennessee explicitly warns the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, that if it should "contumaciously" refuse to confirm members elected, its right to confirm would absolutely cease. The men who compose the Tennessee Court were elected to that position to interpret the laws of that State, but they were not put there to insult a great Church, and it is astonishing, indeed, that men who occupy such a position in the State should use such language and impute such possible conduct to the Church.

Suppose the Vanderbilt Board of Trust should continue to re-elect a man who had been rejected for the position of trustee by the General Conference, or its agent. Will not that be acting "contumaciously?" The Tennessee court can imagine apparently no possibility that the Vanderbilt Board of Trust may ever act contumaciously toward the Methodist Church. Certainly it has not held that board up to the world as possibly acting "contumaciously" as it has gratuitously intimated concerning the General Conference of the Methodist Church.

Relation Compromising, Unprofitable and Intolerable.

(7) In conclusion, the relation of the Methodist Church to the Vanderbilt University as outlined in this decision is compromising, unprofitable and intolerable, and unless this relation can be greatly modified the General Conference should not agree to continue it. In the event that it is not possible to carry the case to the United States Court on the complaint of some person not a citizen of the State of Tennessee, then should I be present at the approaching General Conference, as I hope to be, I expect now to offer a paper somewhat to the following effect:

What Action Proposed.

The General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, can not retain any relation to the Vanderbilt University which does not give to the Church a voice in the selection of trustees either by nomination, confirmation or direct election as provided in the Discipline of the Church. In the event that the method by which the Church exercises its control over an institution shall be confirmation, that confirmation must mean that no person can take the oath of office and enter upon the duties of a trustee until he has been confirmed by the General Conference, or by its duly authorized agent. And furthermore, the right of the General Conference, or its agent, to refuse confirmation shall not be subject to review or question by anybody, and refusal to confirm need not be accompanied by any reason for the action taken.

Real Control Necessary.

The decision recently rendered by the Court of Appeals of Tennessee destroys the right of the General Conference to exercise any real control over Vanderbilt. In order that the relation contemplated by the Discipline of the Church may be established, it will be necessary for the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University to take such action as will require that in the future the persons selected by the Vanderbilt Board of Trust, as suitable to fill vacancies on said board, shall be confirmed by the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, or by its duly authorized agent before such persons take the oath of office and enter upon the duties of trustees, and to guarantee furthermore the right of the General Conference, or of its duly authorized agent, to reject any nomination of the Board of Trust without assigning any reason therefor.

In view of the great need of our Church for a great Central University which shall be unquestionably owned and controlled by the Church, a commission is hereby appointed which shall notify the Board of Trustees of Vanderbilt University that it will receive any communications which said board may desire to make, looking to the adoption of such an agreement as will give the Church a voice in the selection of the trustees of the University in a manner indicated above, and the said commission is hereby authorized to enter into an agreement with the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University which shall secure to the Church such rights.

The Necessary Alternative.

In the event, however, that no proposition shall be received by the said commission from the said Vanderbilt Board of Trust before July 1st, 1914, looking to such arrangement as that indicated above, and in the event that no agreement can be reached by said commission with the Vanderbilt Board of Trust, then the said commission is hereby instructed and empowered to ask for and to receive propositions for the location of a great Central University east of the Mississippi river, and is hereby authorized to proceed to secure a charter in which the ownership and control of the Church are properly safeguarded, and to establish at such point as it may determine a University which shall be owned and controlled by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Property to be Safeguarded.

This commission is furthermore empowered to investigate carefully all titles to property which it is now understood is held and administered by the General Conference Boards and committees of the Church, and in conjunction with the various boards and committees, to take such action as may be necessary to safeguard the property at present held by the Church, and, if thought advisable, to take out charters for the various General Boards and committees in States whose laws protect Church property, and to arrange for the removal of the offices of such boards and committees from the State of Tennessee to other States."

No Legal Obstacle.

Should the General Conference adopt this or a similar paper, there will be no legal obstacle to such action by the Vanderbilt Board. The decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee referred to above states that the Vanderbilt Board of Trustees has the authority to enter into such an agreement as that indicated above if it shall desire to do so. Referring to the agreement adopted in 1898, the Court declares:

"That agreement could no more be ignored or violated by the parties thereto than those formerly existing between the Annual Conferences and the University. The power of this corporation to enter into such an agreement and pass such by-laws appears to be expressly given by the charter; but if not it is so consistent with the charter and its declared purposes and objects that it may well be implied."

Does Vanderbilt Board Desire Vital Relation?

The question, therefore, is not whether the Vanderbilt Board of Trust will have the right to make an agreement which will conform the relation of the Church to the University to the law as laid down in the Discipline, for the quotation from the opinion given above settles that point. The board can make such an agreement. The only question is, Does the board desire to make an agreement which will give to the Church a vital relation to the University? If the board does not desire a vital relation, but desires that the purely incidental and perfunctory relation laid down by the decision of the Tennessee Court shall continue, then the Church cannot retain such a relation in justice to herself or with due regard to her self-respect. She ought not to take any responsibility or obligation where she has no authority to enforce her wishes. If the Board of Trust really desires a vital relation with the Methodist Church, it will propose such an arrangement as suggested above. If it does not desire a vital relation, then the Church should establish a University over which she will have real control.

By taking such action the Church would not desert the University. She would show her willingness to maintain a vital relation. But the Church should not give her effort, her money, her patronage or her influence to build up a University which the Tennessee Court declares she did not found, has never owned, has never patronized, and over which she can have no control, unless, and until the Board of Trust manifests a desire to enter into such a relation as a self-respecting Church can agree to maintain.

Should Move to Another State.

I am not unmindful that there are those who think the Church should accept the relationship outlined by the Court, and with that relationship to do everything possible to influence the University life. But I cannot agree with this position, for after reading and re-reading several times the decision of the Tennessee Court, it is impossible for me not to believe that it is little short of insulting to the Church, and that it outlines for her a pitiful, contemptible and therefore intolerable relation to the University, and if the Vanderbilt Board of Trust does not propose a vital relation, or if the case cannot be carried to the United States Court on petition of non-residents of Tennessee, then the Church should terminate her relationship to the University in a dignified way and establish another University in a State where the courts have some respect for her dignity and her rights.

Has Not Lost Intelligence, Self-Respect and Charity.

The Banner declares that the Church has lost nothing by the decision. With this position I cannot agree. She has lost the ownership and control of the Vanderbilt University. But she has not lost her intelligence, or her self-respect or her charity. Her intelligence refuses to be blinded or deceived by the sophistries of the Banner and those who hold its view. She sees clearly that the relationship accorded her by the Court is an empty shell. Her self-respect demands that she refuse to accept the position of a figure-head, and that she withdraw herself from a relationship which would be exceedingly compromising and decidedly unprofitable. Her charity requires that she state frankly her position, and the only grounds of possible adjustment, and if such adjustment is not desired by the University, that she give to the University her best wishes, retire from her relationship to its Board of Trust and establish another University outside of the State of Tennessee.

Has Not Lost Best Things.

Yes, Mr. Editor, the Church has lost much, but she has not lost the best things. She has not been willing to compromise herself even for a million dollars, and she still has left her intelligence, her self-respect and her charity. She also has as one of her assets the experience she has gained within the past decade in her dealings with boards of trustees of institutions which she founded and patronized and built up, believing that she owned and controlled them. She will know how to safeguard her interests in the future; and while her experience has cost her a great deal, it may be worth all that it has cost.

I recognize that this is a lengthy communication, but I thought that it might be worth while for your readers in Nashville and in Tennessee to know how the decision of the Tennessee Court is viewed by a minister of the Virginia Conference, and, as he believes, by many other people in this section of the country.

JAMES CANNON, JR.

FLETCHER OF MADELY.

Rev. M. B. Sharbrough.

Prominent among the helpers of Mr. Wesley in the Methodist movement was Mr. John Fletcher, better known as Fletcher of Madely. He was regarded as pre-eminently the saint of early Methodism which was a movement toward sainthood. In this respect he was looked upon as surpassing Whitefield, the great evangelist; Charles Wesley, the seraphic singer, and even John Wesley himself.

He was born in Switzerland, of a family of noble descent, in 1729. He was educated at the University of Geneva, where he attained distinction as a student. He was in early life conversant with the French, Latin, Greek, German, and Hebrew languages, and afterward came to speak and write English as though it were his native tongue. He made a specialty of philosophy, in which he excelled. Next to John Wesley, he was probably the greatest and best furnished scholar of early Methodism, which was born in a University and fostered by scholars. His parents intended him for the ministry, but he could not accept the Calvinistic tenets of the Church of his home land, and withal seemed to have some leaning toward the army. So, at twenty years of age he enlisted as captain in the service of Portugal. With the return of peace, he went to England, and became a tutor in the home of an English gentleman. There he came in contact with the Methodists and united with them when about twenty-six years old.

From the start he was an active worker. Two years later he took orders in the Church of England, and for a time acted as the helper of Mr. Wesley in preaching and administering the sacraments. Through the gentleman in whose family he had been tutor, he was offered the Parish of Dunham with a living of 400 pounds a year. To this Parish he objected, strange as it may appear, because there was too much pay and too little work. For such a man an exchange was easy. The Parish of Madely in which he had preached several times, and in which he had become interested because of the spiritual needs of its people, paid just half as much and offered unlimited opportunities for work; and its vicar was glad enough to take Dunham and let Mr. Fletcher have Madely, and thus it was arranged. He proved to be such a Parish priest as has rarely been known. While in the Church of England he was yet a Methodist in spirit, and few if any Methodist preachers have ever equaled him in pastoral zeal, and none have ever surpassed him.

Madely was a region given to mining and manufacture, and its population was irreligious and degraded. But few persons attended the Church. So Mr. Fletcher not only preached, but visited the people from house to house. For months on every Sabbath morning beginning early he went about ringing a bell to awake the people, and remind them of the services. He reproved the vicious, comforted the afflicted, and relieved the poor.

His liberality was hardly credible. He lived most abstemiously in order that he might feed the hungry, and wore the plainest clothing in order that he might clothe the destitute. With all this, he had to meet much opposition. His life was a constant reproof to the ordinary ease-loving clergymen of adjoining parishes, which they resented. He gave offense to the careless country gentlemen by reproving their barbarous sports. The vicious whom he reproved among the ordinary people were likewise offended. Hence he was slandered, and threatened, and sometimes refused admission into houses. But, undaunted, he continued to pursue the course which his conscience had marked out. Finally, his devotion to his parishioners and to his sacred office won over all opposition and he came to be loved and even revered where he had been slandered, hated and reviled.

During his pastorate at Madely Mr. Fletcher continued to give occasional help elsewhere to Mr. Wesley. The fact that despite his notable sainthood, and the fact of Methodist tendencies, he was enabled to hold even an undesirable parish in the established Church of that day shows that he must have had a remarkably well-balanced judgment.

After the conversion of Lady Huntingdon, she established a Methodist College on her estate at Trevecca, and Mr. Fletcher was chosen as its president. Here his saintliness together with his great scholarship made him especially useful. But Mr. Fletcher, though educated at Geneva, the stronghold of Calvinism, was a strict Arminian in his belief, while the Countess was an ardent Calvinist. So when the Calvinistic controversy arose in early Methodism, he thought it best to resign his position at Trevecca and returned to live at Madely. While both Calvinist and Arminian were freely admitted into the early Methodist societies, Mr. Wesley himself was an Arminian in theology. And when certain Antinomian tendencies began to show themselves in the connection, he protested in one of his Conferences against leaning too far toward Calvinism, and this protest went down into the minutes. This stirred up the Calvinistic Methodists and brought on what is now known as the Calvinistic controversy of early Methodism. In this Mr. Fletcher took the Arminian side, and was its chief exponent. And it is not too much to say that he was the victor. He issued paper after paper entitled Checks to Antinomianism, which are models of polemic literature and are classics in Methodist theology. While their logic is well-nigh incontrovertible, and the positions taken, almost if not quite unassailable, their style is courtly and brotherly throughout. No knight ever wielded a more courtly lance or struck severer blows in behalf of truth than he. He met Antinomianism in all of its ranges and in its most subtle forms. Withal he guarded evangelical Christianity against any trend toward Pelagianism, which is the opposite extreme from Calvinism. He made clear the agreement between salvation by grace through faith, with the free moral agency, and the full moral responsibility of man.

Soon after the return of Mr. Fletcher to Madely he found it necessary, on account of his failing health, for the second time to make a visit to Switzerland. After his return he established a school for poor children at Madelywood. But his health continued to decline, and he died at the age of fifty-six years.

Four years before his death he was married to Miss Mary Besanquet, a woman as saintly as himself; and if ever marriage was a sacrament it was so in the case of this union. It was Mr. Wesley's desire that at his death Mr. Fletcher should be his successor as the head of the Methodist movement; but he modestly questioned his own fitness for this. And his failing health, while Mr. Wesley was yet strong and well, put an end to whatever prospects he may have had of this distinction. In fact, Providence seems to have designed that Mr. Wesley should have no successor. The Methodist connection was willing to yield to the authority of Mr. Wesley, whom they regarded as the father of the movement and whom they considered almost if not quite apostolic in his place and work; but it would have shown this deference to no other living man. Indeed, such a movement was destined ultimately to pass from under a single hand and tend toward democracy.

As to Mr. Fletcher, while he was destined never to become the head of Methodism, as Mr. Wesley intended, he yet stands forth as one who, under God, is not only worthy of our reverence and admiration, but as one whose saintliness and whose devotion to humanity and to the Master's work ought to inspire every Methodist, yea every Christian, to a closer walk with God and a more entire devotion to his work.

The General Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South, was due to meet in Nashville yesterday. As all the Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church will be in the Tennessee Capital, it is expected that they will confer concerning various matters of importance to the Church.

The Raleigh Christian Advocate has stood straight up on the Vanderbilt question, and what it has said has been timely and to the point. In this respect it has presented a striking contrast to the wobbly course of some of our periodicals. Indeed, if the utterances of some of our church papers in the course of the Vanderbilt controversy were placed in parallel columns, they would present quite a spectacle. It is well for a certain class of editors, as well as for many others, that the public has a short memory.

At the recent session of the Woman's Missionary Council in Fort Worth, Texas, 7 missionaries, 9 deaconesses, 1 city missionary, 2 kindergarten missionaries, and 1 trained nurse were accepted for work. The workers going to other countries were distributed as follows: Korea, 1; Cuba, 1; Brazil, 3; China, 4. Among the candidates accepted was Miss Cora Godat, of New Orleans, who will be graduated from the Kansas City Training School in May. She was assigned to Brazil. After graduation she will remain in the United States long enough to study Spanish before proceeding to her field of labor.

GALLOWAY MEMORIAL DAY

IN THE Sunday Schools and Churches OF THE Mississippi Conference
Sunday, April 26, 1914.

BISHOP C. B. GALLOWAY,

One of the foremost figures in the history of American Methodism. In honoring him, we honor ourselves.

The three banner Sunday schools and churches to date are:

West Jackson, Rev. J. M. Morse and I. C. Enochs; $300 contributed in 1912.

Shubuta Church, Rev. B. F. Jones $130 contributed in 1913.

Crawford Street, Vicksburg, Rev. C. F. Emery, $102.50 contributed in 1913.

WHO WILL BE THE PASTOR AND SCHOOL TO CARRY THE BANNER FOR 1914?

Since the inauguration of this Memorial Day in 1912 the Sunday schools and churches have contributed $1000.

The Sunday school representing the largest contribution for 1914 will have the pleasure of seeing their Sunday school superintendent presented with a silver medal inscribed "Galloway Memorial Medal for 1914."

A WORD TO OUR PASTORS IN LOUISIANA

Dear Brethren: We are making every possible effort to be ready for the meeting of the Legislature, on May 13. Will you help us? We have heard from less than one dozen Sunday schools in the Louisiana Conference. Have you sent in your report? If not, please do so as soon as possible. We will secure some needed legislation if our friends will stand by us. Please speak to the members of the Legislature in your Parish before they leave for Baton Rouge. I have just been asked to go to another State where the work is lighter and the salary more, but I cannot leave now. We must rally our forces for the work in Baton Rouge. The day before the Annual Conference convenes in Shreveport will be Anti-Saloon League Day, and the President of the League in Tennessee, Rev. H. B. Carre, will speak at 7:30 p. m.

Havana is waging a drastic warfare against the Bubonic plague. On April 13 twelve city blocks in the commercial district were ordered closed and fumigated and disinfected with hydrocyanic acid. It is stated that the execution of this order will render 10,000 persons homeless and that the loss in damaged merchandise will be enormous. Dr. John Guiteras is leading in the warfare against this dread malady.

At a recent meeting of the American Hotel Protective Association in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York City it developed that the hotel proprietors have arrived at a realization of the fact that they must reckon with the growing prohibition sentiment throughout the country. It is stated that a number of them in charge of famous hostleries in the United States and Canada affirmed it to be their purpose to submit to their guests the question as to whether they desire to have the barrooms in their hotels continued or abolished.

When Capt. Frank S. White, formerly of West Point, Miss., who has lately been elected to fill out the unexpired term of the late Hon. Joseph F. Johnston of Alabama, takes his seat in the United States Senate, there will be in that body eight members who were born in the Magnolia State. The other seven are John Sharp Williams and James K. Vardaman, the present Senators from Mississippi, Senator Chamberlain of Oregon, Senator Newlands of Nevada, Senator Clarke of Arkansas, Senator Key Pittman of Nevada, and Senator Gore of Oklahoma.

Because of indignities perpetrated upon American marines at Tampico, Mexico, Rear Admiral Henry T. Mayo, in charge of the American fleet there, demanded a few days ago that the Mexican Federal Commander at that place should fire a salute to the American flag. After looking into the matter, President Wilson backed him up in this demand. At first Huerta refused to comply with it, whereupon the President ordered forty-six vessels—the entire Atlantic fleet—to proceed to Mexican waters to see that a proper apology was made for the offenses given. Finding himself face to face with this serious situation, Huerta finally agreed to have the forces at Tampico fire the required salute, provided the American ships would fire an answering salute. This proposal was accepted by the authorities at Washington, but later the Mexican ruler was reported to have modified his agreement and to be insisting upon a gun-for-gun simultaneous salute. To this demand President Wilson refused to consent, and at this writing our warships are headed for Mexico where, if necessary, they are expected to land troops and seize a couple of Mexican ports and hold them until satisfactory reparation is made. There is no doubt that the relations of the United States with Mexico are exceedingly strained, and that armed intervention may begin at almost any time.

THE WESLEY HOUSE AT BILOXI, MISS.

MRS. MARTHA E. ROGERS.

A good woman—a mother in Israel—has gone from us. After two weeks of suffering on account of a broken hip, the result of a fall, at her home near Blythe's Chapel in Prentiss County, Miss., Mrs. Martha Elender Rogers passed to her heavenly reward on March 14, 1914, in her eightieth year. Death was no alarm to Sister Rogers. I rather think it was a welcome messenger to her, for she had hid her life with Christ in God. She assumed the vows of the Methodist Church, and was numbered with the people of God at Blythe's Chapel in girlhood, and has worshipped there all her life. O how she will be missed! "Aunt Martha," as she was best known, was loved by everybody.

She was born in Lawrence County, Ala., Feb. 28, 1835, and moved to Mississippi in childhood, with her parents who settled on Brown's Creek—then Tishomingo—now Prentiss County. Here in 1854 she was married to Mr. G. W. Rogers. They walked happily together nearly 60 years, and were blessed with five sons and four daughters, six of whom, with the father in his 82d year, and a host of relatives and friends, are left to mourn her home-going. Sister Rogers was honored of God, in that two of her sons, and a grandson fill their places as itinerant Methodist ministers, the two former being W. F. Rogers, of North Mississippi, and J. H. Rogers, of Oklahoma. Her grandson, Rev. J. W. Rogers, is presiding elder of the Madill District in the East Oklahoma Conference. Her home was ever open to God's ministers. And many have enjoyed its unbounded hospitality.

After the funeral service conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. S. A. Brown, in the presence of a large gathering, her remains were laid to rest at Blythe's Chapel, there to await the resurrection morning. May the sustaining grace of God abide with the aged husband and all her loved ones!

A WORTHY TRIBUTE TO A WORTHY MAN.

Memphis has perhaps never had a more devoted Christian citizen or loyal Methodist than the late Judge L. H. Estes. His good wife and other members of his fine Christian family have determined to keep alive the name of their sainted dead by establishing a perpetually endowed memorial room to his memory in the Methodist Hospital at Memphis. On learning of this purpose, many members of the Second Methodist Church, where Judge Estes held his membership, desiring a share in this honor for one they esteemed so highly, have requested that their contributions be applied to this fund. It will of course be a pleasure to grant this request.

Judge Estes saw the great need of a Methodist Hospital in Memphis and was deeply interested in its establishment. As a memorial to this veteran of the Cross and splendid exponent of Methodism nothing could be more appropriate than this room in our Methodist Hospital, wherein will continually be dispensed a blessed and free ministry to both soul and body—a service so like that of which his life was full. H. M. ELLIS.

A YOUNG LOGICIAN.

It was an arduous task for the teacher to drill into her pupils the principles of arithmetic.

"Now listen," she said. "In order to be subtracted, things must be of the same denomination. You can't take three apples from four peaches, nor eight marbles from twelve buttons. It must be three apples from four apples, and so on. Do you understand?"

Most of the children seemed to grasp the idea. However, one little youngster in the class raised a timid hand.

"Please, teacher," he inquired, "couldn't you take three quarts of milk from two cows?"—The Youth's Companion.

THE VANDERBILT MATTER.

Dear Brother Meek: In a late issue of the Advocate you suggest that there be an expression of the sentiment as to the Church's relation to Vanderbilt University, in order that delegates to the approaching General Conference may carry into effect the will of the membership of the Church in regard to any action which may be taken on the subject.

The writer is a member of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, and is also an humble member of, and in a small degree a supporter of the Church, and also one who loves its institutions. It may be pertinent to add that he was a lay delegate from the Louisiana Conference to the last two General Conferences, but is not a delegate to the one now approaching.

When the question arose at the Asheville General Conference, as to whether or not the Board of Trust was a self-perpetuating body, I, as a lawyer had to use such legal knowledge and judgment as I possessed in passing on a purely legal question. My opinion then was, and was so expressed in conversation with interested parties, and also on the floor of the General Conference, that the Board was a self-perpetuating body and that its legal existence could only be perpetuated as so provided by the Charter, as I understood it.

In my view, any action or different way of filling vacancies on the Board, than by election by the Board, would have endangered the legal existence of the Board and have jeopardized the tenure of the large property which had been entrusted to it. It now appears that this view was correct, as decided by the Supreme Court of Tennessee.

While my view as to the legal question was clear and fixed, I was willing to let the Court of original jurisdiction settle and declare the law of the case, and when the Chancellor decided in favor of the plaintiffs and against the Board, I advised that the decision be acquiesced in and that no appeal be taken—not as admitting the abstract correctness of the decision, but as admitting that the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction, unappealed from, even though abstractly erroneous, constituted the law in the case, and so guaranteed the legal existence of the Board. This advice, however, was not followed, and I make no criticism of my fellow-members of the Board for not following it.

I have further believed, and so advised and stated on the floor of the General Conference, that the University morally belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and that that Church should have the right to control its general policies, that right being secured by the veto power over the election of members on the part of the General Conference or some Board to which that power had been delegated. I now understand that this right and power is recognized and confirmed by the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee. We have to take facts and law as we find them and not as we might wish them to be, and thus we find that the parties to the Charter so fixed, defined, and limited the rights, powers and duties of the Board. It therefore appears to me that conservatism should prevail both as to comment and legislation, if any legislation is to be had, on the subject matter.

I am not without hope that such an understanding may be arrived at that friction between the Church and the Board may be avoided. The University needs the Church and the Church needs the University. There is in my opinion such an overwhelming moral right and such substantial legal right residing in the Church that its interests can be properly safeguarded. My view and advice, therefore, is that no such radical steps be taken by the General Conference, as a disclaimer of further interest in the University, a removal of the Theological Department elsewhere, or a removal of the Publishing House and other institutional interests of the Church from Nashville.

PALMETTO LETTER.

So vale Vanderbilt! It so happened, Meek, that I was at the burning of the now lost and wandering star. I think it was in 1870. After much discussion, my father had given his consent for me to leave home to work my way outward and upward. I left the farm with 25 cents in money—all we could find about the premises that day—a pair of army saddle-bags stuffed with my belongings, my Bible, my parents' blessing, my ancestral family motto, "Tenax Propositi" (stick to it), and a good, stout Anglo-Saxon will to find a way or make one, if I had to blast it out of granite. It was a slim outfit in a worldly sense; but I had the invaluable moral assets of a clean life, and a strong faith, and a fellowship with the Church of the living God. All my life had been rooted by Christian nurture in the home in the verities of religion.

I had received a letter from the Rev. W. C. Johnson, the editor of the Western Methodist, inviting me to come to see him, and promising to help me in my effort to get an education that would prepare me for the ministry. So when I got to Memphis I went direct to Dr. Johnson's office, where I was kindly received. I found there a large, fine looking man, with a Websterian head, who was introduced to me as Judge Morgan. He and Johnson were engaged in conversation. They were talking about educational matters. Johnson said that there was great need for a real university, centrally located in the Middle South, and he thought the time had come to establish such an institution. He said he had had it on his mind and heart for some time to start the ball in motion; but he thought that perhaps a layman had better take the initiative. He proposed that Judge Morgan should write a letter for the Western Methodist proposing such a move, and he would follow it with an editorial. He urged immediate action, because the Tennessee Conference would meet soon, and it was necessary to have the support of that body. It was all arranged accordingly. When Judge Morgan arose to leave Dr. Johnson told him I was expecting to enter the Methodist ministry. Judge Morgan said he was glad to know that, and remarked, "We must hurry and get that university ready for him." Vanderbilt University was born that morning out of that conversation in that dingy little office. Rev. W. C. Johnson was the real originator of Vanderbilt University. Morgan wrote the letter, Johnson wrote the editorial, the ball was set in motion by the Tennessee Conference, and Vanderbilt belonged to us, until the lawyers took it away.

Both while I was a student at Emory and Henry College and Chaplain of the University of Virginia, I wrote letters to the Western Methodist and the Nashville Christian Advocate urging our people to support the effort we were making to establish a great university at Nashville. One of these letters had just been published when Bishop McTyeire came through Charlottesville. He thanked me for writing it, and told me of his visit to New York, and how Commodore Vanderbilt had talked with him about the rehabilitation of the South. He said he had given the Government a vessel to help hold the South in the Union, and now he wanted to do something to help heal the wounds the war had made. So he gave the amount we said we must have, half a million, to start the university, and he gave it to the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. While it was ours, Vanderbilt University was a noble monument to the intelligence, faith and courage of Methodist people, and to the generous and fraternal spirit of the North in seeking to rehabilitate the South and erase all the sad effects of strife. It stood for all that was high and true and generous; every tradition of its origin, every association of its history, commemorated the heroism of our impoverished people and the generosity of those who had fought against us. Noble alike in its conception and in its execution, its very existence refuted the pitiful slander that the Church is too narrow to conduct a university. What does Vanderbilt represent now!

How did we lose it? Through not being narrow enough to shut out of it those who had no sympathy with its spiritual ideals. It is the old story of the man who from a false kindness warmed the serpent that repaid his kindness by sinking his fang into his hand. When I was living in Louisville, Ky., I happened to be in Nashville. Bishop McTyeire saw me, and asked me to go home to dinner with him. And they had dinner at Bishop McTyeire's! When I was seated in his buggy, he told me he had just come from a meeting where they had succeeded in taking over into the Vanderbilt some department of the old University of Nashville, if I remember correctly; but, anyhow it was a department of some other school. He asked me what I thought of it. I told him I disapproved it. "Why so?" he asked. Because, I replied, you are taking into your Vanderbilt system in that way elements you will find it hard to assimilate to your ideal of our university. He said in his impressive manner, "There is danger at that point. We must watch that."

On another occasion I was in his home. The Board was in session, and the meeting was late. After waiting awhile, Mrs. McTyeire said we would wait no longer. So we went to supper. I had just asked the blessing, when we heard the Bishop come in. When he entered the dining room all were anxious to know who had been elected to a certain chair. He made them guess for a time, and then announced the result. All clapped except me. "Why don't you clap? Don't you like it?" said the Bishop. "No, sir; I do not like it." "What is the matter now? You seem to disapprove a good deal that we do out here." "I do," I replied. The man who had been elected was not a Methodist. "Bishop," I said, "I see trouble ahead in the policy you are pursuing. I would rake the Methodism of the world with a fine tooth comb for a Methodist—here I unconsciously struck my fist on the table and apologized to Mrs. McTyeire—before I would go outside to find a man for that chair. If I couldn't find a Methodist, then, and not till then, I would look abroad." "O, you must be broader than that," he said.

I have understood that that very man was one of the most active in robbing the Church of the university. I was told that he made a speech on one occasion and when some one asked, "What about the rights of the Methodist Church in the university?" he replied, "The rights of the Methodist Church? It has no rights. Let the Methodist Church go to the devil." Well, since the lawyers have compelled the Methodist Church to separate from Vanderbilt, it is impossible for it to go to the devil, for then it would have to "gang" with the university, and the lawyers forbid that!

The decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee may be good law, but it is bad logic. If there ever was a non sequiter from the premises, as they are set forth in their own statement of the case, it is surely the conclusion at which the judges arrive. I mean no disrespect to the eminent jurists who decided this case, but I am compelled to wonder in what school they learned to reason. To a non-legal mind, the conclusion they reached is the exact opposite of the facts and the evidence. But it stands. Vale Vanderbilt, vale forever!

I hope the Methodist Church will have the backbone now to say vale. They have said that to us; and not only said it, but said it in a manner to (Continued on page 7).

LISA'S GIFT.

Along the mountain side and lower in the valleys the fresh green grass was springing up; so thick was it that Farmer Peter had said the cows must go down to the pasture, and the girls must begin again to take turns in taking them there. The farmer had five daughters, so one bright spring day Tesa, the eldest, took the cows along the road where tall, pointed cedars stood, down by great, gray rocks that seemed to form a wall between the firs and the grassy valleys. They went across a cold, clear mountain stream that a little further on was caught in a hollow stone basin as a drinking place for the cows.

All the week Tesa would take the cows to pasture in the morning and bring them back at night, and, as she came slowly along after them one evening, she thought of the rich milk and cream that would soon be filling the milk pans at the farm and of the butter and cheese that later on they would take to market. As she stepped to the side of the road to hurry a lazy cow, she noticed a queer little green house that seemed to be built against one of the great rocks.

"I do not remember that house," she thought, and stopped to look at it more closely.

In front of the queer little green door sat a queer little man with a queer little green cap on his head.

"I was just wishing you would come this way," he said. "I want to ask you for a drink of fresh milk." Tesa drew back.

"No," she answered. "We cannot spare any of our milk; we need it all ourselves." And she ran on after the cows.

The next week Nannette took the cows to the valley. She, too, saw the queer little green house and the queer little man with the queer little green cap on his head, and one night she stopped. The little man bowed very low.

"You must make good butter from such a fine herd of cows," he said. "I have been wondering if you would give me a tiny bit to eat on my bread."

"No, indeed!" Nannette shook her head. "We sell our butter, not give it away; we have none for you," and she hurried after the cows.

When Blanchen went down with the cows she looked for the queer little green house, but did not see it until her return in the evening; then she went very close to it. The queer little man with the queer little green cap sat outside as usual.

"Good evening, little maid," he said. "I found strawberries on the hillside, and would like to share them with you if you could let me have a little cream for mine." But Blanchen tossed her head.

"I, too, can find strawberries on the hillside," she said, "and we use our cream to make butter, so I cannot give you any," and she followed the cows home.

"He must be a queer little man," said Anabel, the next daughter, as she came up with the cows the following week. "I must peep around the rock and see if he is still there."

Yes, there stood the queer little green house and the queer little man with the queer little green cap sat in front. He smiled very pleasantly at her.

"I've been longing, my dear, for a bit of cheese. could you spare me a little?"

But Anabel only turned and ran up the hill as fast as she could go.

"Indeed, he can't have any of my cheese!" she said to herself. "I wonder what he will ask for next!"

"The week following it was the turn of Lisa, the youngest daughter, to take the cows. She kept thinking of the stories her sisters had told of the queer little man. In her kind heart a strong desire had come to do something for him.

"The milk from my cow, Gretchen, is my own," she thought, "and I shall give him some." So on her way home from the pasture she slipped around the bend in the road, and there in front of his door was the little man. He looked at her kindly. Lisa smiled and held out a pail she carried.

"Here is milk from my own cow," said she. "I wanted you to have some and a bit of cheese from my lunch." The little man took off his green cap and bowed and smiled.

"My dear, you will not lose anything," he said. "All that one gives of good comes back in good."

"I wonder what he means!" thought Lisa, as she turned into the road that led to the farm, and she wondered about him all the way home.

The sisters laughed when she told what she had done.

"He's a little elf, I'm sure, Lisa," said Nannette. "Did he give you the wonderful lamp, and may I wish with it?"

"Tell us truly, dear, did he give you the cap of knowledge?"

"Let us see if she has the cloak that makes one invisible," teased Blanchen.

"Will he lend you his seven league boots, Lisa?" asked Anabel.

Lisa laughed and shook her head; but the mother, overhearing, said:

"Lisa has a pair of wonderful boots already, I think; for she walks into everyone's heart and that is the best gift of all."

Lisa wondered what kind of boots they were, but could not stop long to think about them, for it was a busy time at the farm. There were cheeses to be gotten ready for market, and butter to be packed, and the sisters forgot all about the little man. Lisa still had a big pot of cream to be churned.

"My butter must be ready to go with the rest," she said, and so she was up very early the next morning. She poured the yellow cream into the churn, put in the dasher and was soon churning away. The dasher danced up and down at first, but by and by it went slowly.

"I must have a lot of butter," said Lisa to herself, "it is so very heavy." She looked into the churn; yes, there were the yellow lumps, shining faintly through the white milk.

"But they're not floating as they usually do," thought Lisa, very much surprised. Taking her ladle she hurriedly slipped it under one of the lumps and, raising it, put it in the wooden bowl of cold water that stood ready to wash the milk from the butter. It sank quickly under the water, and Lisa turned it over with her ladle. It was hard as stone, not a bit like the soft lumps of yellow butter she was used to working over. Her eyes filled with tears and she ran to find her mother.

"Come quickly, mother!" she exclaimed, "the butter has come, and it isn't butter at all! I'm afraid I haven't done it right!" Her mother looked very puzzled as she took out the yellow lumps; but, when the father came, he smiled.

"What has my Lisa been doing?" he asked. "Getting acquainted with the fairies. This is surely fairies' gold, a love gift from the little people."

"Nay, father; I have seen no fairies," declared the astonished Lisa. But a slight noise at the door made them all turn, and there stood the queer little man with his queer little green cap in his hand, bowing and smiling in the doorway.

"All that one gives of good comes back in good," he said. Then he disappeared, and no one ever saw him again; and, though Blanchen, Nannette, Anabel, and Tesa all ran to look for the little green house, it had disappeared with the little man. But the gold did not disappear, for fairies' gold always lasts as long as a giving heart, and Lisa had found the secret.

"If you hoard with selfish greed,
And forget another's need,
All your gold will turn to clay,
And will vanish quite away;
But, if you with some one share,
You will find it everywhere.
This the secret the fairies told, make it impossible for us to have any self-respect and go about them any more. To have accepted the verdict with a dignified satisfaction with their victory, might have left the way open for fraternal relations between us; but they have made such relations forever impossible by adding to the injury the insult of the manner in which they received the result. With the Chancellor and Professors heading a street parade, blowing horns, ringing bells, yelling like savages, ridiculing the Church, mocking the Bishops, flinging ribald insults at Methodism, lighting bonfires and burning episcopal bones in effigy, and dancing like lunatics in the orgy of their triumph, they have dug an impassable gulf between us!

The great lesson of the loss of Vanderbilt is to be loyal to the Church. The liberal spirit in which Vanderbilt was conceived, and in which for awhile it was administered, is noble, and reflects honor on the catholic-hearted men who cherished it. But it is easily abused. The devil takes advantage of it, and once in is not easily dislodged. All honor to Bishop Hoss! The whole Church, and all good people who put truth and righteousness above Carnegie's gold, will hold him in highest affection. He was the champion, not merely of our property rights in Vanderbilt University, but of the immortal ideal of Christian as against purely secular education. Long may he live, and blessings be on his head! I have heard but one opinion expressed here in South Carolina, and that is sorrow that the Benedict Arnold of the Southern Methodist Church should have come from this State. British gold lured the one, and the Scotchman's coin enticed the other; and honor looks with averted eyes on both. But, Meek, tell Hoss to cheer up. I don't like the tone of his letter. He is too blue. His heroic effort has thrown an emphasis on higher education by the Church it has never had among us; and the sentiment created by the attitude of the Vanderbilt cult to the Methodist Church will prove a stimulating tonic to our denominational system. Vale Vanderbilt! Long live Methodism!

OUR CHURCH PAPER PROBLEM.

Some of our editors and others are having much to say concerning what the General Conference ought to do with our weekly church papers. That this is an important question, is undeniably true; but that it is one that may be quickly and inconsiderately disposed of, as some who have touched upon it seem to think, is far from being a fact. It is easy to say that the Church ought to take over all its periodicals, reduce the number, and have the Publishing House to stand behind them; but that this would be the wisest and best policy is by no means certain, though possibly it may be. Merely to improve the quality of our weekly journals and give each a territory large enough to furnish ample resources for its maintenance would not solve the most important feature of our Church paper problem, which is to place a religious publication in the homes of all our people, in order that they may become interested in the work of the Church and be safeguarded from being poisoned and led astray by the vicious periodical literature that is being scattered all over the country. Would the proposed plan of doing away with the Conference organs and having a number of papers published under General Conference supervision accomplish this result more satisfactorily or not? This is the chief point to be settled.

There is also another phase of this problem that ought not by any means to be lost sight of, namely, that our papers need to be kept close to the people. Their territory should not be so large that they cannot give the news of individual charges and churches, and that their columns cannot be kept open, to a reasonable extent, to the rank and file of our preachers who desire occasionally to send in reports from their works and to express themselves concerning current religious happenings. This part of the make-up of our religious weeklies may not be worth much from a literary standpoint, but notwithstanding it is very valuable in awakening a larger interest in the activities of the Church, and we can ill afford to dispense with it. We question whether to have publications of a general character prepared for our pastors and people, however superior might be the matter that they would contain, would be as serviceable to Southern Methodism as those in which are reflected sentiments and aspirations of the great masses of our communion.

Those who think that all that needs to be done to guarantee the success of our publications is to thin out the number and place the Publishing House behind them, should study the question more carefully. The Methodist Episcopal Church has done this very thing, yet only a few weeks ago Zion's Herald called attention to the fact that nearly all their papers are still losing money and that something will have to be done in the near future to stop this financial leakage. Through the circulation of most of the Northern Methodist weeklies is large, each of them has a big patronizing territory, and we do not know whether their circulation in proportion to church members exceeds that of our Conference organs or not. In our own Church it is well known that practically all of the periodicals issued by our Publishing House—the Nashville Christian Advocate, the Epworth Era, and the Pacific Methodist Advocate—have to struggle to pay expenses. Notwithstanding the extent to which the Church has grown, if we mistake not, the circulation of the Christian Advocate has been smaller within recent years than it was some decades ago. (We do not mean to suggest that there has been any decrease during Dr. Ivey's administration as Editor.) Does this look as if all that is necessary to make a publication go, is to give it a patronizing territory covering a wide area, with the Publishing House to back it up?

It has occurred to us that possibly the mistake that the publishers of our American Methodist papers have made has been in being dominated too much by the magazine idea. It seems to have been the prevailing notion that they ought to be printed on the best paper, made pictorial, and gotten up in fine form generally. We notice that some of the best English church periodicals appear to have quite a different standard from this—they are much more like newspapers. This is true, for instance, of the British Weekly, which has a great reputation, and we think deservedly so. It is worth considering if it would not be to our advantage to model our weeklies more after such a pattern. To be sure, superior paper, beautiful covers, and artistic illustrations are attractive; but whether their value religiously is sufficient to warrant the increased expense is the matter to be determined. It might be well for the Church to maintain some journals of both types—one or two of the more expensive kind, while conforming the majority to the other standard mentioned. In her journalistic work, as well as in her other operations, we think that Methodism needs to keep in mind the fact that her mission is chiefly to the masses of the people.

We do not desire to be understood as opposing having our weekly periodicals all placed under the control of the General Conference. We really have not made up our mind in regard to the matter; we would not be willing to vote on the question without further investigation. We have simply presented briefly these facts, which we conceive to bear pertinently on this issue, because they seem to have been generally overlooked up to the present time in the discussions that have taken place in the public prints. All phases of the question ought to be taken into account and carefully weighed before a final decision is reached. Of one thing, however, we are fully convinced: that each Annual Conference ought to have a Publishing Board continuing for a quadrennium, related to the Book Committee (or General Publishing Board) in much the same manner that our other Conference Boards are related to our various General Boards; and that no paper should be allowed to be issued without the consent of these bodies. And we desire, furthermore, to say that if the General Conference should decide to take over the various papers of the Church, we hope it will not be done in a manner to bring them all under the control of one central Committee or Board. Our periodicals should be given a chance to develop some individuality, and it is of the utmost importance that they should be so managed as to be kept independent and fearless. The freedom of the religious press is quite as necessary a safeguard as that of our secular publications.

AN ADMIRABLE UTTERANCE.

The leading editorial in the Nashville Christian Advocate of last week, entitled "The Opportunity of Southern Methodism," was an able and timely utterance. It was pitched upon a high plane and had a clear and certain ring from beginning to end. Though surrounded by influences hostile to the Church and an atmosphere of compromise, our Chief Editor has kept his vision unclouded and is standing openly and resolutely for the conservation of the highest and best interests of Southern Methodism. For this he is to be much commended. Doubtless it is gratifying to Dr. Ivey to see that the press of our denomination is so unitedly backing him up in his position, and in our opinion an overwhelming majority of the 2,000,000 Methodists of the South are also with him. We are most fortunate to have in charge of our General Organ in this crucial hour a man who is thoroughly true and loyal to the cause of Christianity and to the Church.

A FEW PERSONAL WORDS.

To the many friends who sent us messages of interest and sympathy during our recent illness, we desire to extend our heartfelt thanks. If we had the time and strength to do so, we would write every one of them a personal note expressive of our appreciation, but under the circumstances we cannot do this. But we shall keep their kindnesses in grateful recollection, and pray God's blessings upon them through the coming years. Particularly do we wish to acknowledge our indebtedness to Rev. C. A. Battle for his excellent work in preparing matter for the Advocate and his assistance in helping to get the paper out while we were incapacitated for service. He is one of the growing young men of the Church, clear in head, sound in heart, and actuated by a commendable spirit of loyalty to Southern Methodism; and if he is blessed with length of days, we predict that in the future his influence will be widely felt for good. Though we have been able to go to our office regularly for about ten days, we yet lack much of being in a normal condition and cannot dispatch our usual amount of work. We are regaining strength slowly, and are beginning to doubt whether we shall be equal to undertaking the long trip to Oklahoma City and the task of serving in the General Conference. But we would not utter a syllable of complaint. The goodness of the Lord has abounded to us, and we have no doubt that his providence will bring to us that which is for our highest welfare. His will and ways are always best for those who put their trust in him and seek his guidance.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Hon. H. H. White, of Alexandria, La., was in New Orleans on legal business on Thursday, April 16.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone will begin a series of revival services in his church at Clarksdale, Miss., next Sunday. He will do the preaching himself, and Prof. I. N. Price will lead the singing.

Two pleasant callers at our office last week were Rev. Paul M. Brown of Shreveport and Mr. W. S. Holmes, of Baton Rouge, Lay Leader of the Louisiana Conference. They were in the city to attend the New Orleans District Conference.

Rev. R. H. Barr, of Auburn, Miss., says: "I feel sure that our work is on the up-grade. The Lord is with us." Brother Barr is presenting the claims of the Advocate as he goes in and out among his people, with gratifying success.

We should like very much to secure the address of Miss S. Rives, who recently sent a communication to the Advocate, but failed to give her post office. If any friend will kindly furnish us this desired information, we shall be much obliged to him.

A successful revival meeting is in progress at Rayville, La., where Rev. A. Inman Townsley is the active pastor. The preaching is being done by Rev. T. H. Morris of Mansfield, and the singing is under the direction of Mr. R. N. Jeffery of Shreveport.

Brother W. L. Thomason, a steward in our Church at Pontotoc, Miss., states that the $9,000 debt on our fine house of worship at that place, which had been standing for four years or more, has been wiped out. This is a great achievement for Pastor Wendel and his worthy flock in this historic and growing town.

Our hat is off to Rev. S. L. Pope, who gave us, a few days since, 5 new and 8 renewal subscriptions from New Albany, Miss. Brother Pope is one of the most efficient pastors in his Conference, and he has a valuable assistant in his work in the person of Sister Pope. New Albany is fortunate in having the services of these faithful itinerants.

Rev. W. M. Young, our zealous and capable pastor at Amory, Miss., and his excellent people are to be heartily congratulated upon having launched a splendid new church enterprise in that attractive little city of waving pines and fine artesian wells. When completed and furnished, the projected new structure will cost between $20,000 and $25,000.

From the Dumas (Miss.) charge, Rev. J. D. Boggs has lately given us a fine club of subscribers. Brother Boggs is serving his third year in this field, and he reports that the people are still kind and attentive. His first quarterly conference, which was held on February 21, was quite a success. A new church is now being completed at one of his appointments, and the outlook indicates a year of soul-saving and general progress.

Gov. G. D. and Mrs. Shands are arranging to leave New Orleans for the Far West, where they expect to remain for some time. Mrs. Shands had la grippe some weeks ago, and the state of her health is such as to necessitate a change of climate for a season. We trust that a favoring Providence may lead to the selection of the right locality and that she may at an early date completely recover from all traces of her recent illness.

Rev. A. R. Beasley, pastor of the Lexington (Miss.) Circuit, has our thanks for a club of subscriptions forwarded on April 18. He has been much hindered in his work since Conference by sickness, but is now able to take up actively his "loved employ." He has three wide-awake Sunday schools, and there are other encouraging features in his charge. His people gave him a generous reception in the outset and their kindnesses still continue.

The Commencement exercises of The Memphis Conference Female Institute (Jackson, Tenn.) presided over by Rev. H. G. Hawkins, will occur May 10-13. The Sermon will be preached by Rev. I. F. Hawkins of Decatur, Ala.; and the Baccalaureate Address will be delivered by Hon. L. L. Fonville of Jackson, Tenn. Nineteen young ladies are candidates for diplomas in the Literary Department, and five in the special departments.

Bishop Murrah is in Nashville attending some of the connectional meetings of the Church this week.

Bishop Thirkfield has gone North to attend the meeting of the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He will be absent from New Orleans for several weeks.

The District Trustees are providing funds for the improvement of the Alexandria district parsonage. This is a good work. Too often the homes of our presiding elders are poorly looked after.

We are indebted to Rev. W. N. Duncan, of Holly Springs, Miss., for some additional subscriptions from his interesting charge and for some kindly words of interest. The work is progressing favorably in his present field.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgement has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in during the past few days: J. S. Purcell, Rolling Fork, Miss., 5; Rev. T. H. King, Bogue Chitto, Miss., 5.

Several of the preachers of the New Orleans District who were in the city to attend the District Conference stopped at the Advocate office to greet us last week. We will not undertake to give their names. However, we were glad to see every one of them.

Bishop Candler of our Church and Bishop F. J. McConnell of the M. E. Church are announced as among the speakers who are booked to be at the Seashore Divinity School this summer. One can well afford to go a long distance to hear these two princes of the pulpit and platform.

The Presiding Elder is planning a revival campaign for the Alexandria (La.) District, and the pastors are co-operating with him and loyally following his leadership. This is as it should be. The chief work of the Christian ministry is the saving of souls, and it should be the highest ambition of every pastor to become effective in it.

Rev. H. W. May, the energetic presiding elder of the Alexandria (La.) District, sends us the following note: "The Sunday school superintendents and lay leaders of the various charges and the presidents of the woman's missionary societies of this District are urged to attend the Missionary Institute which will convene a Jena, La., on April 29."

Mr. Firman Smith, of Nashville, Tenn., and Dr. Dunbar Rowland, Director of the Mississippi Department of Archives and History, of Jackson, Miss., spent two or three days in New Orleans last week. These gentlemen were schoolmates of the Editor at the University of Mississippi, and he had the pleasure of seeing a good deal of them while they were in the city.

Rev. J. W. Ramsey, of Mendenhall, Miss., says: "Please state in the Advocate that all the time that I can devote to revival work from the fourth week in June to the middle of September, is taken, and that on this account I have had to refuse a half dozen invitations. But if any of the brethren can use me in June except the last week, I shall be glad to assist them."

We are grateful to Rev. R. M. Evans, of Strongs, Miss., where the Aberdeen District Conference will convene, for a kindly invitation to have a representative of the Advocate on hand at that gathering, which will be presided over by Bishop W. B. Murrah. An important notice concerning this meeting appears on another page of this issue of the Advocate. Brother Evans states that the work in his charge is progressing nicely.

It gives us pleasure to state that there are now three effective Sunday schools within the bounds of the Lower Coast Mission, which is being opened by Rev. A. J. Gearheard, under the auspices of the Rayne Memorial Quarterly Conference. Brother Gearheard reports that the Daisy Sunday School contributed $5 to the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage on Easter Sunday, and that all three of these schools are connectional in their spirit.

Rev. W. F. Baggett, of Dekalb, Miss., who is to be the host of the Meridian District Conference, writes as follows: "I desire to ask the pastors in the Meridian District to send me as soon as they can the names of all the local preachers in their charges and of the delegates to the District Conference. I should also like to have at once the names of all who expect to attend the Conference from outside the District. We expect to have our new church ready for the Conference."

Rev. J. S. Parker and family, of Seminary, Miss., will have the sympathy and prayers of many friends in the great sorrow which has recently come to them in the death of their son, Mr. J. W. Parker, which occurred in Hattiesburg on April 7, following an operation for appendicitis. At such a time, how unspeakably precious are the rich promises of the Divine Word, which assure us that we may reclaim our loved ones in the Father's house of many mansions!

Writing from Columbia, Miss., under date of the 15th inst., Rev. M. B. Sharbrough says: "The foundations of our new church are laid, and the sub-floor placed on them. They are of concrete and stand three feet above the level of the ground. The brick for the structure have all been secured, and we are waiting for the coming of the stone with which it is to be trimmed. When it arrives, we ought to go forward rapidly with the work of completing the building."

Rev. J. L. Greenway, of Silver City, Miss., writes: "Our church at this place has had added to it two classrooms; so our Sunday school is now able to do much better work than heretofore. The pastor has recently conducted revival services for two weeks, which resulted in greatly quickening the spiritual life of the church and in 9 additions to our membership by profession of faith. All the services in the charge are well attended." Brother Greenway has our hearty thanks for 3 new and 3 renewal subscriptions to the Advocate.

Bishop R. G. Waterhouse, of Los Angeles, Cal., en route to the connectional meetings at Nashville, Tenn., spent a part of last Sunday in New Orleans, worshipping at the First M. E. Church, South, at the evening hour. He was accompanied by his daughter, Miss Edith Waterhouse, who was on her way to Crystal Springs, Miss., to visit relatives. Miss Waterhouse enjoys the distinction of being a grand-niece of Dr. Elijah Steele, the noted Methodist preacher. The Bishop was looking well and spoke encouragingly of our work in the Far West.

Mr. B. F. Moore, of Mitchell, La., has issued invitations to the marriage of his daughter, Miss Kathryn Lee, to Mr. Alvin Hamilton May, in the Methodist Church at that place on the evening of Tuesday, May 5, at 8:30 o'clock. The bride is a graduate of Mansfield College of the Class of 1909 and is a young lady of many gifts and accomplishments. The groom, who is a son of Rev. H. W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, is a young gentleman of sterling worth and much promise. The Advocate extends congratulations and best wishes.

An Easter card from Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, one of the esteemed Sunday School Field Secretaries of the North Mississippi Conference, brought the information that she had been seriously ill for two weeks. We have had no later news, but sincerely hope that ere this she has fully recovered her health and strength. The absence of Miss Kilpatrick's "News and Notes" from the "Sunday School Department" of the Advocate for the past two weeks has detracted appreciably from the interest of our paper. We earnestly hope that our readers may not be long deprived of her valuable contributions.

Rev. C. J. Stapp is magnifying his work as pastor on the Scotland (Miss.) Circuit. The reports at the first quarterly conference were ahead of any of a corresponding date held in several years. Brother Stapp has been visiting from house to house, and has been delighted to discover some family altars in the homes of his parishioners. He is also giving attention to the reading matter of his people, having recently ordered from the Publishing House $15 worth of books to be distributed among them; and besides this, he has been opening the way for the Advocate to reach them. Our Brother may feel assured that his faithful labors will not be in vain in the Lord.

We greatly regret to be informed of the death of Mr. J. J. Akers, a highly esteemed citizen of Iuka, Miss., who passed away on Thursday, April 16, in the eightieth year of his age. He was one of the pioneer settlers of his community, and his decease is widely lamented. He was an earnest Christian, served with distinction in the Civil War, was for one term a member of the Mississippi Legislature, and was twice chosen Mayor of Iuka. He left twelve children to mourn his departure, one of whom is Mrs. E. H. Cunningham, the wife of our pastor at Myrtle, Miss. We extend sympathy to the bereaved, and pray that they may feel the "Everlasting Arms" underneath them in this trying hour.

Rev. J. V. Bennett, who has the commendable habit of abounding in good works, favored us on April 16 with a club of 18 subscriptions to the Advocate. Brother Bennett says: "This is the first chance I have had to do anything for the paper this year. In fact, I am just getting started in my work, having been hindered, as you know, by sickness in my family. Our baby (the one that was so ill that we had to bring him to New Orleans) is gradually improving a little. He has not yet gotten so that he can walk, but we are expecting him to begin to do so every day. Truly, the Lord has been gracious unto us." We are, indeed, glad that the long period of anxiety through which Brother and Sister Bennett had to pass seems now at an end, and that God in his goodness has seen fit to spare the life of their little one.

Among the appreciated visitors to the New Orleans District Conference last week was Rev. J. F. Foster, of Amite City, La., who has many friends in the city. Brother Foster is attending the State Sunday School Convention, which is in session at Lake Charles this week.

Dr. Beverly Carradine, of St. Louis, arrived in New Orleans on Thursday, April 16, and remained through Monday of this week. He came to visit relatives in the city, but the brethren kept him busy while he was here. He lectured at Felicity Church on Friday night on "Strange Characters," preached three times on the Sabbath (at Felicity, Rayne Memorial, and First Church), and lectured at First Church on Monday night on "Old Acquaintances." Dr. Carradine favored our sanctum with a call, and we greatly enjoyed our brief season of fellowship with him. He has been in the evangelistic work, in which he is still engaged, for about twenty years, and is as earnest and sunny-hearted as in the days of yore. The Doctor went from New Orleans to Kingswood College, near Louisville, Ky., where he is due this week to take part in the Commencement exercises of that institution.

Brother J. O. Lanfair, the faithful superintendent of our Sunday school at Durant, Miss., sends us a copy of the program of a song service rendered by the choir of our church in that city at the evening hour on Easter Sunday. It was an admirable one in every respect and we do not doubt that the occasion was greatly enjoyed by all in attendance. Brother Lanfair further says: "Our Sunday school also provided a special program and we observed Decision Day. Following these exercises, our pastor preached a most excellent sermon from the text, 'If a man die, shall he live again?' and at the close of the service opened the doors of the Church, and five persons joined on profession of faith and one by certificate. This makes a total of 32 this year. We are getting ready for Mothers' Day on April 26 and Children's Day on the first Sunday in May, and we trust that both occasions will be fruitful in good results."

Dr. Felix R. Hill, Sr., left New Orleans for Louisville, Ky., on April 17. He will remain at the home of his son, Mr. Edward G. Hill, in that city, for about two weeks, and then go to St. Louis to assist in a twelve days' meeting at the Scruggs Memorial Church. It was the Doctor's great pleasure to preach more than twenty times at the St. Francis Street Church of Mobile, Ala., in a series of Lenten and Passion-week services. The meeting was a most pleasant and profitable one. It closed with a most impressive Easter service, at which a class of about 20 were received into the Church; and there are more to follow. Dr. Hill served the St. Francis Street congregation for four years, when he was quite a young man, and his ministry in that important charge was marked by great prosperity. He reports that this church is now in a fine condition, and that its members are devoted to their present pastor, Dr. O. C. McGehee, who is doing a fine work there. Dr. Hill's address until May 1 will be 1330 South First Street, Louisville, Ky. During the summer months he may be reached at Monteagle, Tenn.

OWING TO WHAT HE WANTED.

Walker M. Van Riper, who has made a study of legislation affecting railroads and public service corporations, tells this: "At a time when the legislature of the New State of Arizona was passing a big batch of bills affecting railroads, a young man called on President Wilde of the University of Arizona and asked him if a course of instruction in the railroad business could be had in the University. The president said perhaps it could be arranged, and the young man then asked how long it would take and how much it would cost."

"That depends on how much you want to learn," President Wilde told him. "If you want to learn as much as a division superintendent knows, it will take you ten years and cost you $10,000. If you want to know as much about the railroad business as the Arizona Legislature knows, it will take fifteen minutes, and will cost you seventy-five cents."

NOTICE.

Our subscribers and patrons are requested to make all money orders and drafts payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate when remitting to us. If a personal check is sent, add 10 cents to cover cost of collection. We are willing to pay the exchange on checks of $5 or over, but if we are expected to give 10 cents on every small check sent us, it means a great shrinkage in our income.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR
FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try It! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

The waiting soul of Mrs. MAGGIE LANGSTON was borne away to the house of many mansions on March 18, 1914. Sister Langston had reached the advanced age of 71 years and 3 days. She had long ago set her house in order and so was ready to go. She was sick 5 weeks though she never seemed to suffer much, and always had a smile for her friends, her doctor and her pastor. As the natural body failed the spiritual grew stronger and as the end drew nigh, she said: "The sun will soon be shining," then raised her eyes heavenward and a bright smile lit up her face as she exclaimed, "Oh, the beautiful mansions! Don't you see Him? Don't you see Him?" Then she calmly fell asleep. Farewell, dear sister, we shall miss your pleasant visits, and the helpful hands that never tired in times of sickness. All the children were happy when "Aunt Maggie" came; but our loss is your gain.

Mrs. J. A. STEPHENS.

Our hearts have all been made sad over the death of Mrs. MARTHA TUCKER, one of the members of the First Church at Laurel, Miss. She was born in Alabama on May 7, 1829. Her parents were Edward and Lovey Murphy, and they moved to Lauderdale county, Miss., in her early childhood. She was happily converted at 12 years of age, and united with the Methodist Church. On Nov. 1, 1857, she was married to Isaac Tucker. Soon afterward they moved into Neshoba county, and there lived and reared a happy, prosperous family. The husband and father has been dead for about six years. For the past few years Sister Tucker had been living in Laurel with her two daughters, Jennie and Dora. For some time she had been too feeble to attend the church services, but she had never lost interest, and loved to talk of spiritual things. Death came to her suddenly on March 21, 1914. The burial service was conducted by Rev. C. C. Evans, in the absence of the pastor. Hers was a long and fruitful life. God gave her to her loved ones for many years. They sorrow, but not as those who have no hope. J. L. NEILL.

Mrs. MARY AVERA, wife of W. P. Avera, was born at Americus, Jackson County, Miss., August 20, 1823. She was the daughter of Samuel and Susana Davis. After her marriage her home was in Greene County, Miss., on the Chickasawhay River, near State Line. Here she and her husband spent more than fifty years of wedded life. She was the mother of nine children, and all—save one—were reared to mature life, six of whom are still living. Owing to the infirmities of old age the old home had to be broken up before either died. Her husband died in Pensacola, Fla., at the home of the youngest daughter in June, 1905; and she died in Biloxi, Miss., at the home of the eldest daughter Oct. 4, 1913. In early life she joined the Methodist Church, and gave her heart and life to God. This act of early consecration gave direction and force to her entire life, throughout which she was always the same devoted Christian. She loved her Church, and took an active and intelligent interest in the work of the Church up to the very last. She contributed liberally according to her ability, and was faithful in attendance as long as she was able to go. She was a constant reader of her church paper. As wife and mother she was devoted to her family, neglecting no interest of her husband and children. "Her children rise up and call her blessed." Like the passing of a long summer day into night, she passed quietly and peacefully to the mansions above. Farewell, but not forever. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." W. J. DAWSON.

Mrs. C. A. HORTON was born on Sept. 29, 1850; and died on March 3, 1914. My dear mother is sleeping, awaiting us at the beautiful gate. She was a member of the Methodist Church, and her life was spent for the Master. She bore her afflictions patiently. She was ever ready to help those in need. We are so lonely without our dear mother, whose hand was so ready to help us when we were sick. All through her illness she shouted and said: "I am living in Canaan now." She was willing, and ready to go when the summons came. There was nothing in her way—the pathway was clear. She leaves ten children to mourn her departure. She was laid to rest in the Holly Springs Cemetery. There was a sweet meeting in heaven with father and the other loved ones awaiting her coming there. May we truly and humbly say: "God's will be done, not ours." And may we look forward to a happy reunion where sorrow, sickness, pain and death are felt and feared no more, but where we know she is "Safe in the arms of Jesus." A loving daughter, (Mrs.) LOTTIE HORTON SMITH.

IN MEMORIAM.

One of the most beautiful things in this world, so full of beauty, is life as it is seen in a sweet young child. Such beauty dwelt for a brief season in the home of the parents of little Susie Margaret Sledge.

She was born Oct. 11, 1910; died April 4, 1914, and was laid to rest April 5, in the cemetery near Abbeville, La., the writer conducting the funeral service. Three and a half years of beautiful child life, the source and center of much joy to a Christian home, a few hours of suffering, and the life disappears from that home to bloom in beauty unfading in a better one, for did not the Master say, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven?"

Little Susie was an only child and we do not wonder that it was hard for father and mother to give her up. The surrender was made in the sweetest Christian spirit, and they write thus: "We are so thankful that we had Christian parents who taught us to submit to His will. We have more to work for now than we had before."

"Life was so fair a thing to her,
We wept and pleaded for its stay;
Our wish was granted us, for lo!
She hath eternal life to-day."

J. IVY HOFFPAUIR.

A BRIEF TRIBUTE.

The Oxford Church is poorer by a great deal since Miss Mary Compton left us the other day for the better world. She had lived a long and useful life. The evening time was quiet and serene, though the earlier part of her life was full of stirring activities. For many years she was a distinguished teacher, and was cultured and refined. Some one said of her upon the occasion of her funeral that she knew more distinguished men of the early days than any other Oxford citizen. We mourn her going away, but rejoice over the great work she accomplished while she was with us. Her remains were deposited in the Oxford Cemetery, but her name and memory cannot be buried.

Oxford, Miss. E. S. LEWIS.

A TRIBUTE TO J. W. PARKER.

Our beloved son, Mr. J. W. Parker passed away in Hattiesburg, Miss., Tuesday, April 7, following an operation for appendicitis and gall stones. Our hearts are bowed down with grief, but we know it is well with our precious one. The rich and the poor met together to pay their last tribute of respect to one who for many months had been a great sufferer, and who had won the love of a host of friends. A more extended notice will be given later. J. S. PARKER, P. C. Seminary, Miss.

Tidings From the Field

First Church, Pineville, La.

Dear Doctor Meek: We feel sure that the readers of the Advocate will be interested to know that the work here since the first of the year has progressed by leaps and bounds. The Conference was kind enough to send us a brand-new preacher, this being his first year, not having had any previous experience in pastoral work. Brother J. F. Dring of Ruston, arrived shortly after his appointment with his family and dived right into everything. He is a young man under thirty and while not a college graduate, he was brimful of energy and determination to accomplish something if there was any foundation to start with. Finding some little foundation in a few good people here, we launched out in the work. Since the first of the year we have had four additions to the Church at Pineville: two upon a profession of faith and two by letter. Since he has been here the Church has prospered in every line. The salary which has heretofore not been paid, has been paid in full to date. In addition to this, $109.81 has been raised and paid for painting the church, which had never been painted before. A gasoline lamp costing $10 has been bought for the church and paid for; and the Sunday school has also bought and paid for a desk and bookcase for Sunday school use. There has been a Woman's Missionary Council organized by the pastor, of which I am a member and we have raised, by giving an icecream and box supper, $39.05 for Church purposes. Our Council has a membership of nineteen and has started out with more life and brighter prospects than most any organization that has been in existence here for sometime.

Brother Dring, our pastor is co-operating to the fullest extent with all of the pastors in Alexandria in the "GO TO CHURCH SUNDAY" campaign and other inter-denominational movements, which has not been done in the past by the pastors of Pineville. We are glad to note this, because we do not think Pineville should be isolated, that the work is all connectional and that the Red River should not necessarily separate everything.—Miss Susie Macullon.

Holcomb, Miss.

Dear Bro. Meek: I have been thinking for some time that I would write you a few lines to let you know how we appreciate your stand in defense of the great doctrines that we teach. Ours is a great Church. I love her preachers. I shall never forget some of the great men that have been my pastors in the past, nor their noble wives. Oh, what a great influence these men have had over me and my family! Brother W. S. Lagrone was the man who caused me to take up public duties. I shall never forget the rebuke that he gave me on the first Sunday that he preached at our church. He requested me to pilot him that evening over to the Bethesda Church, nearly seven miles from our church. When we were about one mile from the Bethesda Church, I said to him that I wanted to go on to church with him, but that he had to make me a promise. He asked me what it was and I told him that he must not call on me to pray. He said that he would have his right arm severed rather than do that. So I bade him good-bye and started on my way home; but, oh, how my conscience did lash me! It seemed to me that I never would get home. But I resolved that I would pray when the church called on me. It was not long till Brother Lagrone had me in the harness completely. I have been making Sunday school addresses, praying and talking to people about Heaven ever since; and thank God I never feel embarrassed. Now I am 58 years old, and I can say from my heart: "Thank God that Brother Lagrone was my pastor just at the right time to save me." I owe more to him than to any one I ever saw. I have heard hundreds express themselves about as I have. We have a noble, consecrated young man as pastor now, Brother M. Johnson, who is a son of that great man that we all love, Rev. Eugene Johnson. Brother Curtiss will be with us next Sunday. We are anticipating a great time. I wish that you could be with us. We were made glad when the last issue of the Advocate made the announcement that you had recovered from your recent attack of sickness. We hope that you will be able to attend the General Conference, for we need our best men there. May God bless and spare you so that you can wield your pen in defending the great doctrines of Southern Methodism. B. S. ELLIOT, Lay Leader of Grenada Circuit.

REVIVAL AT MERIDIAN COLLEGES.

Another gracious revival was recently had at Meridian Colleges, conducted by Rev. J. L. Brasher of Attalla, Ala. Rev. G. S. Harmon the college pastor, together with the Presidents and members of the Faculty had prepared the way for a revival by special prayer-meetings and training the Christian workers. Several had been converted before the set time for the meeting so that the revival was really on when the visiting preacher came. There were more than a hundred professions of salvation during the ten days of special services. On the last day fifty-five young people volunteered for the mission field. Several young men received a definite call to preach. The meeting wrought a wonderful change in the Colleges.

It makes all the machinery run smoother after being oiled by the Holy Spirit. If our colleges would take the time spent in intercollegiate meets and put it into revival meetings our young people would be better morally, mentally and spiritually. A good revival results in better lessons, more thorough and conscientious work and solves many knotty problems of discipline.

This was a revival on sane, sensible lines. There was no worked-up excitement. The preaching was logical, powerful, heart-searching, and convicting. It made people think and change their course. There was much straightening up of past wrong-doing. A meeting that will make people straighten up their past lives is a good one.

The preacher was earnest, scholarly, and effective. Being a university graduate and having taught many years, he was well adapted to conduct a college revival. The pastor fits in well here and is doing a fine work. The Lord is blessing us abundantly in the colleges. Pray for us.

NEW CHURCH ENTERPRISE AT AMORY, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: The Building Committee yesterday morning, April 16, let the contract for a new Methodist Church at Amory, to the Standard Construction Company of Meridian, Miss., represented by Mr. J. H. Semmes (to be built on the percentage basis), at $57,500, not including the architect's fees, or the furnishing of the church. The work of excavating the basement will begin within ten days, and the building is expected to be finished by Nov. 1. We do not expect the enterprise when completed to cost less than $22,000. Our people seem enthusiastic over the project. Brother E. D. Gilmore started us with a gift of $5,000 and the people are rallying to this generous donation. The need of the new structure is very urgent. We have been literally overflowed with the Sunday school under the efficient superintendency of Brother J. M. May. We are hoping and looking for great things in the Sunday school work of the church when we get into the new building. Our congregations have been splendid ever since Conference. We have raised nearly half of the Conference collections. The stewards raised the pastor's salary this year $100.

Some of the preachers in these parts have been sick—Brothers Park, Burns, Brisco and L. T. Sargent. Brother Park, I hear, is getting well after a severe spell. Bro. Sargent has had a continued spell of la grippe, but is better. Brother Brisco, his wife, and one of his children have all been sick, but are all better, I think. Brother Bell, the presiding elder, keeps well and busy. He expects to attend the Reunion at Jacksonville, Fla., and visit his family who have been spending the winter in that State. They will return with him to Aberdeen.

W. M. YOUNG.

STATE EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The Louisiana State Epworth League will hold its annual session in Shreveport, in the First Methodist Church June 17-21, 1914. An excellent program has been made which is built around the Third Department of the League, that has for its object the promotion of Christian culture in the social and literary life of the young people. The institutes of the different departments will be conducted by a team from the Central Office in Nashville, Tenn., which assures us of the very best information, which will be an inspiration for better work in the home chapter.

We hope that every pastor will feel responsible for a delegation from every church where there is an Epworth League, Senior, Intermediate or Junior, and others from churches where they have no organization, but wish to learn that they may assist their pastor to organize when they return from the conference.

Please send names of all who wish to attend to Miss Miriam Atkins, 1524 Fairfield Avenue, Shreveport, La., Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, and Third Vice-President of State Epworth League.

MRS. S. J. LINGLE.

PORT GIBSON DISTRICT.

Dear Dr. Meek: The first round of conferences is the trying time of the year to me. I am always anxious to have evidence that my judgment was good in selecting men to fill the appointments. The first round this year was full of anxiety, as I had more new men that I have ever had. There are thirteen first-year men in the district. Conditions made an unusual amount of changing necessary. I felt easy about the nine who were returned. I closed the round with a great sense of relief. In every case conditions are good and promises are fine for a happy and successful year.

Witt is recovering from a severe spell of pleuritic pneumonia. He is busy getting his work in shape, and he and his people have formed a mutual admiration society. His reports were unusually good.

Coker is delighted with Mayersville, and his praise is in the mouths of all the people.

Roberts is a providential man. The Lord certainly directed in his appointment to Gibson Memorial, Vicksburg. Every thing there is moving. The church building is progressing finely.

McKee is on the move at Oak Ridge. He is a live wire. I insisted on his slowing down just a little. I was afraid he would finish up all the work and run out of something to do before the end of the year.

Strait has impressed Rocky Springs that he is sure enough "straight." He is delighted with the work, and the people are fond of him.

Yeager was most kindly received at Hernanville, and has made a very promising start. He has had much to embarrass him in the work for the last two months. Nearly half of the town burned and the bank failed. Added to this handicap is his good wife's desperate illness. She is now in a very precarious condition. He needs the prayers of all.

Campbell has captured Harrison. Alsworth is the biggest preacher Nebo has had, and the people have discovered it. He is bringing things to pass.

There was no mistake in sending Daniel to Liberty. He has already won his way into the hearts of the people.

One of the stewards at Gloster told me that Jim Williams was the finest preacher Gloster had had in all his knowledge of the place. The people of all his churches love him.

Maddox has made a fine start at Pearl Street, Natchez. The conditions there are peculiarly hard. The Church is financially very weak, but they are pleased with Maddox.

Herring is doing the best work of his life on the Woodville circuit. He is happy and busy.

Ellis is doing a wonderful work at Woodville. He is thoroughly organizing his church, and is determined to bring all the church into working line. He is a resourceful pastor. His people are fond of him, and he is happy to have the privilege to lead such a loyal and noble people in their work for the Lord.

The Lord is with us. Cordially,
T. W. ADAMS.

MONEY OR YOUR LIFE.

Some folks seem to value money more highly than their health from the way they sacrifice the latter for the former. If you ever experience the agony of Eczema, Tetter or some other tortuous skin malady you will appreciate what a little thing money really is compared with health. But remember, 50c worth of Tetterine will relieve the worst case of skin disease on record, quickly and permanently. No use to spend more. 50c at drug stores or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

ARE YOU A WOMAN?

Baltimore, Md.—Mrs. W. H. Ison, at 1419 East Madison street, writes, "For several years I suffered, off and on, from female troubles, until finally I was taken down and could do nothing. The pains I experienced I shall never forget. I lost weight till I was only skin and bones. I believe I would have been in my grave if I had not tried Cardui. I shall praise it as long as I live." Many women, like Mrs. Ison, are weak and discouraged, on account of some painful ailment. Are you one of these sufferers? Cardui will help you. Try it to-day. Any druggist.—Adv.

The emancipation from care and sorrow and unrest lies in that going out of ourselves which we call by the name of love.—Dr. MacLaren.

NOTES FROM COLUMBIA, LA.

Dear Mr. Editor: Things are moving up some on this charge. Congregations have more than doubled. Our four Sunday schools are thriving. A Junior League has been organized with thirty members. Eight new members have been added. The missionary society is active. Considerable improvements have been made on the parsonage and yard, and some furnishings have been supplied for the parsonage. The women have paid $100 on the church debt. We have purchased an organ for the Grayson Church; also 200 song books (Revival Praises). The stewards advanced the assessment for ministerial support from $975 to $1355. Including the assessments for the Orphanage and the district parsonage, we have an assessment of $600 for the different claims. The appointments were read four months ago, and $503.75 has been raised already for the pastor and presiding elder. The members of the Grayson church gave us 18 chickens and we have been well supplied with eggs. The Columbia people gave us a liberal "pounding" after we had been here a few days. Almost daily things are sent in to us. Two newspapers are published in the bounds of this work and both editors are Methodists. Sister Blanks gave me 300 strawberry plants which are now full of the luscious fruit, and in a few days I think they will go all right with the old-fashioned "boggy" cream. We have a magnificent High School here; the building is brick and amply large. Our church building is a gem. The former pastors have wrought well. There is a debt on one or two of our churches, but this has been mostly provided for, and it is our purpose to have these houses of worship dedicated in the summer. We have built a new church since I came to the work and will dedicate the same on the fourth Sunday in this month. I have secured six subscriptions for the Advocate, for which please find check enclosed. J. M. ALFORD.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

DRINK MORE WATER IF KIDNEYS BOTHER.

Eat less meat and take Salts for Backache or Bladder Trouble—Neutralizes acids.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble when it is only trouble.

"Voluntary self-denial is a mark of the true disciple of Christ."

The mark of a man in the world is absence of pretension. He does not make a speech, he takes a low business tone, avoids all brag, promises not at all, performs much.—Emerson.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

$150.00 SALARY For 60 days' work distributing religious literature. No experience or investment necessary. Promotion to broader field for those who show ability. Spare time work—if you prefer. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 911 Como Block, Chicago, Ill.

FRECKLES

Don't Hide Them with a Veil; Remove Them with the Othine Prescription.

This prescription for the removal of freckles was written by a prominent physician and is usually so successful in removing freckles and giving a clear, beautiful complexion that it is sold by druggists under guarantee to refund the money if it fails.

Don't hide your freckles under a veil; get an ounce of othine and remove them. Even the first few applications should show a wonderful improvement, some of the lighter freckles vanishing entirely.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine; it is this that is sold on the money-back guarantee.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONF. SOCIETY.

Don't forget the time and the place—April 24 to 29, at Laurel, Miss. Pray for the outpouring of God's blessings on this gathering; for the leaders, that they may plan wisely and execute well; for the whole body, that much good may be accomplished in those five days, and that such an influence and inspiration may emanate from this conference as will reach and uplift every auxiliary within its bounds.

Miss Kate Cooper, one of our missionaries from Korea will be present; also Miss Jalia Wasson, from China. A feature of special interest will be a missionary demonstration by the Petal Young People's Society. This band of young women has done splendid work during the past year.

Our representatives at the Woman's Missionary Council—Mrs. W. H. LaPrade and Mrs. B. F. Lewis—report a wonderful meeting of that body, every day and hour being filled to the brim with important work and service for the Master. If you did not subscribe for the Council Daily, you missed a great privilege in not keeping up each day with the happenings in Fort Worth. I suggest that you secure the copies of this paper from some friend who took it and read them carefully before attending the meeting at Laurel.

Let those who attend do all in their power to make this the best annual meeting we have ever had, and let those who remain at home join in earnest prayer for God's blessings upon it.

MRS. H. L. McCLESKEY, Recording Secretary.

INTERESTING ITEMS ABOUT THE MISSIONARY VOICE.

The Missionary Voice is climbing up in subscription each year, a gain of 3000 subscribers was made in 1913 and the deficit for each department of woman's work reduced to $839.96. A financial exhibit from the official record showed that the merging of three former missionary periodicals of our Church into one magazine has reduced for the women the expense of the editorial office from $4512.50 to $2730, and the cost of printing from $12,450.15 to $8617.85, making a total decrease in expenditures of $5614.30. The fact of deficit is due to our making the present price of 50 cents do double duty. The goal of 80,000 subscribers for the Missionary Voice was urged as the solution of the financial, as well as the educational and devotional problem.—The Council Daily.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN MISSIONARY CANDIDATES,

Fort Worth, Texas.

It would be a revelation to our readers who are not thoroughly conversant with the methods of dealing with our Foreign Missionary Candidates, to know the infinite care and wisdom as well as tender love that guards every young woman going out to our Foreign Mission Fields. Four times her credentials are submitted and earnestly considered by four qualified bodies. The health qualification, the educational requirement, the social fitness, the force of character, the spiritual equipment, are all weighed and balanced over and over again. It is no wonder that the minimum of mistakes follows after this conscientious sifting and adjusting. And only the Heavenly Father can measure the sense of responsibility that weighs upon the women into whose hands is entrusted the direction of these lives given over to service in his kingdom. Eight young women will be recommended to the Council this year for work in the Foreign Field.—Council Daily.

EXTRACTS FROM MISS BENNETT'S MESSAGE.

Departments.

"When the Council was organized a constitutional division of work seemed to justify two additional departments, a Department of Education and a Department of Social Service. The management and development of these departments were committed to two of the ablest women in the body. The Educational work to a salaried Secretary, the Social Service to an unsalaried Vice-President. These women have labored unremittingly and with contagious zeal during the quadrennium, but in the actual visible work for which the two woman's societies came into existence, and which they have been doing for more than a quarter of a century, and that which these departments must interpret and make real in the field, the line of demarcation is so fine it has been most difficult to construct separate channels of active service.

Educational.

"Making a missionary literature, and inaugurating plans and methods for a wide and intelligent use of the same among women and children, has for the past thirty years, been the greatest and most far-reaching work of the Woman's Missionary Societies of the Protestant Churches of this country and Great Britain. This is not true to the same extent of the General Mission Boards. The last ten or fifteen have seen the rise and development of this educational spirit in every board, born largely of the activity of the Student Volunteer Movement, and the successful efforts of the woman's organizations.

Social Service.

"All of the work of a Mission Board is, or should be, Social Service saturated with the gospel of Jesus Christ, interpreted by hearts full of the love of God. Every school in the foreign field, and every Wesley House in the home field is a social settlement. Every missionary and every deaconess is a social worker. A Social Service Department of a Mission Board is peculiarly an educational department. The funds of the Council are constitutionally restricted to certain types of work and cannot be diverted. The Department is, therefore, limited to the investigation of local conditions, giving information concerning community or national conditions, and stimulating a larger personal study, interest, and service, in the work of related organizations. We have every reason to believe that because of the work of one Social Service Department, every succeeding year has found a larger number of our women in the auxiliaries vitally interested in the legal suppression of child labor, white slavery, the evils of Mormonism, and the use and manufacture of liquor as a beverage. Our women generally, recognizing their helplessness, are declaring themselves in favor of a living wage, a tenement house law, compulsory education, and kindred betterment statutes.

Two good prizes offered in each State for the best cotton yield and the best corn yield—Open to Five States.

To stimulate the interest in larger and better crops of cotton and corn in this section, the Meridian Fertilizer Factory, one of the best known and largest concerns in the Middle South, will offer this year, in each of five States, prizes of $150 and $100 for the most productive acre of cotton and prizes of $150 and $100 for the most productive two acres of corn in the crop of 1914.

These prizes are open to all who will comply with the conditions laid down in a booklet sent on request. That proper control over the contests may be had, all who enter enroll in the Two Bale per Acre Cotton Club or the Two Hundred Bushel Corn Club. No admission fee is charged.

THIS HELPFUL BOOK FREE

As a help to contestants the Company will send each member, free of charge, a book on the cultivation of corn and cotton. This book tells of the successful experiences of farmers who have won prizes heretofore and contains expert advice and suggestions from the Agricultural Department and experimental stations.

Not only are you sure of a better crop from following the plans outlined, which in itself pays for all you may do, but you have an excellent chance to win a substantial prize for yourself.

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

To accommodate the people who are interested, Rev. J. F. Foster is teaching a week-night Bible class in connection with the Amite Sunday school and the interest in the work done is shown in a recent record attendance of sixty-six.

Miss Elizabeth Denbo has been invited to speak at the coming State
Sunday School Convention on "The Intermediate Class from the Pupil's Standpoint." She is president of the Lafayette Intermediate class of girls, which is organized with a regular monthly business meeting with literary and social features. Mrs. Davidson, the teacher, is planning to take her class to Lake Charles for one day during the Sunday School Convention,
April 20-23.

On the 28th of March the Pipkin's
Chapel Sunday school on the Pine Grove charge, closed a "Red and Blue" contest with a splendid social meeting with Rev. W. A. Mangham, a former pastor, as the guest of honor. The program, and also delicious refreshments on specially arranged tables, were in charge of the defeated side.
Brother Mangham made an appropriate talk on social life in the Sunday school and with reference to the splendid work done in the recent ingathering that built up the membership materially, and had them sing "Somebody Did a Golden Deed—Was That Somebody You?" Led by a zealous superintendent, this school is doing good work, and has put on another contest for increasing its membership still more.
Brother Mangham is held in high esteem by the church membership on the Pine Grove circuit.

The Lafayette Sunday school last year paid $100 for Home and Foreign mission work, and has this year pledged $100 to the support of a native worker in China, and it is understood that an amount above this will be raised for French mission work in Louisiana. Of this amount, $25 is given by the "Philathea" class, of which Mrs. E. R. Kennedy is teacher, and Mrs. L. L. Judice, president. The motto of this class is "Others," and the proof that the motto is lived up to is seen in its program of good works in clothing two girls at the Ruston Orphanage, helping a girl through the Lafayette Industrial Institute, and in contributions made to many local charities. Also "the visiting committee looks out for the sick and strangers; tired eyes and aching hearts have been gladdened and comforted by visits and flowers, and Bibles have been placed in the Sanitarium, the Elks' Home, in club and rest rooms, and other places. Many acts of kindness attest the fact that the class motto means service—doing, not simply planning to do."

The Advocate Sunday school column readers are under obligation to Mrs.
Crow Girard for the following news from the Monroe Sunday school, she having stopped there en route to the recent annual meeting of the Louisiana Conference Woman's Missionary Society at Rayville: "Within the last two years the Monroe Sunday school has doubled its membership. In the Elementary department alone they have nearly two hundred, and Mrs. J.
M. Munholland, the superintendent, told me this interesting story that illustrates her zeal in gaining and holding the children to the Sunday school:
'During the Ouachita Parish Fair she saw on the streets of Monroe a drunken father leading two small children who made music on a violin and a French harp as a means of begging.
Upon investigation, she found that they lived a few miles up the river, and taking some of her class with her she visited the mother and studied the musical talents of her children, hearing their crude productions on harp and violin, and decided that their gifts could be made to serve a good end, and so invited them to play for her

Sunday school class on the following Sunday. This subtle flattery won the mother and delighted the children, and on the date appointed they were there, and pleased and interested the other children. Mrs. Munholland then had them to come to her home during the week and taught them the songs sung in her department until they could accompany the most of them. During the recent great revival held in Monroe by Evangelist Price, he and his singer requested that these children play at the Sunday morning preaching service, and there on the platform 150 children sang their happy sunshine songs accompanied by these two children and thus greatly stirred the large audience. Only eternity can reveal the good accomplished by this devoted teacher who is spending her life for the Master. The adult department is under the able supervision of Mrs. C. C. Miller, and often there are present between 90 and 100, the majority of whom are men. Mrs.
Miller's unselfish service to poor and rich alike has endeared her to the people of Monroe, as to the people of every place where she has ever lived."

The Epistle.

Though we speak with the tongues of scholarship, and though we use the approved methods of education, and fail to win our pupils to Christ and to build them up in Christian character, we are become as sounding brass.

And though we have the gift of teaching, and understand all the mysteries of religious psychology, and though we have all Biblical knowledge, and lose not ourselves in the work of winning our pupils to Christ, we are become as a tinkling cymbal.

And though we have read all Sabbath school literature, and attended conventions, and taken Teacher-training courses, and yet are satisfied with anything less than winning our pupils to Christ and the Church and educating them in Christian service, it profiteth us nothing.

The soul-winning teacher suffereth long and is kind; he envieth not those who are free from the teacher's task;
he vaunteth not himself; is not puffed up.

The character-building teacher doth not behave himself unseemly between the Sabbaths, seeketh not his own pleasure, is not easily provoked.
Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

Such a teacher never faileth; but whether there be prophecies of redemption through the intellect alone, they shall fail; whether there be theories of salvation through environment alone, they shall cease; whether there be destructive Biblical criticism, it shall vanish away.

When the soul-winning teacher, the character-building teacher, was a child he spake as a child, he understood as a child. In teaching children he is mindful of the nature and needs of the child. Now that he has become a man, he has put away childish things.

And now abideth Intellect, Environment and Evangelism, these three;
but the greatest of these is Evangelism.—A. R. Atwood.

COMB SAGE TEA IN LIFELESS, GRAY HAIR

Look Young! Common Garden Sage and Sulphur Darkens so Naturally Nobody Can Tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and abundant with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur.
Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and abundant.

THE NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The 1914 session of the New Orleans District Conference was held in the Rayne Memorial Church of New Orleans on April 15-16. A total of 57 delegates were in attendance, and the business of the District was attended to with both care and dispatch. Dr. J. M. Henry, the presiding elder, had provided the pastors with blank forms for reports and each charge was duly reported. The reports showed that the first four months of the Conference year have not been spent in vain. The finances of the District are much in advance of previous years and the pastors reported a net increase in membership of 127.

The usual committees were appointed at the first session and each committee performed the work assigned to it with care and the reports were concise and to the point. Mr. H. Van Carter was elected district lay leader. Mr. A. S. Daniels and Mr. J. R. Abels were elected trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground for the term of 1914-1917, and Rev. F. R. Hill, Jr., was elected to fill the unexpired term of 1913-1916. The following men were elected as delegates to the Annual Conference: S. H. Meyer, W. B. Thomson, W. W. Carre, and W. W. Sutcliff. Ex-Governor G. D. Shands and Mr. C. O. Chalmers were elected as alternates.

Among the visitors at the Conference were Rev. J. D. Harper, who represented the work of the Conference Board of Church Extension; Rev. R. W. Vaughan, who spoke in behalf of the Orphanage at Ruston; Rev. H. W. Van Hook, representing the Seashore Campground School, and Rev. P. M. Brown, who presented the claims of both Conference Education and Centenary College.

Dr. Henry presented the cause of the Seashore Divinity School and asked for $30 to help defray the expenses of the next session. The amount was subscribed in just three minutes. The Carrollton Avenue Church was selected as the next place of meeting.

The most noticeable feature of the session was the small amount of time occupied in the sessions and the volume of work done. The conference was in session but four hours all told, and yet not one thing was left undone that should have been done.

A. J. GEARHEARD, Secretary.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The forty-fourth session of the Greenville District Conference convened in the Methodist Church at Shelby, Miss., on Monday, April 13, 1914, at 9 a. m., with Bishop James Atkins in the chair, Rev. H. S. Spragins, the presiding elder, being present.

The Secretary having been elected, the roll was called and those present noted. Owing to sickness, Brothers Wasson, Ward and Lester were hindered from giving to us the pleasure of their presence. Many of our faithful laymen, though by no means all, were present and added to the success of the conference.

The conference was a good one from every viewpoint. The pastors' reports were all encouraging and showed that our pastors are each trying to do the work of the Kingdom in the way that is most likely to yield the largest returns. The discussions were spirited and emphatically pronounced, yet couched in the language of sympathy and love. Bishop Atkins lent his voice in counsel upon all questions pertaining to the general interest of the Kingdom of God. His presence and counsel were alike enjoyed by the conference.

The interest of our Orphanage, the Sunday school interest, the Methodist Hospital, and the Educational interests of the Church were ably represented by Brothers W. M. Williams, V. C. Curtis, R. M. Weaver, H. M. Ellis, J. R. Countiss, and Dr. A. F. Watkins, respectively. These all gave help and inspiration to the conference. Brother Bachman was also present with books of the highest type for our edification and growth in grace.

The visitors to the conference were Dr. H. H. Neal of the M. E. Church; Rev. O. W. Bradley of Winona, Miss., and Rev. R. Bradley, the father of T. M. and O. W. Bradley, who is a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference.

The following brethren were elected lay delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference: J. D. Barbee, J. H. Sberard, R. I. Peebles, and Wm. Connell. The alternates are: W. C. Boyd and J. T. Mathis. Tunica, Miss., was selected as the place for the meeting of the next district conference. Brother T. M. Bradley and his charming co-workers of Shelby were untiring in their efforts for the comfort and pleasure of their guests. They brought us under many obligations to them by their cheerful acts of courtesy to all.

The entire conference was disappointed because of the enforced absence of the editor of the Advocate.

DR. TILLET'S REMARKABLE IRENICON.

We stated in our paper last week that we might in this issue review to some extent Dr. W. F. Tillett's lengthy article, entitled "The Rights and Duties of the Church in Vanderbilt University," which appeared in the Nashville Christian Advocate of April 17, and this promise we shall now proceed to fulfill.

The Dean begins his discussion by stating that he thinks an argument could "be presented to show convincingly that the Southern Methodist Church founded Vanderbilt University in the way that she has founded all her institutions of learning, * * * and that Commodore Vanderbilt gave his donation of a million dollars to an already founded and chartered institution," but that such a contention would now prove hurtful, rather than helpful. This brings the writer into the arena with the bearing of one who has hitherto been on the Church's side of the controversy with the Vanderbilt Board of Trust and gives him quite a position of vantage from which to speak. But we wonder why Dr. Tillett did not make this argument for the public when it would have been in order and might have been serviceable to the cause of the Church. We have, indeed, heard it said that his sympathies were with us in the struggle, but it always seemed to us that if this were true, they were very mildly so. We remember when we served on the Committee on Education with the Dean at the last General Conference that when it came to asserting the rights of the Church emphatically on any point, he always appeared to us to be either neutral or against us. We distinctly recollect that when our Committee had before it the proposition to ask the General Conference to request the Vanderbilt Board of Trust to meet in Asheville to confer with it concerning the matters at issue between them and the Church, he opposed the suggestion, taking the position that the trustees of the University were our servants and that we should merely issue to them our orders—a course which, in view of what had gone before, would have been nothing short of farcical.

We do not mean to insinuate that Dr. Tillett has to the least extent been guilty of intentional deception; but we think that perhaps more than he himself has realized he has been affected by the Vanderbilt atmosphere in which he has resided for so long and by his association with the men leading in the fight against the Church, the effect being to afflict him unconsciously with a considerably divided heart. The environments of individuals almost invariably exercise a great influence upon them; indeed, it is doubtful if any person in viewing a question ever rises entirely above the impressions coming from his surroundings. And is it not rather significant that up to the present time practically all the pleas that have appeared in the public prints in favor of having the Church continue her connection with Vanderbilt University under the humiliating conditions now existing, have come from men who, in one way or another, have been connected with that institution? We mention these facts because it would be somewhat misleading to have the impression go abroad that the appeal under consideration has come from one who stood up for the rights of the Church throughout the long battle which has just ended.

But let us notice some of the Doctor's arguments. His statements so overlap, that in dealing with them we fear that we shall be forced to be somewhat repetitious, though we shall strive to avoid this as much as possible.

He declares himself "unable to understand how any one can say that the Court, in denying the right of the General Conference to elect trustees and the right of the Bishops to act as visitors, has taken away all the Church's rights that are worth anything in the management of the University, when the Court has most emphatically declared that all the rights that have heretofore been exercised by the General Conference belong to it now and must be respected by the Board of Trust." The Doctor seems to overlook the fact that the important thing in this issue is, not so much what rights were exercised by the General Conference, as what POTENTIAL rights the Church had in the institution, whether she chose to assert them or hold them in reservation. For instance, she believed that she legally owned the University, and that the trustees, as is plainly written in the Charter, were her legal representatives. These rights were also denied by the Court in unmistakable language. Nor is this all. But it was her conviction that her right to confirm the trustees was unrestricted in any way whatsoever and was as indestructible as any power exercised by the Board in constituting its members; but the Judges held quite differently. And let it be remembered that the Board of Trust had time and again, by official action, conceded that the Church possessed most of these rights and powers which she claimed. From the foregoing, it will be seen how sophistical and misleading is the Doctor's affirmation that the Church yet has left all the rights exercised by the General Conference, as if such rights had been the chief reliance of the Church. Nor is his statement correct. The Church has not had left to her all the rights that were understood to be exercised by the General Conference. The confirmatory power exercised by that body has been qualified and made less than co-ordinate with the corresponding power exercised by the Board of Trust.

The Dean further says: "This decision does not make any new law for the government of the University; it simply defines and announces what, in the judgment of the Court, has been the legal relation between the Board of Trust and the Church from the beginning of the University." The latter clause of this statement is a mere platitude of no special significance. To be sure, what the Court has adjudged to be the legal status between the trustees and Church now, is what in its opinion it ought always to have been recognized to be; but, as a matter of fact, it was not so interpreted in the past by either party to the recent litigation. To take the position that the law laid down by the Court leaves the government of the University precisely the same as it actually was in former years is an absurdity on its very face. Prior to 1905, the Charter rights of the Bishops were recognized and every member of the Episcopal College was permitted to sit as a member of the Board; and, as we have already said, there was no limitation upon the confirmatory power of the Church in the selection of trustees, which was generally thought to spring out of the very Charter itself. Moreover, the influences arising out of the universally admitted ownership of the Church were for long years of such weight that they dominated the Board, which did not evince the least disposition to disregard the expressed will of the Church.

But hear Dr. Tillett again: "These men who came together in the Memphis Convention, all of whom were Methodists, certainly thought that they were founding a Methodist University, and that the University would not only be vitally related and affiliated with the Church, but would be given all the Church control that seemed to them to be necessary or desirable if each new member of the Board should either be nominated or confirmed by the proper Church Conference." (Italics ours.) Does Dr. Tillett mean to say that the Memphis Convention did not desire for the Church to have any further control in the government of the University than this nominating or confirming power? Such seems to be clearly his contention, and if it is, will he pray tell why that Convention adopted its Ninth Resolution, which was as follows: "That the Bishops of the Methodist Church be and are hereby requested to act as a Board of Supervision of the University, and jointly with the Board of Trust to elect the officers and professors, and prescribe the course of study and plan of government?" We could say much more on this point, but in order to be as brief as possible, we pass on.

Says the Dean: "All Church property is held and legally 'owned' by boards of trust." (So it is, but the Boards in most cases are directly under the control of some Church conference, so that they cannot do a thing without being specifically empowered to act; and the Church years ago made it obligatory to put a trust clause in all the deeds holding her property.) "For a board of trust to own property does not mean that a Church may not also at the same time own it, in every vital sense of the term, provided that the Church has a controlling voice in determining the personnel of the board of trust." (We respectfully submit that in this case the honorable Supreme Court of Tennessee has emphatically declared that the M. E. Church, South, does not own Vanderbilt University, and we further affirm that she lacks a controlling, or even equal voice, in determining the personnel of the Board of Trust.) "Control" without ownership is much more important and desirable than "ownership" without power to control, if both ownership and control cannot be declared by law to belong to the Church." (So it might be, but the Supreme Court of Tennessee, so far as Vanderbilt is concerned, has granted neither "ownership" nor "control" to the Church.)

Dr. Tillett defends and approves of the Court's action in allowing trustees to serve on the Board before they have been confirmed, and affirms that this has always been the practice in the management of the affairs of the Board. Such a thing may have occurred in a few sporadic cases, but it has never before been blazoned abroad as the law universally governing in the making of trustees. We will not discuss the Doctor's lengthy disquisition to show that the word "contumaciously" used by the Court is not to be construed as having much significance, or his speculations as to what the Courts would do if the Church should persistently refuse to confirm trustees nominated by the Board that were not to her liking. The suggestion that we might have the General Conference and the General Board of Education to incorporate themselves in the State of Oklahoma, so that if the Church's confirmatory power should ever be challenged, we could fight the thing out in the Federal Courts, is novel, to say the least of it. But interesting as these BELIEFS of Dr. Tillett undoubtedly are, we hardly think they are substantial enough for the Church to pin her faith to them in formulating her future educational plans. We do not believe that she would be willing to rest upon the mere opinion of the most renowned lawyer in the nation in a matter of such vast importance, and if Dr. Tillett has ever studied law at all, we have not heard of it. For his views as a scholar, we have great respect; but he must excuse us if we are a little hesitant about accepting his advice as a legal counselor in a matter of such great moment. And we rather fancy that the picture that he holds up to the Church as to the possibility of another lawsuit will not be especially inspiring to her at this particular time.

The Dean insists that the Church won two immensely valuable points in the recent litigation: (1) The power to confirm the trustees, not as a mere by-law privilege gratuitously granted her, but as a right springing out of a contractual relation with the Board. In view, however, of the

WHAT IS "NEW THOUGHT?"

During the last few years, among the theories put forth to attract mankind, much has been heard of Christian Science, "New Thought," and similar movements. While they differ among themselves, they are all, at root, one and the same in their relation to the Christian doctrines of Sin and Redemption. This point was well stated by a writer a short time since as follows:

The essential difference between much of what is called "New Thought" and the truth of God as revealed by Christ is in the view that it gives of the nature and cure of sin. "New Thought" looks upon sin as partly a mistake and partly a disease, and it is to be cured by adopting truer ideas of life and putting these ideas into practice. The teaching of the Bible is that sin is an awful thing, the most awful fact in the universe; that sin is imbedded so deeply in man's nature that he is the bond-servant of sin, and cannot free himself from his bondage to sin. He needs to be "born again," to be "created anew in Christ Jesus unto good works." And he needs to be reconciled to God by the atonement for sin made by Christ on the cross. "New Thought" does not believe in an atonement for sin and it does not believe in the necessity for a new birth.

From this it is clear that "New Thought" is no re-statement of old truths, but a definite repudiation of essential verities of the Bible. Almost every heresy, ancient or modern, turns on the questions of Sin and Salvation. Christ is more than a Revealer; he is a Redeemer and a Re-creator.—Canadian Churchman.

THE WORK OF THE MINISTRY.

Business, politics, social affairs and a desire to keep the wolf from the door necessarily make of life a combat. There is an inevitable conflict of interests, aims and ambitions, and as a natural result more or less friction follows. While all this is true, we are persuaded that our fellowman is better at heart than he is given credit for being. The man that goes to the Lord daily in prayer is keeping close to the shore, and we believe that there is a far greater number who meet this heavenly requirement than is generally supposed. While seeing the bad 'tis a pity that our eyes do not behold more of the good in our fellows. The idea is too prevalent that there are few, very few, who take counsel of the Deity, all of which is an error. This misjudgment of our fellows is hurtful and tends to discourage religious living and destroys confidence in the spiritual life of the world. However, the fact that men pray does not alone meet the divine standard. We remember the record in Holy Writ of the man who had kept all these things from his youth up, yet the Savior told him, "One thing lackest thou yet."

Men are better, we believe, than we are prone to think they are, but they need to be still better if they meet the requirement laid down by our Maker. Man needs every sustaining element and force to keep him in the straight and narrow way. But for the Christian ministry, but for the holy and sacred influences in the Church, the world would drift into the maelstrom of strife and greed where God is shut out. The religious revival is just as necessary to continued religious growth and the development of Christian graces as sunshine is to the plant or the dewdrop to the delicate flower. The songs of Zion which take us back to the long ago and cause thoughts of the lullaby mother used to sing, and the injunctions father used to give, make the heart ache and oftentimes the teardrop to trickle down the cheek, but these are the wellsprings of better things. There are but few, very few, who have not some one near and dear already on the other shore. The lives these loved ones lived are inspirations to us who are still on this side. These departed ones are not really dead—they stand upon the parapets of the golden city of God and hold the lamp for us; they beckon us upward and onward. The minister that reminds us of these things is doing a sacred duty; he is performing a service for us. The dissolution of all the affairs of this world is inevitable. It is absolutely sure, and God has chosen to warn us of our indifference and the dangers that beset us through the ministry. And the man who devotes himself sacredly and earnestly to the cause and work of the ministry is performing the highest and best duty in all the wide world. In our judgment, one of the greatest besetting sins of the world is indifference.

Let us give each other more credit for good. Let us think more seriously about our duty. Let us realize more fully the great work of the Church of God. Let us award more honor to Christian ministers and endeavor to appreciate more the great work they are doing. They are the most potent forces in keeping alive the Christian flame and of keeping God smiling on the world.—Grenada Sentinel.

JOHN WESLEY'S REPARTEE.

By Dr. Joseph Parker.

Pastor Spurgeon did a good deal of work by the aid of humor. So did Whitefield in perhaps a less degree, though he appreciated the joke of being called Dr. Squintum. I do not know whether Wesley is to be credited with humor in its broadest interpretation, but there is abundant evidence of his lightning-like wit, his penetrating repartee, and of that unexpectedness of phrase which it is difficult to distinguish from the highest intellectual humor. Wesley was invited to a house where a most hospitable reception was accorded to him. The table was loaded with all manner of tempting viands. A young minister went into the room with Wesley and whispered to him as they entered: "Not much self-denial here, Mr. Wesley." "No; but a fine field for its exercise," was the instantaneous and disciplinary reply. Douglas Jerrold never said anything better, nor Sidney Smith, and they were both pastmasters in unstudied reply.—The Circle and Success Magazine.

A LETTER FROM DR. SWARTZ.

Dear Brother Meek: There are two things in Brother Peebles' article appearing in your issue of April 9, which impel me to ask if I may not have one word more. They are his suggestion that the Greek text used in the preparation of my articles caused me to fall a little short in my philological conclusions as to Matthew's "away from" (3:16), and Mark's "out of" (1:10); and his question as to what circumstances I had in mind when I said that the Eunuch's baptism by immersion was a possibility. And I am the more impelled to write this further word because, though Brother Peebles is the only one, so far as I know, who has asked this question publicly, he is but one of many who have mildly protested to me against this seemingly gratuitous concession to our Baptist friends of a strong inferential anti-immersionist example. I avail myself, therefore, of Brother Peebles' kindly criticism to brush away the slight tinge of disappointment which my friends may feel at my frank declaration that "the circumstances under which some were baptized, as for example the Eunuch, make immersion possible, while those under which others were baptized, as for example Saul, make some other mode almost a necessity."

Before taking up this question, however, we will consider for a few moments the other "difficulty" of mine, above mentioned, which Brother Peebles "relieves" in his article of April 9. He says of me that I "fell just a little short in my philological conclusions" because I did not harmonize the difference between Matt. 3:16, where "apo" (away from) occurs and Mark 1:10, where "ek" (out of) is found. And he suggests as the means of reconciling this difference that we accept as genuine only those readings of Mark 1:10 which agree with the reading of Matt. 3:16, and that we reject as spurious all those readings of Mark 1:10 which do not thus coincide. In other words, since Matthew 3:16 has "apo tou hydatos" (away from the water), only those manuscripts of Mark 1:10 are to be trusted which give "apo tou hydatos;" while all those giving "ek tou hydatos" (out of the water) are to be rejected as spurious and utterly unsound. This would be indeed an easy way to cut the Gordian knot, but thus arbitrarily to bring divergent readings into harmony with desired results would call down upon us many ringing denunciations from those conversant with recognized and well substantiated facts. Furthermore, Brother Peebles in his kindly spirit of friendly criticism, suggests that my error—as he sees it—in conceding "apo" to Matthew, and "ek" to Mark, is due probably to the faulty nature of the Greek text which I had before me.

The text of the New Testament which I used in the preparation of my articles is the 1881 text of Drs. Westcott and Hort, those famous Cambridge divines of the last generation. After twenty odd years of the most careful and painstaking study of all the leading uncials—Sinaiticus, Alexandrinus, Vaticanus, Beza, etc.—not to mention countless minuscules and secondary uncials, these profound scholars issued in 1881 their text of the New Testament which I have just referred to. It immediately received almost universal acceptance, displacing the texts of Tregelles, Tischendorf, Griesbach and others. It became the Ultima Thule to all questions about the true text and has remained to this day the final word on textual criticism. They give in the body of their work the readings of the best manuscripts and note on the margin and in the appendix all readings which have a strong secondary attestation. So that the body of their text, taken in conjunction with the marginal readings and the appendix, gives at a glance all those words which have any manuscript authority whatsoever. Such a text is certainly safe to follow and what we find there we must accept as occurring in the manuscripts themselves. In Matthew 3:16 the only reading suggested either in the body of the text or in the margin or in the appendix is "apo" (away from); while in Mark the sole reading is "ek" (out of.) This being so the real solution of the divergence between Matthew and Mark must be sought somewhere else than in an arbitrary alteration of Mark to conform to Matthew.

This question then which was raised by Brother Peebles forces itself with increasing emphasis upon us at this time: "What is the probable philological explanation of Matthew's use of 'apo' (away from) and Mark's use of 'ek' (out of) in describing the same event in Jesus' life—his withdrawal from the baptismal waters of the river Jordan?"

As long as any language lives it is subject to change. It is only after it dies that it becomes stiff and immobile. It was so with Greek. Classic Greek, in the hands of the great writers, was quite a different thing from what its offspring, Hellenistic Greek, was in the days of Christ. During the four hundred years which elapsed between the birth of Plato and of Paul a subtle change was wrought in the texture of the language. It looked the same; it was in large measure the same, yet it was not the same. Verbs had changed their meaning; nouns had become puffed up with new significance or had shriveled into but a semblance of their former selves; adjectives, once pregnant with one meaning, had given birth to other ideas; particles and conjunctions were no longer used as they were found in the flowing periods of Andocides. The language, though the same, was not the same. It had lost in large measure the finesse which it possessed when Isocrates spent fourteen years in writing the twenty pages of his Panegyricus. But if the language had lost in finesse it had gained in flexibility. Words were no longer of such vital moment that an author would spend four days searching for the one best word with which to express his exact shade and turn of thought. Old rhetorical and grammatical forms by which Demosthenes had molded and shaped his eloquent periods, had been broken and new ones, more flexible than the old, had been cast to take their place. The Greek of Plato had passed away and a new Greek, less exact but more volatile, had come to take its place. To be sure, the old Greek in all its exactness could be and, at times, was, still written; but every one seemed more concerned with the new idea of Greek flexibility than with the old of Greek exactitude.

This phenomenon of which I write, this flexibility of Hellenistic Greek over the more exact and ponderous style of the classic authors, is seen everywhere in the Greek of the Alexandrian period; and here nowhere more than in the use of the prepositions. In the classic authors the prepositions are used with great exactness. In Hellenistic Greek, however, we find one preposition used where in classic Greek another would be almost required. For example, in Gal. 2:1 Paul writes the preposition "dia" with the genitive meaning "after" instead of the far more usual "meta" with the accusative. This occurs also in Acts 24:17, and in Mark 2:1. But this is not all. Not only is a less common preposition often used but sometimes even in the same sentence the same preposition occurs with the same meaning, but with different cases. In Acts 27:44 we find such a thing. There "epi" is first used with the dative, while immediately afterwards the same preposition is used in exactly the same sense with the genitive case.

We need not stop here to consider the reason for this tendency towards flexibility which Hellenistic Greek developed. It suffices for our purpose merely to note the fact; for in this fact, which all students of Greek are aware of, lies the probable philological explanation of Matthew's "apo" and of Mark's "ek." Under the impulse of the spirit of the new Greek which they wrote and spoke, Matthew used one preposition and Mark another to describe the same event. They felt no need in this particular place for painstaking and classical accuracy. The baptism of Jesus was to them but one incident in his eventful life. They did not know how vital a thing baptism was, in these latter days, to become! How could they know? Jesus did not emphasize the mode and they had not heard of the Baptists!

Now, for the second thing in Brother Peebles' article to which I want to make answer. He publicly and others privately ask: "In view of the fact that Philip was reading to the Eunuch from Isaiah 53, where the thought is of sprinkling-baptism, how could you concede that the Eunuch was even possibly immersed, especially since they were going through a desert where no surface water has been found at all—much less water in large quantities—and where wells must be dug in order to get the little water necessary to maintain animal and vegetable life?"

The answer to this question is that I could NOT have made such a concession had I been considering ALL the probable circumstances of the case. The intrinsic evidence is, as every one knows who studies the Eunuch's baptism without ecclesiastical bias, wholly in favor of baptism by sprinkling. But I was not permitted by the exigencies of the discussion which I was carrying on to take into consideration all the probabilities in any case. I had a certain task to perform in the discussion and that task was to offer philological proof, and proof of no other kind, that certain things did or did not occur within the compass of both classical and Hellenistic Greek. I had been originally challenged on a question of philology, and I purposed to see to it that the question was debated solely on the merits of the challenge. In short, I had but one idea throughout the series and that idea was philology.

If, therefore, all those who have felt a shade of sorrow at my seemingly gratuitous concession in the Eunuch's case will take their Greek Bibles and read Acts 13:36-40 they will find that philologically speaking the case for immersion is very strong. It is in fact nothing short of perfect. There are the "ek tou hydatos" and the "eis to hydor" and all that—and not even once the slightest variation. In the full consciousness, therefore, of what I was doing and with the Greek text immediately before me, I wrote "the circumstances (meaning, as I have said and as my article was meant to show, the philological circumstances) under which some were baptized, as for example the Eunuch, make baptism by immersion possible." I did not write "probable" because of the very things, the intrinsic probabilities—probabilities other than philological—which Brother Peebles and others have since, thinking that I had overlooked them, brought to my attention.

IS THE ASSESSMENT PLAN WISEST?

For some time I have been studying the status and operations of the American Bible Society, which I have found to be very interesting. The Mississippi Conference is one of the very largest contributors (of whom there are nearly seven thousand), that make an assessment for this cause. The average assessment of those following that plan is $345. Our Conference in the amount contributed stands third among the Conferences, Synods, Conventions, and religious orders of every kind that are helping to support the work of this Society.

I have no intention of opposing contributions to this great religious agency, but there is ground for believing that in adopting the assessment plan we are undertaking to carry more than our relative part of the burden. For some time our mission work has been stunted because of our failure to meet the assessments for it. Here is the point: Are we faithful to our own Church obligations when we are disproportionately generous to a cause maintained by all the Protestant denominations? If the assessment is proper, is it right to levy it on such a scale that it amounts to having all our other religious interests make an apportionment, so to speak, to this cause? Or if the assessment plan is not equitable, why do we persist in continuing it? Over one-half of the Conferences of American Methodism do not levy an assessment for this Society.

The assessment plan does away with the necessity of the Society keeping an active agent in the field to solicit personal contributions who probably, would secure more money than the assessment brings in, and who, in addition to this, might create friends for the Society, here and there, who would make donations far in excess of the Conference assessment.

Another fact worth noting is that the largest gifts to this work have not come from the assessment plan, nor from the field in which that plan has been operated, nor from the Church that has most largely used it. Every Christian pulpit ought to be, and, of course, is, open to the agents of this Society to tell of its wonderful work and great necessity; but does not the assessment tend to convey to the Society the impression that its agents are not needed, and that the amount of the assessment carried by each church is the measure of its interest in this great cause regardless of its ability or opportunity?

Finally, does not the assessment plan get some money, but usually impart very little information concerning the condition and needs of the Society and its universal activity in promulgating the Word of God? The conclusion is, that it is a serious hindrance to the larger success and service of this great evangelizing agency.

C. M. CHAPMAN.

IN MEMORIAM.

The subject of this memoir—Britton Thomas Hoover—was born in Holmes County, Miss., March 2, 1840. He came of that sturdy German stock that settled in Orangeburg, S. C., in the early days and stood for civic righteousness in the "times which tried men's souls." He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the days of his young manhood. He was married to Miss Francis Helen Nance on Dec. 20, 1866. Two children were born of this union, John R. Hoover and Maude Hoover Maxwell. He died in Pickens, Miss., March 21, 1914, in the midst of those who loved and cherished his name and worth.

A choice and saintly spirit left earth for his home in heaven, when B. F. Hoover fell on sleep and was gathered to his fathers. Earth is poorer and its loss is keenly felt when a good man dies. Words are vain to express our personal loss and sorrow over such an event. That "God our Father loves and cares for his own," alone compensates our loss and helps us to bear the burden of our woe. Heaven is kind to solace the breaking hearts of earth's mourners, with its rich and precious promises; and "All things work together for good," is one among many that Christian hearts will hold till the travail of time is over.

Death itself works for good to him who loves God. This was the gracious, inspiring text that broke from the lips of our friend and brother, to comfort one he loved when she said: "It is so sad for you to suffer such pain and labor for breath in your last hours." The dreaded pneumonia had set in and was wearing him out; but with a smile he met the last foe, and felt that it was working for his good.

As it was his habit to comfort others, so, in life's last hours, he would have his loved ones know that "all things" were working for his good in spite of "pain and dying strife." How we shall miss him!

In the social circle, in the Church of God, in the home life, his genial presence, his guiding counsel, and his godly example were a constant inspiration and an abiding joy. Truly, it can be said of our Brother Hoover, no choicer spirit has God given to bless the community in which he lived, and leave a finer moral impress on the Church of which he was a member. The elements were so evenly mixed and nicely balanced in him that the manly man was in evidence. He was made of the stuff that God makes heroes of. No hesitation marked his bearing as he stood in the forum where truth and justice met to oppose error and injustice. He was ever the champion of righteousness, and his sword flashed in the thick of the fight when the battle was on.

Brother Hoover was the soul of honor. No mean thing ever put a stain on his proud escutcheon. He was loyal to God and his country. In the flush and prime of a noble manhood, he placed his heart's best affections on the altar of his Lord; nor did he take them thence. "I gave my heart to God, and joined the Methodist Church, South, and have been happy on the way ever since," was his joyous exclamation in our experience meetings.

At the call of his country in 1861 he was among the first to enlist in the famous 15th Regiment of Mississippi Volunteers, and for gallantry was elected Lieutenant in his company, the Quitman Rifles. His face was to the foe; nor did he sheathe his sword till the day of battle was over. Col. Blinford writes in terms of commendation of his soldierly conduct: "On him I could implicitly rely at all times." A noble eulogy, truly! But his best eulogy is his life.

The weary wheels of life are still; the grave closes on the scene of earth's lights and shadows; loved ones sit in deep grief "amid the encircling gloom;" but it is light and beauty and glory for our ascended friend, brother and loved one, on the other side. The prayer, "Give us a peaceful hour in which to die," was answered and the man of God fell into his last sleep as softly as a babe slumbers on the bosom of love.

We buried him from the Church he loved so well at 11 o'clock on a beautiful Sabbath day in the presence of a large and appreciative congregation of those who knew and honored him. He sleeps well after life's fitful fever is over. We shall meet him again.

WHO GOT THE FIFTY DOLLARS?

Several months ago the Board of Church Extension, through its Corresponding Secretary, offered $50 in prizes for the three best Church Extension stories submitted not later than Dec. 1st, 1913. Fifty-nine manuscripts were received, and these were submitted to Rev. U. G. Foote, D. D., Louisville, Ky.; Rev. T. E. Sharp, D. D., Memphis, Tenn.; and Rev. C. D. Bulla, D. D., Nashville, Tenn., as a committee of awards, each member of the committee being asked to name first, second and third choice.

These gentlemen each named a separate story for first prize. The three first choice stories were then submitted to Rev. J. S. Chadwick, D. D., Nashville, Tenn., who gave first place to "The Awakening of Stephen Standback," by Rev. H. H. Smith of the Virginia Conference; second place to "A Precious Jewel," by Rev. C. F. Wimberly of the Louisville Conference; and third place to "Dewdrop's Memorial," by Rev. H. H. Smith of the Virginia Conference.

The three prize stories have been issued in attractive form by the Board of Church Extension, and may be had free of charge on application to W. F. McMurry, Corresponding Secretary, 1025 Brook Street, Louisville, Ky.

Dr. W. D. Bradfield, pastor of the Tenth Street Church of Austin, Texas, is leading his congregation in a movement to construct a new house of worship. Already more than $50,000 has been subscribed.

Ex-Governor B. B. Comer, of Alabama, who is now a candidate for re-election to the gubernatorial office in his State, is a lay delegate to the General Conference from the North Alabama Annual Conference.

Dr. E. G. B. Mann, of Lexington, Ky., closed a meeting at Greenville, Ky., a few days since in which there were 115 professions of faith at the altar, and 62 persons joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dr. L. G. Broughton celebrated the anniversary of his second year as pastor of Christ Church, London, on April 2. During his incumbency 267 members have been received, 221 of whom joined by profession of faith.

The Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma City has issued complimentary a General Conference Directory, a copy of which has been mailed to every delegate. It is a most attractive pamphlet, beautifully illustrated, and contains much valuable information.

If you want to know about the heresies taught by "Pastor" Russell, write our Publishing House for the volume entitled "The Millennial Dawn Heresy," by Dr. F. L. Eaton. It is issued by the Northern Methodist Book Concern, but our Publishing Agents will secure it for you.

A series of revival services will be conducted in connection with the General Conference, which will convene in Oklahoma City on Wednesday, May 6. One of the active leaders in these services will be Bishop J. C. Klige, who lately has been proving himself to be quite an effective evangelist.

The Cabanne M. E. Church, South, of St. Louis, is enjoying a remarkable degree of prosperity under the leadership of the present pastor, Dr. Theo. Copeland. On Easter Sunday, April 12, 52 persons were received as members of this congregation, and on the succeeding Sabbath a special collection of $2375 was taken for Central College.

Dr. C. D. Bulla will edit the Daily Advocate to be issued during the General Conference. Send $1 to Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Texas, and have this interesting publication come to you. Every preacher and many of our laymen ought to take this daily, and keep all the copies for future use. One really cannot keep up with the trend of things in the Church unless this is done.

The Council Daily, issued during the recent meeting of the Woman's Missionary Council in Fort Worth, Texas, says: "Miss Allene Pearce, the one missionary assignment to Korea this year, goes out as our first self-supporting missionary. All honor to the noble mother who not only furnishes her precious daughter to pour out her life in heathen darkness, but also furnishes the money for her support!"

Upon the invitation of the Methodists of San Francisco, re-enforced by that of Mr. Charles C. Moore, President of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, the Woman's Missionary Council of the M. E. Church, South, decided to hold its next meeting in the City of the Golden Gate. It was stated to the Council that a round trip at half rate would probably be offered from all points in America to those attending its sessions.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference.

We are planning great things for our Annual Meeting at Aberdeen, June 11-15, and hope to have a program full to overflowing with good things. Bishop Murrah will preach our annual sermon, and we feel that we will be privileged above the common lot to have our own Mississippi Bishop with us upon this occasion. We are also to have our beloved member of the Woman's Missionary Council, Mrs. Bessie Lipscomb, with us, who will give us two inspirational addresses—one in the young people's service, and another one on Sunday evening. Then, too, we are to have with us our strong, self-reliant missionary, Miss Julia Wasson, who for the past five years has rendered such efficient service as teacher of Latin and Mathematics in the McTyre School at Shanghai, China. Miss Wasson is at home on her first furlough, and gave us much help and inspiration in the itinerary she made of the Conference last October. Miss Mary Daniel, our Conference deaconess, who is at present very busy with her plans for a Co-operative Home for the working girls at Corinth, will also be there. It makes my heart glow and glow to think of the North Mississippi Conference having the seventh Co-operative Home under the control of the Woman's Missionary Council. Miss Daniel is an untiring worker, and has the able assistance of Rev. J. H. Felts and the people of Corinth in her labor of love for the town. She has recently organized a Co-operative Home Board, and rented a house for a year, in which to test the need for a Co-operative Home in the town. Let us not fail to enroll Miss Daniel and her work on our prayer calendars, with the hope that her experiment may result in a Co-operative Home for Corinth similar to that of Houston, Texas, where our own Falla Richardson and Miss Durham are associated together, and which shelters 75 working girls, and from which hundreds have to be turned away. Come to our annual meeting and hear all about the plans and our work at Corinth from our deaconess herself.

Mrs. S. M. Thames, the First Vice President, is very busy with her plans for the children's service on Sunday afternoon, which is sure to prove a most interesting and helpful service. Miss Hartwell is showing a deep interest in the young people's service on Friday evening, and it is my earnest wish to have a large delegation of young people to attend our annual meeting. There is no department of the work in which I am more deeply interested, and none to which I have given more special attention, than the department of work among the young people. One thought advanced in Mrs. Cobb's report at the Council meeting in 1913 took deep hold upon me, namely, that the call for young people already equipped for service was most imperative, and that those young people were to be found within our college walls. With this thought in mind, I planned to visit our Grenada College and the L. I. and C. at Columbus, hoping thereby to awaken an interest among the young people in our annual meeting, and bring as many young women as possible into touch with our woman's missionary work, by inducing them to make our annual conference a personal visit. This, too, was planned before I heard of the College Day observed in our recent Council Meeting at Fort Worth. Illness prevented me from carrying out my plans; but I hope nevertheless to have a great number of young people to attend our annual meeting. It will mean much to our young women and to our Conference work to have them present. We hope to have the volunteers in our Conference present. So come to our annual meeting, young people, and hear about the College Day provided for in the recent Council Meeting at Fort Worth. Come and hear about that impressive ceremony, when nineteen young women were consecrated to work in the foreign and home fields. Come and hear about how a great host of deaconesses and returned missionaries told of their struggles and triumphs, their joys and sorrows, their invincible courage and monumental faith. Come and hear how our Father in heaven calls to you through "the fields white unto the harvest." Come and hear how our Council Second Vice President, Mrs. Stephens, made special mention of our Girls' Conferences, and urged others to follow our example along that line.

I am sure it will be very gratifying to the many friends of our retired president, Mrs. Walter Scates, Jr., to know that she will conduct our Workers' Conference on the afternoon of June 11. Then, too, our capable Corresponding Secretary of the foreign department, Mrs. T. M. Clark, will conduct an institute on the work of the district secretary. It is our purpose to magnify as much as possible the work of the district secretary, for we realize that there is no office more important. At the session of the executive committee held in Holly Springs last February, it was decided to allow the president to fix the time for the election of officers, and that the time be adhered to. Consequently the closing hours of the session, on June 15th, has been decided upon, and the delegates are requested to make their plans to come for the opening session, and to remain until the close. An executive session is called for on June 11 at 8:30 a.m. in the Methodist Church at Aberdeen.

The accomplished president of the Aberdeen Auxiliary, Miss Fannie Haughton, is manifesting great interest in our approaching session, and we feel sure that every preparation will be made for our comfort and pleasure while there. Rev. I. D. Borders, our Conference host, is a most faithful champion of our woman's work, and we feel that no measure for our entertainment or work will be tabled at his hands.

Do not forget that the names of delegates must be sent to Mrs. T. B. Sykes, chairman of the entertainment committee. I trust that our people throughout the Conference will look forward to this meeting as a time of joy, a time for the renewal of consecration and zeal in the Master's vineyard. Enroll this annual meeting upon your prayer calendar, and let a great volume of prayer ascend daily to the throne of grace for an outpouring of God's Holy Spirit upon the occasion.

MRS. VIC THOMPSON HOYLE, Conference President.

A NEEDEY AND DESERVING INSTITUTION.

Mr. Editor:

I am sure you, as well as the entire Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are interested in the Mississippi Industrial College at Holly Springs, Miss., and would be pleased to have any information regarding our progress. At this time the school is getting along fairly well. We have an enrollment of 400 pupils this year. But on account of boll weevils and floods for the last two or three years, we are seriously embarrassed financially. It is quite a struggle though every sacrifice possible be made, to meet current expenses.

Doctor, you know, our school is not endowed and we are dependent upon the struggling farmers to support this institution, and when they fail it embarrasses us. I am making an appeal personally to hundreds of people, and especially to members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to send us just one dollar, or more, if they are willing to do so. One dollar is a small contribution, but it means much to us, if a great number will send in this amount. I know that your own schools and colleges need a great deal of money and that the white people are struggling to maintain their own institutions; but we are earnestly praying and pleading that they will give this institution a small contribution.

We have a splendid healthy plant here, with buildings that have cost us $86,000. These buildings are well equipped. We have collected since the establishment of this institution approximately $200,000. Ninety-eight per cent of this money has been collected from the struggling farmers of Mississippi. We have no large donations; we have a generous proposition to give us $25,000 on the usual condition that we duplicate the sum. Our institution is encumbered and we have not as yet been able to meet the conditions connected with this proposition. Won't our friends in the Southern Methodist Church help us in our struggle?

Though the C. M. E. Church is now a distinct and separate organization, we are really the colored members of Southern Methodism, and when this Church was organized by the M. E. Church, South, it was set up and not set off. It is a matter of record that the Southern Methodists are pledged to stand by this Church in her struggles to educate, to Christianize, and improve this colored contingent.

Dear friends, do not turn a deaf ear to this appeal nor postpone it. It is such a small matter. In the midst of the multitude of your business cares, if you defer it, you are liable to overlook it. Just as soon as you get through reading this enclose your contribution, and send it to E. Cottrell, Treasurer, Mississippi Industrial College, Holly Springs, Mississippi.

threat hung over this poor vestige of power, we fail to see that this was a victory of any great consequence; especially in view of the fact that her ownership and the belief that the trustees were her representatives, were frowned upon and destroyed by the Court. There is much that we should like to say concerning this so-called contractual relation, but we must forbear for the present. If the majority of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust should elect trustees in accord with their liberal leanings toward Mr. Carnegie and other things, as they surely would, and the Church should refuse to confirm them as not representing properly her convictions, and a conflict should arise, in view of what the Supreme Court has already done and said, there is no reasonable ground to doubt what the outcome would be in Tennessee.

(2.) The other point won by the Church that the Doctor stresses is that the Resolutions of the Memphis Convention were declared not to be "mere surplusage," but to constitute "the articles of foundation of the University." The Court did in effect so affirm, but what did it do to the Memphis Resolutions? By its construction of them it took out all the meat that was in them for the Church and made them, so far as she is concerned, like a scraped and dry bone. Her ownership, the representative capacity of those who took out the Charter, and the supervisory rights of the Bishops were all swept away. If Dr. Tillett, as a good Methodist, can shout over having the Memphis Resolutions as interpreted by the Tennessee Supreme Court pronounced the articles of foundation of the University, it certainly must take very little to make him happy.

The Doctor manifests considerable concern for the future of the Vanderbilt Theological Seminary and suggests several plans that the Church might adopt, stating them in the order of his preference. They are as follows: (1) The Church might exercise the confirmatory power left her and let the department be managed by the Vanderbilt trustees as heretofore; (2) the Church might seek an arrangement with the Vanderbilt Board of Trust, by which the department could be placed under a separate board over which the Church would have complete control—the members of this separate board being either taken in whole or in part from outside of the regular University Board, and a transfer of the endowment fund of the theological department being made to it; (3) with the consent of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust, the Church might establish a theological seminary incorporated as her own in Nashville, asking the trustees of the University to legally transfer to the new institution such funds and buildings and parts of the campus as have generally been considered as belonging to the Biblical Department, thus giving the school the advantage of being in close proximity to the University and the George Peabody College for Teachers; (4) the Church can sever all connection with the University, including the Theological Department, the latter in that event becoming an independent theological school, like those of Union, Yale, and Harvard, with Methodist traditions and leanings.

We will not at present undertake to discuss specifically any of these proposals; but we do desire to say emphatically that we think it would now be unwise for the Church to maintain a theological school in connection with Vanderbilt University, or in proximity to it, under any kind of government that could be arranged. We shall speak plainly on this point, because we think the time has come to do so. Our objection to having a theological seminary in any way affiliated or associated with the University is that we think that the atmosphere there has for years been hostile to the Church and that it is still so. More than almost anything else our young ministers need a deep loyalty and strong attachment to the Church. We do not believe that the Vanderbilt surroundings would tend to give them this. But could not this atmosphere be changed? Who is to do it? Certainly not the Chancellor, who seems in a most remarkable manner to infuse his spirit into all his associates and most of the student body. The theological professors? The course which some of the leading ones among them have pursued during the recent controversy seems to give little warrant for expecting anything in this direction from that source.

Nor do we believe that the religious conditions obtaining at Vanderbilt University are such that the Church ought to train her young preachers there. Have not the students been sending out Commencement programs announcing junior hops and senior Germans? Why, it is reported that within recent years even some of the theologues have occasionally attended what are called high-class plays at the theaters. Has there been any protest from the trustees against these things? If so, we know nothing of it. Can the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, afford to shelter with her name an institution that permits such practices? More than once in late years we have had men living in Nashville who hold high official place in the Church (not Bishops) and who are in a position to know whereof they speak, to tell us that conditions at the University were such that if the Church could not take hold of it and straighten them out, she ought to get entirely away from it.

And there is reason to believe that the theology taught at Vanderbilt lacks a good deal of being in accord with the doctrinal standards of our Church. Its occasional forthflashings certainly indicate this. We will not go into particulars now, but we invite attention to the following extract from a letter written to an older preacher friend by a young minister who is prosecuting his studies in the Vanderbilt Biblical Department, after having been reared in an intelligent Christian home (a home that had given to the Church a minister and a missionary before he went out from it), after having been graduated from one of our leading Church schools, and after having served a successful year in the Methodist itinerancy:

"I am very proud of the opportunity of being here. I think that every young preacher should come here before trying to preach. I have had my theology torn all to smithereens. I find it difficult to maintain my balance sometimes. But I just keep quiet and in a few days the difficulty is cleared up and my faith is strengthened and my spiritual life deepened. * * * I don't say that coming here will make a preacher out of a man, for that all depends on the worth of the man. It is possible for a man to go through here and miss completely or get the wrong impression of what is taught. I see that done occasionally. Some folks can't see what you are driving at."

What is this new teaching at Vanderbilt which seems to have knocked, in this instance at least, the current religious views of our people—the theology of Wesley, Clarke, and Watson—into "smithereens," and which is so mystical that students can go through the seminary and still be in the dark as to what it means?

In pleading with the Church to let things go on at Vanderbilt as they have been doing heretofore, it should be remembered that her relations to the University have been of an exceptional character, such as she sustains to no other institution within her bounds. Her Theological Seminary and Correspondence School, which have in hand the work of training and equipping her ministry, have both been maintained there. The University has been the center, the very heart, of her whole educational system, her other schools being largely grouped around it. As we see it, it would not at all do for the Church to allow any institution to hold such a position and have charge of interests so sacred which is not thoroughly Christian and thoroughly Methodist, and in which her authority is not sufficiently potent to see that it is kept so. Without this, in a denomination that is closely connectional like ours, the welfare and safety of the entire Church would be imperiled. Not for one moment should we think of letting a Board over which we have not the fullest control select the men who are to perform the work of instructing those who are to occupy our pulpits.

But to us the most remarkable of all Dr. Tillett's strange utterances is the following: "Certainly I would not have any one to think that my reason for writing thus concerning the protection of the rights of the Church in the University is because I have any reason for thinking that the Board of Trust is going to try to interfere with those rights. On the contrary, so far as I have heard any expression from those whose position and influence in the Board of Trust give them a right to speak, the purpose of the Board is, in all fidelity, to exercise its rights as now legally defined and meet its corresponding duties and obligations to itself, to the Church, and to the larger Christian public which the University can and should serve."

CARE FOR THE RIGHTS OF THE CHURCH! We wonder why these gentlemen, if they may be trusted so implicitly now, have not shown some little concern for the rights of the Church in the past. Does the Dean hope that his bland assurance as to their dependableness will re-instate these men in the confidence of the Church, after the ugly and indefensible record that they have made? Ah! that is impossible. The Church cannot forget how these trustees, through their distinguished President, did at Asheville what was calculated to entirely mislead the General Conference by declaring that they "had accepted the findings of the Vanderbilt Commission and intended in good faith to be bound by them," and how they later affirmed in their bill of pleadings that they never had intended to accept the findings of the Commission and that any statement to that effect utterly misrepresented them. She cannot forget how they said, in an official enactment, that they "REGOGNIZED AND REJOICED IN THE OWNERSHIP OF THE CHURCH," and how they later came into Court and challenged and destroyed that ownership. She cannot forget how the Executive Committee of the Board, headed by the Chancellor of the University, brought Mr. Carnegie into the contest while the case was pending before the Supreme Court, and how the whole of the rebellious majority of the Board stood sponsor for his proposed gift of a $1,000,000, with $800,000 of it virtually conditioned on a verdict against the Church.

Southern Methodism cannot afford to place the instruction of her youth in the hands of a body of men capable of such conduct as this, and if she does so, she will degrade herself and stand discredited before the Christian world. It is our conviction that the only condition upon which the Church could afford to remain at Vanderbilt would be upon the assurance that the institution was to have a new Chancellor and another Board of Trust. But this is impossible, since these men are now in the saddle, and the only consistent thing that the Church can do, when all the facts and interests involved are considered, is to sever her connection completely and forever with the University and set her hand energetically to the task of building up and extending her educational system independent of it. So, let her turn a deaf ear to the voices importuning her to dally with her plain duty to herself and to her Lord, and fling high to the breeze her untarnished banner, bearing upon it, clear to the vision of all, the inspiring inscription, "NO COMPROMISE WITH DISHONOR."

RECEIPTS FROM EASTER SUNDAY.

Mr. Editor:

Will you please kindly mention the fact that the returns from Orphanage Day, Easter Sunday, have brought the Orphanage nearly $3,000, and there are others to hear from. We are grateful for this response to our appeal, although we will need much more to carry us through the summer. We now have nearly 90 children and our expenses are heavy. We trust that our friends who have raised funds will send the amounts in promptly, and if Sunday schools or churches have not responded, we hope they will do so at once.

Thanking all for their kindness, I am, fraternally yours,

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

(Adopted by the Greenville District Conference in its recent session at Shelby, Miss.)

The Methodism of the Greenville District is unswerving in its conviction as to the importance of Christian education and in its devotion to the institutions of the Church having this great arm of service in charge. But we regard with apprehension the apparent disposition to restrict the opportunities presented to the common people and to so elevate the standards of admission to our schools as to erect them into homes of culture for the fortunate and destroy the democratic appeal to the masses, to which our great Church is in every way committed.

Influenced by the Carnegie and other foundations, a frenzied effort is in progress throughout the country to "standardize" institutions of learning, as though that were the primary consideration in educational work. But, in committing themselves to this programme, we think our leaders are losing sight of the lessons of the past and that their efforts would be productive of far greater benefits if devoted to Christianizing, instead of standardizing, the schools under our control. Our mission is to the poor and uninformed as well as to the more fortunate classes. And, if we would be about our Master's business, we would do well to take heed to the commission which he has placed in our hands.

We do not wish to be misunderstood. We have not the slightest hostility to the highest development of education; on the contrary, we welcome its most liberal endowment and cherish its fruits as among the noblest possessions of the race. But the Church and the country are largely provided with such institutions, and their benefits are within the reach of all who feel the call of ambition to walk those lofty ways, though it is imperative that the Church should continue to expand its opportunities in the field of higher education. But we regard it as our duty to keep the torch of learning blazing in the valleys, to light the pathway of the millions of humble folk as they struggle towards the heights already attained by their more fortunate brethren.

In this connection we wish to commend most heartily our Secretary of Education, Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, who recently advocated similar views in a most spirited fashion before the Educational Conference at Nashville.

Grenada College

We commend to our members and others the opportunities offered at Grenada College, an institution for the education of young women which is the property of the North Mississippi Conference and the only institution for higher education entirely under its control. The growth of this school during recent years is highly gratifying; its growing importance under its accomplished president, Rev. J. R. Countiss, affords peculiar satisfaction to the Greenville District, within the bounds of which so much of his ministry has been spent. The financial triumphs of the College under his able management have been most noteworthy and emphasize the wisdom of his selection for the important position which he so worthily adorns. But the time has fully come when his genius and efforts should be met with something more than words of appreciation. We must not only patronize Grenada College, but we must maintain it. An appeal will in due time be made for funds with which to increase its equipment for service and we cannot afford to be niggardly in our response. By all means we must provide a plant at Grenada that will furnish opportunities for the increasing numbers of North Mississippi girls who will be attracted to its halls.

Millsaps College.

Millsaps College, located at Jackson, needs no commendation from us. It speaks for itself through its alumni scattered throughout all professions and callings and in every part of our State, where they are in the forefront of all worthy endeavor, and nowhere more efficiently than in the ranks of the Methodist ministry.

Through the munificence of its illustrious founder, who happily abides with us in strength, it has become richly endowed and is equipped for the largest service to the public. But the recent disaster which resulted in the destruction of the main building, following fast upon the heels of one which had but recently been repaired, challenges the loyalty and generosity of the Methodists of Mississippi to come swiftly to the assistance of the authorities in erecting a worthy edifice in place of the one that was lost.

We learn with satisfaction that ambitious plans are under way for the erection of an administration building in keeping with the dignity of the institution and its urgent needs, and we pledge ourselves to the fullest co-operation of which we are capable in assisting this undertaking, which means so much for the usefulness of the College and the honor and advancement of Methodism in Mississippi and the South.

Vanderbilt University.

After nearly forty years of unchallenged ownership and control, Vanderbilt University has been wrested from the Methodist Church in obedience to popular clamor. The scheme of spoliation has at length succeeded through an unjust decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee. Apparently weakly subservient to the malign influences that surrounded it, the Court has added the finishing touches to a transaction of the most shameful origin. Enveloped by an atmosphere hostile to the Church; dazzled by a gift of one million dollars from the "agnostic ironmonger," made contingent upon a decision adverse to the claims of the Church; the mental processes of the Supreme Court seem to have become warped in reaching the decision which it has rendered in this case. This view is amply sustained by the opinion itself. A most casual reading of it discloses the fact that the unimpeachable facts of history were utterly ignored; that its reasoning is pitifully weak; and that the Court was manifestly merely seeking to make the best excuse it could for the outrage to which it gave official approval. It seems to be a case of special pleading throughout. And in the light of this decision it may well be that the most timid and conservative should welcome the recall of judicial decisions or any other most radical method of securing justice at the hands of courts and legislatures.

The decision in the Vanderbilt case has attracted wide attention and the secular press has not always been careful in its comments concerning it. We are familiar with the hurry accompanying the preparation of matter for the daily press, and we do not censure its editors for apparently failing to examine the voluminous record in this case, nor for a similar failure to read in its entirety the amazing opinion thereon rendered by the Supreme Court of Tennessee—the latter is indeed a formidable document. But we are of the opinion that their duty to the public, to say nothing of consideration for the large and respectable company of Methodists among their readers, placed them under obligations to make some inquiries of those who are informed as to the true state of facts in so important an issue before uttering ex cathedra opinions concerning it.

Let us examine for a moment the ipse dixit to the effect that the Church sought more power. What power did she seek? Simply the power to control her own; nothing beyond that. It cannot be shown that the Methodist Church has ever exhibited a lust for temporal power. If she desired to do so, such is her strength and respectability in the United States that she could dominate its government; but that is not her mission and has never been her aim.

Concerning the assertion that the decision in this case "opens the doors to members of all denominations on an equal footing," we have only to say that it is a mistaken view of the result secured. It would be a matter of sheer impossibility to open doors which have always stood wide open. There are not wanting numbers of young gentlemen, not only Protestants other than Methodists, but Roman Catholics and Jews, who found Vanderbilt hospitable to their ambition to acquire a liberal education; and they doubtless would testify that they did not suffer from slightest discrimination during the process, from matriculation to graduation. Moreover, we venture to assert that there is no Protestant school in America at which students of all faiths and of no faith are not equally welcome.

The general public is not in a position to arrive at a correct understanding of the issues involved in this case—it has been constantly and consistently misled concerning them. It is quite generally believed that the issue has been between the Bishops of the Church and the Board of Trust, whereas it has been solely between the Church itself and the Board. The Church could not enter the courts en masse; so it instructed its College of Bishops to act for it.

In the minds of many of the uninformed public this whole case has gone off on the assumption that it was best for the University itself that it pass from ecclesiastical control. But this view wholly ignores the question of property rights, which each of those holding it would be prompt to assert in any matter concerning himself. And divested of all extraneous issues the simple question is presented: Is it lawful to take the property of another without his consent? That the Methodist Church owned Vanderbilt University is a matter of fact, despite any assertion or decision to the contrary. The protagonists of the revolting Board of Trust have admitted it on more than one occasion. That it has been adjudged otherwise by a court of law cannot alter that fact. With equal propriety the trustees of any of our Church buildings could oust the Church and turn them over to Socialist Clubs.

But the most humiliating incident in all this sordid history is that the Church has met her defeat at the hands of her own sons. Had the Board of Trust not been first manipulated out of the hands of the Church, while she was confiding in its integrity, the issue which has resulted so disastrously to her rights could never have been successfully raised.

In view of the history of this whole matter, we feel the utmost indignation that the property of the Church has been spoliated; we renew our assurances of approval of our Bishops, the minority trustees and the editors and other leaders in the noble fight they have made to maintain our rights; we urge the General Conference to take such action as will cancel any remaining connection the Church may have with Vanderbilt University, anything less than the fullest power to control the institution being wholly dishonoring to her; and we demand that the constituted authorities administer adequate punishment to those under our jurisdiction who have been primarily responsible for the alienation of the property of the Church and whose contumacious conduct is unpardonable.

FERNWOOD'S SPLENDID RESPONSE.

One cold, rainy Monday night I stopped at Fernwood, Miss., to acquaint our people there with the need for a Methodist Hospital. In spite of weather and time there was a fair congregation and the cause had a good hearing. I was about to close, intending to make a personal canvass for funds on the next day, when Brother Linton, my good friend of many years, who took such good care of me while there, suggested that a collection was in order. Of course, subscription cards were passed and those present given a chance. The result was that several hundred dollars were subscribed, $80 being paid.

Brother P. H. Enochs was an interested listener as we counted up the amount at the close of the service. Then he quietly said: "Just arrange for the payments from our church to go toward one of the five thousand dollar perpetually endowed memorial rooms."

That is the way they do things at Fernwood. When they see the need their response is prompt and ample. No one has to ask if the hearts of a people are right when every good cause of the Church and humanity gets sympathy and help from them.

At Fernwood they have the blessed habit of giving. A collection is no bore or plague to them, but a joy. When they are told of a great need, they want and call for a collection. The Lord bless them, and multiply their kind!

GOD GIVE US MEN!

God, give us men!—determined, brave and strong—
Who stand for Right and dare to smite the Wrong;
Whole-hearted men—unselfish, fearless, bold—
Whose love of truth outweighs the greed for gold;
Devoted men, who think and pray and plan
How best to serve and help their fellow-man,
While selfishness misrules, and greed and lust
Entice and drag their victims in the dust,
Send up the prayer again, and yet again,
With faith unfailing still—GOD, GIVE US MEN!

MADLINE'S MOOD.

She was not an attractive girl in any way, and she knew it. She was restless and cross and unhappy and growing more unattractive in looks and manner as she became older. Then an aunt, visiting at her home after a long residence in a distant city, sized up the situation, and out of pity for both the girl and everybody with whom she came in contact undertook to prescribe the sure cure.

"Madeline, do you want to be a torment to yourself and everybody about you all of your life?" was the blunt and astonishing question she put to her niece one day.

"No, of course not," was the prompt and half frightened reply from the astonished girl.

"You'd rather be sweet and lovely and happy?" came the next question. And it brought a sincere affirmative this time. The aunt handed her a folded paper and smiled as she said very kindly now: "Follow this magic prescription and you will be what you want to be."

And she was gone.

Madeline read: "Every time you want to frown, smile. Every time a cross thought comes, think a pleasant one. Every time something nice is done for you, do something nicer for some one else."

For a few moments she was crosser than ever. Then common sense saved the day. She tried the cure—honestly, sincerely, prayerfully; and to her own lifelong joy, to say nothing of everybody else's, there was soon no happier, more attractive, more lovable girl in the place than she. —Herald and Presbyterian.

THE BRAVE FISHER GIRL

On the coast of Normandy, near Grandville, the rise and fall of the tide are very great, being about forty-four feet at spring tides. It comes in very rapidly, and in particular places may be seen making up in a great wave two or three feet high. In a book on Normandy the following adventure is narrated of two English gentlemen:

They had been out on the sands watching the manner in which sands eels were caught, and examining the structure of the rocks, which were like sponges, when of a sudden one of them, whose name was Cross, shouted: "I forgot the tide, and here it comes!" His companion, whose name was Hope, turned toward the sea and saw a stream of water running at a rapid rate and replied quickly: "I suppose we had better be off." "If we can," replied Cross. "By crossing the rocks we may yet be in time."

They began to scramble up the rocks, and walked as fast as they could toward the nearest shore; but it was some time before they reached the highest point. On gaining it, they looked around and saw that the sand was now in narrow strips. Lines of blue water here and there showed how fast it was rising. They hastened on, but had not gone far when they found that the sand was now in narrow strips, with sheets of water between; but seeing a girl before them who was familiar with the beach, they cried, "We shall do it yet," and ran forward. The girl, however, instead of going toward the shore, was running to meet them, and, almost out of breath, cried, "The wave, the wave! It is coming! Turn, turn—run, or we are lost!"

They did turn, and saw out at sea a large wave rolling toward the shore. Out of breath as they were, they increased their speed as they retraced their steps toward the rocks they had just left. The little girl had passed them and led the way. The two friends strained every nerve to keep pace with her, for as they neared the rock the wave still rolled toward them, the sand becoming gradually covered. The last few steps were knee-deep in water. "Quick! quick!" said the girl. "There is the passage to cross, and if the second wave comes we shall be too late." She ran on for a hundred yards till she came back to a crack in the rock six or seven feet wide, along which the water was rushing like a mill sluice. "We are lost," said the girl. "I cannot cross; there is a passage to cross; it will carry me away." "Is it deep?" "Not very," she said; "but it is too strong."

Cross lifted the girl in his arms, plunged into the stream, and, though the water was up to his waist, he was soon across. His companion followed, and all three stood on the rock. "Come on, come on!" cried the girl. "We are nearly lost." And she led the way to the highest point of the rocks, and on reaching it cried: "We are safe now!"

All were thoughtful for a moment as they saw the danger which God had delivered them from; looking around, the sand was one sheet of water. "We are quite safe here," said the girl; "but we shall have to stay three or four hours before we can go to the shore." "What made you forget the tide?" asked Cross. "You must know the coast well." "I did not forget it," she replied; "but I feared, as you were strangers, you would be drowned, and I ran back to tell you what to do." "And did you risk your life to save ours?" said Hope, the tears starting to his eyes. "I thought at any rate, I should get here," she replied; "but I was very nearly too late." Hope took the little girl in his arms and kissed her and said: "We owe you our lives, you brave little maid."

Meanwhile the water was rapidly rising till it almost touched their feet. "There is no fear," said the girl. "The points of the rocks are always dry." "Cold comfort," said Hope, looking at them. "But what shall we do for our young friend?" he said to Mr. Cross. "If we put all the money in our pockets into a handkerchief and tie it around her neck, it will warm her, I warrant, for she looks cold enough." One of them had twenty and the other seventeen francs, and binding these in a knot, Mr. Hope passed it around her neck. On receiving it she blushed with delight, kissed both their hands and cried, "How happy mother will be!"

Just then a wave rolled past, and the water began to run along the little platform they were sitting upon. They rose and mounted on the rocky points and had scarcely reached them when the water was a foot deep where they had just been seated. Another wave came, the water was within six inches of their feet. "It is a terribly high tide," said the girl; "but if we hold together, we shall not be washed away."

On looking to the shore they saw a great many people clustering together on the nearest point. A faint sound of cheers was heard, and they could see hats and handkerchiefs waved to them. "The tide has turned," said the girl, "and they are shouting to cheer us." She was right. In five minutes the place was dry. They had some hours to wait before they could venture on the sand, and it was quite dark before they reached the beach; but at length guided by the lights on the shore, they gained their own homes in safety, not unmindful of Him who says to the sea, "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." The friends handsomely rewarded the little fisher girl, whose name was Matilda, for her bravery.—Our Messenger.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

For the quadrennium ending March 31, 1914.

By W. F. McMurtry, Cor. Sec'y.

The total amount received on the Church Extension assessment for the quadrennium is $766,052.06, which is an increase of $223,051.32 over the preceding quadrennium.

There has been collected on specials $93,826.56, which is an increase of $49,811.86 over the preceding quadrennium.

The total increase in the Loan Fund Capital is $220,967.98, which is $111,355.92 in excess of the increase of the preceding quadrennium. The total Loan Fund Capital on March 31, 1914, was $560,582.63. At the close of the last quadrennium it was $339,614.65. Annuities are paid on $101,218.99 of the Loan Fund Capital.

The collections during the quadrennium on outstanding loans are $354,117.21 as against $274,713.44 the preceding quadrennium.

The total receipts from all sources during the quadrennium are $1,772,490.77, as against $949,910.52 during the preceding quadrennium, an increase of $822,580.25. The total receipts on March 31, 1914, were $4,894,016.29. At the close of last quadrennium they were $3,121,525.52.

The amount donated to churches by the General Board is $383,268.13, and the amount loaned to churches is $337,948. The Conference Boards have donated to churches $301,471.37, and loaned to churches $42,689.89. The number of churches aided by the General Board is 553, and by the Conference Board 1923, or a total of 2476. The total amount invested in churches by both the General and the Conference Boards is $1,066,377.39.

The General Board has aided 131 parsonages in donations amounting to $18,361.49, and in loans amounting to $31,090, while the Conference Boards have aided 507 parsonages in donations amounting to $66,031.50 and in loans amounting to $2,875. The total number of parsonages aided by both Boards is 638. The total amount invested in these parsonages is $113,357.99.

The grand total invested in churches and parsonages for the quadrennium is $1,184,735.38, which is an increase over the total invested in churches and parsonages last quadrennium of $334,829.91. The grand total invested in churches and parsonages from the beginning (1882) is $4,305,989.17. It can readily be seen that more than one-fourth of the total amount invested in church and parsonage building from the beginning of organized Church Extension work has been invested during the quadrennium that has just closed.

Since the organization of the Board (1882) aid has been extended to 8994 different churches. This figure does not count any church more than once, though it may have been aided twice or more times, and may have received aid from both General and Conference Boards, and these 8994 churches have received aid in donation grants amounting to $2,494,715.22, and in loan grants amounting to $1,355,980.92, making a grand total invested in church buildings of $3,850,696.14, or an average of more than $428 to the church.

Since the organization of the Board aid has been extended to 2370 different parsonages (all duplicates and previously aided eliminated as in preceding paragraph concerning churches), in donations to the amount of $326,851.36, and in loans to the amount of $128,441.67, making a grand total invested in parsonages of $455,293.03, or an average of about $200 to the parsonage.

The Church owns 16,976 church buildings, and the Board of Church Extension has assisted in the erection of 8994 of them. The Church owns 5590 parsonages, and the Board has assisted in building 2370 of them.

The Corresponding Secretary has been busy in the office and in the field. Nearly all of the Sundays of the quadrennium, and many of the week days, have been spent in raising church and parsonage debts, or in assisting the brethren in launching new building enterprises. Much time has been given to first-hand investigations of difficult situations, this being particularly true of points where property was endangered by heavy indebtedness, due to careless and unbusinesslike management or lack of foresight in contracting obligations.

As far as possible he has visited the Annual Conferences, conferred with the Conference Boards of Church Extension and addressed the Conferences and other church meetings in the interest of our work. Eighty-nine Annual Conference sessions have been visited during the quadrennium.

THE GIBRALTAR OF CHRISTIANITY.

The strongest evidence that Christianity is true is not in the sublimity of its teachings, though they are so lofty and superior that they seem to bear the mark of divinity upon their very face; not in the witness of the Church to the authenticity and dependableness of the Sacred Scriptures, though this is a factor not to be ignored; not in the attestations of history and the confirmations of archeological research as to the correctness of the Biblical annals, though the light that streams in upon us from that source is interesting and impressive; not in the outward achievements of the Gospel, though they have been truly wonderful and have largely transformed the civilizations of the globe. In none of these things, though they all have their evidential value, do we find the most convincing proof that the religion of Christ has come from God and is what it purports to be; the overwhelming demonstration of this fact is found in the disclosure that God makes to the individual human soul by the Holy Spirit. The most certain of all knowledge is that which comes through man's inner consciousness, and in unfolding himself to that the Creator gives to the creature made in his "image and likeness" such an apprehension of himself as would otherwise be unobtainable. "The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." (Romans 8:16.) Here is the Gibraltar of our holy faith against which the forces of doubt and darkness hurl themselves in vain.

A forcible illustration of this great truth is seen in the case of the man born blind who was healed by the Master, as is recorded in the Ninth Chapter of the Gospel according to St. John. The Pharisees, greatly displeased by the miracle, sought to engage him in a sort of theological discussion concerning Christ, that they might confuse and overwhelm him; but the darkness had given way to light and he knew that some mighty power had touched him—hence he could not be shaken and triumphantly answered: "Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not—one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see."

When spiritual vision is given to the soul that before had no such sight, it has an experience which, while it remains unimpaired, all the cavillings of skepticism cannot discredit. It is doubtful whether all the logicians in the world could have convinced Saul of Tarsus that Jesus was the Christ; but after the marvelous disclosure that came to him on the road to Damascus, all unbelief and questionings were gone forever. He knew thenceforth that the Crucified One was the Lord of glory and became the greatest of his apostles. Here is the only effective cure for prevailing infidelity and worldliness. Wesley brought it into use when religion seemed all but dead in England in the eighteenth century and infused new life and faith into the Church, after the masterful argument of Bishop Butler in his great Analogy had utterly failed to remedy the dreadful situation. Is there not danger in the midst of our many activities and various cultural agencies of forgetting this tremendous fundamental truth, "that no man can say Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost?"

"How do I know that he is Jesus, the Lord? I was leprous, and foul, and mean; I fell at his feet, and he lifted me up, Saying, 'I will; be clean.'"

WORTHY OF CELEBRATION.

May 3, 1914, will mark the one-hundredth anniversary of the death of Thomas Coke, the first Methodist Bishop. Plans are under way to secure the celebration of this noteworthy event in Methodist history among Northern Methodists, and we think that Southern Methodists ought also to join in this movement. There is no more picturesque character to be met with in the annals of the Wesleyan Churches of the world than this little Englishman, of whom it has been said, "His stature was small and his voice was feminine, but his soul was as vast as ever dwelt in a human frame."

He was born at Brecon, Wales, on Sept. 9, 1747, and was educated at Oxford University. After his graduation, while serving South Petherton Parish, he came in contact with the Methodists, and as a result his ministry took on such increased earnestness and activity that there arose great opposition to him. This caused him to give up his charge and join Wesley in his work. His zeal was intense and his labors were unceasing. In 1784 Wesley consecrated him to the Bishopric and sent him to the Methodists of America as their first chief pastor. It can scarcely be said that he was a great executive or that he was well suited to the episcopal office. He was pre-eminently a missionary. His heart passionately yearned to give Christ to all the millions of the race. He crossed the Atlantic eighteen times at his own expense, and by his persistent efforts to extend the Kingdom into other lands, won for himself the title of "The foreign minister of Methodism." He founded missions to the Negroes in the West Indian Islands, which included 17,000 members at the time of his death. He wrote voluminously and was recognized as an author of note. When sixty-six years of age, he submitted to the Wesleyan Conference a plan for the establishment of a mission in the East Indies, which was rejected because there were no funds to meet the expense. By disposing of his personal property, Bishop Coke raised $30,000 for this expedition, which he undertook to lead in person. He died on this voyage, on May 3, 1814, and was buried in the Indian Ocean, the wide rolling waves of which, washing many shores, fitly symbolized the out-reaching love of this large-hearted disciple of Jesus who wanted to carry the priceless blessings of Christianity to every land. The leader fell, but the enterprise succeeded, and the Wesleyan East Indian Missions bear eloquent testimony to the consecration and apostolic spirit of Thomas Coke.

Wesley said, "The world is my parish;" but even more than he did, Coke made it his. The great Founder of Methodism called him his "right hand," and when he answered to the Master's final summons, Francis Asbury pronounced him "a minister of Christ in zeal and labors unsurpassed." The memory of such a man is a valuable heritage, and should be kept forever fresh and green. In reviving the recollections of so unselfish and noble and useful a life, there is blessing and inspiration. Our pastors would do well to preach on the career of Thomas Coke on Sunday, May 3. It would be exceedingly difficult to find a better subject for a missionary sermon that would thrill and stir the heart of the Church. We do not make enough of the masterful spirits of hygone years who helped to make Methodism a mighty evangelical force, and who did so much to speed the glorious gospel of redeeming love on its widening way. It would be far better for us if, instead of boasting of our superiority to our spiritual fathers, we would strive to emulate their earnest faith and seraphic ardor and endeavor to match their splendid achievements.

CONSIDERABLY EXAGGERATED.

We have noticed that some of our contemporaries are representing us as having said that Bishop Thirkield is undertaking to do in New Orleans the same thing that Bishop Leete is attempting to do in Atlanta. As a matter of fact, we have never made any such statement. In the New Orleans Advocate of March 12, we published a somewhat extended editorial on "The relation of the two Episcopal Methodisms," in which after calling attention to the powers vested in the Federal Council of Methodism, we said: "Will Bishop Leete and his counselors consent to let this project (the Atlanta enterprise), be passed upon by the Federal Council? Will Bishop Thirkield who is reported to be contemplating some forward movements in New Orleans, agree first to submit his plans to this tribunal and to abide by its decisions? And will our people agree to do the same thing along the border and in the Northwest?"

In a preceding part of this editorial we had discussed specifically Bishop Leete's project, because it was a definite one and such a glaring violation of the federation rules agreed upon by the two Churches; but so far as the particular utterance referred to was concerned, we had in mind the large principles involved, and not the exact nature of Bishop Thirkield's plans or of the enterprises of our own brethren along the border, whom we placed in the same category with him.

What our statement relating to Bishop Thirkield was based upon was a report that came to us about a year ago, that the Northern Methodists of New Orleans had advertised their St. Charles Street Church for sale and that they would likely build a new house of worship near Tulane University; but we are now reliably informed that this plan has been abandoned, and that it was not their purpose even when contemplating it to erect an expensive structure. We make this statement in justice to Bishop Thirkield, whose spirit in the administration of the affairs of his episcopal district is stated to have been quite considerate and brotherly. Rightly interpreted, what we said was not in any sense a misrepresentation; but unfortunately some of our fellow editors misunderstood it and read into it considerably more than its true import justified. We regret this occurrence, because we do not desire to be even the innocent cause of baving any brother placed before the public in a wrong light.

We do not abate by one jot or tittle what we have previously said concerning the unwisdom of the Methodist Episcopal Church undertaking to invade the South and establish churches among the white people of this section, and of our people attempting to extend their operations into the North; but there are enough real cases of friction without creating any fictitious ones, or of magnifying any case to the slightest extent. May our Heavenly Father, in his own wise way, bring all the spiritual children of Wesley in the United States closer together in the coming years, and stop their wasteful and hurtful competition with one another!

WILL YOU HELP HIM?

We are carrying, on another page, an appeal from Bishop Cottrell for assistance for the Mississippi Industrial Institute at Holly Springs. This is the only college maintained by the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church (the Church that our denomination set up), in Mississippi, and Mississippi Methodists ought to feel an interest in it. We fear that Southern Methodists are falling far short of their duty in promoting the religious development of the colored people of the South. It will be a lasting reproach to us if we do not have a large share in this great work. Read Bishop Cottrell's statement, and give him such assistance as you can.

WHY NOT SEND YOUR PASTOR?

We heartily commend the following, which we take from the Nashville Christian Advocate of April 24:

"To whatever charge it may concern: You love your preacher for his own and his work's sake. You have been wondering how you can show that love. We now tell you: Give him a ticket and money for at least a week's board at Oklahoma City, where the General Conference will convene next Wednesday and remain in session for approximately three weeks. There are many of you, and it would require but a small sum from each to raise the necessary amount. In what other way could you spend money that would be more pleasing to a faithful preacher and at the same time bring back through him the richest blessings on your own selves?"

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Bishop A. W. Wilson had recovered sufficiently to attend the meeting of the General Board of Missions in Nashville last week.

The St. Helena Echo states that Rev. R. V. Fulton, the pastor, will begin a revival meeting in Greensburg, La., on May 5, and that he will be assisted by Rev. J. F. Foster, of Amite City.

Rev. Thomas L. Porter, pastor of the Eureka (Miss.) charge, has brought us under obligations to him for six new and one renewal subscriptions. He is having a good year in his present field.

Mrs. Mary Harris Armour, of Georgia, who has recently been doing some work in New Orleans in behalf of the temperance cause, delivered an earnest and impressive address at the First Methodist Church last Sunday evening.

A revival meeting is in progress at Mangham, La., this week, where the pastor, Rev. A. D. George, is being assisted by Rev. A. I. Townsley.

Rev. W. W. Woollard, the presiding elder, states that Bishop Murrah's presidency over the Columbus District Conference gave great satisfaction.

Rev. H. R. McKee states that he is having a good year on the Porterville (Miss.) charge. May the remaining months of it bring him still larger success!

Mrs. Miller, the accomplished wife of Rev. C. C. Miller, is one of the editors of the Free Lance, an attractive monthly publication issued at Monroe, La.

The General Board of Missions at its recent session raised the assessment on the Church for missions from $525,000 to $660,000, an increase of $135,000. A resolution was also passed to establish a girls' school in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

Rev. J. T. Lewis, of Greenville, Miss., has for some days been assisting Rev. L. W. Cain in a meeting at Hollandale, Miss. Rev. R. Bradley, of Jackson, Miss., a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference, filled Brother Lewis' pulpit in Greenville last Sunday.

Read Rev. J. D. Harper's statement concerning the burning of our church at Zachary, La., which appears upon another page in this issue of the Advocate. We hope that many of our readers will lend a helping hand in replacing our destroyed house of worship at that place.

Rev. W. N. Dodds, of Houlika, Miss., gives us a good list of subscriptions from his charge, and says: "Things are moving on very well with us. We are almost ready to go to work on our new church at Van Vleet. We shall then have a good Sunday school at every church."

We are indebted to Rev. H. T. Young, the pastor of the Texas Avenue Church of Shreveport, La., for a club of subscriptions, forwarded a few days since. We regret to know that Brother Young has recently been ill with la grippe. He is doing a telling work in his present field.

The High School at Oloh, Miss., closed last week with an interesting order of exercises. Rev. A. H. Steel, our pastor at that place, made the invocation, and the annual address was delivered by Dr. Beeson, of Meridian. All who took part in the program acquitted themselves creditably.

Brother H. H. Ahrens will attend the approaching session of the General Conference in Oklahoma City as the staff correspondent of the Times-Picayune. This is a guarantee that the readers of that excellent journal will have first-class reports of the proceedings of the great law-making assembly of Southern Methodism.

Rev. D. R. McDougal, of Kossuth, Miss., is mindful of the Advocate in his rounds among his people, and his efforts in its behalf have not been in vain. He has sent us 9 new and 2 renewal subscriptions, for which he has our hearty thanks. The other interests of the Church are going forward under his guiding hand.

In a letter to our office bringing a club of 6 subscriptions, for which we thank him, Rev. E. H. Cooley says: "God is with us in the Walnut Grove (Miss.) charge, and the work is going forward. By his help, we hope to accomplish substantial results for the upbuilding of the Kingdom during the remaining part of this year."

A religious census of Rayville, La., was taken on Saturday, April 18, and the next day was observed as "Go To Church Sunday." The attendance on religious services on that Sabbath is said to have been larger than the population of the town. Rev. A. I. Townsley, whose energy knows no flagging, is our pastor at Rayville.

Writing under date of April 19, Rev. W. J. Ferguson says: "Our church in Philadelphia, Miss., burned this morning, and the occurrence has cast a gloom over our town. We hope to rebuild at once. Pray for us." We regret to learn of this misfortune, and we sympathize with Brother Ferguson and his worthy flock in the loss that they have sustained.

Brother J. G. Cronbach, the faithful superintendent of the Sunday school of the Second Methodist Church of New Orleans, paid us an appreciated visit one day last week. He stated that his Sunday school is in a prosperous condition, having an enrollment of 175 in the main department, 65 in the cradle roll department, and 60 in the home department.

Rev. C. M. Chapman sends us the following note: "The Commencement Sermon of Port Gibson Female College will be preached by Rev. J. D. Ellis on May 3, and Rev. T. J. O'Neill will preach the Missionary Sermon. The Annual Address will be delivered by Rev. J. L. Neill, of Laurel, Miss. We are closing one of the best years in the history of the school."

Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, of Corinth, Miss., who has been quite ill for some time, is improving. A note from her bearing date of April 25 stated that she was being allowed to sit up in her room a little. We hope that she will soon be entirely well and able to take up her work again. We scarcely need to say that we are glad to have her speak again through our "Sunday School Department" this week.

Rev. W. L. Duren, of Columbus, Miss., will have the sympathy and prayers of the brethren in the great bereavement which has recently come to him in the death of his father. We know none of the particulars of the decease of Mr. Duren, but we trust a suitable memoir of him will be furnished the Advocate at an early date.

Evidences of progress are not lacking in the Alexandria (La.) District. There are within its bounds five new charges: a station paying its pastor $1200; a circuit of five appointments, which is giving a good support to the preacher in charge and his family, and three missions, namely—De Ridder, Oakdale, and Indian. The pastors of these charges are preaching to sixteen congregations that the District did not have in 1913.

The many friends of Rev. N. E. Joyner will be happy to know that he has escaped from Mexico in safety. Brother Joyner's field of work was in Monterey. His wife and children have been with relatives at Jackson, La., for some months, but he remained constantly at his post of duty until the late developments made it impossible for him to do so longer. It is expected that Brother Joyner will be in Louisiana in the near future.

The Card Prospectus of the Sixth Session of the Seashore Divinity School is before us. It is adorned with a fine picture of Bishop W. A. Candler and Rev. J. C. Park, who are standing side by side, holding up a magnificent string of fish. The card claims for these brethren that as anglers they are in the "apostolic succession"; but the weak point in the case is that it does not state whether they bought 'em or caught 'em.

We were delighted last Saturday afternoon to have a visit from Rev. J. A. Randolph, who is a member of the North Mississippi Conference and a chaplain in the United States Army. He was looking well and wore his characteristic genial smile. Brother Randolph had expected to spend some time with his family who have been residing in New Orleans for several months, but the late developments in the Mexican situation caused his regiment to be ordered to the border line, and he had to leave hurriedly in order to join it there.

Rev. J. C. Park, who serves Tupelo, which is one of the half dozen best charges in the North Mississippi Conference, delighted the heart of the Publisher by sending in on April 24, a club of 2 new and 24 renewal subscriptions. Brother Park states that he thinks that the General Conference ought to settle fully and finally the Vanderbilt matter, that we may get away from the agitation and get busy at something else. We concur fully in this view. We are tired of war and our heart pines for sweet peace.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, the distinguished President of Whitworth College, will leave Brookhaven, Miss., for Oklahoma City, the seat of the General Conference, next Saturday, by the way of Memphis. He has to hurry on to meet the Committee on the Classification of Schools and to be present at the session of the General Board of Education, prior to the opening of the Conference. Dr. Cooper is a member of both the Committee referred to and the Board of Education, as well as a delegate to our law-making assembly.

Rev. J. B. Randolph, of Como, Miss., who is an alumnus of the Biblical Department of Vanderbilt University, writes: "I am very much disappointed in the decision of the Supreme Court. We have very little left to hold on to, and I doubt the wisdom of making the attempt." Like Brother Randolph, many of the alumni of Vanderbilt feel keenly the injustice that has been done the Church in taking the University from her. Indeed, how any Methodist could feel otherwise is, like the Bobbie Dunbar case, an insolvable mystery.

From the Texas Christian Advocate of April 16 we take the following: "Rev. Hugh Jamieson, of New Orleans, who is in charge of the Mary Werlein Mission and also assistant pastor of our First Church in that city, was a pleasant visitor to the Advocate office this week. Brother Jamieson, who is visiting relatives in Dallas for a few days, preached at the Ervay Street Church Sunday night and his sermon was much enjoyed by that congregation. Brother Jamieson has been attending the Woman's Missionary Council in Fort Worth."

We were favored last Friday with a call from Mr. G. H. Jones, the youngest son of the late Rev. K. A. Jones, who was an esteemed member of the North Mississippi Conference. Brother Jones' wife was Miss Mary Wier Tucker, a daughter of the late Rev. H. R. Tucker, of North Mississippi. This son and daughter of the parsonage, whose fortunes have been linked together, have been residing in New Orleans since March, 1912. They are members of Epworth Church. Brother Jones holds the position of traffic accountant with the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Dr. W. B. Palmore, the distinguished Editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, is bringing out a new volume, entitled "Palmore—Travels: In Arabia." That it will be well worth reading, needs not to be said. The book may be had by writing the St. Louis Christian Advocate Company, 3504 Washington avenue, St. Louis, Mo. The price is 50 cents. The first two dozen copies will have as a frontispiece a large picture of the versatile author.

In the Outlook of January 31 ex-President Roosevelt, who, as is well known, has been spending several months in South America, mostly in Brazil, says: "After reading the books of Brazil sixty and seventy years ago, it is astonishing to see the change that has taken place; and in no way has the change been greater or more beneficial than in the education of women. The women missionaries from the Southern branch of the American Methodist Church have done invaluable work toward this end."

Under date of April 24, Rev. C. M. Chapman writes: "I have resigned the Presidency of Port Gibson Female College to take the pastorate at Rolling Fork, Miss." This news surprises us somewhat, since Brother Chapman seemed to be having marked success in his educational work; but the call of the pastorate to one who has ever been in it is usually very strong, and it is not strange that Brother Chapman has again heeded it. What caused a vacancy at Rolling Fork, where Rev. J. S. Purcell was in charge, we are not informed at this writing.

Bishop Waterhouse, when recently passing through New Orleans, remarked to us that Rev. C. C. Sealeman is giving a fine account of himself as pastor of Trinity Church, Los Angeles (the Bishop's home city), and the visible results of his work fully bear out this statement. On Easter Sunday Brother Sealeman received 61 persons into the Church—33 by certificate and 28 on profession of faith. This makes for the year 120 additions. The magnificent new institutional building which the Trinity congregation is erecting at a cost approximating $750,000, is nearing completion, and will likely be opened next September.

The Nashville Banner printed last Sunday Dr. Tillett's recent article on the Vanderbilt situation, and gave it hearty editorial commendation. This alone is enough to make Southern Methodists beware of Dean Tillett's counsel. A couple of weeks before the Banner declined to publish Dr. James Cannon's communication on the same subject on the ground that such a discussion ought not to appear at the seat of war; but we suspect that the real reason why Dr. Cannon's article was declined was that it was in answer to one of the Banner's editorials and that not much was left of its editor when the Virginia "Cannon" ceased firing.

Under date of April 25, Dr. T. B. Holloman, of Port Gibson, Miss., writes as follows: "I have just returned from Indianola, where we buried my brother-in-law, Mr. Summerfield Brown, who died of apoplexy on Wednesday, the 22 inst. He left a widow and two children—Judge M. Brown, of Fort Worth, Texas, and Mrs. Ward, the wife of Rev. J. W. Ward, of Rosedale, Miss. For more than thirty years the deceased had been a member of the Methodist Church, and for a greater part of that time an official in the Church." We regret to be apprised of the death of this good man and worthy citizen, and we extend heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgement has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions, sent in within the past few days: "Rev. H. P. Lewis, Poplarville, Miss., 3; Rev. W. C. Carlisle, Guntown, Miss., 3; Rev. W. L. Blackwell, Vancleave, Miss., 4; Rev. W. M. Sullivan, Shubuta, Miss., 3; Rev. Eugene Johnson, Ripley, Miss., 8; Rev. J. R. Wilson, Pleasant Hill, Miss., 5; Rev. H. R. McKee, Porterville, Miss., 2; Brother C. H. Hopkins, Brownsfield, Miss., 5; Rev. F. R. Power, Logansport, La., 8; Rev. J. A. Welis, Topisaw charge, Miss., 7; Rev. W. J. Porter, Bienville, La., 5; Rev. R. H. Bamhurg, Calhoun, La., 4.

Rev. H. W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, writes: "The Church at Helm, on the Columbia Circuit, will be dedicated at the next regular appointment. At the Columbia quarterly conference, Brother J. R. Brown, chairman of the board of stewards, and Brother R. R. Redditt, chairman of the board of trustees, reported that provision had been made for the debt on the Columbia Church, and hope is entertained of having it dedicated by one of our Bishops in the near future. The official board of the Grayson Church will provide for the liquidation of a small debt on it, so that it, too, may be dedicated this summer, and it is expected that the dedication of the new church on the Indian Mission will take place early in May."

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

This, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is sure evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf. There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!

Mr. JAMES W. WRIGHT was born in Marengo County, Ala., on Oct. 10, 1853; and died in Kemper County, Miss., on March 2, 1914. He served in the civil war in a Virginia company. He joined the M. E. Church, South, at the old Center Ridge Church in his early days and was the main pillar of that church as long as it was a church, and was buried in the graveyard at that church, although at the time of his death he was a member at Mt. Hebron. The writer did not know him long, but was glad to be in his home twice before he died, and was glad to find him in love with God and strongly attached to the Church of Christ. His children, his grandchildren, and all who knew him say he was a good man. Thank God for a good name! It is to be chosen rather than riches. He leaves a wife and six children—one boy and five girls—but they mourn not as those who have no hope. May the grace of God sustain the bereaved ones in this hour of sadness and cause them to strive to meet him in heaven!

ERNEST EUGENE DAWKINS was born on Nov. 7, 1883, and was a native of Jefferson County, Miss. Brother Dawkins was accidentally killed in Fayette, Miss., on Dec. 16, 1913; and was buried in the family burial lot in the cemetery at Union Church, near the place of his birth. He joined the Methodist Church on Aug. 29, 1900, at Nebo, then a part of the Meadville Circuit; and was married to Miss Flora A. Garnett on Dec. 31, 1902. In 1904 he moved to Fayette, Miss., where he was the efficient bookkeeper for Jas. McClure, merchant and planter. Brother Dawkins leaves to mourn his departure a wife, father and mother, three brothers, three sisters and many friends. I was his pastor for five years—two years while he was but a youth, and three years after he was a mature man. During the last two years of his life he served the Church at Fayette as steward, which office he filled with fidelity; he was a faithful friend to his pastor, especially this pastor. I loved him as I have loved few men, for he was worthy of it. His home-life was thoroughly religious, Bible reading and family prayer were daily observed. We fully expect to meet him in heaven in the sweet bye and bye.

J. EARLY GRAY.

Mrs. ORA DAVIS McNUTT was born on July 13, 1886, and departed this life on Nov. 12, 1913. She was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. John Davis. She was married to Mr. W. C. McNutt on Feb. 25, 1903, and of this happy union were born two sons, one of whom preceded his mother to the heavenly land about one year ago. Miss Ora professed religion when about 17 years of age and lived a consistent Christian life until the date of her death. She was an affectionate child, kind and true to her father and mother, and was a loving and tender wife and mother. Her first-born child survives her. "None knew her, but to love, none named her but to praise." Our loss is her eternal gain.

Far from earth the spirit flies,
Finds its God, and sits and sings,
Triumphing in Paradise.

I was her pastor in 1897 and 1898, when she was yet a child. We shall see her again.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

(Adopted by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church at Heidelberg, Miss.)

Whereas, God in his wisdom and love has called our beloved friend and sister, Mrs. S. W. Abney from this world to a brighter home in heaven; therefore be it Resolved:

1. That in the death of our sister, this Society has been called upon to part with one of its best and most worthy members, whose willing heart and helpful hands were ever ready to aid her sister members.

2. That while we bow in humble recognition of the fact that an Allwise Providence attends our lives and orders all things for the best and that our loss is her eternal gain, nevertheless the mournful truth remains that Mrs. Abney will meet with us no more and nothing is left us but a precious memory. We extend to the family our sincerest sympathy.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the Society, that a copy be sent to the family of our departed friend, and that a copy also be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. W. J. Dawson, Mrs. C. G. McCormick, Miss Sallie Dantzer, Committee.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas in the Providence of God it has pleased him to call our sister, Mrs. A. D. Simmons, from her earthly labors to a life of rest and joy, of hallowed service and abounding praise; therefore be it Resolved by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Jefferson Street Methodist Church, at Natchez, Miss.

1. That the Woman's Missionary Society has been bereaved and a vacancy made in its ranks by the going away of one of its oldest and best loved members. She occupied faithfully every post of duty, performed well every allotted task, and met fearlessly every obstacle as she pressed forward in the path into which she was led by God's own hand.

2. That the Church of which she was so faithful a member will sorely miss her. It is left to us, while grieving for her departure, to thank God for so beautiful and influential a life, and to emulate her glowing Christian example. She was one of God's chosen instruments for good, and the Church is poorer now that she is no more with us, but we are better because she lived among us.

3. To the husband, and sons and daughter we send a message of love and sympathy. We know that the God of their fathers has been true in this hour of affliction, and that they have not mourned as those without hope. We would point them to the coming of that morn when "Those angel faces smile,

Which we have loved long since,
and lost awhile."

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy spread on the minutes of the Missionary Society, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Miss Jessie Porter, Mrs. L. A. Fitzpatrick, Mrs. John A. Guice, Committee.

Tidings From the Field

TOPISAW CHARGE, MISS.

Dear Advocate: Allow me space for a few lines to tell the Advocate readers something about the educational rally we had on Topisaw Circuit April 14-16. We had with us Brothers Roht, Selby and W. H. Lewis, and they spoke twice each at all three of the churches, discussing in these speeches Church Extension, Education, Home and Conference Missions, and the American Bible Society; and I believe it is going to finally result in great things for the charge. We had fairly good crowds at each church, notwithstanding it was a very busy time for the farmers (most all the officials were in attendance). And nearly every one seemed to catch the inspiration of the occasion, and now instead of having a kind of dread of mentioning the Conference assessments, because of the ignorance on the part of so many as to their importance, I feel that I can hardly wait for the opportunity to cultivate the seed that were sown by these men. One factor in the enthusiasm and success of these meetings was the real heart interest manifested by our lay leader, Dr. W. D. Beacham. He laid aside, as far as practicable, his duties as county health officer—his practice and farming interests—and went the whole round with us. May the Lord bless him and his family "in basket and in store" for such a willing sacrifice. At each church the good women were on hand with plenty of dinner; the children and young people came, too. May God bless all who contributed in any way toward the success of the meetings. Amen.—J. A. Wells.

EDUCATIONAL MEETING.

The District Secretaries appointed by the Conference Secretary of Education, Rev. Paul M. Brown met at his call in the First Church, Alexandria, to discuss methods of carrying on the educational campaign. It was decided to urge upon the pastors to raise the Conference education assessment during the month of May, and in so far as possible to use the subscription cards furnished by the secretary which will cover the amount for five years.

The Conference Secretary will issue "The Educational Outlook" from time to time which he hopes to place in every Methodist family in the State. Each pastor is asked to designate some one person in each congregation who will distribute this literature. This will be a fine opportunity to put the lay leader in each congregation to work.

It is contemplated to have an educational rally in each of the 398 societies in Louisiana Methodism. In many instances outside speakers will be used, but in most cases home talent will have to be employed. It is hoped that each pastor will suggest the plan best adapted to reach his people. The campaign slogan for 1914 is $30,000 from 30,000 Methodists for Christian education. An imperative necessity is upon us to raise the amount this year. Our people need the information which will show them what we have done, are now doing, and what we contemplate for the future. It is earnestly hoped as the campaign moves on that all our people may catch the vision of our needs and gladly come forward with rich gifts for the advancement of the Lord's Kingdom in the educational world. Let some one make a contribution of $10,000 for Centenary College, provided we raise the other $20,000, and see how quickly this can be accomplished. We need a starter as well as a starter.

ALBERT S. LUTZ.

DURANT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Dear Doctor Meek: Please have the Advocate to say that Bishop Murrell is to hold the Durant District Conference, July 8. Goodman is the place. All are expected to be in attendance Tuesday night, July 7. We earnestly hope the good women of the missionary societies will be on hand with such a program as they wish; we will give them all the time they want. Other announcements will be made later.

W. S. SHIPMAN.

APPRECIATORY RESOLUTIONS.

(The following resolutions of respect were passed by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Broad Street M. E. Church, South, of Hattiesburg, Miss.)

Whereas it has pleased our Heavenly Father in His infinite love and wisdom, to take out of this world the soul of our deceased brother, Mr. Dan Gillman, the husband of our beloved sister and co-laborer; therefore be it Resolved:

1. That we, the Woman's Missionary Society of Broad Street M. E. Church, South, of Hattiesburg, Miss., do hereby express our sincere and heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved family, relatives and friends. We are sure that the wife has lost a devoted husband, and the children, a loving father. While we realize that the loss his family has sustained is too great to be assuaged by mere words, we want to assure them that we are remembering them in this their severest trial.

2. That our Society and our Church has lost a faithful and generous friend, and the community, a useful and excellent citizen.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family; to the Hattiesburg Daily News, to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and to the Missionary Voice for publication; and that they also be spread on the minutes of this Society.

Signed: Mrs. D. E. Kelly, Mrs. J. B. Phillips, Mrs. K. T. Moore, Committee.

REVIVAL AT LEXINGTON, MISS.

The revival services at the Methodist Church closed Sunday night, April 19, with 26 additions to the membership. Thirty-one of these were received on profession of faith. It was a beautiful sight, Sunday morning, to see the pastor, Dr. H. G. Henderson, baptize 29 persons and receive over 30 into the church.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Birmingham, Ala., who did the preaching, endeared himself to everybody by the tenderness and eloquence of his messages and his magnetic bearing in the social circle. Dr. Bowen is a man of God, and out of a ripe and redolent experience delivered sermons which inspired and edified. Large congregations attended the services. The church was well filled in the mornings and crowded at night. The annex was necessary to accommodate the throng at the farewell service Sunday night.

All the churches gave way on Sunday night and as the congregation sang "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," and hundreds marched to the altar and shook the hands of the revivalist and the resident pastors, it was a touching sight. Dr. Bowen left Monday morning for Okolona, Miss., where he begins his next meeting. The prayers of the good people of this place will follow him, and that Heaven's benedictions may rest on the head of the good man is the wish of all.—Lexington (Miss.) Advertiser.

GROWING WORK OF THE MISSISSIPPI ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

The Board of Trustees of the Mississippi Anti-Saloon League met on April 17 in their offices in Jackson. The State President, Captain W. T. Ratchiff, called the meeting to order and Dr. Edmonds opened with prayer.

After a full discussion of the work in all its phases, it was unanimously decided, since there is an increased demand to have the State Superintendent move in the field, to elect two new officers—that of Assistant State Superintendent and that of office manager. Rev. J. M. Morse was chosen Assistant State Superintendent and Rev. Dr. T. J. Bailey as office manager. Dr. Bailey will give his entire time to the work, and Dr. Morse will give such time to the work of Assistant Superintendent as his pastoral duties will permit. Dr. E. T. Edmonds, pastor of the Christian Church in Jackson, was elected Secretary of the State Board, and Rev. Dr. C. Z. Berryhill of Holly Springs was elected Vice-President of the League.

The following resolution was adopted and signed as below:

"It is our firm and settled conviction that the Anti-Saloon League is a necessity as a clearing house organization in Mississippi to stop the illegal sale of liquor in the State, to arouse and direct the sentiment of the people in favor of law enforcement, temperance, education and good citizenship; and the splendid co-operation given it by the masses of good citizens assures us that the people of the State are of the same determined opinion.

"Signed: W. T. Ratchiff, Thad B. Lampton, P. I. Lipsey, W. G. Henry, Swep J. Taylor, T. P. Barr, T. J. Bailey, J. M. Morse."

Rev. Henry C. Morehead, a prominent minister, planter, and banker, was commended for the splendid work he is doing on the platform for the League. The Board also commended in grateful terms the good work done by Revs. W. G. Francis, Jno. W. Ramsey, and others. Consideration of the ratification of the new constitution and by-laws of the National Anti-Saloon League was postponed to a future meeting.

A resolution was passed commending the mayor and other officers of Jackson for their faithfulness in enforcing the law in the Capital City of the State.

The State Superintendent, Dr. Elchelberger, reported 60 indictments recently found in the Delta, and not a single criminal escaped conviction at the hands of the jury. This included a deputy sheriff, town marshal, depot agent, and others. He reported two steamboats being tied to the wharf for carrying liquor across the river by attachment, from the League's organized forces. He stated that the work is increasing all over the State, and that the people are supporting the League with enthusiasm.

He further declared that the late Anti-Liquor Law passed by the Legislature would be held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court, and that the opinion of no one man can settle any law in the State; that the law relative to advertising is a verbatim copy of laws that prevent liquor advertising in papers that do not respect public opinion in other States, and he expressed the conviction that it will hold in Mississippi after punishment shall have been given those papers violating the law.

A WORKER IN THE CAUSE.
Jackson, Miss., Apr. 17, 1914.

OUR CHOICE.

Contrast Abram and Lot. Abram's wealth was growing, but he had not set his heart on his increasing property; Lot was carried away by the thought of his riches. Abram felt that friendship and unselfishness were far more worth while than any mere monetary advantage; Lot was so blinded by what he wanted for himself that it did not occur to him that he should heed Abram's interests. Abram was the friend of God, and after his lesson in Egypt—he desired to live where association with God was possible; Lot forgot the call of God in the call of the fertile plain, where sinners dwelt. The contrast may be seen in the world to-day. Everywhere there is a conflict between love of higher things, and love of money, love of others and love of self, love of God and indifference to sin. Are we following Abram, or do we go with Lot to the cities of the plain?—Southern Churchman.

A TRIBUTE TO HIS MOTHER.

By Vice-President Thomas R. Marshall.

I think back through the years, the lean and fat, the good and the bad ones, to my earliest recollection. I see a woman with an eye that flashes swift as an archangel's wing and mouth that breaks with laughter and hardens at sight of wrong, singing lullabies; a woman who, with hand grasping the Unseen Hand, walks the briar-bordered paths of life unshamed, unafraid, unharmed. She is clad in garments of beauty for me, and age does not soil them, nor years make them cheap and tawdry. Her tongue is without guile, having never been the messenger of a lie. It is seventeen years since her soul went home to God and her fingers became for me the fingers of an angel, but I have not forgotten all she said. She told me there was a Santa Claus, and I believe her. He brings me no longer drums and fifes. But he still brings to me the vision of my mother and the music of that angelic chorus which sang at creation's dawn and at the hour of man's redemption.

SHOULD REFLECT HIM.

The being of a God is as certain to me as my own existence; and when I look into the world of men and see no reflection of Him I feel a greater shock than if I stood before a mirror and did not see my own face.—Dean Stanley.

PROMINENT CLERGYMAN PRAISES TETTERISE.

Rev. A. C. Turner, Lakeland, Fla., writes: "I was afflicted with eczema for more than twenty years. Several months ago one box of Tetterine (50) was given me, and by its use I have been cured. I shall ever remember the makers of this valuable remedy with gratitude." Tetterine is equally effective in permanently relieving Ringworm, Tetter, and all other skin and scalp diseases, it seldom fails. 50c at drug stores or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

THE SILENT PIANO.

Is there a silent piano in your home? If so, why not exchange it for one which every member of your family can play, no matter whether they have ever taken music lessons or not? Even little children of five or six years can be quickly taught to render the sweetest music on the Ludden & Bates Self-Player Piano. And the same instrument can be used by musicians just as they would use an ordinary piano. It is therefore two instruments in one, a self-player for those who do not know one note from another, and a regular piano for use by musicians.

If you secure your Player piano through the Club you have the special privilege of exchanging your old music rolls for new compositions at any time, at a nominal cost to cover postage and the mere expense of handling.

Write for the Club catalogue and full particulars of the exchange privilege, free music roll service, big saving in prices, convenient terms, etc. Address the Managers, Ludden & Bates, New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club Department, Atlanta, Ga.—Adv.

NOT A DAY IN BED.

Gramling, S. C.—In a letter from Gramling, Mrs. Lula Walden says: "I was so weak before I began taking Cardui that it tired me to walk just a little. Since taking it I do all the housework for my family of nine, and have not been in bed a day. Cardui is the greatest remedy for women on earth." Weak women need Cardui. It is the ideal woman's tonic, because it is especially adapted for women's needs. It relieves backache, headache, dragging feelings, and other female misery. Try Cardui. A few doses will show you what it can do for you. It may be just what you want.—Adv.

FRECKLES

Now is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from any druggist and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than an ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion. Be sure to ask for the double strength othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

LOSS OF APPETITE IN THE SPRING

Loss of appetite is accompanied by loss of vitality, vigor or tone, which is a more serious loss. It is common in the spring because at this time the blood is impure and impoverished and fails to give the digestive organs what they need for the proper performance of their functions.

Ask your druggist for Hood's Sarsaparilla. It makes the rich red blood your whole system demands. It is not simply a spring medicine—but it is the best spring medicine.

FIGURES REFUTE FICTION.

Mathematical statistics often upset our fondest theories and fancies. The truth "will out" sooner or later, and it often asserts itself in the form of stubborn figures whose logic the mind cannot resist.

The following statistics mark the passing of another fanciful theory which in some quarters has successfully masqueraded as a truth. The competitors of the caffeine-containing beverages, coffee, tea and Coca Cola, have long exploited the fiction that caffeine is a poison, a habit-forming drug which undermines the health and perverts the mental and moral nature of its users. They have claimed that it dwarfs the intellect, saps the vitality and debases the morals of the people.

Without questioning the motives and interests of those who have promoted the dissemination of this theory, and trying, for the moment at least, to ignore our own experience and observation of the harmlessness of these beverages, let us see what the statistics show. Here are the figures for the year 1909. The total population of the world was approximately sixteen hundred millions. The population of Great Britain, Germany and the United States, the three countries which lead the world in Art, Literature, Science, Theology, Invention, Industry and in every phase of mental, moral and physical advancement, was approximately one hundred and ninety-five million, or slightly less than one-eighth of the total population of the world. In the same year, 1909, the world's production of caffeine (in coffee, tea, Coca Cola, etc.) was approximately sixty million pounds. Of this Great Britain, Germany and the United States consumed thirty-one million pounds, or a little more than one-half the total. Less than one-eighth of the population, therefore, consumed more than one-half of the caffeine. Figure it out for yourself and you will find that these three countries, the leaders in the march of civilization, use seven times as much caffeine per unit of population as the other nations of the world.

These statistics clearly prove that the caffeine-containing beverages upon which temperate people have relied for centuries, are beneficial rather than injurious, and they seem to indicate that the quantity of caffeine consumed by any nation is directly proportional to its degree of mental, moral and physical development. The figures also support the statements of leading scientists that caffeine, as contained in Coca Cola, is not only refreshing but positively beneficial to health.

If you are interested in knowing the truth about Coca Cola, its composition and its effect in refreshing mind and body, write for free literature which will be gladly supplied by the Advertising Managers of this paper. Address Jacobs & Company, Clinton, S. C.—Advertisement.

ROSY AS A GIRL.

Summit, N. C.—In a letter received from this place, Mr. J. W. Church, the notary public, says: "My wife had been ailing for nearly 12 years from female ailments, and at times was unable to leave the house. She suffered agony with her side and back. We tried physicians for years without relief. After these treatments all failed she took Cardui and gained in weight at once. Now she is red and rosy as a school girl." Cardui as a tonic for women has brought remarkable results. It relieves pain and misery and is the ideal tonic for young and old. Try it. At druggists.—Adv.

COLLEGE DAY AT COUNCIL MEETING.

Greetings to my constituency throughout the North Mississippi Conference from the Council meeting at Fort Worth, Texas, April 13, 1914. This is a great meeting in point of education and inspiration. To-day was observed as College Day, and over 200 college students and visitors were in attendance from the colleges of Texas. Miss Mabel Head, educational secretary of the Council, had visited the colleges throughout the State of Texas in the interest of this day, and to her efforts the success of the occasion was largely due. A noon-day luncheon was served to the guests, and a special program was carried out in the afternoon. Addresses were delivered by Miss Head, Miss Mabel Howell, of the Scarritt Bible and Training School, and our own Mrs. Bessie Lipscomb, Secretary of the Home Base. Then the missionary and deaconess candidates marched down the aisle on one side of the church while the returned missionaries and active deaconesses in attendance upon the Council came down on the other side, and each formed groups on opposite sides of the altar. Then the candidates sang the first two lines of each verse of "Watchman, Tell us of the Night," and the response was given by those grouped on the other side who had seen active service. This was a most beautiful and effective service and, I am sure, made a profound impression upon the college students present. Prominent among the group of active missionaries and deaconesses was Miss Lucile Rankin, the first missionary ever sent out by the Woman's Board of Missions.

MRS. VIC THOMPSON HOYLE,
Pres. N. Miss. Conf. Missionary Soc.

EXTRACTS FROM DR. WERLEIN'S ADDRESS.

At the Biloxi Wesley House Opening.

"As the Father hath sent me even so send I you." John 20:21. The mission of the Christian is one of great honor and vast importance. He is to reproduce the life and carry on the work of Jesus Christ; he is to be animated by the mind of his Lord, and not by the spirit of this world. Christ is the Head of the Church, and believers are the body. The Head is to govern and direct and all the members of the body are to be obedient. Christ retired bodily from this world and left his disciples to go on with the work which he commenced and intends to prosecute through them.

This mission has to do with the souls and bodies of human beings. It was specific. The spiritual, physical, and social needs of men, women and children were to be his chief concern, and to that end he devoted his great powers and activities. The most attractive picture of the Savior is given by Luke, which describes our Lord standing in the plain with his disciples and surrounded by a great multitude of people from all Judea and Jerusalem and from the sea coast of Tyre and Sidon to hear him and to be healed of their diseases. Here is the great benefactor actively engaged in the blessed work of rescuing and uplifting the unhappy race of man, and standing before him are the multitudes representing every degree of human need.

"As the Father hath sent me even so send I you." This is the mission of the individual Christian and of the Church of Christ throughout the world. Many laymen and laywomen as well, feel that if they attend church services and contribute toward the support of the Church, they are doing all they should be expected to do. Indeed, they are doing comparatively little or nothing toward reaching the unsaved; they are not carrying out the command of Christ. I do not believe that any one will heartily engage in this work until he or she vividly realizes what it means for an immortal soul to be lost. Christ realized the great necessity of saving human beings not only from this present life, but from a dreadful peril beyond the grave. The Church to-day represents the most powerful organization on the earth. It stands for more learning, culture, wealth, and power than any other organization, and whatever it might attempt to do it could possibly accomplish. In the words of another, "I believe that the Christian Church should make a large place for natural interests, should be alive to all the vital issues of the day, should furnish not only support but also leadership in the great reform movements whether moral, social, political, or industrial. When the church begins to show a zeal in such philanthropies the question of bringing the world to Christ will soon be solved." I am glad to know that you have this larger vision of what Christ intends for the Church to do. Not only are the young to be taught that Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world, but that Christ came to teach the young to think, to play, to work, to improve their home life, to learn the art of self-support, to become useful members of society. You are intent on giving to these who have not enjoyed the advantages of others the opportunity to develop the best that is in them. There is something sublime in this. You are laying the foundation for social betterment in time to come. We have every reason to anticipate a great increase of population in our Southland—with the opening of the Panama Canal we do not doubt that millions of people will visit the fertile valleys of the Gulf States. Many of them will come from lands that are largely ignorant of the gospel of Christ, and the Church of America must be ready to lead them. America is to be the missionary of this whole world."

FROM THE NEW SECRETARY OF THE LAFAYETTE DISTRICT.

At the recent meeting in Rayville, La., Mrs. Crow Girard was elected district secretary of the Lafayette District to take the place of Mrs. R. C. Holt, who was forced by ill-health to resign from the work. We are so glad to have Mrs. Girard back in the work, though we are sorry to lose Mrs. Holt, who has been such a faithful and efficient secretary. We pray that her health may be restored and that in time she may be able to resume her work among us. Mrs. Girard lost no time in starting in upon her duties and sent a circular letter to her constituents, from which we take several extracts:

"The most important items in the Conference and Council Committee reports are to be arranged and edited right away and sent to each auxiliary in advance of the Minutes, so that we may get to work on the new lines as early as possible.

"Several memorials were sent from our Conference to the Council. Among these was one recommending a larger appropriation to the French mission at Houma. We have recently had the as-Insurance from some of the Council officers that another deaconess will be placed in this field this year, making two deaconesses at Houma. For their support the Council will appropriate $900. This in addition to the half of the Conference 50 per cent of dues which will be given Houma, will be sufficient to support the entire work in that city, with the exception of the salary of the pastor, which is paid by the General Board of Missions. We owe this mission $550 from last year, which we must try to pay early this year, and we are raising it by a free-will offering from the auxiliaries. At the Conference nearly the whole amount was pledged. We lack about $100. If your auxiliary has not contributed to this debt, please see that it does so, and send the money to Mrs. W. T. Cunningham, Natchitoches, La. This offering is not to be confused with our dues and regular Conference pledge and for this reason we are asking that it be sent to Mrs. Cunningham, instead of to our Treasurer, Mrs. J. J. Holmes. The regular Conference pledge for the Foreign Department this year is $2750, and for the Home Department $2100."

QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACT BADLY

Take Tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Drink lots of water.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminating tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach, or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a teaspoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

SOUR, ACID STOMACHS, GASES OR INDIGESTION

Each "Pape's Diapepsin" digests 3000 grains food, ending all stomach misery in five minutes.

Time it! In five minutes all stomach distress will go. No indigestion, heartburn, sourness or belching of gas, acid, or eructations of undigested food, no dizziness, bloating, foul breath or headache.

Pape's Diapepsin is noted for its speed in regulating upset stomachs. It is the surest, quickest stomach remedy in the whole world and besides it is harmless. Put an end to stomach trouble forever by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder. It's the quickest, surest and most harmless stomach doctor in the world.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

WE MUST HAVE THE EXPOSITION.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

Brush this through faded, lifeless locks and they become dark, glossy, youthful.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

YANKEE BOODLE.

By J. K. Farris.

Yankee boodle, Dixie doodle,
Yankee boodle, Andy;
He made a raid upon the Church,
And took away its Vandy.
Of money, and of lawyers, too,
He certainly has plenty.
We counted those around the bar,
And found them fully twenty.

Chorus—

Yankee boodle, Dixie doodle,
Yankee boodle, Andy;
In taking things from other folks
You surely are a dandy.

We made a bonfire on the hill
Of tables and of chairs, sir;
And damned the Church, with right good will,
The Bishops and their prayers, sir.
We put our "Rex" into a car,
And rushed into the city;
And what we did, when we got there,
Was famously a pity.

Chorus—

Yankee boodle, Dixie doodle,
Yankee boodle, Andy;
Before you were a Scottish Laird,
You were a Scottish "Sandy."

We gave to all a holiday
In honor of Saint Andy,
Whose million dollars paved the way
To "freedom" for old Vandy.
We fired our Independence gun,
A reg'lar forty-pounder,
To blazen forth the Court's decree—
The Church was not its founder.

Chorus—

Yankee boodle, Dixie doodle,
Yankee boodle, Andy;
We'll stick our hands in your coattails
Whenever it comes handy.

With millions, now, behind our backs,
We do not need "the gang," sir,
To visit with suppos'd rights—
They may as well go hang, sir.
For when they learn of this parade,
A thousand out Carnegging,
The Church will grow so much afraid
'Twill come to us a begging.

Chorus—

Yankee boodle, Dixie doodle,
Yankee boodle, Andy;
When you come to give your
"plinks,"
Don't forget your Vandy.

AN IMPORTANT STATEMENT.

In the burning of our church at Zachary on March 8 our membership have suffered a great loss, and as we are not able to rebuild without help, we have decided to make an appeal through the Advocate, and we hope that its generous readers and the many good friends in our former charges will help us in this time of need. Your brethren in the Master's service,

H. W. BOWMAN, P. E.
J. D. HARPER, Pastor.

With reference to the above, I will say that in a ministry of 41 years I never had such a calamity to occur. I never saw a church burn before; and it seems almost like the irony of fate that we should have allowed the insurance to run out. We expected to renew it; but, alas! like too many other things, had waited too long. Our membership is small, and many of them are in humble circumstances. The generous, noble-hearted men and women who built the other church are gone; some have moved away and others have passed into the great beyond. The financial depression is so great that we feel constrained to make a call for help. Our wide-awake presiding elder came at once to render any aid and he made us the first cash contribution toward a new building. While the church was still burning, the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, came and offered us the use of their building. As our appointments had been made so as to avoid conflict, we can both hold our services without change or confusion. By this kindly expression of sympathy and goodwill our hearts are deeply touched, and we feel with the Psalmist, "How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." The second cash contribution was from the Ladies' Guild of the Plains Episcopal Church. Our own people are responding nobly, as well as members of other Churches and many others who are not members of any church.

LETTERS THAT INSPIRE CONFIDENCE.

I wish very much that every reader of the New Orleans Christian Advocate could spend sufficient time in my office to read the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country. I have printed several hundreds of them in a booklet, but I wish you could see the originals, for I would like for you to realize the wonderful results which they report in the relief of dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, gall stones, kidney, bladder and liver diseases, uric acid poisoning and other conditions due to impure blood.

Before I was cured by Shivar Mineral Water and purchased this Spring, and before I received all of these letters from sufferers, I didn't take much stock in advertisements like this. I therefore cannot blame you if you doubt, but, my friend, I am absolutely convinced the Shivar Mineral Spring is the greatest curative mineral spring ever discovered, not excepting the famous springs of Europe. I have shipped this water to thousands of sufferers and they almost invariably report either a permanent cure or beneficial results. That is why I make the guarantee contained in the following letter. Sign it now and send it in:

Shivar Spring,
Box 17J, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

Sunday School

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Apologies will have to be offered again for the two more weeks' silence in the Sunday School Department of our Advocate. The usual correspondent has been ill and is now only sitting up a little every day and is not as brilliant as a star of the first magnitude; but the love of the work and its enlargement induces one to labor often and steadily for the great cause.

Of course everybody will have a beautiful Mothers' Day Sunday; and of course everybody is getting ready for the biggest and best Children's Day we have ever known.

The Business Men's Bible Class of our church at Grenada has been fully organized, and officers elected and committees appointed. Mrs. Luile Stokes will be the competent teacher and R. W. Sharp, president, and they are writing Dr. Bulla this week for a charter. This will soon be one of our "light-house" classes.

Mrs. W. S. Selman, of Lamar, writes for literature, and will organize an Adult class in that good town. Brother Selman has all of his six Sunday schools organized. One town has only 5 children in it, but the Sunday school there is organized, and with the grown-ups, will soon become a representative community institution.

It was a real grief to be absent from the District Conferences, with their fraternity, inspiration and projection of plans. Kindly telegrams came from them, which were greatly appreciated, as also were the many letters and cards that were received. Kindly Christian sympathy is the best curative in the world for ills of both the mind and body.

Rev. R. P. Neblett prepared a very attractive program indeed for the institute to be held at Houston, April 6 and 7 by the two Field Secretaries. Mrs. Neblett and her fine class arranged for a special reception and specially nice invitations were issued. Mr. Curtis had to enjoy all these good things alone, as the writer was too ill to even enjoy living very much.

Mrs. Mary Sue McClain, of Water Valley, sends the good news of the organization and registration of the "Comrades," whose motto is "Young Men for Young Men." She had 42 charter members, has a present enrollment of 75, and 47 were present on a recent Sunday. She closes with the heart-warming statement that her class is enthusiastic and wide-awake, counting no task too great, but pressing toward "the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Such a class means great things to a church and town, and this busy teacher will find herself doubly blessed for every service rendered.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER NORSWORTHY.

Dear Dr. Meek: For nearly two months I have been evangelizing in the Land of Flowers and Sunshine—Florida. The month of March was given to that beautiful and wonderful country, the East Coast. At Jensen we had a wonderful meeting, the whole community being brought under the influence of the gospel and the church wonderfully built up. At Stuart and Jupiter we spent considerable time most profitably to the cause of God.

Last Sunday night we closed, in Tampa, a meeting which may, very truthfully, be called great. Our good friend, John Beers, is pastor of that important charge and had prepared well for the meeting, having secured and equipped a tent in which all the services of the campaign were conducted. More than 50 applications for church membership were received.

We are now in a meeting here in Rodman, which promises to accomplish much for the Master. From here we go to Fort McCoy, and then to Titusville, on the East Coast. Then we will turn our face homeward and will be ready for work in the territory reached by the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Let the brethren who desire my services address me at Yazoo City, Miss.

CHURCH OWNERSHIP.

By reason of certain letters and inquiries that have come to us in reference to the Church ownership of the Methodist Training School, I am writing to set forth the following facts:

1. The deeds to this property are vested in the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and it is therefore absolutely secure.

2. The Board of Directors is not self-perpetuating, but its personnel is determined by an act of the General Conference of 1910, as recorded in section 370, article 17, page 189 of the Discipline. It will be seen that the Board of Directors is to consist of fifteen members, provided, these shall include two Bishops, the General Secretary of the Board of Missions, the Dean of the Vanderbilt Biblical Department, the Secretary of Education, the Editor of Sunday school literature, the Secretary of the Epworth League Board, and at least three laymen.

3. The Training School is across the city from the Vanderbilt University, and is in no sense related to the University. It was the original plan that this institution should be affiliated with the Theological Department of Vanderbilt, but such an affiliation has never become effective.

4. The money with which this institution has been founded and conducted has come from loyal Southern Methodists. Its first contribution was $1 from one of our Sunday school boys. The latest large contributions have come from leading Methodist laymen in Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida.

It will be seen, therefore, that no institution could be more closely and satisfactorily bound to the Church than is this training center for Christian workers. We trust, therefore, that those who have been our supporters will be even more loyal by reason of the setting forth of these facts. WILLIAM F. QUILLIAN, President Methodist Training School, Nashville, Tenn.

The "Missionary Review of the World" gives some startling facts about China and the Chinese. Every third person who lives and breathes upon the earth is a Chinese. Every month in China 1,000,000 souls pass into eternity. Of the 2,033 walled cities of China, 1,557 have no resident missionaries. Tens of thousands of towns and villages have no center of gospel light. After a century of work, out of every 1,000 people, 999 have no Bible, and this would be true even if every copy printed was still in use. "Surely," says the "Home Mission Monthly," "such facts ought to move the hardest heart to compassion. And compassion ought to move the most reluctant life to action. It is said of the Lord that when He saw a leper, He had compassion upon him. And then the Scripture adds: 'He put forth his hand and touched him.'"—The Presbyterian.

The General Conference.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met in quadrennial session yesterday, May 6, at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. The chief matter to come before this great body in the opening hours was the Episcopal address prepared for the occasion by the College of Bishops. The address was as follows:

Dear Brethren: In the name of the Triune God we greet you, the honored representatives of his Church and our beloved fellow servants in the kingdom of Christ. "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness."

We unite with you in devout thanksgiving to the great Head of the Church for the evident tokens of the divine favor amid which the General Conference convenes at this time and place. Great prosperity prevails throughout our widely extended connection, and our people, walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, are multiplied. One hundred years ago, when Thomas Coke, the first Bishop of Methodism in America, was buried on May 3, 1814, beneath the waves of the Indian Ocean, as he was sailing the seas in prosecution of his high mission as "the foreign minister" of the Church, the whole number of Methodists in the world was no more than 465,000. Now they number upward of 9,000,000, of whom more than 2,000,000 are members of our own beloved Church. In all the branches of Methodism in America there are now nearly, or quite, as many members as there were people in the United States when Bishop Coke died; and about one-third of them are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The field in which we have been called to labor most has always been a friendly soil for Methodism. If the relative density of population be taken into account, it will appear that the South contains a larger proportion of Methodists than any other section of our country, and our branch of Methodism in America has occupied more fully the territory in which its base is laid than any other Methodist Church in the United States has possessed the region which it has been called to cultivate. In both the home and foreign fields God has blessed the labor of our hands and given us abundant fruit for our toils. The quadrennium now closing, like all the quadrennial periods of our history, shows large gains in both the number of our members and the increase of our resources as a Church, the increase in our membership being 171,237 and the total being 2,006,209. It was noted at the Ecumenical Methodist Conference held in Toronto, Canada, in October, 1911, that the total increase of members in all the Methodist bodies of the world for the decade from 1900 to 1910 was 1,109,331, of which increase 401,145, or more than one-third, was in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It was also brought out on the same occasion that approximately one-half of the total increase in all the branches of American Methodism was in our Church.

As you are assembled to legislate in conformity to the New Testament and under the limitations of the Constitution of the Church, for our extensive and influential connection, we invoke upon you the blessings of Almighty God, that, guided by the Holy Spirit in all your deliberations, you may do those things which are well-pleasing in his sight and which will advance his kingdom throughout the whole world, as well as promote the welfare of that branch of the Church universal which you are elected to serve.

Very grave and sacred are the responsibilities of men called to serve in a body such as this in which you are now assembled—men chosen to take counsel with reference to the affairs and to concert plans for the advancement of the Church of Christ, which he hath purchased with his own blood. No secular assembly nor political parliament is called to deal with matters so high and holy.

"The Church Is of God."

"Brethren, the Church is of God." It is not an institution of human invention or earthly origin. As the family is ordained to sanctify and safeguard man's domestic life, and the State to protect and promote his social welfare, the Church is established to serve the ends of his spiritual existence. All are institutions of divine appointment. They are interrelated for the advantage of all, and in their respective spheres all are alike essential to the well-being of the human race. Without the family the relations of parent and child are reduced to the level of brutality, and the homes of earth are dissolved; without the State the social system is destroyed, and anarchy reigns over its ruins; and without the Church mankind must be without hope and without God in the world.

Wherefore, in common with the whole body of the faithful, we confess in the most venerable of creeds our faith in "the holy catholic Church." In that faith we live and labor, in that faith we work and worship. We cannot hold in light esteem the sacred institution which is nothing less than the visible body of Christ among men and which, drawing its life from its Divine Head, is commissioned to rescue the world from spiritual death by the saving powers of the gospel of God. Accordingly we cannot handle the affairs of our Lord's kingdom with carnal methods and worldly wisdom, but must deal with the interests of his Church in the fear of God and under the leadership of the Divine Spirit.

The Church is as companionless among the organizations which operate among men as Jesus is unique among the sons of men. It is an institution unlike all other societies in the earth, in that its origin is from above, the forces upon which it relies in fulfilling its mission are unearthly, and it ultimately delivers its fruitage in the eternal world as the general assembly and Church of the first-born in heaven. It is not the creation of priestcraft or the embodiment of a man-made religion, destined to fall into decay and oblivion; but it is an abiding institute, set to redeem mankind from sin and to manifest the glory of its Founder before men and angels. Such being the sacred nature and high position of the Church, it is not a mere voluntary organization, into which a sincere Christian may enter or not at his option, nor a society whose authority may be despised and whose government may be set at naught by a self-sufficient and self-assertive individualism after one has entered into its fellowship and assumed its obligations. The governing power of the Church exists by divine warrant, and it is within its chartered rights, conferred by its Heavenly Sovereign, and discharging its sacred obligations, when, in conformity to his will and word, it enacts regulations for the preservation of its peace and purity and adopts plans for the fulfillment of its mission among men. Within its pales there is large room for the liberty of the individual, but no place for that lawless type of freedom which is used as "a cloak of evil" to disguise and defend all sorts of worldly self-indulgence. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," but not license to live as one lists and "work all uncleanness with greediness." Membership in the Church of the living God is too precious a thing, its fellowship is too holy, and its obligations too sacred for one who professes godliness to renounce lightly his connection with it or dishonor it by a course of life unworthy of his high calling in Christ Jesus. He inflicts upon himself an immeasurable loss who wantonly alienates himself from its communion and refuses to participate in the fulfillment of its mission.

The Manifold Mission of the Church.

Its mission arises from its relation to Christ, its Head, and its consequent obligations to humanity. It is in human society to instruct, spiritualize, and regenerate mankind through the power of the Holy Ghost and by virtue of its own heavenly life. Essentially the Church is nothing less than the embodied presence of Christ in the world, the representative of his grace, and the instrumentality through which his redeeming love operates for the restoration of lost souls to himself.

Its supreme function is that of a dispenser of salvation to a sinful world; but as sin is universal in its extent and multifarious in its manifestations, the Church is called upon to render as Christ's representative vast and varied services to a race of sinners. Schemes for human improvement which aim at the cultivation of some single virtue or the eradication of some special vice, or humane movements which look to the advancement of some particular social interest or the amelioration of some specific evil, doubtless accomplish some benefit; but they are small things in comparison with the superhuman endeavors of the Church of the living God; and the forces upon which such earth-born and earth-bound enterprises must depend, however imposing may be their systems and however ingenious their machinery, fade into insignificance when compared with the heavenly powers and infinite resources which are employed for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

The Church comprehends within the scope of its purpose and plans the extirpation of all vice and the propagation of all virtue, the healing of all ills and the promotion of every worthy interest of mankind. Voluntary associations which devote themselves to special reforms and particular schemes of relief constantly fall back upon the ministry and membership of the Churches for their support; without the Church they can do nothing. It does not and cannot follow them, but they must, and do, depend upon it. The Church follows only its Divine Lord as he moves toward the consummation of his heavenly purpose in the final government of the world—the New Jerusalem descending out of heaven by the power of God, and not ascending out of earth by the suffrage of men—when with authority he will declare, "Behold, I make all things new." As he proposes nothing less than a new heaven and a new earth, so it aims at nothing short of the same all-encompassing mission and cannot restrict its endeavors to anything less extensive and enduring.

The Church and Human Progress.

The whole intellectual, moral, and spiritual life of mankind is dependent upon the ministrations of Christ's Church, and even the material prosperity of men cannot extend far beyond the limits of its quickening and inspiring influences. It holds forth the only reliable hope of human progress, and it assures the fulfillment of the hope which it inspires by offering the only means adequate for its realization. The Christianity which it proclaims and propagates must be the supreme factor in any true and lasting civilization. Neither inventions, nor industries, nor commerce, nor culture, nor social reformations, nor political renovations, nor all combined, can assure the healthful and permanent progress of mankind in the absence of the Christian religion. It has been said most truly that "the progress of civilization depends upon the extent of the domain reclaimed under the moral law," and the area reclaimed under the moral law is never wider than that which is marked by the spiritual con-

"PREACH THE WORD."

He has mistaken his calling, tramples upon his commission, and violates his most sacred obligations who enters the pulpit to deal out the dry husks of speculation, the froth of mere hypotheses, or the stones of scientific investigation. It is as true now as it ever was that what souls by millions are starving for is the bread of life; and it is mockery of the deepest wants of the human soul to offer it for bread a stone, for an egg a scorpion. Preachers of Paul's stamp scorn the preaching that shuts the Bible as if it had no use for it, and draws its material from Emerson or Shakespeare, or from human sources alone, the preaching that excels in everything except in magnifying the Holy Scriptures, the preaching that glides into brilliant essays on philosophical theories, on systems of ethics, on popular literature, or is habitually occupied with the signs of the times, the social and political problems of the hour, or the horoscope of the future, failing to exalt in human esteem the Word of God and the Christ of Revelation, which never wakens the inquiry, "What must I do to be saved?"

Besides, the opportunity for the stated preaching of the Word is limited to a very small proportion of time. Two sermons a week is the usual number a pastor preaches. Each of these is not expected to exceed thirty minutes in length, forty minutes at the most—that is, the preacher has but one hour, possibly a trifle over, out of the one hundred and sixty-eight hours of each week to preach the Word of God to his congregation regularly assembled for worship. The dictate of sound reason and true wisdom and the mandate of higher authority is: "Preach the Word." Devote no portion of this small fraction of time to sensationalism or secularism. For the preacher of salvation there is but one text-book, the Bible; but one theme, the Christ. — Christian Intelligencer.

GOD IS NOT DEAD.

By J. W. Beeson, LL.D.

Those who are familiar with the life of Martin Luther remember a time when his wife cured him of despondency, or a case of the "blues." He was downcast at the spiritual decadence of his day and time. He came home one day and found his wife dressed in deep mourning, and he asked of her an explanation. She told him "God is dead." After a time he understood her rebuke and began to look up instead of at the bad state of affairs around him. So it will be with the men of God to-day if they look at the state of affairs about us and leave God out of the question. Truly the church is suffering in some quarters from inroads of worldliness, destructive criticism of the Bible, "new thought" and a tinge of unitarianism.

The evangelistic spirit is not so general among pastors as in former years. There is a tendency towards ritualism and formality in worship. In some city churches the sermon is being sandwiched in a very thin slice between the choir and the clock. The old time altar or "mourners bench" is almost forgotten. The class meeting is now a matter of ancient history. Church discipline is held in the memories of our grandparents who still linger to bless us with their saintly presence. The prayer meeting has given way to the church festival. The church kitchen is now a necessary adjunct to the house of God. When one reads the spiritual writings of Wesley, Fletcher, Asbury, McKendree and others he is ready to exclaim with Jeremiah, "Ask for the old paths where is the good way, and walk therein; and ye shall find rest for your souls."

If we are inclined to become despondent on account of many things that grieve us we must remember the good the Church is doing. There was never a time when she was so awakened to the duty and privilege of carrying the gospel to the unfortunate ones of earth as she is now. If the gospel does sometimes reach its destination in a diluted form, it is a savor of life unto life to all of them who believe. There is generally enough in it to save a lost world, even if it lacks in fire and zeal and the deepest inner touch.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is affecting the world as never before. It is the leaven that is transforming thought so rapidly on the temperance question. It is the message of Jesus that is bringing the nations to universal peace. It is his touch that is making our nation lead the world in its broad, generous, and unselfish dealings with other nations. With such sturdy Christian characters as Woodrow Wilson and W. J. Bryan to set the pace for high Christian living and thinking among national leaders, we have much to be thankful for in the onward and upward trend of national ideals. It is true that crime is rife in the land; but it is also true that the human conscience is awakened to the realization of it as never before, and when the people awake there will be a mighty change in the public affairs. Already there is the sound of a going in the mulberry trees. No longer will corporations and combinations be allowed to crush down the helpless as has been done in times past. The white slave traffic is being checked. Alcoholic drinks will ere long be banished from our land, which will be an example to other nations. The commission form of government in the hands of Christian business men will bring better days to the corrupt city governments. The cry of "back to the farm," with the consolidated rural schools, with free transportation to and from school, with city conveniences in a country home, with the automobile, the traction engine, etc., will relieve the congested city life and bring a better state of morals. God is not dead. He still sits on his throne; and while many of his people worship him afar off, thank God, he still holds the reins. He still loves his people and quite a few love him with a deep and abiding love. Let us keep in touch with the Infinite One, and keep the wires clear of rubbish that we may hear his teachings. In the busy rush and whirl of this rapid age let us

"Take time to be holy,
Speak oft with thy Lord;
Abide in him always,
And feed on his Word;
Make friends of God's children,
Help those who are weak,
Forgetting in nothing
His blessing to seek.

Take time to be holy,
The world rushes on;
Spend much time in secret
With Jesus, alone;
By looking to Jesus,
Like him thou shalt be;
Thy friends in thy conduct
His likeness shall see."

We have the best church machinery the world ever knew. We must keep the spiritual power that is needed to work this machinery afloat. There is need of great care that the machine does not become the main object of attention and the power that should not be drowned out by the din and roar of the machinery. The non-spiritual element of the Church should not govern it. Let those who really know Him and are in constant, vital touch with him keep low at his feet in humility and in prayer. God is not dead. He may seem to be not manifesting himself at times, but he still lives. Let us exclaim with Washington Gladden:

"In the bitter waves of woe, Beaten and tossed about
By the sullen winds that blow
From the desolate shores of doubt,
Where the anchors that faith has cast
Are dragging in the gale,
I am quietly holding fast
To the things that cannot fail.

And fierce though the fiends may fight,
And long though the angels hide,
I know that truth and right

Have the universe on their side;
And that somewhere beyond the stars
Is a love that is better than fate
When the night unlocks her bars
I shall see Him—and I will wait."

A NOBLE VETERAN.

Dear Mr. Meek: The most striking utterances made at the recent session of the Greenville District Conference were two prayers offered by Rev. R. Bradley of the Mississippi Conference, the father of our young brothers, O. W. Bradley and T. M. Bradley, who is tarrying for a while with the latter in his parsonage home at Shelby. All were charmed with this bright-spirited Englishman, and it was with no small degree of pleasure that I learned that he had consented to fill our pulpit at Greenville on Sunday, April 26.

With some degree of familiarity with the preaching of Southern Methodism, I venture to say that there were not a dozen sermons preached within its borders on that day that surpassed the two very remarkable utterances of Brother Bradley. Without the slightest attempt at display of any sort, the preacher held his audiences spellbound, and his beautiful tenor voice rang out with a note of conviction that was quite refreshing to modern ears.

The morning discourse was from the New Testament and that of the evening from the Old Testament. The standard version was the one he used, and he read from the pulpit Bible, not one of these limberbacked affairs which I sometimes imagine bear a close relation to the spineless theology of those who tote them. The preacher had nothing to say about Greek or Hebrew roots, the errors of inspired writers or their copyists or translators, nor did he re-hash the skepticism of German rationalists or their nearer imitators, the votaries of the "new theology." But no one that heard him doubted his wide familiarity with all knowledge or that his is in the best sense a "modern mind."

Brother Bradley honored me by becoming my guest and we talked freely of the interests of our Methodism. I found him a modest man, not given to harshness of speech, but when we talked of the Vanderbilt rape his mild blue eyes flashed with a lambent fire that disclosed hidden depths of passion. I have seldom met one who so greatly interested me, and I trust this sunny-hearted veteran may be long spared to bless the world.

METHODISM ADRIFT.

With the above as a title, Rev. L. W. Munhall, D.D., has published a book which is commanding much attention. In this book he calls attention to the insidiousness of unbelief in connection with the Methodist Church. He holds that the great body of Methodist members and ministers are loyal to the Bible and the principles and teachings of the Methodist Church, but that there has arisen a smaller body of men within the Methodist Church, who in an insinuating way are spreading the propaganda of false views in the Church. When these men are resisted, they complain of persecution and controversy. Dr. Munhall's book is designed to awaken the Church and call her attention to this danger. Among the other topics which the book discusses are: "Our Educational Institutions," "Our Sunday School Literature," "The Book Concern," and "Ecclesiastical Politics." The book is arousing much interest in the Methodist Church, and is a labor in the right direction. The "Cincinnati Advocate" is publishing chapters of the book, which are being widely read. This conflict between the Evangelicals and the Liberals is arising in all the branches of the Church, and it is simply a question as to who shall prevail.—The Presbyterian.

STATE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

By Rev. A. J. Gearheard.

The Louisiana State Sunday School Association held its 1914 Convention in Lake Charles on April 20-23. Besides the local attendance there were present 29 pastors, 22 superintendents, 54 officers, 120 teachers, and 52 regular Sunday school scholars. This band of Christian workers, representing practically every Protestant denomination in Louisiana, sat as students at the feet of some of the most consecrated and effective Sunday school workers in America and, for four days, received instruction in the most advanced methods of Sunday school work and listened to inspirational addresses on great religious themes.

Among the speakers from a distance were Dr. Wm. J. Williamson of St. Louis, Mo., Rev. John Carman of Denver, Colo., Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts of Washington, D. C., and Miss Nannie Lee Frayser of Louisville, Ky. Dr. Williamson, who is a Baptist minister, delivered a series of Bible talks which were nothing less than a number of fine sermons based on Paul's letter to the Philippians. Rev. Mr. Carman conducted the song services and delivered a number of illuminating addresses on sacred music. He advanced the idea that the superintendent who does not have his school sing some of the standard hymns of the Church, has failed to do his duty. He held that the theme of the song should be of first consideration and that time and tune should only serve to make more impressive the message of the song. He placed himself squarely against chaffy music being permitted in the Sunday school, and in that this writer most heartily agrees with him.

Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts delivered five addresses touching on subjects of reform. He is connected with the reform Bureau at Washington and is well posted on the subjects he uses as his themes. He is a pleasing speaker, a clear reasoner, and bears the stamp of a born leader. After hearing him the Sunday school workers were more determined than ever to wage a never-ending warfare against the dramshop, licensed prostitution, and the habit of heathenizing our public school system by excluding from it the open Bible.

Miss Nannie Lee Frayser was the only lady visitor to the Convention from outside Louisiana. She lives in Louisville, Ky., and made her first impression upon the Sunday school world with her stories, which appeared in the literature of our Sunday school when Bishop Atkins was Sunday School Editor. But Miss Frayser can not write stories only, she can tell them; and during the Convention she told a number of beautiful ones that had in them lessons as impressive as some of the best sermons that were preached. She convinced the delegates that story-telling can be practiced with profit before old and young alike.

In this article I have not the time to write of all those of our home field who took part in the program. Not one minute was wasted from the time the Convention was called to order until the final adjournment. Indeed, the Convention was a school of methods and an altar of inspiration. The Lake Charles people entertained the delegates in a most satisfactory manner, and the General Secretary, Mr. Van Carter, is to be praised for his generalship in planning so admirably all the details of the Convention.

There remains one other matter concerning this Convention that I wish to discuss briefly: What place should the Interdenominational Sunday School Association have in our Church? To begin with, it has a large place so far as its present work is concerned. The M. E. Church, South, is by far the most liberal supporter of the Louisiana State Sunday School Association, and has been for many years. For many years the General Secretary has been a member of our Church. Last year the General Secretary, the State President, the Chairman of the Executive Committee, the Executive Secretary, and the Chairman of the Life Membership Committee were all leading Methodist laymen. Just note the array of names: Mr. Van Carter, Mr. W. A. McKennon, Mr. H. L. Baker, Mr. H. N. Pharr, Mr. T. W. Holloman, and Mr. A. M. Mayo. That list sounds as if it might be a roll call of lay delegates to a Methodist Annual Conference. With the wheels of this Association largely oiled by Methodist money and the machine manned by Methodist men, does it not seem that our Church should draw heavily upon this Association for what benefits it may have to bestow upon Sunday schools? It is estimated that $10,000 will be spent by this Association next year in order to promote Sunday school work in Louisiana. Would it not be wise for our Church to ask these workers to assist in a great denominational convention in every district in the State this year? Our Conference Sunday School Board recommended at the last session of the Louisiana Conference that our Church have denominational conferences at both the State and district meetings of the State Association. I have attended one district and the State meeting, and our Church had no denominational gathering at either place. At present the only thing we are doing is spending our money and not calling for our benefits. The State workers stand ready, upon sufficient notice, to lead in a denominational Sunday school rally in every district in our Conference if we are ready to make a place for them.

I intended, when I began this article, to present the figures showing how much we spent in order to boost our Sunday school work last year, but I find that the Sunday School Board did not present a financial report to the last session of our Annual Conference. I can state, however, that it is time that our Church throughout the State was taking some advance steps along Sunday school lines, and at present the most attractive opportunity we have to gain assistance is through the State Sunday School Association.

ACTION OF THE COLUMBUS (MISS.) DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

(The following statement and resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Columbus District Conference in its recent session at Brooksville, Miss.)

A Statement.

Certain Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, one of which was the North Mississippi, sent to a Convention to be held at Memphis, Tenn., in January 1872, committees to arrange for the organization of a University under the ownership and control of the Conferences entering the arrangement. This Convention was presided over by some of the Bishops of our Church. A plan was agreed upon looking to the organization of "Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South." Certain Resolutions were adopted binding the projected University to the Church, and giving our Bishops the authority of supervision of the institution and were jointly with the Board of Trust, appointed by this Convention, all being members of our Church, "to elect officers and professors and prescribe a course of study and the plan of government." Under these Resolutions and in agreement with them, a Charter was procured from the State of Tennessee. Agents of the Church went throughout our borders soliciting funds for the establishment of the University. A generous gentleman of the North, through one of our Bishops, H. N. McTyeire, gave to "the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South," a sum sufficient to build and endow it. This sum in addition to the sums previously collected by our agents secured to our Church the long desired University. In honor of the generous donor, Commodore Vanderbilt, the name of the institution was changed to "Vanderbilt University." After the University had grown in popularity and influence, in order that it might be made connectional, the rights of the Annual Conference owning and controlling it, were ceded to the General Conference. But the ownership and control of the institution by the Church was never called in question. All our pastors were its agents, its solicitors, its advertisers. Our sons were sent there for their University course. Thither we sent our young ministers for their theological training. The Board of Trust reported to us annually its state and its work, and our Conferences reviewed its general condition as thus reported to us. By every consideration we esteemed the University ours in all fact and in good faith. Our Bishops exercised the responsibility imposed by the Memphis Resolutions. Our sainted leaders lie buried on its campus.

We continued to commit to certain of our members, as our Board of Trust, the management and control of the University, under the authority their predecessors had exercised, as contained in the Charter. About ten years ago commenced the process of eliminating the Church from the University. It was by slow and imperceptible degrees. One bold step, the annulling of the old Charter, in which the rights of the Church were thought to be secured, and the procuring of a new one, from which the very name of the Church was to be eliminated, was aborted by the watchful vigilance of one of our Bishops, namely, E. E. Hoss. Thus open rebellion against the authority of the Church was commenced; and by those whom the Church had honored and trusted. We were betrayed by those whom we had taken into our house. They sought by many means to wrest the institution from the Church and make themselves the sole owners and managers. The differences were sought to be settled by a Commission appointed by the General Conference. Careful inquiry was made into the relationship of the University to the Church. It was a Commission of the greatest lawyers of Methodism, sitting as a Court and hearing both sides of the controversy. A conclusion was reached which it was thought and hoped would be the termination of all misunderstandings. But, No! The Board of Trust refused to be governed by that which they said they "welcomed." A suit at law became necessary.

The Bishops of the Church, under instructions from the General Conference, had to enter suit to hold that which for 40 years the Church had held as her own. In a court of last resort, the Church now has lost practically all her contentions.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee says:
The Church did not found the institution.
It does not own it.
It can not control it.

Our Bishops, the representatives of the Church, have no voice in its management.

They have no supervision.

The Church is simply "affiliated" with the Board of Trust.

The only shadow of authority left us is the right, by contract, to confirm the nominations of the Board of Trust to fill vacancies in its body; which right is to be annulled if we exercise that right "contumaciously".

Resolutions Adopted.

In view of the foregoing statement, we offer the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That it is the sense of this District Conference that our Bishops have faithfully discharged their duty in carrying out the instructions of the General Conference; and that especially do we feel that Bishop Hoss, who has been the Church's leader in this struggle to hold our property, is worthy of our gratitude.

2. Resolved, That in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, as set forth above, annulling our ownership and control of the University, and leaving us only the merest shadow of authority, which may continually involve us in unseemly disputations and which in the end is of little moment, and that in view of our loss of the University which we had been more than a generation in building and now realize the gravity of our losing, we believe it to be the best for our Church, provided we find no way to reach a higher court, to withdraw all affiliation and connection with the said University, and that we would commend the action of our Annual Conference in declining to recommend for appointment, and also of our Bishops in refusing to appoint, any of our traveling preachers to a professorship, in the institution which thereby, and to that extent, might influence our young preachers and our loyal young people to attend upon its courses of study.

3. Resolved, That we hope the General Conference shortly to assemble will make such plans for the establishment of a university, to be secured to our Church, as will meet our needs.

4. Resolved, That we request our Secretary to send a copy of these resolutions to each of our delegates to the General Conference.

Signed, W. W. Woollard, R. W. Evans, W. E. Stokes, Dabney Lipscomb.

CHURCH DEDICATED ON THE COLUMBIA (LA.) CHARGE.

We dedicated a new church Sunday, April 23, which has been built since Conference. The enterprise was launched about the middle of January, and every dollar has been solicited and collected since that time. We have held four services in the community and the fourth service was the occasion of the dedication. It was estimated that between four and five hundred people were present. The house is a neat modern structure and would be a credit to any community. It is well built, finished inside and out, furnished with seats and a very neat pulpit. We held two services with dinner on the grounds. We sang the old-time songs, such as "Amazing Grace," "Alas, And Did My Savior Bleed!," "What Wondrous Love is This," etc. It did my soul good to hear those old-time inspiring songs sung with the spirit and the understanding to the old-time tunes! Only $19 was needed to pay everything out and a hat collection more than covered the required amount. It was my pleasure to preach the dedication sermon and consecrate the building to the Lord for holy purposes. At the afternoon service a church was organized with twenty-four members.

The Lord continues to bless us on the entire Columbia charge, for which we give thanks and take courage.

quests of the Church of God. Whatever moral excellencies may be discovered in exceptional personalities among heathen people or found in some unregenerate men in Christian lands, the fact remains that the renewal of mankind in righteousness and true holiness is absolutely dependent upon the propagation of that gospel which alone is the power of God unto salvation, and the effectual proclamation of which is committed exclusively to Christ's Church. In thus speaking no exorbitant claim is made for the Church; no more is asserted than Jesus Christ declared in the Sermon on the Mount concerning the position and mission of his people in human society. It was he who said to his Church, "Ye are the salt of the earth" and "Ye are the light of the world." In keeping with his teaching, the inspired apostle to the Gentiles described the Church of the living God as "the pillar and ground of the truth."

If in the infancy of the Church, when as an obscure and despised body its members were few and its earthly resources meager, the Lord laid upon it such weighty responsibilities and set it in such an exalted position, Christ's followers now, when they are so vastly increased in numbers and enriched with goods, cannot abdicate their divinely conferred place in the world and flee the discharge of the great obligations which it imposes upon them.

The Pre-eminence of the Church.

In fulfilling her mission to mankind the Church cannot yield precedence to any earthly organization, nor transfer her burden to any mundane movement or secular society; she may not take counsel of carnal wisdom, nor conform the character of her efforts to the demands of a world lying in darkness, to which she is sent to give light and life, and not to ask advice and direction. She cannot lower her moral standards to the level of atheistic ethics, nor administer her benevolence by the methods of a godless humanitarianism, nor become so absorbed in a Christless social service as to forget that she is, first of all, the servant of God. As she stands amidst the affrighted peoples who sail with her the turbulent waters of this restless age, she must calm their fears and secure their welfare by speaking to them a message of authority and peace from her Lord, even as did the apostle on the storm-tossed sea when he cheered and saved his fellow travelers with assurances of deliverance from Him whose he was and whom he served.

The Church and Schemes for Social Betterment.

There be many in our day who assume to command and correct the Church, undertaking to constrain her to renounce her position, contract her mission, and consent to exchange the service of God for what they are pleased to call "the service of humanity." They would have her abandon her high calling in Christ Jesus and give herself exclusively to all sorts of pretentious programs of "social betterment," "improved environment," and the like. They conjure her to rely upon energies rather than upon regeneration by the Holy Spirit for the making of a new and nobler race, and to bring to bear upon man, the free agent, stock-raising expedients and plant-culture devices as the most efficacious means to improve the species. But she may not heed the voices of these spurious renovators of mankind, who have framed their systems according to the postulates of a materialistic philosophy and not according to the pattern shown to her by her Lord in the mount. As he is in the world, so she is in the world, "to seek and to save that which is lost." Recognizing man as a being made a little lower than the angels and not simply a little higher than the brutes, she approaches him in the attitudes of his nature, with saving powers from above, and not with soothing potions from beneath. She knows full well the disposition of a fallen and prodigal race to get away from the Father, provided his goods may be enjoyed after his presence has been escaped; and she understands the excess of riot to which such departure from God leads and the dreadful degradation in which it ends. Hence she refuses to spend her strength in merely carrying more modish apparel and more wholesome food to wayward souls and arranging more refined associations and elegant environments for them, however good such things may be; she can be satisfied with nothing less than bringing the wanderers back to the Father's yearning heart, who waits to welcome them, and to the Father's house, where there is for them not only "bread enough and to spare," but a banquet of love overflowing with heavenly joy. She believes that "the soul of all improvement is the improvement of the soul," and that social progress can never go in advance of the regeneration of personal character by the power of God and its perfection through the grace of Christ the Redeemer.

The Church is not indifferent to the bitter cries of the fallen and forlorn sons of men. On the contrary, her heart is filled with the tenderest pity and the most compassionate concern for them, as her hands are filled with most loving ministries to them; but she holds them in too high esteem to regard them as no more than animals to be filled with food and satisfied with improved physical conditions. Because she recognizes them as free-born and immortal souls, and not ephemeral beings which live to-day and to-morrow die, she declines to be the mere servitor of their appetites to the end that they may eat, drink, and be merry before their brief lives forever end. Because she looks upon them as children of God, though alienated from him, she refuses to regard them as hungry brutes to be pampered and pacified with the meat that perisheth, but does rather seek to feed them with the meat that endureth to everlasting life as befits beings created in the divine image and capable of becoming partakers of the divine nature.

The Church and Philanthropy.

Moreover, the Church cannot encourage the groundless hope that any transitory philanthropy, the mere fashion of the hour, uninspired by love for God or faith in Christ, can be relied upon to care for even physical needs of the unfortunate classes of mankind, to say nothing of higher things. She knows her own history too well to indulge for one moment such a notion. When she began her ministrations of Christly compassion in that "hard heathen world" of the first century, she found not in it a single house of mercy, although it boasted of its arts, its philosophies, and its literatures. Grecian refinement never built a house of refuge for the outcast, and Roman civilization never opened a door of hope for the despairing. Neither the pages of Publius Victor, which describe the public buildings of Rome, nor the Byzantine Chronicles, which picture the public edifices of Constantinople, record the existence of a single purely charitable institution. Ancient paganism, having lost the knowledge of God, the Father, failed to recognize man, the brother. The first public collection ever made in the heathen world for a charitable object was made by the Church of Antioch for the poor saints of Jerusalem, the Antiochene Christians for the love of Christ forgetting the unfriendly attitude of the Jews toward the Gentiles and relieving the wants of men and women whom they had never seen and whom they knew only as members of the Christian household. A Christian widow was the first individual to build a hospital in our sick and suffering world. In the language through which the Church first proclaimed the gospel of salvation she found no terms with which to designate adequately her houses of charity. The pagan world lacked speech to express the superhuman benevolence which it had not been able to conceive. And modern paganism is not less sterile of works of mercy. Except where the influence of Christ's Church has extended and his merciful spirit has penetrated, the heathen world of the twentieth century is as barren of humane institutions as was that cold and heartless world into which the Babe of Bethlehem was born and laid in a manger because there was no room for him elsewhere.

Secularism Sterile.

The secularism found within the limits of Christendom, parading its gifts as higher than godliness, lauding its philanthropy as purer than piety, and exalting its benevolence as better than holiness, knows not how dependent it is for its inspiration to render useful service upon the stimulating moral atmosphere and the constraining public opinion which Christianity has created. When it feels opulent enough to defy public opinion and sufficiently influential to resist the moral influence of the Church, it becomes as heartless as is its kindred heathenism among the benighted nations of the Orient. From the withered breasts of arrant godliness, whether in our own or other lands, the milk of human kindness trickles very stingily, if at all. They who fear not God do not regard man; and if they heed the cries of importunate want, it is that they be not wearied with the calls of distress rather than that they be careful to do justice and mercy. The worshipful are the merciful, and alms flow most abundantly from adoration. One devout and grateful soul, anointing the head of her Savior, washing his feet with her penitential tears and wiping them with the hairs of her head, has done more to feed the hungry through the centuries following than have all the calculating critics of religion who ever carped at piety and concealed their faithlessness under pretenses of caring for the poor. In the household of faith the world must find the main supply of brotherly kindness for the relief of the needy when he crieth and the consolation of him that is ready to perish; there are found the generous Jobs, who can truly say, "I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. I was father to the poor; and the cause which I knew not I searched out." (Job xxix. 15, 16.)

The Church and Commerce.

Commerce itself, let alone charity, cannot flourish in the absence of Christianity and the Church, with all the quickening of industry, the stimulating of ingenuity, and the assuring of security which arise from a Christian civilization. Unthinking men who have amassed wealth until they feel that they are an all-sufficient providence for themselves may exalt the commercial world above the spiritual, subordinate the laws of the kingdom of heaven to the exigencies of trade, and set aside the teachings of Jesus as utterly impracticable when their observance conflicts with the obtaining of profits; but the wise who have carefully considered the lessons of history know that spiritual forces only can save the world of commerce from ruin by purging it of the self-destructive tendencies which constantly threaten it from within. It is the God of Sinai and Calvary who giveth men and nations the power to get wealth, and he will not submit to be defied by the power which he imparts. The trade winds are in the fists of him who calmed the storm on the Galilean lake. In the record of that tempest, which he hushed with a word, the inspired evangelist notes, "There were with him other little ships." They outrode the gale because they shared with the vessel in which the apostolic fishermen and their Divine Master sailed the deliverance which he wrought. In like manner to-day the argosies of modern commerce are safeguarded by their close connection with the Church of Christ. Without the products of Christian lands there would be no cargoes to carry; without the imperial powers of Christian civilization there would be no international securities for merchantmen; and without the science to which Christianity has given birth the means of production, communication, and transportation as men now know them would be impossible.

It is not easy to conceive of how modern commerce could exist without the conserving forces of Christianity to quicken its energies and safeguard its enterprises. In proportion, therefore, as wealth increases and trade expands, the gospel proclaimed by the Church must be more commanding and the faith it inspires more dominating. A mighty Christianity, yielding unflinching obedience to a great Christ and seeking to fulfill all his vast purposes of love for a sinful and suffering race, is required to control and direct the currents of these times of unprecedented opulence. Nothing can be more fatal to society than the subjection of spiritual things to commercial and industrial interests. The Church must outrank the countinghouse, or both must go down in ruin beneath the polluting power of a corrupting covetousness. In sermon and service men must be constantly reminded that they cannot live by bread alone; that the life is more than meat, and the body than raiment. Otherwise the contentions of the market place and the conflicts of capital and labor will issue in social conflagration.

The Church, however, no more than her Divine Lord, will consent to be used as a judge and divider in the distribution of earthly goods among rival claimants and contending classes. While sympathizing with the poor, dwelling with them amid their hardships, espousing their interests, and relieving their distresses, she cannot serve as the partisan of a class, whether rich or poor. To each and all of every class she speaks as the oracle of God, saying, "He hath sheathed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" (Mic. vi. 8.) It is her office to inspire spiritual ideals among all classes and to proclaim Christian principles of life rather than to work out details of procedure and insist upon rigid methods and procrustean programs for the settlement of all social issues. Wherefore she will "charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life." (1 Tim. vi. 17-19.) And to men who are without abundance of this world's goods she will declare "godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content." (1 Tim. vi. 6-8.) To rich and poor, high and low, in this age of riotous lustings after earthly things, she will repeat with authority the warning words of her Lord and Master, "Take heed, and beware of covetousness; for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." (Luke xii. 15.)

The Church and Education.

Culture, no less than commerce, waits on Christianity, and the Church has an educational as well as an evangelistic function. She cannot be warned away from the field of education as an inexperienced and incompetent novice, exercising herself in great matters beyond her sphere and intermeddling with things too high for her. From the very beginning of her history the Church has founded and fostered schools. From the Reformers the suggestion of the common school was derived, and by the hands of the Church were laid the foundations of the great universities in which literature and art, science and religion, have, side by side, found for centuries their safe and enduring home. Volumes would be required to tell all that the Church has done and is doing for liberal culture and classic scholarship, for philosophy and ethics, for law and medicine, for art and science. If from the work of education, by which modern life has been enlightened and elevated, the contributions made directly and indirectly by the Church were subtracted, the remainder would be an inconsiderable residuum.

What would be the condition of our country to-day if the colleges and universities which the Churches have founded had never been opened? What would be the effect on our civilization tomorrow if the educational establishments of the Churches were closed? In asserting and exercising their educational functions the Churches have not undertaken needless tasks nor rendered worthless services to the nation. The influence of their institutions has extended to schools other than their own and imparted by the constraining power of their example a spiritual quality to education in the United States which has been as a saving salt and which would quickly disappear if the Churches abandoned their educational enterprise. Truly the Churches have been about their Master's business when engaged in educational work.

The Supreme Function of the Church.

But while it is proper to recognize the manifold ministries which appertain to the Church in human society, too much emphasis cannot be placed upon the Church's supreme function as the witness to the world of the heavenly life which is in her risen and exalted Lord. The chief element in her mission, as in her being, is spirituality, and she fulfills her spiritual office by her life even more than by her labors. It has been truly said: "The Church has committed to her a higher task than even that of converting the world. She has to do that by which alone the world can be converted. She has to declare Christ as he declared the Father. She is 'sent' of Christ as he was 'sent' of the Father. And just as our Lord himself said, 'He that hath seen me hath seen the Father,' so when the Church at any time reviews her manifestation of herself, she ought to be able to say, 'He that hath seen me hath seen my Lord.'"

The spirituality of the Church, revealing her risen Lord, is the most fundamental element of her existence, and to this all her other gifts and efforts must minister.

In all your deliberations, therefore, you will exercise a zealous care, first of all, for the spiritual life of the Church, that it may be enriched by Christ's grace in all wisdom and knowledge and power, and that in the sphere of its organized activities this divine life may have unrestrained expression and unhindered manifestation. The most urgent need of the Church now, as always, is not the mending of its machinery or the addition of new parts to its organization, but a more abundant life. When the faith of the Church is most firm and its piety most vigorous, its machinery is most simple; when its trust in God is most wavering and its vital forces most feeble, its devices for making up for its lost power are most numerous and complex. The undue multiplication of laws is the sure mark of a declining life in the souls of men.

You will find nothing in our system of faith requiring change, and little in our polity calling for amendment. In matters of legislation your attention will be called to the modification of some minor regulations and the perfecting of means to prosecute more aggressively the work of the Church. But your chief care will be to do whatsoever may be in your power to nourish the spiritual life of the flock of God, to the end that our ministry may be pure in doctrine and blameless in life, thoroughly furnished to every good word and work, and that all our people may be saved from the allurements of an age of doubt and an era of luxury in which the protean forms assumed by the manifold manifestations of the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eye and the pride of life lead astray so many unwatchful and unstable souls.

The Catholicity of the Church.

It scarcely needs to be observed that in what has been said concerning the Church and its mission the whole Church of God, and not our particular branch of it alone, has been in contemplation. The breadth of the catholicity of any Christian denomination is measured by the depth of its spirituality; and we rejoice in the fact that Methodism has always been catholic in spirit and that Methodists have been ever ready to co-operate for the advancement of God's kingdom with all who love and serve our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Your General Superintendents, therefore, both express and share your sentiments and truly represent the fraternal disposition of all our people when we say that we "not only cordially recognize the Christians of other Churches, but also the Churches of other Christians." Especially with other members of the Methodist household of faith are we earnestly "endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace"; and we shall continue to walk by the same rule and mind the same thing.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is neither sectional in spirit nor national in its aspirations, but it is catholic in its purposes and aims. It is set for the faithful fulfillment of its part in the mission of the Church universal for the glory of God and the conversion of the world. It bears, as do most of the great Churches of Christendom, a geographic designation in its name; and it accepts, as becomes every branch of the Christian Church, the place assigned it by Providence in the plan of God for the redemption of mankind. But its catholicity is not thereby impaired. In the apostolic writings we are met with geographic names in connection with the several sections of the primitive Church, and in the apostolic precedent of "the apostleship to the circumcision" and "the apostleship to the Gentiles" we find an example of the early division of labor with a view to the greatest efficiency in the work of the kingdom of Christ. After the same manner the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, seeks to minister in its providential place according to the dispensation which has been manifestly given unto it. It entertains no ambitions for ecclesiastical aggrandizement which would divert its energies from the purposes of its Lord concerning it, nor indulges any unbrotherly aspirations which contravene its covenants of fraternity or embarrass in any way its relations of federation with other Christian bodies, whether they be of the Methodist family or of any other faith and order. It strives with all diligence and fidelity to cultivate carefully the parts of "Immanuel's Land" committed to it, desiring to fall short in nothing of that which it owes to the fields into which Christ has led it and to intrude into no place to which he has not assuredly called it. It laments the needless overlapping of religious efforts and the wasteful duplication of Christian enterprises; and it deprecates especially the raising of Methodist altars against Methodist altars, believing that the vast needs of our own country and the appalling necessities of foreign lands in which the gospel has not been everywhere proclaimed, calling for both men and money to meet them, forbid the undertaking of superfluous schemes of ecclesiastical extension which tend more to chill the ardor of fraternal love and restrain the impulses of Christian fellowship than they contribute to the conversion of the world and the edification of the body of Christ. Every Church consults both its duty and its interest by finding and filling its own place in the kingdom of heaven; and when any Church intrudes into a field to which God has not called it, it is as a bird that wandereth from her nest. Sooner or later it must grieve that it has erred from the way and confess with shamefacedness that it has left undone those things which it ought to have done, and done those things which it ought not to have done.

The true catholicity of a church is not so much a matter of its jurisdictional extension as it is of its genuine participation in the life of its risen Lord and its uninterrupted enjoyment of the communion of saints. Otherwise the ecumenical element has never yet been realized in the household of faith; for no ecclesiasticism is universal in its extent, nor is it clear that any such globe-encompassing organization is to be desired. If such an ecclesiasticism could be brought to pass, it is probable that it would soon exhibit a disposition to disown and exclude many faithful souls whom Christ is not ashamed to call his brethren; and its authorities would be exposed to the temptation of going beyond the request of the ambitious sons of Zebedee, who desired to sit the one on the right hand and the other on the left hand of their Lord when he should come into his kingdom, of usurping the throne itself and revealing all the hideous features of the man of sin sitting in the temple of God and exalting himself above God.

As the Lord of heaven and earth has made of one blood all the nations and determined the bounds of their habitation, so he has made the Churches of one faith and to each hath given grace and place to the end that "the whole body, fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working of the measure of every part may make increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love," and "to the intent that unto principalities and powers in the heavenly places might be known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God." "For the body is not one member, but many," and "the members should have care one for another." Every Church must seek the conversion of the world to Christ; but it may not, without sin, seek the conquest of other Churches for itself.

One of the most learned and saintly leaders of the Church of England, the late Bishop Westcott, of Durham, has wisely observed that as "nations redeem each other," so Churches also save each other, one supplying what another lacks in character and purpose. Thus, he remarks, "a deficiency in one" is not unfrequently "the stimulus and the occasion of the corresponding virtue in another." In such co-operation of faith and fellowship of life our Church has received great blessings, and we venture humbly to trust that it has made some contribution to the common stock of good in which all the Israel of God share. And we devoutly pray that it may do still more toward the exclusion of evils from the household of faith and the promotion of many forms of good. It has been fortunate in that it has lived and labored in an atmosphere of wholesome conservatism, whereby its history and traditions have been characterized by a steady and serene type of life, not easily carried away by the fickle winds of doctrinal novelties, nor quickly corrupted from that simplicity in Christ which so adorned the lives of the early Methodists. In a recently published appeal to the ministers and members of our Church a leading minister of another branch of American Methodism said: "We most earnestly appeal for your co-operation because you are so orthodox. You are known to be nearer primitive Methodism than any other branch of the family." While we would not put forward any such claim for ourselves, we cannot overlook the fact that we have been preserved against some perils which have beset others; and in gratitude to God for his mercy to us we should render peculiar service in our place. In a day when all sorts of unverified theories concerning matters political, social, and religious are heralded as final philosophies because they affirm what no balanced mind in any former generation ever accepted and deny what the wisest and most devout of all the ages have most assuredly believed, our Church has a mission of the most sacred character to fulfill. If it prove faithful to its trust, it may do much to avert many evils which now threaten society and arrest sundry tendencies which menace the cause of Christ in these unsettled times. But it cannot prove thus faithful without maintaining relations of cordial fellowship with all truly Christian bodies in our land who worship and serve our Lord. The channels of communion with them must be kept clear of obstructing alienations in order that good may be both received and imparted. And this we must be forward to do so as far as in us lies.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

In the address of the Bishops to the General Conference of 1910 specific and comprehensive reference was made to the federation of most of the larger Churches in the United States under the name of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. It fills an important place in the religious activities of our country. The General Conference of our Church was the first of the great ecclesiastical bodies in the United States to endorse this organization, and it will be your pleasure, doubtless, to do whatever may be necessary for the proper maintenance of our connection with it.

The Fourth Ecumenical Methodist Conference.

By the authority and order of the last General Conference we appointed delegates to represent our Church in the Fourth Ecumenical Methodist Conference, which sat in Toronto, Canada, October 4-17, 1911. There our representatives took sweet counsel for nearly two weeks with representatives of other Methodist bodies of all the continents of the world and the islands of the sea. The occasion was one of great interest and profit. The reports made to the Conference of the progress of world-wide Methodism in all its branches were most cheering, and the discussions of the weighty matters considered by the body were good to the use of edification. With this address we deliver to the General Conference here assembled a communication from the Executive Committee, appointed by the Commissions representing the Churches of the Western Section of the Ecumenical Conference, concerning the appointment of an Ecumenical Methodist Commission to serve in the intervals of the decennial Conferences; and we commend the matter to your consideration, feeling sure that you will give it the careful attention which so important a matter deserves.

A Communication from the Methodist Church of Australasia.

We take pleasure in laying before the General Conference an address adopted by the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Australasia, which we are asked to present to you. You will doubtless make such response to this brotherly communication as it should receive, and will take such action as you judge best with reference to the request of our brethren of Australasia that a representative of our Church be designated to visit them on the occasion of the centennial celebration of the establishment of Methodism in their country, which is to be observed in the month of August, 1915.

COLONIAL LOUISIANA.

By Dr. John T. Sawyer.

The territory of Louisiana, discovered in 1682 by Robert Cavalier de la Salle, who was the first to explore the Mississippi River down to the sea, was named by that French gentleman and soldier in honor of Louis XIV, whom he styled "the most puissant, most high, most invincible and victorious Prince, Louis the Great, King of France."

In 1699, Iberville and Bienville, brothers of Canadian birth and French parentage, sailed into the Mississippi, discovering Chandeleur, Ship and Cat Islands on the way. They separated at Bayou Manchac, and Iberville passed through and discovered Lakes Ponchartrain, Maurepas and Borgne, and Bay St. Louis, making his first settlement at Biloxi. After leaving his brother, Bienville went down to the French fleet at the mouth of the river, before reaching which he met an English vessel whose captain was seeking a spot for a colony. Bienville caused him to put to sea by telling him that Louisiana had been discovered by the French and was then a dependency of Canada. This happened at what is called the "English Turn." Bienville joined his brother at Biloxi, and Iberville shortly after sailed for France. Returning, he appointed another brother, Sauvolle, as governor of the colony. Sauvolle was the first Governor of Louisiana; and at his death, Bienville became the second Governor, serving from 1701 to 1713. Under grant of exclusive right of trading in all the Louisiana country, Anthony Crozat, a rich East India merchant, had charge of the colony until 1718, during which period Lamotte Cadillac and DeL'Eplnay were the Governors. The king then granted a charter to John Law, a Scotchman and a director of the Royal Bank of France, for twenty-five years, and Bienville was the first Governor appointed by the Mississippi Company. About the first thing that Bienville did was to select a spot on the Mississippi River for a proper capital for the colony. He chose as its site an Indian village named Tchoutchouma. Though founded in 1718, the seat of government was not removed to New Orleans until 1723, and the reason for the delay was because the Mississippi Company feared the annual overflow and preferred for the capital to be on the sea coast.

In 1723 a fearful hurricane, lasting three days, visited New Orleans and did so much damage as to greatly discourage the colonists. Early in 1724, Bienville went to France to answer charges by Perrier, and in 1727 the Ursulines nuns came to by Perrier, and in 1727 the Ursuline nuns came to take charge of the Charity Hospital which had been established in New Orleans. This same year some Jesuit priests arrived and opened schools for the young. In 1831, the "Mississippi bubble," as it was called, burst, John Law and his company having expended about $4,000,000 on the colony. The King, recalling Perrier, made Bienville Governor, which position he held from 1734 to 1743. Then came the Marquis de Vandreuil, called by the people the "Great Marquis," who landed in New Orleans in May, 1743. He ordered the planters to put their levees in a safe condition under penalty of forfeiting their lands, and thus was begun the system of levee building in Louisiana. In 1751, sugar cane was introduced by some Jesuit priests from Hispaniola. Kerlerec became Governor in 1753.

From 1722 to 1750, the colonists were in almost continual war with the Indians, which greatly retarded their growth. During Kerlerec's governorship the English worried the French; and, by means of armed privateers at the mouth of the Mississippi River, they blockaded the port so that for three years communication between France and the colony was cut off. Abbadie succeeded Kerlerec, reaching New Orleans in June, 1763. By the Treaty of Fontainebleau, made in November, 1762, New Orleans and all of Louisiana west of the Mississippi was given to Spain. The following February, the Treaty of Paris ceded to England the river and part of Mobile and all on the left bank of the Mississippi except New Orleans, she also obtaining from Spain, all West Florida, St. Augustine Fort and Pensacola, and all the territory east and southeast of the Mississippi. The official announcement of their transfer to Spain was not made to the people of New Orleans until October, 1764. Abbadie, dying in 1765, was succeeded by Captain Aubrey. The colonists met in convention in New Orleans and appealed by resolution to Louis XV not to separate them from the mother country, but their appeal was not granted. The Spanish Government delayed sending a governor to New Orleans for about a year and then Don Antonio Ulloa was appointed. Remaining in Havana for nearly a year, he did not reach New Orleans until March 5, 1766. Giving him a cold reception, the colonists opposed almost every measure suggested by him. At last the citizens armed and paraded the streets. The superior Council was in sympathy with the people and on October 29, 1768, they decreed that Ulloa must leave the colony in three days. Ulloa obeyed, and sailed for Havana on November 1, 1768, on the Spanish man-of-war Volante. Determined to obtain possession of Louisiana, Charles III, King of Spain, appointed as Governor General Alexander O'Reilly, who with a fleet of twenty-four vessels and 2600 soldiers landed in New Orleans on August 18, 1769. Lafreniere and the other leaders of the revolution were arrested, tried and found guilty, some being shot and others imprisoned in Morro Castle in Havana. In October, 1770, O'Reilly departed, leaving in his place Don Louis de Unzaga.

That accomplished scholar and elegant Louisiana gentleman, Dr. Alcee Fortier, whose noble life has lately ceased, spoke, in one of his addresses, of the patriotic popular uprising against Spain in these eloquent words: "By the revolution the Louisianians liberated themselves from the yoke of Spain, and they thought of establishing a republican government on the banks of the Mississippi. It was only a dream, but an heroic dream, of which we are proud, we the descendants of the men of 1768. Eight years before 1776 which marked the independence of the English colonists, the French colonists, our heroic ancestors, conceived the idea of independence. Honor to the chiefs of the Revolution: Lafreniere, Villere, Marquis, Caresse, Milhet, Noyau, Doucet, Maxent, Petit, and Boisblanc; honor to the 560 valiant men who asked for the expulsion of Ulloa; shame to Spain which permitted General O'Reilly to put to death six of the heroes and to condemn six others to exile and imprisonment."

During the hurricane of 1772 a British schooner was driven to Cat Island, where the waters rose to such a height that she was carried right over the island. Unzaga departed in February, 1777, Don Bernardo de Galvez succeeding him as Governor. Galvez was the youngest Governor that Louisiana ever had, being only twenty-one years old when he entered upon the duties of his office. Spain declared war against England on May 8, 1779. Galvez attacked the English posts in the neighborhood and Manchac, Baton Rouge and Natchez were taken by him. Later, he captured the posts at Mobile and Pensacola, securing to Spain all West Florida. During the winter of 1783-84, the river in front of New Orleans was filled with floating ice, some ice blocks being thirty feet long and two or three feet thick. After Galvez, Don Estevan Miro became "Governor of the Province of Louisiana and West Florida." The population of New Orleans in 1785 was about 4900. The next Governor after Galvez was Baron de Carondelet who held the position from 1792 to 1797. Sugar was first made in Louisiana in 1794. The cultivation of sugar cane began in 1751, but not until 1794 was any one able to make the syrup granulate and thus become sugar. A planter living a few miles above New Orleans, Etienne de Bore, succeeded in doing that, selling his sugar to the Americans for $12,000.

During his term of office, Governor Carondelet did much to protect and beautify New Orleans. He was succeeded by Brigadier-General Gayoso de Lemos, during whose term the colony was visited by the French exiles—the Duke of Orleans, who became Louis Philippe, King of the French, and his two brothers. The Marquis of Casa Calvo was Governor from 1799 to 1801, and during October of the latter year Spain by secret treaty ceded all Louisiana to France. General Juan Manuel de Salcedo held the governorship during 1802 and 1803. On Nov. 30, 1803, France took actual possession of the colony, and commissioner Laussat in taking possession said it would not be long before Louisiana would belong to the United States. Just twenty days later, December 20, 1803, it was ceded to the Americans. New Orleans at that time had a population of about 10,000.

The new province was divided by Congress into the "District of Louisiana" and the "Territory of Orleans," the latter including the city and district of New Orleans and the most of what now makes the State of Louisiana. The Marquis de Casa Calvo and Moraes stirred up many of the people to believe that Spain would shortly have Louisiana back again. The Territorial Governor, however, W. C. C. Claiborne, declared in a letter to Casa Calvo, this: "The power does not exist which can shake the authority of my country over this territory." In 1806, the Fourth of July for the first time was celebrated in New Orleans. During Governor Claiborne's administration, Aaron Burr, secretly helped by Spain, planned to establish a new government west of the Alleghany Mountains, the capture of New Orleans being in his plan. Bayou Sara, in West Florida, was claimed by the United States, though still occupied by the Spaniards. In 1810, the inhabitants of Bayou Sara revolted against Spanish rule. Capturing the Spanish fort at Baton Rouge, they declared West Florida independent of Spain and asked to be annexed to the United States under the name of the State of West Florida. They were informed by President Madison that they already were a part of the "Territory of Orleans;" and he directed Governor Claiborne to take possession of them. Marching with his militia to St. Francisville, Governor Claiborne took charge of them in the name of the United States on December 7, 1810. In 1811, the population of the "Territory of Orleans" having become over enough for statehood, a constitutional convention was held and a constitution framed, under which to be admitted into the American Union. Under the name of Louisiana on April 30, 1812, she became a sovereign State with the same rights as belonged to the original thirteen States. W. C. C. Claiborne, beloved of all, was elected the first Governor of the State of Louisiana. Not one of the States of the Union has more in her annals of fascinating romance, heroic achievement, lofty purpose and splendid patriotism than can be found in the colonial history of Louisiana. From the very start, her history in peace and war has been most glorious; and since she entered the American Union, she has shone resplendent among the galaxy of States, made ever illustrious by the civic virtues, matchless valor and kingly bearing of her men and the noble lives, deathless love and queenly grace of her women.

The Modern Home is the Home With a Telephone.

In these modern days, with distance almost annihilated, the home minus a telephone is figuratively cut off and isolated.

Household duties, social requirements, pleasure and entertainment, sickness and business are all more or less dependent upon the telephone.

Lonesome moments may be turned into pleasant conversation with friends and relatives in the next block or the adjoining State.

Marketing and shopping may be done without effort from one's own home.

THERE'S NOBODY ELSE.

Two little hands so careful and brisk,
Putting the tea things away,
While mother is resting awhile in her chair,
For she has been busy all day,
And the dear little fingers are working for love,
Although they are tender and wee;
"I'll do it so nicely," she says to herself—
"There's nobody else, you see."

Two little feet just scampered upstairs,
For father will quickly be here,
And his shoes must be ready and warm by the fire
That is burning so bright and so clear.
Then she must climb on a chair to keep watch;
"He cannot get in without me;
When mother is tired, I open the door—
There's nobody else, you see."

A GIVE-AWAY PICNIC.

By Nellie M. Leonard.

Lucy thought it was too lovely a morning to stay in the house so she ran over to ask Muriel to go for a walk.

"All right," agreed Muriel; "let's take our dolls in their carriages."

Robert saw them passing by.

"Wait!" he called. "I'm going to ask mamma if I can go. Want me, too? I'll bring my Teddy-bear and we'll have a procession."

He soon ran out to the sidewalk. Teddy was bouncing about in his little wheel-barrow.

"There's Florence," said Lucy. "We'll ask her to go with us."

Soon the four little people were trudging merrily along. They picked the wild flowers growing by the roadside and watched the birds flitting among the bushes. At the brook they stopped to toss in some pebbles.

By and by the houses looked strange.

"I think we never came as far before," said Muriel. "The people who live in these old houses must be poor."

"Just see those ragged, dirty children!" exclaimed Florence. They were playing in the gutter with some old tin cans.

"Let's go back," proposed Lucy as the strange children crowded about their doll carriages.

"I ain't got no doll," said a little red-headed girl. "Let me hold yours a minute, will you?"

"Your hands are too dirty," objected Muriel.

"You may take mine," said Florence, "for she has a dark dress. Don't drop her."

"It's my turn next!" cried another.

"It must be fine to have store playthings," said a ragged, barefoot boy who was looking wistfully on. "Say, young feller, where'd you git that wheel-barrow?"

"My uncle made it for me," replied Robert. "I bring in wood and do lots of work with it. Why don't you ask your papa to get you one?"

"Huh! My pa won't bother. He ain't got 'nough money. 'Taint fair for you kids to have so much!"

"I'll let you wheel it far as that store and back if you won't spill Teddy," offered Robert.

"We must go home now," decided Lucy. "It will soon be luncheon time."

"That boy was right," said Robert when they had left the ragged little group behind. "It doesn't seem fair for us to have so many toys if they haven't any. Why don't they have playthings, too?"

"Prob'ly their fathers are lazy or sick," explained Florence.

"Then those poor children aren't to blame. Say, let's have a Give-away! I had two harmonicas and three automobiles for Christmas, besides all the rest. My mamma won't care if I give away some things."

"That's fine!" agreed Lucy. "Let's have a picnic for them in our grove. We'll ask Mildred, Willie, Earle and May to come, and everyone bring something to give the poor children."

"We'll each bring a lunch box for two and share with those poor children," planned Muriel. "I hope their mothers will wash their faces."

"Each girl must bring one of her dolls. I'll have to make some new clothes," said Florence.

"Do you suppose they'll come?" asked Robert.

"We'll mention the lunch," laughed Lucy, "and they'll be sure to come."

And so one beautiful summer day eight children with their arms full of toys and lunch boxes hurried over to Mr. Cordis' grove.

"I hope they'll all come," said Muriel. "It isn't time for half an hour, so we've lots of time to fix everything."

"Guess they won't be late," laughed Robert, who had run ahead and stood on top of the hill looking down. "They're all here, and they've combed their hair!"

Their little guests ran eagerly to meet them. Their faces were scrubbed clean. Some even had their dresses neatly patched.

Such a merry time as they had over the toys! There were dolls for the girls and a harmonica, jack-knife and toy auto for the three boys. They played games and swung in the big rope swings.

When the noon whistles blew at the Douglas factory, the lunch boxes were opened and sixteen hungry little folk shared the feast together. Robert and Earle brought water from the spring hidden among ferns at the foot of the hill.

When the shadows grew long, the poor children gathered up their precious toys and they all started home.

"That give-away picnic was the nicest one I ever went to," said Lucy.

"Little Molly and Dick Ryan said the same thing," replied Robert, "so I guess it must be true."—The Child's Hour.

WASHINGTON'S REVENGE.

When George Washington was a young man of 22, he had a dispute one day with another young gentleman, a Mr. Payne. The argument grew very warm, and finally Washington said something which gave great offense to Mr. Payne. The latter retaliated by knocking him down. According to the custom of the times, and the rule of "honor" then prevailing, Washington should have challenged his antagonist to mortal combat, and thus obtain "satisfaction." Every one expected him to do this, and was greatly surprised if not disappointed that he did not. Upon mature reflection he decided that he had been the aggressor, and that he ought to ask pardon of Mr. Payne. Accordingly he went to him the next day and extending his hand said: "To err is natural; to rectify error is honorable. I find I was wrong yesterday, and I wish to be right to-day. You have had satisfaction. If you think that is sufficient, let us be friends." After such a speech as this there was but one thing for Mr. Payne to do. They shook hands and were good friends ever after.—Detroit News.

ANENT THE VANDERBILT SITUATION.

Dear Brother Meek: My feelings and interest in the Vanderbilt matter are so "pent up" that I feel I just must say something, and I beg somewhat in justification of myself, that I think it well for us to speak out in order that our General Conference delegates may know the mind of the members.

I might preface by saying that I have read all I could get hold of in the premises—affecting both the Allison hearing and the Supreme Court hearing, as well as the several articles in the Nashville Advocate pro and con.

Now, as to my position, so as the Vanderbilt decision is concerned, we are in desperate extremity, if, indeed, we can claim even the courtesy accorded to gentlemen in the matter. But we need Vanderbilt, if there can be such a status agreed upon between the Board of Trust and the General Conference as shall give to the Church what she thought she possessed as to control—call it supervision, visitation, or whatever will satisfy. We cannot in honor to ourselves accept the situation as I am able to interpret the Supreme Court decision; for it would be ridiculous to accept responsibility where there is not control guaranteed. The decision does not grant, much less assure, control, nor does it allow property or charter rights supervision. As a man I could not and would not accept active affiliation along the lines suggested by Dean Tillett's four provisions. So then, it would be against my judgment and self-respect to enter into the relationship designated by the Court's decision unmodified.

Dean Tillett's suggestions are wisely put, from his point of view; but I cannot entertain them as a solution. First, because of my just stated interpretation of the necessities in the premises, and because the last three alternatives look to me as tending to disintegration and further court procedures, with no chance for the Church to gain anything by his suggestions. Better, far better, to leave the whole without further word than "bon voyage" than to engage with the Trustees in probable contentions. Methodism would belittle herself if she entered into further administration at Vanderbilt with this perspective. Dean Tillett's position may win some, on the basis of the easiest way out. But that does not settle it; neither do I think the loss of those who concur with him in his views will be representative.

It would be gratifying to me if there could be some meeting place in the council of the General Conference where it could be ascertained in candor the least the Church can afford to expect, and the most the Board of Trust can afford to concede to the control of the Church—this in some joint deliberation of the Board of Education, say, and the Board of Trust. I understand fully this might (and likely would) involve the necessity of a court decree to make the agreement legal and final; but it would have the advantage of trying out the sentiment of both sides and would provide a basis for whatever final action might follow.

The Church needs the University and the University needs the Church—worse, in my estimation, than we need the University. There is the large middle ground for a meeting place in the discussion, represented in the work of the up-building of the University, and on our part, if lost, whatever of increment the educational enterprise has gained thus far. The concern is mutual and should enlist our most careful and candid deliberation. We can build a new University if we must, and the "must" depends upon whether or not we can enter into such a co-operation as assures the Church guaranteed property, rights and such control as to meet with our obligations in the charter.

Whatever is done, let it be done in candor, with no uncertain note as to its meaning, and with charity to all. We need a University, our membership expects provisions thereto, and may an Allwise Providence guide you all into the best way.

We are looking forward to the meeting with us here of the Annual Conference with pleasure. I personally expect it to be the glad time of my life, in fellowship, in uplift, and in the renewal of some old time friendships.

Wishing you good health and godspeed at the General Conference, I am fraternally, Starkville, Miss.

EPISCOPAL ADDRESS.

Federation with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

We call your attention to the unusually full and comprehensive report of the Commission on Federation with the Methodist Episcopal Church. It appears therefrom that the Federal Council of Methodism has at last been completely organized, "with full power to hear and finally decide, without appeal from its decision, all cases of conflict and misunderstanding between the two Episcopal Methodisms."

The first formal meeting of this Council will take place some time in June, 1914. It is our earnest hope that it may be the means of securing the long-sought end of perfect peace between the two Churches. If, however, in spite of what has been done, the wicked waste of men and money in building altar against altar is to continue, then let us see to it that the blame shall not rest upon us.

It should also be noted that during the past quadrennium our Commissioners, at the urgent request of the Commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church, consented to take up and consider the question of organic union. While they had not been specifically directed by the General Conference of 1910 to enter upon this work, we think, nevertheless, that they were warranted in their action by the general tenor of their instructions. The outcome of it all was the formulation of a tentative outline for unification of reorganization, with definite provision that "all that has been or may be developed through our deliberations be reported to our several General Conferences, as the basis of such specific action and authorization as may to them seem desirable."

The Commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church incorporated these tentative suggestions in their report to their General Conference of 1912, which body, however, does not appear to have given them any consideration. It is for you to determine, therefore, whether you will endorse what your Commissioners have done or modify it or ignore it or completely reject it.

The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is related closely by history and duty to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, which we organized in 1870 and which was originally composed of the colored members of our Church who remained with us after the War between the States.

Methodism from its beginning in America put forth the most zealous efforts for the salvation of the Negroes. In the South our foremost preachers often served colored charges and delighted in ministering to them. As far back as 1829 the work of missions to the Negroes was formally organized. Our efforts on their behalf were almost exclusively evangelistic until 1882; and no greater missionary work was ever done than that which our missionaries to the Negroes on the Southern plantation achieved. One of the controlling motives which impelled our people to the "separation of 1844" was that this great work might not be hindered by the agitations of that disturbed period in the history of American Methodism. As soon as the prostration which followed the War between the States permitted, we undertook our educational efforts for the Negroes, and by order of the General Conference of 1882 Paine College, at Augusta, Ga., was established to educate preachers and teachers for the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America and to do what we could to provide a trained leadership for these needy people. The results of thirty-two years have justified the wisdom of the General Conference in ordering the founding of such an institution. The work done there and in some other schools of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America which have received aid from our Board of Education makes it clear that no better agency could have been devised by us then for meeting our obligations as a Church to the Negro race. Many capable teachers and preachers have been prepared for their work and have gone forth to a wholesome service and a sane leadership among their people. Much good has been done, but far more remains to be accomplished. Paine College must be the center of our educational work for the Negroes.

Perhaps the time has come to readjust somewhat the organization of the institution in some features of its charter, and certainly it needs a better equipment. A larger provision for the male students in the matter of a dormitory is most urgently required. Paine College needs also a larger income in order to meet the increasing demands made upon it by the growing numbers who seek the educational opportunities which it offers. These pressing necessities of the institution are commended to your favorable consideration.

But the time has come when our Church must enlarge the scope of its efforts for the enlightenment and evangelization of the Negroes. To this end, we are informed, a plan of enlarged operations which has been framed by certain thoughtful and zealous brethren among us will be laid before you. Your General Superintendents do not assume to urge this plan upon the General Conference for adoption, nor do they commit themselves to all the details of it; but they invite your attention to it and to the whole subject of our present duty to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, through which we seek to bless the Negroes with such aid as we can give them; and they ask you to take such action as this important matter requires. We feel sure that our Church cannot and will not forsake the work of its hands wrought in former years on behalf of the Negroes, but will carry it on to perfection.

Missions.

Methodism from the beginning has exemplified and emphasized the missionary spirit which pervades the gospel of Christ. John Wesley framed the battle cry of the Methodists when he declared, "The world is my parish;" and Thomas Coke, the first bishop of Methodism in America, gave unstintingly of his strength, efforts, and fortune to the cause of missions, dying at sea when he was nearly sixty-seven years of age as he sailed for the Orient at the head of a company of missionaries sent out upon his earnest insistence and largely at his expense. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is in the way our fathers trod when it continues to prosecute with zeal its work of missions, and never more than now were the responsibilities of the Church for this great interest so weighty or its encouragements and prospects so cheering. The awakening in the Orient and the movements in other lands where our Church has missions, as well as the inspiring conditions in the home field, impose upon us the most solemn obligations and open before us the most compelling opportunities for service in the kingdom of Christ. The opening of the Isthmian Canal at Panama brings the Orient to our doors and creates also new and speedier lines of communication with other nations in the Western Hemisphere. The face of the world is changed, and the missionary work of the Church is no longer so much a foreign movement as a domestic necessity. Even the disturbed political condition of the countries into which we have undertaken to carry the message of salvation, notwithstanding their distracting and discouraging aspects at present, foreshadow to us that great and effectual doors will be presently opened such as never before confronted us. And distant Africa, out of desperate and pathetic needs, is calling us with constraining power: "Come over and help us." There must be advancement all along our widely extended lines. It is not enough to stand still and hold the ground which we have gained. We must go forward, and we dare believe that the Church is ready to advance under wise and consecrated leadership.

The General Conference of 1910 reorganized the missionary department of the Church, uniting the bodies known before that time as the Board of Missions, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, and the Woman's Home Mission Society. Under the new system the quadrennium now closing has been necessarily one of readjustment of plans and the reconstruction of policies. The report of the Board of Missions, as now constituted, including the reports of its several departments, which will be laid before the General Conference, will inform you of how the unified organization has worked.

Of some of the results of the work we make mention.

In China, where there have been two revolutions, the membership of our Church has grown from 2,388 in 1910 to 4,377 in 1914. The attendance of Sunday school scholars has more than doubled, advancing from 3,274 in 1910 to 6,710 in 1914, while the number of students in our schools has increased from 1,770 to 3,050. Contributions on the field for the support of the work have risen from $4,319 to $8,410.

The Japanese Empire has been stirred by political controversies and general unrest since the death of the Emperor in 1912, and there is much disquietude in the Empire at this time. Nevertheless, our work in Japan shows progress. Church membership has grown from 1,361 in 1910 to 2,244 in 1914. Sunday school attendance, however, has decreased from 5,720 to 5,630. The number of students in our day schools has increased from 1,350 to 2,170. Contributions on the field for the support of the work remain about the same as in 1910—$4,721. It should be explained that these statistics are for that part of the Japan Methodist Church which is within the field which we cultivate.

In Korea most depressing conditions have prevailed. The irritations incident to the setting up of a foreign authority in the country, the arrest and trial of one hundred and twenty-three men in 1912, including our beloved brother, Baron Yun Chi Ho, deservedly the best-beloved man in his native land, and other painful incidents in the history of the Korean people, could not fail to depress somewhat the work of the Church. Nevertheless, the number of Church members has increased from 4,657 in 1910 to 6,292 in 1914. Sunday school attendance has increased from 4,105 in 1910 to 6,948 in 1914. The number of students in our schools has advanced in four years from 1,417 to 1,982. It may be said of our Korean Methodists what the apostle Paul wrote concerning the Churches of Macedonia: "In a great trial of affliction the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty has abounded unto the riches of their liberality." Their contributions for the support of the work have increased from $4,329 in 1910 to $6,594 in 1914.

Our Church in Brazil grows steadily. In 1910 the membership of the Church in that republic numbered 5,715, and in 1914 the number is 7,021. The number of Sunday school scholars has increased from 3,663 to 4,527, and the number of students in our day schools from 1,164 to 2,418. The contributions on the field for the support of the work have grown from $19,855 to $22,373.

In Mexico there have been revolutions and counter revolutions, wars and rumors of war. But the statistics of our work in that field are not discouraging. In 1910 the membership was reported as 7,386, and in 1914 the figures are 6,935. The number of Sunday school scholars has decreased, most naturally under the conditions which have prevailed, the number in 1910 having been 5,663, and the number reported in 1914 being 5,105. However the number of students in our Mexican schools and colleges has advanced from 3,391 in 1910 to 4,164 in 1914. Contributions on the field for the support of the work amounted to $6,235 in 1914 as compared with $6,515 in 1910.

In the Island of Cuba there is no other Methodist work but that of our Church. It is peculiarly our mission field; and in it there is steady growth, with the promise of still more rapid progress as the mission is better supplied with school buildings and houses of worship. In 1910 our Cuban membership was 3,203, and in 1914, after the most careful revision of the rolls made in the first years of the work, our members number 3,686. The Sunday school attendance has grown from 2,202 in 1910 to 2,685 in 1914. The number of students in our Cuban schools and colleges has fallen, however, from 595 in 1910 to 552 in 1914. The contributions on the field for the support of the work are larger per capita in the Cuban mission than in any other foreign field in which we labor, the figures for 1910 being $13,140, and in 1914 $18,127. The spirit of self-support is growing there, and is already well advanced.

Our Church has begun work in Africa. In pursuance of action taken by the General Conference of 1910, Bishop Walter R. Lambuth, accompanied by Prof. J. W. Gilbert, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, proceeded to Africa in the winter of 1911-12 to investigate conditions and to search out a place for a mission in the Dark Continent to be conducted in co-operation of our Church with the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. They sailed from Antwerp on October 14, 1911, and, after a voyage of twenty-one days, reached the Matadi, on the Lower Congo; thence they proceeded two days' journey by rail to Stanley Pool, and from there traveled by trading boats nearly nine hundred miles to Luebo, the headquarters of the Southern Presbyterian Mission. Dr. William M. Morrison, of that mission, and the missionaries associated with him showed our brethren very great kindness, which neither our missionaries nor we can ever forget or cease to appreciate with gratitude. After taking counsel with these beloved Presbyterian missionaries and being greatly assisted by them, Bishop Lambuth and Professor Gilbert, on December 22, 1911, set out afoot; and, after a journey of forty-one days, they penetrated the heart of the Batetela country, a region inhabited by a cannibalistic tribe of hunters and warriors to the number of 300,000, and arrived at the village of the chief of the tribe, Wembo-Niama. There Bishop Lambuth located the mission to be called the Congo Mission, and thither he returned in the winter of 1913-14, accompanied by Rev. and Mrs. C. C. Bush, Dr. and Mrs. D. L. Mumpower, and Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Stockwell, who thus become our first missionaries in this most interesting field. This entrance of our Church into Africa has moved the hearts of many thousands of our people as few enterprises of the Church have ever done. It is a field all the more important because of the relation of our Church to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America and its interest in this work.

In our foreign missions the quadrennium now closing has been a building era, the total amount invested for buildings in all our fields being $306,065.92. This feature of the work cannot be emphasized too strongly. An unhoused congregation in the homeland labors at the greatest disadvantage, and in the foreign field the case is far worse.

The Board of Missions has been able to send some re-enforcements to our foreign fields, although hindered by lack of funds. The total number of missionaries sent out during the quadrennium is forty-six; of whom twenty-three were for evangelistic work, fifteen for educational, five for medical, and three for industrial. While this number is encouraging from one point of view, it is not an average of one a year to each field and scarcely makes up for losses by death and otherwise.

There are one hundred and twenty-four foreign missionaries and three hundred and forty-two native helpers supported by the Woman's Foreign Department. Fifty-nine missionaries have been accepted by this department during the quadrennium for work in China, Korea, Brazil, Mexico, and Cuba—the fields in which it has work. Its total receipts from March, 1910, to December, 1913, have been $1,101,798.21, of which amount the sum of $109,626 has been expended for buildings.

By the constitution of the Board of Missions adopted by the General Conference of 1910 the work of the Board was divided into two distinct departments, the Home and the Foreign. The Home Department has done excellent work among Cubans, Italians, Germans, French, and Bohemians in the States of Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, and West Virginia. It has contributed also no little to the progress of our work among native Americans in the Columbia, East Columbia, Denver, Montana, Pacific, Los Angeles, New Mexico, West Texas, Northwest Texas, Kentucky, Western Virginia, Illinois, and Louisiana Conferences and the Western District of the Southwest Missouri Conference. The income of the Home Department for the past four years was $241,892.43, which does not include the amount spent by the local Boards of Missions of Annual Conferences for missionary work in the home field, which was $1,257,240.

The Women of the Home Department have had a fruitful quadrennium in their work. The total income for the quadrennium was $1,144,856, an increase of $280,684. Their work is represented by 13 schools, with 98 teachers and 2,168 students. They employ 80 deaconesses. Fifty deaconesses and 28 trained mission workers have been added to their force during the quadrennium. Property amounting to $205,633 has been built and purchased this quadrennium. These figures indicate that the women are alive to our home missions needs, and yet they express but poorly the extent and power of their activities.

A gratifying advance has been made in adjusting the Laymen's Missionary Movement in the missionary machinery of our Church. Our laymen are responding more heartily to the call for personal service and a larger liberality. A noble leadership is being developed among them. This was strikingly evinced at the Missionary Conference held at Lake Junaluska last June, when the great contribution of $152,000 for missions was made largely by the laymen present. At that assembly were manifested both the proof of a deeper interest in this great cause already existing and the promise of greater things for the future.

The Vanderbilt University.

The General Conference of 1910 charged the College of Bishops with certain duties with reference to the case of the Vanderbilt University, and we deem it proper to lay before you in detail how your General Superintendents came into relation to that matter and the steps taken by them in dealing with it at the command of the highest legislative body of the Church.

In the year 1905 a movement originated in the Board of Trust to eliminate the Bishops as trustees ex-officio and to get rid of the original charter granted by the State in 1872 and to substitute for it a new charter containing no reference to the history of the University or its connection with the Church. The effort to secure the new charter failed; but the incident gave rise to so much doubt and discussion with reference to the charter that a number of Annual Conferences sent up memorials concerning the matter to the General Conference held in Birmingham in May, 1906, and in the address of the Bishops to that Conference attention was called to the grave differences of opinion which had arisen with reference to the ownership and control of the institution, and it was recommended that the Conference take prompt action for the effective and final settlement of all the issues involved. The whole matter was referred to the Committee on Education, which brought in a report advising that the General Conference appoint a Commission of five Methodist lawyers "(1) to inquire into and determine the relations of Vanderbilt University to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; (2) to take legal steps, if necessary, to perfect the transfer of the University from the patronizing Conferences to the General Conference of said Church; (3) to define the charter rights of the Bishops of said Church." This report was unanimously adopted, several members of the Board of Trust, who were also members of the General Conference, agreeing to it.

The Commission was accordingly appointed and consisted of Judge E. C. O'Rear, of Kentucky; Judge John A. Rich, of Missouri; Judge E. D. Newman, of Virginia; Judge J. A. McCulloch, of South Carolina; and Hon. Creed F. Bates, of Tennessee—very able and upright men—who without fee or reward undertook the task laid upon them by the Church. All parties to the discussion, including representatives of the Board of Trust, appeared before the Commission and were patiently heard. With the most commendable thoroughness the Commissioners examined all the questions raised and reached unanimous conclusions, which they embodied in a full and comprehensive report.

The Bishops, on receiving the report of the Commissioners, at once accepted it and sought to enter upon the duties it set forth as belonging to them in accordance with the definite instructions given them by the General Conference.

When the report was communicated to the Board of Trust, that body likewise passed a series of resolutions thanking the Commission for the able and unselfish service that it had rendered and declaring that the trustees "recognized and rejoiced in the ownership of the Church in the University."

The General Conference held in Asheville, N. C., in May, 1910, accepted this report and, desiring to remove all occasion of inharmoniousness and resolve all uncertainty about the future conduct of the University, requested the Board of Trust, nearly a majority of whose members were present at the seat of the Conference, to hold a special session in order that the Conference, through its Committee on Education, might confer with the Board and reach a satisfactory settlement of the issues involved and promote the welfare of the institution. In response to this request the Conference was informed that it was believed the Board of Trust could not hold a legal meeting outside the State of Tennessee, and that for this reason the special session of the Board would not be called. After this response was made on behalf of the Board of Trust, the General Conference, not willing to adjourn and leave matters in indefiniteness with the Church to go on in doubt about them, took the following action:

"Resolved: 1. That this General Conference hereby accepts the Report of the Vanderbilt Commission as a definition of the rights of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to Vanderbilt University; moreover, that it accepts the judgment of the Commission that the College of Bishops is a board of common law visitors of the University; and, furthermore, that it accepts the finding of the Commission that the General Conference has the right to select the Board of Trustees in such a manner as it may elect either by direct election by the Conference itself, or through such agency or agencies as it may designate.

"2. That it is the sense of this General Conference that its right to select the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University and fill vacancies in the same should now be exercised and hereafter at its discretion; and it being ascertained that three vacancies now exist in the Board of Trust of said University, the following-named members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are hereby elected to fill said vacancies—namely, N. E. Harris, of the South Georgia Conference; A. W. Biggs, of the Memphis Conference; and V. A. Godbey, of the West Texas Conference.

"3. That, following this election, the General Conference will for the future continue the method of choosing the trustees adopted by the General Conference held at Baltimore in 1893, when it committed "to the General Board of Education the confirmation of all trustees selected by the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University."

"4. That the General Conference approves the action of the Bishops in entering upon the discharge of their duties as visitors of the University.

"5. That the General Conference approves as a sound principle of law the position of the College of Bishops—namely, that "it is not competent for the Board of Education to delegate the function intrusted to it by this General Conference to any other body or person whatsoever"—and the General Board of Education is hereby instructed to accede to the request of the Bishops—namely, that hereafter said Board will confirm no persons as trustees of Vanderbilt University except such as may be officially nominated to the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in writing, by the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University.

"6. That the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, shall provide whatever means may be necessary to sustain the finding of the Vanderbilt Commission, if it shall at any time be called in question in the civil courts. In such event the Bishops of the Church are hereby instructed to take whatever steps they may deem necessary to maintain the rights and claims of the Church."

When the three brethren selected by the General Conference to fill the vacancies in the Board of Trust sought to take their places in the Board, they were denied their seats, and three other gentlemen were elected by the Board to fill the vacancies which the General Conference had undertaken to fill. The Board also repealed the by-law providing for the confirmation of trustees by the Board of Education of the Church.

Obedying the mandate of the General Conference, your Bishops thereupon brought an action in the Chancery Court of Davidson County, Tenn., to maintain the rights of the Church in the University as set forth in the Report of the Vanderbilt Commission and as claimed by the General Conference when it formally accepted that Report.

To the bill filed by the Bishops on behalf of the Church in the Chancery Court the Board of Trust made answer, denying the right of the Church to elect trustees and the right of the Bishops to exercise the supervision expressly bestowed upon them in the charter, and affirming that the Church did not possess and never had possessed any rights in the University, but had been allowed to remain there by the "sufferance" of the Trustees, a privilege which "could be withdrawn at any time and had been withdrawn." Incidentally it was asserted in the answer of the Board of Trust that the Report of the Commission appointed by the General Conference, and before which representatives of the Board had appeared, never had been accepted by the Trustees, all statements to the contrary by whomsoever made notwithstanding.

The case lingered in the Chancery Court for two full years. Many depositions were taken, and a vast amount of documentary evidence was gathered. The trial finally came on at the December term of the court for 1912 and lasted for more than a month. Every word of the voluminous record was heard by the Chancellor, Judge John Allison. It is doubtful whether any case in any court was ever dealt with more exhaustively. Finally, on February 21, 1913, the Chancellor in a brief but comprehensive decision sustained the conclusions of the Commission and the contentions of the Bishops at every point. A copy of this decision we transmit to the General Conference.

From this judgment the Board of Trust took an appeal to the Supreme Court of Tennessee. While this appeal was pending in the Supreme Court an offer was sought and secured by the Chancellor of the University, on action of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trust, from Andrew Carnegie, Esq., of New York, to give $1,000,000 to the Medical Department of the University upon certain conditions set forth in the correspondence between the parties concerned, copies of which correspondence we transmit to the General Conference.

It will be noted in the correspondence that the proposed gift was accompanied by the stipulation that a "small board of seven persons," and not the Board of Trust provided by the charter and confirmed by the Church, should "govern the medical school." The donor further said, after alluding specifically to the pending suit: "I do not believe it is wise for any sect to control educational institutions, such as universities, whether the organization be a Methodist Conference or a Presbyterian Assembly or a Catholic order. For this reason, therefore, while I am anxious to make this gift, which I believe would be of high value to the whole South, I hesitate to do so until the question of denominational control has been settled by the courts. I make the following proposition for your consideration: I will furnish the $200,000 cash now needed for the laboratories, and the remaining $800,000 shall remain in the Carnegie Corporation, in New York, interest at four per cent to be paid to the University for the use of the medical school until such time as the question of denominational control has been settled by the court of last resort, its final disposition to be then determined. Should this proposition be satisfactory to your Board of Trust, I understand that the conditions agreed to in your letter of May 1 as to the size and constitution of the Governing Board of the medical school and the character of the school itself are also conditions of the gift."

It will be observed that this gift at once proposed the segregation of the Medical Department and its control by a board unknown to the charter, contained an unseemly reference to the pending suit, and expressed sentiments offensive to the self-respect of the Church.

Against the acceptance of the offered gift upon the terms stated four members of the Board of Trust—to-wit, R. W. Millsaps, John R. Pepper, E. B. Chappell, and W. J. Young—voted and protested; but a majority of the Board of Trust voted to accept it.

Thereupon your General Superintendents, acting as a Board of Visitors of the Vanderbilt University, vetoed the action of the majority in assuming to accept the gift upon the terms set out in the correspondence between Chancellor James H. Kirkland and Andrew Carnegie, Esq., and published a statement giving to the Church at large the reasons impelling them to the veto. In connection with this address we transmit to the General Conference copies of the veto and the statement published concerning it.

It gives us pleasure to say that the Church manifestly concurred in the rejection of the gift upon the terms so injurious and humiliating. Every Annual Conference of the connection in the United States, with less than a dozen dissenting votes out of eight thousand, indorsed and commended the action of the protesting trustees and the veto of the Bishops.

On March 21, 1914, the Supreme Court of Tennessee handed down, through Special Justice W. R. Turner (who took the place of Justice S. C. Williams, who recused himself on account of having voted as a member of the General Conference of 1910 to approve the findings of the Vanderbilt Commission), an opinion reversing the judgment of Chancellor John Allison in the Chancery Court of Davidson County. A copy of the decision rendered by the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee, through Special Justice W. R. Turner, is also by us transmitted to the General Conference.

Upon the rendering of this judgment by the Supreme Court of Tennessee—the able and faithful attorneys representing the Church in the case—to-wit, Albert W. Biggs, G. T. Fitzhugh, and Percy D. Maddin, of Tennessee; Edward C. O'Rear, of Kentucky; and Harris & Harris, of Georgia—filed a petition for a rehearing on the ground that the conclusions of the Supreme Court on both matters of fact and law were erroneous. On April 2 this petition of the counsel of the Church for a rehearing was denied, and the entire costs were assessed against the representatives of the Church. A copy of the petition for the rehearing and of the final decree of the court we transmit to the General Conference with the other documents concerning the case to which reference has been made.

The decree of the Court leaves to the Church a mere shadow of connection with the University, which, in our opinion, does not justify the Church in any attempt to direct the affairs of the institution or assume any responsibility for it. We are thus deprived of what we honestly believed to be our own and which by hundreds of actions taken in our General and Annual Conferences and in the Board of Trust of the University itself has been affirmed to be the property of the Church. Indeed, the ownership of the University by the Church was never questioned for more than thirty years by any one within or without the Church.

The words of the address of the Bishops to the last General Conference expressed the universal sentiment of all concerned when the Vanderbilt University was called "our Vanderbilt," "ours in morals and in law."

When the legal rights of the Church in the institution became a matter of discussion, with scrupulous care, and not in haste and heat, the Church proceeded to ascertain the nature and extent of its authority over the University by the appointment of a Commission of able lawyers to investigate the whole subject and report their findings to the authorities of the Church and to the Board of Trust. The Report of that Commission, made after a most thorough investigation and with all parties to the controversy, represented in person or by competent attorneys before the Commission, was accepted and approved by the Church. The Board of Trust also, after receiving the report, thanked the Commission in formal resolutions and declared that the Trustees "recognized and rejoiced in the ownership of the Church in the University." And we were assured that the resolutions of the Board were intended to be "a full and explicit acceptance of the report in the sense of the terms in which it was conveyed to them."

The Church was both surprised and pained, therefore, when the Board of Trust in its pleadings before the civil courts reversed all this action, resisted the conclusions of the Commission, and denied the ownership of the Church in the institution. And it has been still more amazed and grieved by the judgment of the Supreme Court of Tennessee approving these contentions of the Board of Trust. But as law-abiding citizens we bow to the decision of the court.

This, however, does not mean that we are bound to agree that the Church has received justice in what has been done and decided. To do that would put us in the attitude of having sought to appropriate to our use property which we did not own. All the actions of the Church in asserting its ownership in Vanderbilt University have been characterized by scrupulous conscientiousness; and its methods of procedure have been open, honest, and straightforward. In all this transaction the Church has had clean hands and a pure heart. And we but voice the unanimous sentiment of our people when we say that the Church to which we belong would rather lose every penny of the property that it owns than to bring reproach upon its good name, and that it would not accept any sum, however great, at the cost of dishonoring the high vocation wherewith it is called.

We do not presume to indicate to you what course you should pursue to repair the loss which has been inflicted upon the Church. That is for the wisdom of the General Conference to determine, and we venture to express the opinion that our people will promptly supply whatever means you may judge necessary to make up for the institution which has been taken from the ownership and control of the Church. It is respectfully recommended that the whole matter be referred by the General Conference to a select committee to report what should be done as the case now stands.

(The Sunday school interests, Epworth League work, our Publishing interests, Church Extension, Education, our representative church at Washington, Superannuate Endowment Fund, Hospitals, change of name of the Church, laity rights for women, and other matters touching needed legislation received a liberal share of attention. The address also included a paragraph on the Episcopal service during the past quadrennium, and another touching on the "workmen" of our Church who have died during the quadrennium.)

THE IDEAL SUMMER RESORT.

For rest, health and pleasure, is MINERAL PARK SPRINGS, on the Knoxville Division of the Southern Railway, eighteen miles from Chattanooga. It has Nature's most delightful location amid the beautiful green hills of East Tennessee, with purest air, the most beautiful scenery, and health-giving mineral waters in the South. A purely Christian Summer Resort, with most perfect freedom, all kinds of innocent amusements, but neither dancing, card playing or liquor drinking. The death angel visited the home of Mr. E. E. Bridges on April 24, 1914, and claimed his precious wife, ANNIE. Mrs. Bridges was born Sept. 20, 1877. At an early age she joined the Methodist Church. Her life was pure and sweet; also well spent. She was confined to her bed over a year, and how patiently she bore her affliction! Oh, how hard it is to part with one so dear! But His will be done, not ours. She is gone; but her memory will last forever. Mrs. Bridges leaves a husband, three children, father, mother and sisters, besides a host of friends. Weep not, for she is at rest. May God spare our lives to walk in her footsteps.

Her loving sister,
Mrs. N. B. HARRISON.

Once more the death angel has invaded our midst and carried away to his reward Brother WM. H. DOUGLAS, a life-long Christian, and an honored steward of the Methodist Church. Brother Douglas, after years of sickness and suffering passed away at his home near Goodman, Miss., on Jan. 16, 1914.

He was a man of firm convictions, upright, honorable and sincere, whose integrity was never questioned. To his family and friends who knew him best, Brother Douglas was genial, kind, indulgent and charitable.

As a steward he was always ready and willing to work for the best interests of the Church. In Brother Douglas' death the Church has lost a faithful and devoted servant, the community, one of its most valued citizens, and his friends and neighbors a loyal and devoted associate.

We tender to the bereaved family, our sincere sympathy in the irreparable loss they have sustained in his death.

Signed: W. E. Meek, E. W. Pickens, W. S. S. Harman, I. U. Donald, Stewards.

Mrs. SALLIE I. BLUME, wife of Dr. J. N. Blume of Castor, La., died in the Schumpert Memorial Sanitarium, Shreveport, La., on April 15, 1914, and was laid to rest in the Pleasant Valley graveyard, at Hartman, La. She leaves a husband, her little daughter, Vashti, a father and mother, brothers, sisters and a host of relatives to mourn their loss. Sister Blume united with the Methodist Church early in life and was a faithful member until God called her to himself. Her home was full of sunshine and kindness to all. "To know her was to love her." She was an untiring worker for all the interests of the Church. Not how long she lived but the way she lived was what impressed us most. Sister Blume, oh, how we miss you! When shall there be another like you? May the mantle of her consecrated life fall upon the membership of the little church she loved. Sad was the parting, but, oh, how glad the meeting, when we shall stand upon the mountain-top of an eternal day, amid the glories and splendors of a million setting suns! May her Christ comfort the hearts of her loved ones, and bring them to the city where she has gone.

FIRE AND BRIM-STONE SERMONS.

Billy Sunday's bombshell book on the race problem, "The Black Shadow and the Red Death" (Broadway Publishing Company, New York), contains extracts from several fire and brim-stone sermons. In the preface Sam Jones' noted sermon to "men only" is quoted.

"The proof of miscegenation, wide-spread, and ever rapidly increasing stares at you (Sam Jones once said in a noted sermon "to men only" "in millions of brass colored, bastard brats" all over the South, and in the border cities. The first step in the solution of the race problem, the most momentous before the Great Republic to-day, is the abolishment of criminal intimacy between white men and Negro women. Make the penalty ten years in the penitentiary.

And this from the preface, "And this multiplying of mulattoes is not mainly and merely a matter of sowing wild oats." Several years ago the Rev. Dr. Beverly Warner, in a Thanksgiving Day sermon that shook the South, delivered at old, historic Trinity Episcopal Church, New Orleans, said:

"We hear much of racial purity and the deep necessity of preserving our race integrity. I have heard more earnest, solemn, violent, and aggressive talk on that subject than on any other social problem that confronts us. And I am in hearty accord with it. But I am staggered by the facts that lift their heads above the surface of current life. We have no legal miscegenation, but we have it—shall I say widespread?—in illegal form. I pass this over because, while I have plenty of second-hand knowledge, I have no personal acquaintance with the shameful fact which is alleged of men of good standing, professional men, some of them, having a white and black family at the same time, in the town."

And this from the sermon of "ole Uncle Billy Jones," the Hardshell preacher in the novel, "Social equality does not threaten from that quarter. Our danger is not from the man who eats with them up North. It is from the man down here who demands the right to be a white man in the day-time, and a nigger at night!"

And this from the preface: "the absolute silence of the pulpit since the death of Bishop Haygood, Sam Jones and Dr. Warner, is the most ominous sign of the time. The delicacy of the subject, and the immensity of this form of the social evil, is no excuse. An earnest, united persistent effort on the part of the pulpit, has never failed. It is the real creator of public sentiment. For two thousand years it has led every fight against the great evils of the world. Would God that the American pulpit might turn into Mount Sinai against miscegenation."—Methodist Preacher, in Florida Christian Advocate.

CLINTON, LA.

Dear Brother Meek: Some four weeks ago I left home to help Brother J. Wilson Brown on the Tickfaw charge. Redoak was the first place where we opened fire. I was pastor there twenty-two years ago. There have been some improvements along the line of building a church, good roads and railroads. Souls were converted under God and the Church strengthened. We went from there to Centerville, Livingston Parish, where God blessed us. We then went to Lee's Landing on Brother Williams' work. There, they have a fine Sunday school and prayer meeting, and much good was done. On April 23, the fourth Sunday, we preached for Brother Johns on the Angola State Farm. We preached five times that day. I don't know when I felt any better when preaching than when I saw those men in their stripes weeping over their sins. Some 200 or 300 gave us their hands and asked that we pray for them. Brother Johns is doing a great work among the prisoners. They all seem to love him and he seems to enjoy the work. We will have some open dates for June after the District Conference, which is to be held on the last Sunday in May. Anyone needing my help may write me at Clinton, La. They might also write to Brother Johns or Brother Brown at Baton Rouge, La., as to how I preach. God bless the paper. Clinton, La. W. T. CURRIE.

EARLY RECOLLECTIONS.

Dear Dr. Meek: For a long time the following communication has been on my mind and heart. I have always put it down with the question "Of what use?" But as the impression to write persists, I send it. Use it or not as you think best.

I was with my sister in the Tennessee Female College in Franklin, Tenn., of which Bishop Hargrove was president. He remained there during the vacation of 1870, I think it was. Many prominent Methodists, both clerical and lay frequently came from Nashville for a few days of rest, among whom were Bishop McTyler, Drs. Summers, McFerrin, Young, and others. Their perpetual theme was ways and means to establish a great University for our Church. Dr. Johnson, Editor of the Tennessee Advocate, was filling its columns with the subject. The consensus of opinion was, we will undertake nothing except on a scale grand enough to meet our needs for years to come. The Charter for a Central University of the Methodist Church, South, had been or was about to be obtained, and a large donation was an imperative need to start this grand undertaking.

I was too young, possibly, to note details, but I was an interested listener to many talks and was fired with their enthusiasm.

The idea of the Vanderbilt gift arose naturally whenever the subject was mentioned, for Mrs. McTyler and Mrs. Vanderbilt were cousins, and there was constant intercourse between the two families. Bishop McTyler and wife were soon to be the guests of the Vanderbilts, and on this occasion it was decided to present the subject to Mrs. Vanderbilt, who was a devoted Southern Methodist from Mobile, Ala., and her husband enabled her to be very generous in gifts to her Church. Possibly we all know he built for her a handsome church in New York, "The Church of the Strangers," which was filled by a Southern Methodist minister. He paid the salary of Dr. Deems, the pastor, and to it were attracted Southern visitors to the city. So what was more natural than that he should give a large donation to aid in establishing a University for her Church in her own Southland. On Bishop McTyler's return from his visit, in this same college, we heard particulars of the gift. How eagerly Mrs. Vanderbilt caught at the idea of endowing this University! She broached the subject to her husband, how he listened but said little, how her hopes and fears arose day after day while waiting some action on his part!—of her joy when she said to the Bishop, "We have won." At last the Commodore made the offer to Bishop McTyler of a gift to the Central University of the Methodist Church, South. So, really it was Mrs. Vanderbilt to whom the Church was indebted for the gift. We may safely add his only interest in the matter was that it was for his wife's sake, because she loved the Methodist Church, South, and never failed to advance its interest by every means in her power.

Dr. Young took the field to raise money from the Church, and he had some large gifts, but many more small ones. There was scarcely a loyal Methodist who failed to contribute something. I remember he got many who could only give little, to take a one hundred dollar bond and pay on it three times a year. At our Conference in Canton he said "Any of you can pay three dollars, about the prices of your back gate," so all we "small fry" tried to pay "the price of a back gate," to have a part in establishing our great University.

But we have lost it, and might we not have a greater loss in spirituality if we dwell in bitterness upon the injustice done us? God himself raised up the Methodist Church "to spread Scriptural holiness over the land." Let us not forget our mission, and that he uses strange, yes, incomprehensible methods, to accomplish his ends. Have we been faithful to this work he called us to do? Have we kept ourselves "unspotted from the world?" The approaching General Conference will be a trying time. May we as Methodist people put from us all bitterness and resentment. With a holy calm in our hearts, we may hear his voice in the direction of our councils. Yes, we need a University, and he who "will supply all our needs" can bring triumph for his work out of this, our bitter defeat, if we will let him lead us, in his own way. He will do this if our eye is "single to his glory."

PERSONALS.

Rev. K. W. Dodson, of Lake Charles, La., is in fine favor with his congregation, and the work in that progressive city is prosperous and growing.

The Methodist Ministers' Wives' Club will meet with the President, Mrs. J. L. Sutton, at 5226 St. Charles Avenue, on Friday, May 15, at 2:30 in the afternoon.

One in a position to know states that our Church at Hammond, La., is showing increased interest and activity in the work, and that our pastor there, Rev. W. L. Hunter, is giving fine satisfaction.

Sister D. D. Gibson, of Hickory, Miss., brought us under obligations a few days since for a club of 5 subscriptions. We greatly appreciate her interest in the circulation of the Advocate in her community.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr., of Jackson, Miss., has recently been visiting his son, Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., at Poplarville, Miss. He occupied our pulpit there on Sunday, April 26, and preached to the profit and delight of a large congregation.

Brother W. S. Holmes, who is one of the choice laymen of the Louisiana Conference, in a letter to the Editor a few days ago, stated that he would leave for Oklahoma City Tuesday of this week to look in on the sessions of the General Conference.

Rev. J. T. Abney, of Morton, Miss., has lately brought us under obligations to him for a club of subscriptions, forwarded on April 27. Brother Abney will be the host of the Newton District Conference this year, which will convene at Morton on May 12, at 2:30 p. m.

The Editor left for Oklahoma City last Monday at noon, going over the Texas & Pacific Railway to Fort Worth, and from there over the Santa Fe. In his absence, the editorial department of the Advocate will be in charge of Rev. C. A. Battle, pastor of the Felicity Street Church of New Orleans.

Rev. C. T. Lloyd, of Abbeville, Miss., sends us a club of 8 subscriptions, for which we heartily thank him. In his letter he makes the following brief reference to his work: "Things are moving along very nicely with us. We are praying for and expecting a great time during the approaching revival season."

Rev. W. S. Henry, of De Ridder, La., is carrying forward all the interests of the Church in that pleasant charge in a most gratifying manner. He has lately completed a new parsonage, which is said to be quite an attractive structure, with a splendid situation on perhaps the best residential street in the town.

Rev. R. O. Weir, formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, but now stationed at Anderson, Texas, writes an interesting note commending the New Orleans Advocate for its stand relative to the Vanderbilt situation. He says that the paper is always a welcome visitor to him and his family, being like a letter from their former home.

Rev. R. I. Collins, of Cockrum, Miss., who is one of the Advocate's constant and active friends, continues to send us subscriptions from his charge, and we make grateful acknowledgment to him for his kindness in this respect. Brother Collins states that his work is doing well, and that he hopes to see many persons saved before the end of the year.

Rev. E. H. Cunningham, our gifted young pastor at Myrtle, Miss., who has a fondness for journalistic work, has lately been furnishing the Memphis Commercial Appeal with some illustrated communications bearing on the present session of the General Conference. Few secular papers in the South carry as much Church news as the great daily which Brother Cunningham serves.

Rev. T. B. Cottrell, who is giving a good account of himself in his new field at Tylertown, Miss., has lately been presenting the claims of the Advocate in his pastoral rounds, with gratifying success. He gave us on the 30th ult., seven names for our subscription files, accompanied by a check to correspond. It is needless to say that we appreciate this service in behalf of the Conference organ.

The following from Rev. J. J. Golden, formerly a member of the Mississippi Conference, will be read with interest by his many friends in his home State: "I am glad to say that I am able to take work again. I have been appointed to the church in Gallup, New Mexico. We had our first service on Sunday, April 19. We have a nice house of worship and a good parsonage, well furnished. It makes my heart rejoice to be in the harness again."

Rev. E. Nash Broyles and his choice flock at Durant, Miss., are planning to launch a new church enterprise at that place. Brother Broyles is one of the most promising young ministers in the North Mississippi Conference, and he affirms that his people deserves to be ranked with the best that can be found anywhere. The Editor knows a good many of them, and he has no hesitancy in endorsing the pastor's estimate of them.

Rev. B. P. Jaco, presiding elder of the Winona District, sends us the following note from his diocese: "We have bought a gospel tent, which will be under the management of Rev. W. M. Campbell, of Minter City, Miss., with whom all arrangements may be made by pastors desiring to use it. Rev. J. E. Cunningham, of Greenwood, Miss., will give assistance at any point where it may be needed while I am away attending the General Conference."

Believing that General Carranza does not rightly understand the attitude of the United States in the Mexican imbroglio, Mr. Andres Osuna, formerly of Mexico but now Spanish translator at the Methodist Publishing House in Nashville, has gone to Mexico to have a conference with him. Mr. Osuna is said to be a close friend of the leader of the Constitutionalist faction, and he hopes to be able to convince him of the good intentions of President Wilson.

Through the courtesy of Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, our highly esteemed pastor at Starkville, Miss., we have before us a post-card picture of the beautiful new parsonage recently erected at that place. We heartily congratulate him and his worthy flock upon having brought to completion this splendid enterprise. If there are any North Mississippi preachers who favor the removal of the time limit, we rather think they would be cured of their heresy if Brother Lipscomb would send them one of these pictures.

Rev. J. T. Lockhart, our efficient pastor at Batesville, Miss., says: "We hope to be in our new church in about two weeks. The work is about all finished except putting in the hardwood floor and installing the new pipe organ. We think we have a modern, well-arranged and up-to-date Church. We have fourteen Sunday school rooms, besides the ladies' parlor, the pastor's study, and the choir room." In carrying forward this splendid new church enterprise, Brother Lockhart has not been unmindful of the interests of the Advocate, as is attested by the fact that he sent us on April 28 two new and three renewal subscriptions.

The trustees of Vanderbilt University, according to the Nashville Banner, have succeeded in getting back the fourteen acres of the University campus which they sold to the George Peabody College for Teachers some years ago, if we mistake not, for $125,000. The Peabody College received in exchange for the property returned two seven-acre tracts of land, one just north and the other east of its campus, for which Vanderbilt is stated to have paid $150,000. It will be remembered that the College of Bishops opposed the sale of this part of the Vanderbilt campus and were ridiculed for their position; but time seems to have vindicated their judgment as to the wisdom of the transaction.

Dr. George S. Sexton, of Shreveport, La., went to Oklahoma City last week to be present at the meeting of the General Board of Church Extension, which has in charge the work of providing for the construction of a representative Southern Methodist Church in Washington City. It will be remembered that Dr. Sexton for the three years immediately preceding his appointment to First Church, Shreveport, last December, was the Field Agent for this worthy enterprise, and he is still connected with it. In Dr. Sexton's absence, his pulpit in Shreveport was filled last Sunday by Rev. J. F. Foster, of Amite, La., and Brother Foster's pulpit was filled both in the morning and evening by Rev. W. L. Hunter of Hammond.

The General Conference opened in Oklahoma City yesterday, Wednesday May 6. The present is the seventeenth session of our law-making assembly since the bisection of Episcopal Methodism in 1844. The sittings of the Conference are being held in St. Luke's Church. The following are the delegates from our three patronizing Conferences: Louisiana—Clerical, R. H. Wynn, F. S. Parker, W. H. Coleman, J. M. Henry; lay, A. M. Mayo, A. P. Hoyt, R. O. Randle, W. A. McKennon. Mississippi—Clerical, A. F. Watkins, I. W. Cooper, J. T. Leggett, P. D. Hardin; lay, R. W. Millsaps, L. P. Brown, J. W. Beeson, P. L. Blackwell. North Mississippi—Clerical, J. R. Countiss, R. A. Meek, H. S. Spragins, B. P. Jaco; lay, J. G. McGowan, J. H. Sherard, E. V. Hughston, G. J. Leftwich.

We have received a great many more communications bearing on the Vanderbilt situation than we have been able to publish. Practically all of them were on the right side of the issue, and the only reason that we have not printed them is because we have not had the space to do so. We hope that our friends will take the correct view of the matter and not feel that they have been discriminated against. We have done the best we could under the circumstances. The question is now in the hands of the General Conference, and as our paper will not be mailed to the members of that body, we think there is little profit in prolonging the discussion at the present time. If our law-making assembly should leave the issues involved in such a condition as to justify further disputation, we will not deny our patrons the right to be heard, no matter whether we agree with them or not.

WINONA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Winona District Conference was held at Tutwiler, Miss., April 17-19. Bishop Atkins, who was expected, failed to reach us because of urgent calls elsewhere; and, of course, all were disappointed. In his absence our sub-Bishop, Rev. B. P. Jaco, filled the place with efficiency and satisfaction. The Conference opened Thursday evening, with a sermon by Rev. J. J. Brooks, father of our delightful host, Brother Howard Brooks. Friday morning at 9 o'clock the first business session was held, with every preacher of the district present except two, and one of these, Rev. T. J. Durrett, was at Hot Springs on account of illness. The reports of the brethren were optimistic, and many of them showed that things worth while were being brought to pass in this favored part of our Conference. The faithful pastors of this great delta are endeavoring to take it for Methodism. How we do need home mission money to help develop this section of North Mississippi! Where has the Board of Missions spent money that has brought greater results? One preacher referred to a territory that twenty years ago comprised his circuit when he received a salary of $150 and $200 from the Board, and to-day there are two circuits within this territory which pay about $3000 to the preachers alone. Was it a good investment?

In every respect this was a good Conference. Tutwiler surprised many of us as to size and appearance. It is a new town, with good homes and good business houses; a handsome new church building, a loyal membership, and a splendid pastor. Among the visitors were Rev. J. J. Brooks, Rev. W. S. Harrison and T. M. Bradley; also Dr. T. B. Holloman, of the Mississippi Conference. Brother W. S. Harrison's exposition of the Word was one of the most enjoyable features of the meeting. Brothers W. M. Williams, J. R. Countiss, A. F. Watkins, H. M. Ellis, G. W. Bachman, and V. C. Curtis, each presented his work to the Conference. We were more than persuaded that the Sunday School Board had acted wisely in the choice of a Field Secretary. The preaching was done by Revs. J. J. Brooks, W. D. McCullough, J. E. Cunningham, J. R. Countiss, W. M. Campbell, and O. W. Bradley.

Some things the Conference did: Granted Brother Earnest C. Driskell of Webb, Miss., license to preach; voted to move the district parsonage from Winona to a more central point. This matter was left in the hands of a committee of five; decided to hold the next Conference at Drew in 1915.

THE BAPTISTS DISTURBED.

In its issue of April 15, the Midland Methodist contained the following:

"We understand that our Baptist brethren of Tennessee are very much disturbed over the outcome of the Vanderbilt University lawsuit. A committee has been appointed to look into the status of the property held by the Baptist Church in this State. Speaking of our troubles, Rev. Rufus Weaver in an article to the Baptist and Reflector, among other things, says: 'Vanderbilt University joins the long procession of schools founded by Christian bodies that, listening to the siren voice of wealth, have in the name of culture and freedom turned away from the faith of the fathers and have brought to naught the sacrifices of the sainted dead.' It is hard to believe that men like W. R. Cole, W. M. Hughes, A. B. Ransom, M. Neely, Dr. C. W. Byrd, C. W. Ratcliffe, W. T. Sanders, and others on that Board of Trust would ever have submitted to such a situation knowingly. The court probably went farther than they expected it to go." (Concerning this last suggestion of our contemporary, we will say that the Tennessee Supreme Court did not take any position favorable to these men, that they did not plead with it to take.—Editor N. O. Advocate.)

TETTERINE WHEN OTHERS FAIL
That's the great thing about Tetterine skin remedy. It does insist upon relieving the severest cases of Tetter, Ringworm, Eczema, Itch, Acne, Pimples, etc., when others fail down. Mrs. S. E. Hart, Cross Trails, Ala., says: "I used Tetterine for tetter which has been running for 5 years. Nothing gave relief until I used your remedy and one box made a final cure." 50c at druggist's or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Third Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference was held in Laurel April 24-28. There were present 111 delegates, 16 officers, 2 missionaries—Miss Kate Cooper of Wonsan, Korea, and Miss Julia Wasson of Shanghai, China, and 2 deaconesses—Misses Mollie Womack and Lois Trusley of Meridian Wesley House, and Miss Myrtle Long of Biloxi Wesley House. The sessions were held in the new M. E. Church, South, where Rev. J. L. Neill is pastor. He and Mrs. Neill were indefatigable in their efforts to promote the comfort and welfare of every woman present. Brother Neill's smile was as broad as the much-talked of Texas smile, and quite as infectious.

Opening Session.

The opening of the Conference was on Friday night when a prayer, praise and communion service was held. It seemed the most fitting manner in which to begin our Missionary Conference, for every one realized that its sessions must be entered into with a spirit of intense earnest prayer and consecration. At the close of the service, which was presided over by Rev. J. L. Neill, all felt closer drawn to the Master in whose service we were gathered.

Mrs. J. R. Kittrell, Mrs. Brunson, and Mrs. E. H. Moulter, the representatives from the three Methodist Churches of Laurel, also Mrs. Clara Graves, the Y. W. C. A. Secretary, gave most cordial greetings to the Conference.

Let us pause here a moment. Laurel is the only town in Mississippi which boasts of a Y. W. C. A. Being the only one in the State, they are proud of it, and justly so. The building is well equipped and Miss Graves and her assistants are doing an excellent and much needed work in this large mill and factory town.

The President's message was an earnest heart-to-heart talk, telling of the work accomplished, the fields where the needs are so great, and closing with a fervent appeal for the needs of the work, deeper consecration, prevailing prayer and faithful practice of Christian stewardship.

Publicity Work.

Mrs. B. F. Lewis spoke of the great need of advertising our work. We cannot be successful without such methods being used. The Anti-tuberculosis League last Christmas received $12,000,000 from the sale of red cross stamps and spent $2,000,000 in advertising. It paid, though, didn't it? Mrs. Luke Johnson, our Council Publicity Superintendent, advertised for secular papers containing missionary news, charts, posters, and such, and upon reaching Fort Worth, found it there by the carload. It is time our women were waking up to the wonderful opportunity which lies before them in this publicity department.

Young People's Auxiliary Demonstration.

One of the features of the Conference was a demonstration of the young people's work by the Petal Young People's Auxiliary. The obstacles overcome by these young people, who number their members from several denominations as well as from the young people of no special faith, would long ago have daunted many an adult auxiliary. Most of them walk two miles following a path through the woods. It was an inspiration to have these young people in our midst. Mr. Neill paid them a high tribute when he said they were one of the best in the State. Just before concluding their service the president of the auxiliary, Miss Willie D. Hearst, presented our president, Mrs. R. E. Johnson, with the pin of the Petal Young People's Auxiliary; and Mrs. Johnson said she felt a great honor had been conferred upon her. Another pin was sent to the beloved second vice-president, Mrs. A. E. Wratt, who was detained at home on account of illness.

Children's Work.

An afternoon was devoted to the children's work. Mrs. T. B. Clifford, who has the supervision of this department in our Conference, conducted the services, ably assisted by Mrs. C. L. Walker of Laurel, manager of the junior division of that place. The little Laurelites rendered a program that was most pleasing and interesting. It showed wise planning and faithful work in its execution. Mrs. Clifford, in making her report, said it was the greatest department of our mission work and that the children are the greatest factors in the plan for the redemption of the world. Her department showed a marked growth, the Hattiesburg district being in the lead. Fifty-eight per cent was the increase of the whole department. The chautauqua salute was given her at the conclusion of her program.

Deaconesses and Missionaries.

The night services devoted to the deaconesses and missionaries were occasions long to be remembered. The former, working among the women and children of the canneries of Biloxi and the new districts of Meridian, presented their several lines of work in such an intense and vivid manner that no woman went away not having their possibilities and needs deeply written upon their hearts. To look into the faces of these three women who have consecrated their lives to this work and who are so earnestly laboring to make His Kingdom come on earth was an inspiration which every one longed to take back to her auxiliary. Our missionaries spoke to the children and young people on Sunday afternoon and to a packed house on Sunday night. We were indeed fortunate in having these two women in our midst. The messages they presented were fine, full of zeal and enthusiasm for their work, and brought China and Korea very close to their hearers. There was a solemn hush upon the audience as they listened with bated breath to the stirring spirit-filled messages of these two children of the King, and it was easy to recognize the power behind them. The children and the young people enjoyed their service with the missionaries, too. Many curios were exhibited which filled them with wonder and delight. These women are gifted, for they not only held the grown-up audience spellbound, but the children listened with eager hearts to their every word. Many interesting stories of the Chinese and Korean children were told, which proves that children are very much the same the world over.

The Annual Sermon.

Rev. J. L. Neill preached the annual sermon. His subject was: "Approved Service." The text used was Mark 14:8: "She hath done what she could." A simple, spiritual, and heart-searching message from this motto which was for so many years on the cover of our Woman's Missionary Advocate.

Papers Read.

Instructive and practical papers were read on "Our Duty to the Ne-

Good Grit

Profitable Side Dressing

The use of side dressing is increasing on COTTON and CORN

It pays to do it, if one uses the right goods.

Two applications of 200 pounds each per acre are recommended by a well-known Southern investigator and experimenter. He suggests a 5-5-5 formula, or a mixture of equal parts of Acid Phosphate, Kainit and Nitrate of Soda.

KAINIT

Side dress cotton when the plants are 10 inches high and again when the bloom begins to open. Where cotton is inclined to rust, use Kainit, making two applications of 200 pounds each per acre. This is also effective against root lice and cut worms on corn, if applied early enough. It will pay you to try it, for Potash Pays.

Order Kainit now before the supply is exhausted. We sell Kainit and Potash Salts, any quantity from one 200-lb. bag up.

The Missionary Voice.

Mrs. B. F. Lewis' report showed a substantial increase in subscribers to the Voice. Last year we had one for every four members, and this year her record shows one for every two members. Realizing what an important place it occupies among our auxiliaries, the Voice was given a prominent hearing before the Conference. The presentation of the interests of the Voice was done in a unique manner, a hat frame having been entirely covered with the brown covers of the Voice, making a most stylish and up to date hat; and it was your editor's pleasure to present its many splendid qualities.

Petition on the Palmer Bill.

A petition signed by all the officers and delegates of the Conference was sent to our Senators, Hon. John Sharp Williams and James K. Vardaman, urging them to vote for, as well as use their influence for, the passage of the Palmer Bill or Uniform Child Labor Law.

Fanny Doby.

A touching little incident resulted from the visit of one of our colored sisters, Fanny Doby, who came in search of some of her "white folks." Conference. She was brought forward and introduced to the Conference, and made such a strong, earnest talk in behalf of her race that the Conference gave her the Chautauqua salute, which touched the old woman's heart and made her feel that she was indeed among sisters.

From the Methodist Orphanage.

Miss Godding, Principal of the school at our Methodist Orphanage, brought us a message from Brother and Sister Williams and the two hundred orphans.

Echoes from the Council Meeting.

One of the most interesting services was held Monday night when Mrs. La Prade and Mrs. B. F. Lewis gave us echoes from the Council meeting. So vividly were the echoes portrayed that it was difficult to realize that we were not at the Council meeting itself.

Some Miscellaneous Matters.

It was the pleasure of the Conference to make the acquaintance of Mr. George Clark, a young boy of our First Church of Laurel, who has volunteered for the foreign field and expresses a desire to go to Africa.

Miss Maud Fall, our own deaconess in training at Scarritt, sent a letter of greeting to the Conference, and it in turn instructed the Corresponding Secretary to send her a message of love and greetings. These little happenings added to the pleasure of the Conference.

Mrs. J. L. Neill presented a series of charts in which she stressed very strongly the use of the chart and bulletin in the auxiliary.

Two important recommendations were presented by the Publicity Committee to the effect that we pledge 100 new subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and ask the co-operation of the other two Conferences in securing the same from their constituency. The other recommendation was that we ask the Editor of the New Orleans Advocate for one issue of the paper during the year, that we may present our woman's work more fully to our constituency, and that we ask the co-operation of the other two Conferences patronizing the Advocate in getting up the matter for this issue.

Memorial services were held the last night of the Conference in honor of our departed dead: Mrs. J. D. Kirkland, Dr. Mildred Phillips Leach, and our beloved Miss Mary Helm. Mrs. R. E. Johnson, formerly of Kentucky, paid a loving tribute to Miss Helm. Columbia, Miss., was selected as the next place of the Annual Meeting.

Officers Elected.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Mrs. R. E. Johnson, president; Mrs. T. B. Clifford, first vice president; Miss Roberta Stubbs, second vice president; Mrs. W. D. Davis, third vice president; Mrs. T. B. Holloway, fourth vice president; Mrs. B. F. Lewis, corresponding secretary for the Home Department; Mrs. W. H. La Prade, corresponding secretary for the Foreign Department; Mrs. H. L. McCleskey, recording secretary; Mrs. J. K. Dunn, treasurer of the Home Department; Mrs. Z. W. Kendall, treasurer of the Foreign Department; Mrs. J. L. Neill, superintendent of the publicity department; Mrs. K. T. Moore, superintendent of supplies; Mrs. R. F. Harrell, editor.

EVANGELISM AND THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

By Evangelist Arch. C. Holder, Ph.D., Shreveport, La.

Our Bishops and the General Conference pitch the tune for our Church, and if soul-saving is the keynote, salvation will be the song. If "He that winneth souls is wise" the Church that makes soul-winning the principal thing, is wise. Methodism, born in a revival, has made soul-saving the chief thing and "verily we have our reward." If we ever make education, or church building or finance the chief thing, verily we will have our reward.

Since perhaps a wiser and better body of men has not assembled in our country for years, than the select men who will meet at Oklahoma City in May, shall we not expect that their chief consideration will be how the churches may be revived and the lost sheep brought back to the fold? If the Great Shepherd leaves the ninety and nine for the one which is lost, should we be more concerned for the ones within the fold, than the ninety and nine that are lost? The devil has no right to a single one of these precious souls—our Lord died for every one of them, and the effect of the Church placing the stress upon the worth of immortal souls, and the earnestness of the members in trying to save them, would cause these eternity-bound ones to yield, and prepare to meet their God.

And there is enough raw material now in the hands of the devil to make our Church twice as strong in men and money. "The fields are white unto the harvest," if we will gather the grain for our mills. The mines are full of rich ore, if we will work them for our factories and mills. The valley is full of "dry bones," if we will "prophesy as we are commanded," till there is a revival and they "stand up an exceeding great army," to recruit our forces for God.

And nothing will help our Churches and people like a deep and thorough revival that makes every member a soul-winner, for the member and Church are only safe as they are saving the lost. "If the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and to be trodden under foot of men."

Such a revival would double our membership and make our Church ten times as strong in liberality and spirituality, give us men and money for our mission fields, and help solve all our other problems.

Brethren, I do not underestimate the importance of raising money, building churches and pastoral visiting, etc. I was a pastor for twelve years—from a country circuit to a city charge. I simply plead that we make things of first importance first.

These are "perilous times" when many are "lovers of their own selves," "covetous," "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." This age of animalism, insane with pleasure and money-mad, with its sensuality and infidelity, breeds a disregard for virtue, the Church, religion and God, and makes it difficult to have great revivals. Sam Jones said before he died that it was twice as hard to have a revival as when he began, and George

Stuart says it is twice as hard now as when he began. However, there is no cause for discouragement. Other nations are harder now than ever to conquer, but we are better prepared to conquer them. This is a day of opportunity for great victories if we go against the enemy with forces sufficient to conquer. We must be equal to our time. This commercial and electric age is a time of big things, and it is difficult to do great things on a small scale. With a great God it is easier to do great things than small ones. Let us "Expect great things of God and undertake great things for God."

Our campaigns should be far more powerful, aggressive and lasting. We are satisfied with a meeting instead of a revival, and stop before we get started. It takes time: "In due season we shall reap if we faint not." Theaters and shows run all the year. In the north revivals continue a month or six weeks. We close our meetings before Billy Sunday makes a call. We should plan great and thorough city, district and conference campaigns. The revival spirit is contagious and when once aroused should be kept up, till it reaches all the country.

All our Bishops, presiding elders and pastors should hold revivals as they did in early Methodism, and give prestige to the cause. I believe if God ever called a man to preach that He called him to win souls, and any preacher can be a soul-winner. I know that there is an idea with some shallow souls that preaching that revives and saves souls is not deep, or intellectual. A well is not deep because it is dry, and water is not deep because it is muddy. The deepest and the most intellectual preaching in the world is that which saves souls. Does it prove that the law practice is not deep and intellectual because it wins a case? Does it prove that the treatment is not intellectual because it cured the sick? One can be spiritual and intellectual too. Does a deep well make the water shallow? A deep soul does not make the mind shallow.

All our schools and colleges should be hot beds of spiritual and revival power. If spiritual and revival power had been as prevalent as higher skepticism—politely called higher criticism—we would never have lost Vanderbilt University. I think that it was a godsend that we lost it. I have believed for years that Vanderbilt University has done our Church more harm than it has good.

Then there should be many district evangelists and conference evangelists and general evangelists. This is an age of specialists. There has never been any reason to clip the evangelist's wings. The pastors and churches need the true evangelist and his work is a failure without the pastor to conserve its results. They "are laborers together with God." All the Churches see the need of true evangelism as never before. A pastor of another Church in our city began with nothing a few years ago and by having evangelists and great revivals each year, has about caught our great First Church, which for years did not have revivals. He recently brought a strong company of seven evangelists from Chicago and ran six weeks. When he started, I said to him, "That looks like a great deal of expense for one church." He replied, "Yes, but it pays. All the converts will not hold out, but many of them will." He took 400 members into his church in that meeting and raised $21,000 for his new building.

We need a Chair of Evangelism at our new University at Dallas and let singers and evangelists learn all the best methods and get our strongest men and combine all our strength and marshal all our forces against the devil.

There is need of a world-wide revival and Methodism born and raised in a revival, and with our great connectional system and doctrines of free salvation and the possibility of apostasy, is best suited to do this work and lead in a revival that will reach the whole world. Other Churches would catch the spirit and fall in line.

There are all kinds of evangelists, but I have no rocks to throw. Almost any is better than none. I bid any one godspeed who hits the devil. Some are converted in such simple acts as joining the church, holding up a hand or signing a card, but far more at the old time altar. A meeting that simply brings more dead souls into the Church is not a revival, but a funeral that helps to turn the Church into a graveyard and bury more dead under its sad and silent sod. "Let the dead bury their dead."

The Word should be preached in its purity and might and reach and revive the church, first, and leave a strong mother to nurse the new-born souls and thus do a deep and solemn work that will abide throughout time and eternity. A real revival helps all the activities of the church. It should help launch the new enterprises and organize and train the people to work and to support the church, pastor, missions, etc. It should establish family altars and teach the people to pray and read the Bible and attend Church. It should inspire the people to consecrate themselves and to hear and yield to the call to mission fields and to preach the gospel. And above all, it should exalt the pastor and turn all the results into his hands, that he may conserve them.

Our district and conference evangelists have failed in many places: First, because some of the men appointed were not suitable—you cannot make evangelists by appointment. And, second, some could not raise their salaries at the weak points that they were expected to serve. This could be remedied by letting them raise all the missionary money that they can and having the pastors raise the best offering that they can, and then turn both over to the Board for salaries. Some people will pay to one that will not pay to the other. There need be no fear of the people paying too much for this cause. If they do not pay it for the gospel to elevate, they will spend it for theaters, moving picture shows, etc., to contaminate. The Baptist have our system in their Board, and are beating us working it at this point.

Our general evangelists should all be members of an Annual Conference, just as editors, professors, etc. If a field editor, who travels over a half dozen conferences and canvasses for subscribers to build up a church paper can be a member of the Annual Conference, why cannot an evangelist who travels over the same territory and canvasses for souls to build up the Church and Conference be a member of the Conference? If a professor can teach for the whole connection, and hold membership in a Conference, why cannot an evangelist preach wherever called by the pastor and hold membership in a Conference? This is better for the Church and also for the true evangelist. It would make the evangelist amenable to the Conference and add prestige to his cause. As in other Churches it should be made so that our pastors can go into this field and give some of their best years to this most arduous and trying work and return to the pastorate without great sacrifice. This would give us more strong and able men for the field and we would be more apt to discover and develop a Finney, a Moody, a Jones, or a Sunday.

The General Conference.

Editorial Correspondence.

First Day.

The seventeenth session of the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, met in St. Luke's Church in Oklahoma City, Okla., on Wednesday, May 6, 1914, at 9 o'clock a. m., with Bishop A. W. Wilson in the chair. After calling the Conference to order, the Bishop spoke briefly as follows:

"Brethren, the Conference will be opened with the stroke of a gavel reminiscent of those who have gone before us. The daughter of Bishop Paine of Georgia has sent for the opening service a gavel made of a cedar tree that shadowed the window of Bishop Paine's study, and requests that it be used in opening the General Conference. We are glad to be reminded of those who have gone before us. We have a goodly heritage from them. Recollections of their services and sacrifices ought to stimulate us, and, at the same time, ought to make us cautious, deliberate, wise, lest we spoil the work of their hands. I pray that the blessing of God may rest upon all our deliberations and that we may have grace, wisdom, and power from on high."

Bishop Waterhouse announced as the opening hymn, number 560, "And Are We Yet Alive and See Each Other's Face?" Bishop Murrah led in a fervent prayer, after which Bishop Denny read the 103d Psalm and Bishop Kilgo read the tenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. Luke. Bishop McCoy announced hymn No. 24, after which Dr. J. H. McLean, of the North Texas Conference, led in prayer.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, the Secretary, then called the roll of delegates, beginning with the Bishops. Following this he was unanimously re-elected Secretary, and nominated the following assistants: F. S. Parker, J. A. Burrow, J. R. Countiss, A. J. Meaders, T. F. Sessions, J. S. Chadwick, J. H. Eakes, and M. T. Hald.

Upon motion the Conference adopted a resolution to the effect that all delegates addressing the Conference must stand immediately in front of the platform and face the Conference. Dr. J. H. McLean moved that for the time being the rules of order of the last General Conference be adopted and the motion prevailed. Dr. McLean further moved that a Committee on Rules consisting of five members be appointed and it was so ordered, after which he presented to this committee a proposed revision of the rules of order of the last General Conference.

Dr. J. O. Willson, of South Carolina, submitted a paper providing for fourteen standing committees, made up of one member from each Annual Conference. Dr. J. M. Moore offered a substitute, providing for twelve standing committees, with one preacher and one layman from every Annual Conference on each of them. This led to a somewhat extended debate and the substitute, after being amended at one or two points, finally prevailed. The Bishops' Address, which was universally conceded to be one of the most comprehensive and masterful deliverances ever presented by the Episcopal College to a General Conference, was then read by Bishop W. A. Candler, the reading consuming between one and two hours. A motion was made and carried that the Secretaries of the Conference should distribute the various parts of this address to the proper committees, except that part relating to Vanderbilt University, which should be referred to a special committee of fifteen members, to be appointed by the College of Bishops.

The Chair announced the following committee on rules: J. H. McLean, J. O. Willson, F. M. Thomas, O. K. Holladay, and H. J. Fullbright. After the announcements the Conference adjourned with the benediction by Bishop Wilson.

Second Day, May 7, 1914.

The Conference was called to order by Bishop A. W. Wilson promptly at 9 o'clock. The devotional exercises were conducted by Dr. W. D. Bradfield, of Texas. The Secretary called the roll, and the minutes of the previous session were read and approved. The Chair announced the following committees which had been ordered by the Conference:

On Fraternal Correspondence—H. C. Stuart, S. R. Hay, W. J. Young, and Isa G. Candler.

On Matters Pertaining to Vanderbilt University—A. J. Lamar, T. S. Garrison, P. T. Durham, N. E. Harris, R. A. Meek, D. H. Linebaugh, H. M. DuBose, H. N. Snyder, J. W. Perry, T. D. Samford, E. V. Regester, Judge Bond, W. A. Christian, J. M. McCormick, and F. M. Thomas.

At this point Bishop Hendrix took the chair, and introduced Rev. Wm. Bradfield, fraternal messenger from the British Wesleyan Church.

Dr. James Cannon raised the question as to whether the present Committee on Appeals, which was appointed four years ago, would continue until the close of this session of the General Conference, or whether its term expired with the assembling of the Conference and a new committee was needed. After some discussion it was decided that the present committee would continue in force until the adjournment of the Conference.

W. P. Whaley, of the Little Rock Conference, then presented to the Conference a gavel in honor of the memory of the Rev. Andrew Hunter, D.D., for sixty years one of the foremost preachers and citizens of Arkansas. This gavel was made by a grandson of Dr. Hunter from a cherry tree that shaded the porch of Dr. Hunter's home. It was received by Bishop Hendrix in a happy manner.

The roll of the Annual Conferences was called for memorials, petitions, and resolutions, and quite a number of them were presented and referred to the various committees.

A letter was read from Rev. M. S. Hughes, D.D., fraternal messenger from the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he asked when it would be the pleasure of the Conference to hear his message. This letter was referred to the Committee on Fraternal Correspondence.

Dr. E. G. B. Mann presented the following resolution which was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas God has greatly blessed and used the branch of his holy Church which we have the honor to represent; and believing in the precious promises of his inspired Word, the merits of his eternal Son, and the power and guidance of the Holy Spirit; and acknowledging our gratitude for his grace and mercy in the past, and desiring to secure special guidance and help in dealing with the problems and questions of more than ordinary importance which are to be considered by this body at its present session, therefore be it

"Resolved, that we solemnly set apart Friday of this week, May 8, to be observed by the members of this General Conference as a day of fasting (or abstinence) and prayer and that it is hereby ordered that at the regular morning session of that day the time from 9 o'clock to 10:30 be given to prayer and to such other devotional exercises as may appear proper to the body.

"It is further agreed that the afternoon of that day may be used for meetings of such committees as may desire to hold sessions, and that the evening services be according to previous or future plan."

Dr. A. J. Lamar presented a resolution touching the appointment of a joint commission in co-operation with the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, which was referred to the Committee on Church Relations.

Various reports and resolutions were received and referred to the proper committees, among them being an extensive report on the constitution of the Church which was submitted by Bishop Denny.

Announcements were then made, and after the singing of a hymn the Conference adjourned with the benediction by Bishop Hendrix.

NO CAUSE TO REGRET ITS EXPENDITURE.

Our esteemed contemporary, the Midland Methodist, which has seemed to us to be somewhat ruffled ever since the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee in the Vanderbilt case was rendered, remarked in a recent issue that the Church has spent $50,000 in the litigation only to learn that she stands now with reference to the University where she did thirty-five years ago. Assuming the figures of the Midland to be correct (we do not know whether they are or not), there is no cause to regret the expenditure of this money. On the contrary, we think it has been well applied. The Treasurer of our General Sunday School Board, we are glad to learn, has yet in hand the $50,000 raised by the Sunday schools of the Church to establish a Chair of Religious Pedagogy in the University. The knowledge that we have gained as to our rights in the institution will no doubt save this fund, which otherwise would have been sunk in the Vanderbilt hole; and it will also, we suppose, result in doing away with the $20,000 annual assessment that we have been carrying for the Theological Department of the University. So the Church has not lost, but has gained financially as a result of this lawsuit. Indeed, the information that it has given her will be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars to her in the coming years.

THE PROMISE FOR THE PEACEMAKERS.

By Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D.

No one of the Beatitudes has a greater promise than that for the peacemakers. "They shall be called the children of God," said the Master. This must be because they are like God. God is a Peacemaker, and we become his children just in the measure in which we are peacemakers.

In one of the prophets, God reveals his desire for the peace of his people by saying: "I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace." Always God desires his children to have peace. He wishes them to be at peace with him, to be reconciled to him, accepting his grace and love, and entering into fellowship with him. He wishes them to have his peace, the very peace of God, in their hearts, amid all the trials and sorrows of life. Christ bequeathed his peace to his friends. "My peace I give unto you." Then he wants them to be at peace among themselves. Strife between brothers is unchristian, undivine. If we are God's children we will share with him all these desires for peace.

In a narrower sense, a peacemaker is one who seeks to cure dissension, to bring together those who are in any way estranged, to remove misunderstandings, and to promote peaceable relations among men. It is a noble mission, one to which every follower of Christ should be heartily devoted. The blessing upon the peacemaker is so great, so exalted, so divine that everyone should be eager to win it.

One way to be a peacemaker is to live a peaceable life oneself. Perhaps there has been too little attention paid to the cultivation of the graces of Christian life. Doctrinal soundness has been insisted upon as a test of Christian life more than sweetness of spirit and beauty of character have been. An irritable temper is too often regarded, not, indeed, as a quality to be admired and commended, but, at the worst, as an excusable infirmity, one that must be charitably tolerated, a weakness so common among good people that no one can reprove his neighbor for it. So many Christian men and women are touchy and easily offended, so easily hurt and so likely to hold a grudge, that it seems necessary to leave a wide margin in defining what religion requires of its followers in the matter of patience and forbearance.

But the teaching of Jesus on this point is very clear. He insists on love, not merely as a fine sentiment, but as a quality of daily life, affecting all its relations and its contact with others. "I say unto you, resist not him that is evil: but whosoever smiteth thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man would go to law with thee, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also." There would seem to be no place left in this teaching for resisting wrong, for resentment, for retaliation. Certainly strife is not commended by our Master.

In the epistles, too, there is many an exhortation to peaceable living. For example, St. Paul counsels Christians, as much as in them lies, to live peaceably with all men. If there must be quarrelling, it should not be the fault of the Christian. He must not begin it. It must not come through his insisting on his rights. He must do all in his power to get along with his neighbor without strife. If others are disposed to be quarrelsome, he must meet the disagreeable spirit with love, overcoming evil with good. "The finest thing about our rights," says George Macdonald, "is that, being our own, we can give them up."

According to the New Testament, whatever is unloving in act, word, or spirit is to be avoided. All malice, bitterness, clamor, and evil-speaking are to be put off, and all meekness, patience, kindness, and thoughtfulness are to be put on. We may do a great deal as a peacemaker by always keeping love in our hearts. In the Bahama Islands wells of sweet water are often seen near the sea. They rise and fall with the tide, and yet they are always fresh and sweet. As the water filters from the sea through the coral it loses its brackish saltiness. A Christian's heart should be such a well, sweetened by the grace of God and yielding only love, instead of nature's resentment and bitterness.

We may be peacemakers also by living so that it will be impossible for anyone to quarrel with us. The influence of such a life in a community works continually toward peaceableness. One contentious person can fill a whole neighborhood with strife. A quarrelsome man stirs up bitterness wherever he goes. But one person who has the forbearing spirit, who meekly endures wrongs himself rather than contend against them, is a maker of peace. Others are influenced by his example.—From "A Heart Garden."

WHAT THE VANDERBILT SUIT MAY MEAN.

Methodists in general have not been pleased with what has been taught in Vanderbilt University of late years. We have known some who went there expecting to go into the ministry and received free tuition but came away and took up a business profession and never mentioned the ministry. We know some of our brightest young preachers who went there sound in the faith and came away with doubts enough to damn any soul had it not been for early training. We have heard of different students who have attended Vanderbilt whose faith has been shattered.

This suit and decision may be a blessing in disguise. If we do move out from Vanderbilt and build another great university it will be founded on the faith of the Bible; and there will be such an opposition to the very things that caused us to lose the university—higher criticism, skepticism, infidelity, etc.—that they will not dare to show their heads under the new arrangement lest they get them cut off. The blessings of God and the old-time power would come upon us as a Church and we would go by leaps and bounds in addition to what we are doing now.

God may be providing for us a better thing. Let us submit to his will and trust his providence. Let us pray for the outcome to be just what the Lord would have it. In the suit brought by the Bishops and the rejection of Carnegie's million, we know we are right. God is on our side, too. Let us rejoice with a clear conscience and push the battle always for the right, and trust results and the future to the God of battles. Let us thank God that the bulk of Southern Methodists are on the right side. Stand firm and the victory will be ours.—Rev. W. A. Swift, in the Central Methodist Advocate.

GEORGE MEREDITH ON PRAYER.

Prayer, to George Meredith, poet and novelist, was both an aid in the discharge of one's duties to his fellowmen and a genuine food for personal needs. For these reasons he pressed on men the habit of prayer. Dr. James Moffat, in the Hibbert Journal, thus speaks of Meredith's emphasis on prayer:

"Prayer is, to Meredith, the genuine expression of a man's belief in the living Spirit of the universe. It is the logical outcome of his ethical idealism, this overflow of the soul, this lift of the heart and conscience, this supreme resignation of the will, which is called prayer. He recognizes and enforces prayer as communion with the divine Spirit in us and over us, as the surge of human thought and feeling which throws itself out upon some higher purpose in the universe, and as the exercise of an intense aspiration for the good which lies beyond the senses and yet within the limits of our power. Prayer is power within us to communicate with the desired beyond our thirsts. Or, in Mrs. Berry's words of homely counsel to Sir Austin Feverel, 'I think it's always the plan in a dilemma to pray God and walk forward.' With Meredith, this habit of simple prayer is one condition of right movement and sane conduct. For prayer as the expression of selfishness or panic he has naturally no place at all. There is nothing so indicative of fevered temper or of bad blood as the tendency to counsel the Almighty how he shall deal with his creatures.' The Lord is in His holy temple, says the Hebrew prophet; He is full of vitality and resource, able to manage all earth's affairs and ready to interpose at the right moment. Therefore let all the earth keep silence, silence from nervous interfering advice, disguising doubt as prayer. The very next verse of the same prophecy opens an oracle which illustrates the conception of prayer in Meredith. For, as the late Professor A. B. Davidson, writing on Habakkuk 3. 1, says: 'The earnest direction of the poet's mind toward God, and its absorption and loss of itself in the thought of Him and His operations is a prayer.' This is admirably brought out in Beauchamp's Career, a novel into which one feels that the author has put perhaps more of his deeper mind than into almost any other. He makes Dr. Shrapnel write: 'In our prayers we dedicate the world to God, not calling Him great for a title, no—showing Him we know Him great in a limitless world, Lord of a truth we tend to, but have not grasped. I say prayer is good. I counsel it to you again and again: in joy, in sickness of heart. We make prayer a part of us, praying for no gifts, no interventions; through the faith in prayer opening the soul to the undiscerned. And take this for the good in prayer, that it makes us repose on the unknown with confidence, makes us flexible to change, makes us ready for revolution—for life, then! He who has the fountain of prayer in him will not complain of hazards. Prayer is the recognition of laws; the soul's exercise and source of strength; its thread of conjunction with them. * * * We that fight the living world must have the universal for succor of the truth in it. Cast forth the soul in prayer, you meet the effluence of the outer truth, you join with the creative elements giving breadth to you, escaping by this discipline of the soul's faith from monotonous habit, pride and fear.'

If courage should falter, 'tis wholesome to kneel. Remember that well, for the secret with some, Who pray for no gift but have cleansing in prayer, And free from impurities towerlike stand.

"This line of thought reminds us that we are dealing with one who is not simply a master of our English, but sensitive to the deeper vibrations of the human spirit."—New York Christian Advocate.

COLUMBUS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The recent session of the Columbus District Conference held at Brooksville, Miss., April 16-19, was conceded to be one of the best in the history of the District. The attendance was better than in former years, eighteen of the twenty preachers in the district being present, as well as a large number of laymen, and from the opening session, Thursday afternoon, to the closing sermon, Sunday evening, interest and enthusiasm ran high.

Rev. W. W. Woollard, our very capable and well-beloved presiding elder, was in the chair at the opening of the Conference and presided at the first session. Bishop W. B. Murrah arrived late Thursday afternoon and presided during the remainder of the Conference. The presiding of our own Bishop was a delight to the hearts of all present, and his words of cheer and counsel during the Conference were helpful indeed.

The opening session was devoted to the Sunday school interests, and the reports of pastors and superintendents showed this department of our Church to be in a most flourishing condition in the Columbus District. Many new schools have been organized, while the others are putting on new life. The presence of Rev. V. C. Curtis, Sunday School Field Secretary, was a feature of the Sunday school session, and his address relative to his work was both forceful and helpful. He is the right man in the right place.

The reports of pastors indicate that the Church is not suffering in our bounds, but that every department is alive and at work. While but few revivals have been held, many additions to the Church were reported, both on profession of faith and by certificate. Salaries were reported ahead of last year, many charges having increased the salary considerably over that of last year. Conference collections are being pushed and many charges have at least one-half, and some much more than this, of their assessments in hand.

The report of the Committee on Evangelism shows plans for a campaign in the District during the summer months that will mean much for God and the Church. Each pastor present seemed to have caught the revival spirit, and a revival in every church is the slogan for the district.

The varied interests of the Church were represented by the following: Rev. W. W. Williams, Orphans' Home. Rev. H. M. Ellis, Methodist Hospital at Memphis; Rev. V. C. Curtis, Sunday School work in our own Conference. It was a distinct disappointment to all not to have had the New Orleans Christian Advocate represented, as it was not to have had our "book man," Brother Bachman, with us. No Conference is complete without Brother Bachman, and we pray that God may restore him to health and that he may be spared to us for many years to come.

The preaching of the Conference was all of the very highest order. The opening sermon was preached by our Macon pastor, Rev. R. O. Brown. Others who preached during the session were Revs. O. P. Armour, W. W. Mitchell, W. W. Woollard, and Bishop Murrah. The address of Bishop Murrah on Friday evening concerning our work in the Orient was a masterpiece in itself, impressing upon us our opportunities and stressing our responsibility to the people in the far-away lands. The Bishop's sermon on Sunday morning from the text, "Whatever he doeth shall prosper," was the greatest ever delivered in our little city. The house was packed, and the sermon was heard to the joy and edification of the large congregation present. The sermon on Sunday evening by the presiding elder, Brother Woollard, was on a high plane, and was a delight to the hearts of all our people.

Mathiston was selected as the place of meeting for the next District Conference.

The following brethren were elected as lay delegates to the Annual Conference: A. H. Peques, A. S. J. Glenn, W. E. Stokes, and S. B. White.

The Conference passed, unanimously, resolutions concerning the Vanderbilt controversy, impressing our love for and appreciation of the work of our Bishops in trying to save the University to the Church, and memorializing the General Conference, in case an appeal is impossible, to sever all connection with Vanderbilt and establish for the Church a theological school best suited to meet the needs of our great Church. Copies of the resolutions were ordered mailed to all our General Conference delegates.

After passing resolutions of thanks for hospitalities extended, to the pastor for courtesies shown, and to Bishop Murrah for his presence with us, the Conference stood adjourned.

THE MISSION TO THE LEPERS IN ITS WORLD-WIDE WORK.

By W. M. Danner.

In the Light of the Christmas Tree.

After the Christmas feast at Chevayur, Calicut, India, the tree shone with lights reflected in the eyes of the fifty-eight lepers, each of whom, be they Hindu or Mohammedan, recited a Bible verse; then all sang heartily, if not harmoniously. Ten lepers, seven men and three women, were then baptized in the light of the tree. The highest English officials of the Malabar district attended.

South African States.

An influentially signed petition to the Union Parliament in February states that the spread of leprosy is causing serious alarm, and prays for improved conditions. The work there is most opportune and should be extended. Missionary co-operation is helping governments solve their leper problem. Twenty-five asylums in India are subsidized in greater or less degree from public funds, and missionary efforts are welcomed in other government asylums.

Hangchow, China.

Dr. Kemper reports of thirty-one leper men; twenty-four are Christians, and seven are inquirers. One event was the visit of Mr. and Mrs. Bailey and the conference regarding a new site and new asylum.

Happy Year at Kwangju, Korea.

"From the spiritual viewpoint our year has been satisfactory because of many conversions. All except eight have learned to read, have memorized six chapters from the Bible; and thirty-six passed the examination for entering the catechumen class." Thus writes Dr. Wilson, who is en route home on furlough.

Eleven Lepers Supported by Canadian Bible Class.

This honor belongs to Brantford, Ontario, Colborne Street Methodist Church. The first interest shown was a collection which would keep one leper. The next year it kept two, and increased one leper a year, until now eleven are supported by the class, and three more are cared for by a former member, in memory of his wife. No pressure is needed, for every dollar is given with great joy.

New Church Needed for Hainan.

Missionaries of the American Presbyterian Board have a vigorous work in Hoihow. A pathetic phase is that in the leper colony. A little hut barely ten feet square is the only meeting place for these leper Christians. An adequate chapel with open sides to admit God's healing and free air is a sore need, and a few hundred dollars would build it.

First Protestant Service in Louisiana Leper Home.

This was held January 21 by Dr. Theo. F. Hahn, delegate of the Protestant Ministers' Association of New Orleans, at the request of the Mission to Lepers which will co-operate in maintaining a monthly service and furnishing Bibles for those hungry hearts. Literature was provided the nineteen Protestant patients. They fairly leaped forward with soul hunger to receive the Gospel message, which was touching in the extreme. Dr. Hahn's father was founder of the Lohardaga and superintendent of the Purulia Leper Asylum, one of the largest in India.

Naini Superintendent Coming Home.

His many friends will be glad to hear that Sam Higginbottom, of Allahabad, is to have a brief visit to America in the interest of his college, and incidentally will speak when possible in behalf of the Mission to Lepers. Correspondence addressed to 105 Raymond Street, Cambridge, Mass., will reach him on his arrival.

Converts at Chandkuri.

Superintendent Koenig baptized thirty-one lepers just before Christmas, and a class of forty more are preparing for baptism. A large number will try for the International Sabbath School examinations. Four boys from the Untainted Home have received government positions. Great concern is caused by the famine and high price of food.

Congregational Asylum Advances.

Dr. Harriet Parker and Rev. C. S. Vaughan write from Madura that the wards are more than full. Thatch huts are being put up until funds can be received to construct two new wards, a line of needed cook rooms, and a 300-foot wall around the women's wards.

Joy at Tarn Taran, Punjab.

The whole asylum, covering five acres, was decorated for Christmas, and the girls of the home entertained with action songs before the feast. Think of gardens, bordered paths, flowers and vegetables, and the trowel tied to the stump of the gardener's arm!

Ramachandrapuram.

Miss Hatch is home again with her grateful lepers. The most wonderful worker is a man without any fingers—only stumps—who sews, not only for himself, but for others.

New Asylum at Mungell.

This inadequate asylum in the Central Provinces, India, must be replaced by a better, larger institution. There is urgent need for the following: Two wards, $1000 each; chapel, $400; caretaker's house, $375; walls around wards, $250; well, $150.

Taiku, Korea.

A speedy and gracious answer to prayer came to Mr. and Mrs. Bailey for this work. With Dr. Fletcher and Mr. McFarlane, they knelt in Korea and definitely asked God to lead some one to give $5000 needed to begin leper work here. Within a week a check for the amount, unrestricted, was sent to the London office from a donor in Surrey, hitherto unknown to the Mission officers, and assigned to build Taiku Asylum.

Poor creatures who had dug a hole in the ground and covered it with brushwood and straw for a sleeping shelter and who wrapped old sacks about their shivering bodies, are to receive temporary food, clothing, shelter, and Christian teaching, until the new asylum buildings can be erected and furnished.

"Hu, the Leper."

The story of this remarkable leper, who at baptism took the name of "Convert Hu," is well written in a booklet by Dr. Fowler of Siao Kan, Central China. Grateful thanks are sent by the lepers for the warm socks, gaiters, hats, and pocket money sent by friends on Christmas day.

Mary Reed's Report.

This Ohio girl, who, when she found she was a leper, went to live among the lepers in Chandag Heights, India, is deeply grateful for her condition. She writes: "The Lord seems to have given me a new lease of life. Rice and flour have become very expensive, owing to lack of rain for months, and the farmers would sell scarcely enough to supply food for my patients. Recently we had a rain, and I have had 400 rupees worth of rice and flour filled into the store-room, but the rates are high."

Miraj Examinations.

Mrs. Richardson writes: "The lepers did better than any contestants in the All-India Sabbath School Scripture Examination. Ganesh, the Brahmin, and one Christian, passed with 95 per cent marks. None in Miraj, but these are eligible for Bibles from the Scottish Tract Society."

Thanks for a Prayer Room.

The Raipur lepers welcome the Prayer Hall built with $315 from a kind lady donor. Often meetings had to be given up in the rainy season, and now they can pray every day with a roof over their heads, and they are grateful.

New Title of the Mission.

Originally, in 1874, the work was begun for "Lepers in India." Eighteen years later it was enlarged to "The Mission to Lepers in India and the East." On this fortieth anniversary it is appropriate that while the work is extended to every land the name is abbreviated to simply "The Mission to Lepers." Thus the merit of brevity and advantage of universality is expressed. Truly, "the field is the world," and now the title is co-extensive with the field.

Church News

San Francisco offers an inviting field for Church work. We read where there are less than 2,000 Christian men in that city which has a population of over 400,000.

At the close of this fiscal year, terminating with the meeting of the Board of Missions in Nashville in April, the income from all sources to the Board was $1,299,613.57.

"Billy" Sunday is reported to have held a meeting recently at the University of Pennsylvania with remarkable results among the student body. The provost of the University said that the enthusiasm evidenced among the students was a revelation.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate, the Church organ of the North and South Georgia Conferences, is about to top any past record relative to the number of subscribers. Needless to say, the Wesleyan is one of the most influential publications of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Trinity College, Durham, N. C., is undertaking the commendable plan of extension work along Sunday school lines for the benefit of Sunday schools in the community and in the State of North Carolina at large. The work is being directed by Dr. Edgar W. Knight, of the department of Christian Education in Trinity College.

According to some figures by Dr. J. L. Weber, of Memphis, Tenn., given in an article recently appearing in the New York Christian Advocate, the Southern Methodist Church has gained in the last quadrennium 168,499 members and 245,589 Sunday school scholars; it has advanced to the sum of $907,714 for ministerial support, and $210,790 for missions and Church extension; it has gained 767 houses of worship, and has an increase of $15,473,751 in the value of parsonages and houses of worship.

The annual meeting of the Board of Missions of our Church took place at Nashville on April 20, and the telegraphic reports evidence a lively meeting. Secretary Pinson endeavored to get a memorial passed abolishing the Missionary Voice and the two editorial secretaries. The memorial was voted down, but a compromise was affected to abolish one of the editorial secretaries. This seems to be a wise step. Expenses should be cut down so as to make the Voice self-sustaining, if possible.

A YOUNG MAN'S EYES OPENED.

By Byron H. Stauffer.

King Ben-hadad of Syria employed a whole army to catch one poor preacher. The prophet who had been tapping the Syrian king's mind and repeating his plans to the King of Israel had been located in the little mountain hamlet of Dothan, and thither went a great host by night and compassed the city about. Next morning when the servant, Gehazi, went out for a sunrise walk, he beheld what Montcalm's sentries saw on the Plains of Abraham; the unexpected enemy held every strategic position; all about him were armed men to catch his master. "Alas," he cried, "what shall we do?"

And the answer came with promptness and compelling force: "Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." Bounding down through the ages that exhortation reaches us to-day to cheer us in our lonely moments. When it seems to us that we are battling, alone, against fearful odds, there comes the words of Joshua: "For the Lord your God, it is he that fighteth for you."

"And Elijah prayed, Lord, I pray thee open his eyes that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

The young fellow had thought that he could see. Did he not discover the enemy? Aye, some people see only the foe, the obstacles, the danger. And others see only the material, the utilitarian, as M. P. Willis indicates in his amusing rhyme:

"A parson and a tailor went their way
To view Niagara Falls one summer day.
The parson cried while wrapped in wonder,
And listened to the cataract's thunder,
'Lord, how thy works amaze one's eyes,
And fill our hearts with glad surprise.'
The tailor only made this note,
'Oh, what a place to sponge a coat.'"

Real eyesight gives us the right proportion of things, the appropriate relation between past and present, present and future, this life and eternity. My friend and I were walking through a new street, and were commenting on the new style of residences. Pointing to one, I remarked that I did not care for the perfectly square house. That one ahead of us was too exact a cube to be home-like. He protested that it was not a cube at all, but of much greater height than width. We soon discovered that his eyes and mine did not report alike at all. Circles to me were ellipses to him. An oculist shortly afterwards told him that he had a case of astigmatism, and a pair of spectacles were needed to adjust matters. Some folks have a mental astigmatism. They do not see things in their right proportions. Old age and death are lost in the perspective. Or they appear so far away that they seem to belong to altogether another career. O young man, may your eyes be opened to the fact that life is short. And may you see that a career is a unity, that yesterday and to-morrow are inseparably joined, that the friendships, the enmities, the habits of youth, reach into maturity.

You are making your old age now. You cannot very well rebuild your career in middle age. Now is the time to construct your house.

When my kinsman built his house ten years ago he was urged to have it wired for the electric light. But he imagined that he could never afford that luxury. Meanwhile, however, his ambition and his salary grew apace, and he decided last summer that he must have his house lighted by electricity. So, I found him tearing up his floors, having holes bored into his walls and his wall paper damaged, all to put in the wiring that could have been laid at one-tenth the cost when the house was built. Moral: Make provision now for an ambitious, righteous and truly helpful life.

I pray that the young man may have eyes to see that the way of the transgressor is hard. I hope that he may only see this awful fact and never experience it for himself. To the righteous man the Psalmist says: "Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked." I can never be grateful enough to an older brother who, upon my arrival in a big city, told me plainly of the horrors that waited at the other end of the road of sin. Beyond the dazzling glamor of vice is the awful penalty. Oh, that youth may know that the drunkard shall come to poverty; that nights of wicked revelry must be paid for by nights of suffering; that the sure end of every sin is death.

But there is a pleasanter truth which the young man with opened eyes may see: that God is in league with good people. When I saw Rubens' "Assumption," the thought occurred to me that cherubs and angels are always placed about good people, even in pictures. Nobody would ever think of putting Judas or Herod in the midst of seraphs. Angels or horses of fire never surround a bad man. God is in league with the good. God is with the Ten Commandments. God is with virtue. The greatest proof to me that God lives is the reward of virtue and the sure punishment of sin.

Again, youth should have open eyes for the good in the world. We hear more of the bad than of the good because the bad is exceptional. A preacher comes to Toronto from Pennsylvania with another man's wife, and the guilty couple's pictures are in every paper, and with flaring headlines the newspapers of five hundred miles around record their arrest. But ten thousand other preachers come to Toronto, each with his own wife. Their pictures never appear in the papers, and the news is never wired back to their town that the Rev. John Smith has been discovered staying with his wife at the King Edward Hotel. Somebody says that when we were young we were surprised that the world is so bad; when we are older we are surprised that the world is so good. There is more good than bad in the world. Virtue is stronger than evil. Wickedness commits suicide; it gives itself too much rope and hangs itself. Look out for the good, my friend. Expect to see it everywhere. Do not be surprised to see the good Samaritan on any street binding up wounds. Claim good men for your allies. Join hands with noble minds. Turn in and march in the earthly ranks of the army of the skies.

Finally, may God grant that the young man may have opened eyes to see the final triumph of right! Do not be pessimistic about your age. David was not. Hear him say: "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Yet he passed away, and lo, he was not. Yea, I sought him and he could not be found. * * * Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." Unseen forces are warring against unrighteousness. Behind every church and every schoolhouse and every reform agency is a regiment of the horses and chariots of fire. Behind yon dark cloud are the battlements of heaven.

"Lo, to faith's illumined sight
All the mountain flames with light.
Hell is nigh, but God is nigher,
Circling us with hosts of fire."

It needs the touch of Jesus' fingers to anoint our natural eyes and make them to see.

The natural eye sees only a poor youth with rock for pillows, out in the desert amid the beasts; but Jacob sees by the eye of faith a ladder with angels ascending and descending between him and the great white throne.

The natural eye sees only a poor Hebrew captive among scores of fierce lions ready to tear him limb from limb, but Daniel sees an angel walking there closing the lions' mouths.

The natural eye sees three helpless men cast into a fiery furnace, but Nebuchadnezzar with spiritualized vision says, "I see four men walking, and the form of the fourth is like unto the Son of God."

The natural eye beholds two lonely women going at break of day to embalm a prophet, and they say in their helplessness, "Who shall roll us away the stone?" But the eye of faith sees a mighty angel coming down to roll away the stone from the tomb of the immortal Son of God.

The natural eye sees men raging like demons and stoning a man of convictions; but the dying St. Stephen cries: "Behold, I see the heavens open and the Son of God standing at the right hand of the throne."

The natural eye sees Peter the preacher bound with two chains lying between two soldiers behind locked doors, but the eye of faith sees the strong angel of the Lord coming to break the chains, sees a door opening, a gate ajar, a street and liberty.

The natural eyes of the men on the road to Damascus see a flash, hear a voice, but behold no man. But Saul gazes upon the cross, sees the suffering Jesus upon it crying: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?"

The natural eye sees a St. John on lonely Patmos, banished and dying. But the loving disciple looks through an open door into heaven and gives the readers of all the ages a glimpse of the eternal.

The natural eye sees a body with the last breath gone from it, a coffin, a shroud, an undertaker, a grave. But the anointed eye sees a ransomed soul, victoriously sweeping through the gates, washed in the blood of the Lamb.

The natural eye reads history as the accidental clash of arms, the strife of men through the ages. But the eye of faith sees a plan of the Divine, a destiny of the race, sees God within the shadows keeping watch above his own.

The natural eye sees a poor little planet, called by its inhabitants The Earth, a planet in a mist, going on aimlessly and without purpose, sinful and hopeless. But the anointed eye sees a Christ taking the earth in his strong arms and carrying it back to the Great Father to join with ten thousand other stars:

"Forever singing as they shine,
'The hand that made us is divine.'"

Orange paint is now suggested for street cars. It has been found by the Montreal street railroad lines that that color can be seen farthest and has been adopted by that company as the color for its cars as a means of enabling patrons and also drivers of other vehicles on the streets to see the street cars as far away as possible.

President Wilson has named five men who, with Secretary of the Treasury W. G. McAdoo and Comptroller of the Currency John Skelton Williams, will compose the Federal Reserve Board. They are: Richard Olney, of Boston; Paul Moritz Warburg, of New York; Harry A. Wheeler, of Chicago, and W. P. G. Harding, of Birmingham.

The Lowell Sun says: "The personal representative of Queen Eleanor of Bulgaria who is here making preparations for the unofficial visit of his royal mistress declared a few days ago that one of the Queen's principal aims in coming to America is to study American hospitals and the methods used here in the training of nurses. "During the recent war in the Balkans," said Mr. Caspar, "it was American nurses who did the most to relieve the sufferings of the wounded and sick Bulgarians. Nurses of other nationalities were not nearly so competent." This is gratifying praise for the splendid women who are doing this noble work.

The Woman's National Weekly says that when the General Federation of Women's Clubs meets in Chicago in June it will be confronted with resolutions condemning the prevailing styles. Notice has been sent out from headquarters as follows: "It is hardly possible now to buy skirts that do not hinder locomotion. Costumes of the kind that cover everything and conceal nothing are seen on the street, and social workers declare that proper dressing would benefit morals and eliminate many of the evils of the day. The General Federation of Women's Clubs in convention disapproves of the present extreme tendency of American women to follow designs in dress regardless of beauty, comfort or modesty." "The resolution reads: 'This Convention is heartily in favor of simpler and more modest styles suited to American needs.'"

A survey of country schools was recently made in a large Middle Western region with the following result: In all the schools linear measure is taught, yet in only one-fifth of them are tape-lines found; they all teach avoirdupois weight, yet less than a tenth of them have scales; they teach liquid measure, but only a fifth have any measures. In a third of the schools Geography is taught without maps, and in more than two-fifths without globes. All of them seek to give the children a knowledge of the wonderful world in which we live, yet more than two-thirds of the teachers never step outdoors to vitalize a point by the flowers, rocks and streams near at hand. School life should be made as much a part of actual life as possible and the children prepared to fill an active and useful place in life later on. A much better course is followed by Mr. Earl Finney, director of school gardens, who in lecturing on correct tree pruning at St. Paul, Minn., recently, used a large tree on the stage. School children are given special lectures on tree planting and pruning under his direction.

FRANKLIN AVENUE MISSION.

This Mission was started in the early part of November, 1912, under the supervision of Rev. W. E. Thomas. The first service was held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mathew, on Lafayette Avenue, who kindly let us have the use of their large parlor until we could secure a more suitable place. This opening service was very gratifying, as about 20 children and adults were present, and 14 children were enrolled. About the middle of December we rented a half portion of a double cottage on Franklin Avenue, the furniture consisting of 12 little red chairs for the Beginners' use, and cane chairs for the adults, a desk from Second Church, and an organ from Rayne Memorial. In December, 1913, we had an enrollment of 40. This included Catholics, Lutherans, Baptists, and Methodists. Since then most of the Catholic children have left owing to clerical and other influences. This did not discourage us, as others were replacing them; and we felt assured that when they left us they knew more of a loving Christ and much more about Bible characters than they did before, and those stories and sweet spiritual songs they learned will ever cling to them. Their favorite song was, "Jesus, the Light of the World." We now have an enrollment of 52. The smallest attendance we ever had was 6, and the largest 37, while the average all along has been 24.

We have two ladies assisting us, Miss Fannie and Miss Verna Carter, residing at 3456 Constance Street. Miss Fannie has charge of the Primary Department, and is also the organist, while Miss Verna teaches the Juniors. These ladies are both faithful and enthusiastic workers.

The singing is very spirited and will compare favorably with that of any up-to-date Sunday school. Twice was an effort made to have a mid-week service and as many times it was discontinued—why, I do not know. But I do know for a certainty that if this charge had been supplied by the Mission Board with regular services we now would have our own ground and a chapel on it.

Since we started here there has been about a dozen new buildings erected in the vicinity, and more are under way. Many families are moving in and the community is growing rapidly. The outlook is bright and promising; the fields are white, the harvest ripe, but the laborers are few it seems to me. We need at once two more teachers, a new organ, and a regular mid-week service. If the Church and Mission Board do not help us we will have to discontinue our work; and some one else will step in and reap where we have sown. Readers, you are invited to come and see us. Take the Villere car and get off on Johnson Street.

LET US PRAY.

A preacher at the close of one of his sermons, said: "Let all in the house who are paying their debts stand up." Presently every man, woman and child, with one exception, rose to their feet.

The preacher seated them and said: "Now every man not paying his debts stand up." The exception, a care-worn, hungry looking individual, clothed in his last summer's suit, slowly assumed a perpendicular position.

"How is it, my friend," asked the minister, "you are the only man not able to meet your obligations?"

"I run a newspaper," he answered meekly, "and the brethren here who stood up are my subscribers, and—"

"Let us pray," exclaimed the preacher.

We hope having read the above that a number of our subscribers are going to say "Let us pay." —Laymen's Herald.

MANNERS OF BOYS AND GIRLS.

Hearing a young man address a young girl by her first name, I asked, "How long have you known that girl?" "About a week," was the reply. "Did I not hear you call her Maude?" "Yes." "And you have known her only a week?" The young fellow replied, "Why, she calls me Tom."

This familiarity caused me to have some serious thoughts on the manners of young boys and girls. The latter are in great measure responsible for any familiarity a young man may assume.

If a girl meets a boy half way and adopts the slang of the present day, she may be sure he will feel he is permitted to be very familiar. A modest, well-behaved girl will never wish to attract attention, but a forward girl will enter a street car and, by her loud talking, attract the attention of the whole car. If girls only knew how much more they were admired and respected for quiet, lady-like manners, they would certainly cultivate them.

It depends entirely upon the girl to keep a boy at the proper distance; if he does not respect a girl enough to behave in her presence, she can easily make him do so.

Young people ought to have a good time and we do not believe in too much restraint being put upon them, but a good time does not depend upon loud and boisterous behavior in the street car or elsewhere, and such manners in either a boy or girl not only hurt them, but reflect often upon parents who have done their best to raise their children right. It would be well for all young people to think of this, and for their parents' sake cultivate good manners.—Atlanta Constitution.

REVIVAL IN SCOTLAND.

A correspondent from Edinburgh, Scotland, in Zion's Herald, states that it is the unanimous testimony of those in a position to know that the recent religious awakening in Scotland in connection with the Chapman-Alexander meeting has equaled the widespread revival of 1859 in that country, and the wonderful movement of 1873-74, when the whole of Scotland was stirred by the preaching of Mr. Moody and the solo singing of Mr. Sankey. The number is well over 20,000 that have professed conversion in the cities of Edinburgh and Glasgow. The fact is continually evident that God raises up leaders to carry forward Christian work. We need not despair. The hosts of Zion will ever march forward in their crusade against sin and misery. What are we doing as individual soldiers of the ranks?

DR. RICE'S WORK.

Dr. John A. Rice, the pastor of our First Methodist Church at Fort Worth, Texas, has organized a Mothers' Council for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the home. He has also a committee on religious education composed of the pastor, superintendent of the Sunday school, a representative from the board of stewards, the Woman's Missionary Society, the Brotherhood, and the congregation. Dr. Rice has graded his church worship in three simultaneous services. The children from 2½ to 7 years old are trained in self-expression in songs, clay modeling, storytelling, and such. At the same time the children from 7 to 14 years of age attend the Junior Church, which has its board of stewards, board of ushers, a choir, a secretary, and a treasurer. Then, of course, there is the regular church service which is held in the main auditorium at the same time. Dr. Rice has the boys under 12 years organized in the Brotherhood of David, and those over 12 in the Boy Scouts. An organization for the other sex is entitled The Camp-fire Girls. The Wednesday evening service is divided up. The first fifteen minutes is devoted to a strong devotional meeting. The next thirty minutes is devoted to some subject, like "How We Got Our Bible," and then the service breaks up into classes with the Bible, Psychology, Missions and Social Service, Household Bacteriology, and other vital subjects for study. There are still several other features that we would like to mention in connection with this church and its thinking pastor. We hope enough has been said to give suggestions to some who will be interested. Doubtless many will watch the outcome of the work Dr. Rice is doing with interest. He was a pastor in New Orleans for four years, and this makes his movements all the more interesting to the readers of the Advocate.

IN MEMORY OF ELIJAH STEELE DRAKE.

Elijah Steele Drake was born at Magnolia Springs plantation, Jefferson County, Miss., on October 14, 1841. He was the eighth child and fourth son of Rev. B. M. Drake and Susan Magruder, and was given to God by them at his birth. In the old family Bible we find this record written by the father's hand: "Elijah Steele was dedicated to God by baptism in infancy by the Rev. William Winans." Born of such a father as B. M. Drake, whose life was one of self-sacrificing zeal and wonderful power in the religious life of the settlers of Mississippi in those early days, and of so wonderful a mother—both rich in noble character and splendid intelligence—they were richer far in a Christian faith that had fastened itself to the Rock of Ages, which no sorrow nor temptation had power to shake. It is no wonder that the little lad grew up with lofty ideals, a mind so trained and developed as in after years to prove a power in the strenuous life he had to live; with great moral and physical courage, and a faith that never faltered through the life of warfare and battling with evils which often he had to fight almost alone, a faith that shone undimmed through years of physical suffering down to the door of death.

His early education was received at home, and at a grammar school in the neighborhood. In 1858 he entered the Sophomore class at Centen-nary College, Jackson, La., where he proved himself a thorough and untiring student.

When eleven years of age he had joined the Methodist Church at old Spring Hill camp meeting near Fayette, but in 1859, during his second year at college, he experienced a deeper sense of his relation to God, and reconsecrated his life to His service. He dated his conversion from the revival services held at Jackson that year.

His class finished their college course in April 1861, and were awarded their diplomas. War had already begun, and most of the students entered the Southern army, the majority to fall on the battle field in the flower of young manhood. Our student, after returning home and gaining the consent of his widowed mother, enlisted early in May in the Confederate army, joining an artillery company at Fayette known as the Jefferson Artillery, but later, and throughout the war as Darden's Battery, which served in the army of Tennessee.

There is great temptation to dwell on these four years in the army, but thrilling as they were, space forbids the entering into detail of these years so full of life and incident, which strengthened and developed the boy morally and physically, making him into a mature man in far less time than if his life from twenty to twenty-four had been spent under ordinary conditions. It is enough to say that these years bear testimony not only to brave service as a soldier of his country, but to equally faithful service to his God. Of his army record a friend writes: "I remember well Steele Drake, although only in one scene in my life does he seem to appear—at Tullahoma, Tenn. He was in my mess. Then and there I formed an acquaintanceship with him, and the magnificent influence of his pure and unselfish life acted as a beacon light to me; and to all who came in contact with his noble character. For purity of conscience and nobility of conduct we did not have his superior in our battery."

He taught school for two years after the war, studying law in his leisure hours. In 1867 he located in Port Gibson, Miss., and began the practice of law. When he entered on his practice he was ridiculed by a brother in the profession for his refusal to take a social glass, or to drink at the bar with a friend, and was told that he would never establish a practice if he continued to abide by such principles. But undaunted, he stood true to his resolution, and events proved that this very stand opened the way for the magnificent practice which he soon received and held throughout his life.

In 1869 he married Miss Ellen Davis Turpin, one worthy in every sense of the word to walk life's pathway with him, the beloved wife of a noble, chivalrous husband, and one who was to "do him good and not evil all the days of his life." Six children—two sons, J. T. and H. W. M., and four daughters, Ruth, Kate, Nell (now a missionary in China) and Laura (Mrs. M. M. Satterfield), were born of this union; all still live to "rise up and call them blessed." Each one he consecrated to God at birth, and faithfully did his part in bringing them into God's service by observing family prayer, leading them with him to the house of God, and the constant teaching of a pure, consistent life.

The years 1876 and 1877 were spent in the Legislature of his State, in the efforts to assist in her uplift from the low moral condition into which she had sunk. From the very beginning his life in the community stood for civic righteousness and Christian manhood. His mind was fixed to honor his God, his profession and his community. His ability as a lawyer and business man, his pure life and Christian character were soon recognized. In 1867 he was elected superintendent of the Methodist Sunday School and for forty years he held the office, which was faithfully and lovingly filled. He early became a member of the Board of Stewards and was for years treasurer. Ever the faithful friend of the pastor and loyal to every department of the Church, he worked for her interests as for his own. As a member of the Board of Trustees of Port Gibson Female College, he was a power in the community and in the State. A warm personal interest was manifested in the teachers and students, and they were always welcome in his home. As a man among men he stood "as with the strength of ten, because his heart was pure." As a lawyer he ranked first in his profession, honored by his associates at the bar as one who was always thoroughly upright in legal transactions, with a splendid intellect, clear of thought and quick in reasoning, always commanding the admiration of his brothers in the profession who practiced with him through the years.

Honorable and just in his dealings with those who sought his counsel, he was trusted by all classes, and there are many to-day who feel that life was lightened because of his unselfish help in their hours of need.

Perhaps the greatest work of his life was the part he took in the moral and political reforms in county and State. Absolutely fearless, time and again, he rose to lift his voice against political corruption and sin. He would not hold his peace when he saw such dangers threatening his community. When the saloons had reached their greatest power, unable to bear longer the sin and bribery, and dreadful moral conditions they caused, he led the temperance forces of the county in a great prohibition campaign, and by means of local option the saloons were closed. The fight was a terrible one, and in a few years the liquor forces called for another election. Rev. H. M. Ellis, then pastor of the Methodist Church, worked shoulder to shoulder with him in this second campaign, and from his account of it we quote: "Calhoun County, Miss., owes a debt of gratitude to Hon. E. S. Drake which it can never repay. To the persistent and self-sacrificing efforts of this gifted lawyer and noble Christian gentleman, more than to all other human agencies, is due the credit for closing the saloons and stopping the legal traffic in intoxicating liquor. Brother Drake was naturally modest and retiring. To be thrust into prominence and made conspicuous was to him a heavy cross. But his convictions were too deep and his spirit too heroic for it ever to occur to him as possible to shirk a duty or beat a cowardly retreat. In that rally of the forces of temperance, and battle for right, I was brought into intimate association with some of the finest men I ever knew, men worthy of all confidence and esteem, but there was never a question as to who held the commanding place as counselor and director of the forces. That fell by every right to Brother Drake, and right royally he vindicated the wisdom of the choice. The people of the county knew his blameless life and devoted Christian character. They also knew that not only was he not paid for his service, but that he had practically laid aside for the time his own business, and was making great sacrifice and going to large expense to render it. They had to respect his manifest sincerity and honor his evident courage. Though I would not rob any of the noble men who bore themselves so worthily in that struggle, all will agree that to Brother Drake, more than to any other, is due the credit and honor of the victory. Yet when I, with others, went to him with my hearty congratulations, he modestly, almost blushing, replied: 'No, not to me; you all did it. I only did my part.' Looking back through these years of larger observation and experience, I now see that that victory was not the result of those few laborious and trying weeks only. It was the blameless Christian character and splendid personality, known, trusted, and honored throughout the county, which added unspeakable point and force to the earnest appeals he made. It was the appeal plus E. S. Drake himself that won the day."

Much space has been given to this part of his life, for he often spoke of his work against the liquor traffic as the greatest battle and victory of his life.

In 1890 he bought a summer home at Mont-eagle, Tenn., and as an honored member of the Board of Trustees, and for some years legal adviser, he worked faithfully and well, doing all in his power to carry out the original design of the founders—the establishing of a summer resort which should promote education, religion, and a higher standard of pleasure—where God should be honored and this life made more abundant and beautiful.

And so on down through the years, the splendid Christian manhood was used in service to his fellow-men. And as the frail body gave way under the long years of warfare, the earnest spirit clung to the God who had led him all his life long. For seven years he suffered, but in his weakness and pain the response of his heart was ever "God knows best." The battle with disease was bravely fought, the pain borne with seldom a groan. But the time came when the Master saw that the hour for the crowning, and "the rest that remains to the people of God" had come, and a few minutes before midnight, Jan. 4, 1914, the spirit quietly left the frail tenement so long its home, and entered into the presence of the King to go out no more forever.

There is left on earth the record of a pure and unstained life full of good deeds and great influence—a life faithfully lived in all its relationships, as a true citizen and friend; a kind and just master to the servants who worked for years in his household, faithful and true to the family and Church whose welfare came first in his heart. As all that was mortal was carried to the last resting place, through the large congregation gathered to render the last honor to this soldier of the Cross, the realization came that a life which has been lived to the glory of God will be honored not alone by Him, but by the world as well.

"The pains of death are past;
Labor and sorrow cease,
And life's long warfare closed at last—
His soul is found in peace.
Soldier of Christ, well done;
Praise be thy new employ;
And while eternal ages run,
Rest in thy Savior's joy."

UMBRELLAS.

By Melville Chater, in the May St. Nicholas.

Umbrellas, umbrellas, way down in the street,
Bobbing along through the rain on feet;
That's how they look as they pass below—
Umbrellas and feet are the most that show.

Umbrellas, umbrellas, wet pavements and me
A-watching for mother to come home to tea;
How am I to know her or wave through the pane
When every umbrella's the same in the rain?

Policemen, conductors, and pirates, and kings
Are easily known by their trousers and things,
On days like to-day, when the weather's to blame,
Beneath their umbrellas they'd all look the same.

THOSE PUNCTUATION MARKS.

"O dear!" sighed Warren, as he came in from school one day; "I wish we didn't have to learn so much about periods, and commas, and semi-colons, and such things. I hate them!"

Mamma laid down her sewing and said, "Why do you hate them, Warren?"

"Why, it's hard to remember when to use them, and besides I don't think they are of much use. I don't see why we couldn't write sentences without putting in any punctuation marks."

Mamma smiled, and then rising from her chair, she went over to the desk and got out a piece of paper and a pencil. Then she wrote: "The little turkey strutted about the yard and ate corn half an hour after his head was cut off."

"Why, Mummie, how funny!" exclaimed Warren when he had read it. "How could a turkey walk around eating corn without any head?"

"He couldn't," replied mamma, "and yet I have written just what I intended to write. I have, however, left out all punctuation marks."

Then she bent down and punctuated the sentence. It then read: "The little turkey strutted about the yard and ate corn; half an hour after, his head was cut off."

"O, I see," cried Warren, and then and there he resolved to learn all that he could about punctuation marks.—Southern Churchman.

AN ARBOR DAY FAIRY.

By Alice May Douglas.

"Wish I owned a fairy who would do just what I told him to do," said Rob, as he closed the book he had just taken from the children's library.

"What would you have him do?" asked Mary, as she placed in its cradle Dolly Flaxen Hair.

"Oh, take trees on Arbor Day to the people who don't have any—that's what I'm thinking I would do."

"Just think what ti-ti-tuy trees they'd have to be, brother," said May, "because the fairies themselves are such tiny people."

"Little trees are just what are wanted," answered Rob. "The people I'd like to see having the trees have no yards to plant them in. My, wouldn't it be sport to see a whole procession of fairies flying down the street with trees for these people!"

"If I saw them," said May, with a mischievous laugh, "I should try to catch one to play with."

"Why don't you and Rob be 'really truly' fairies yourselves?" suggested mother.

"'Twould be the funniest fun in the world, if we could be," said Rob. Then, after a pause, he asked: "But how can we be fairies?"

"By doing the work of the fairies," answered mother.

"What is that?" asked May.

"Rob has already told us what he thinks their work should be."

"Oh, yes," said Rob, "it's to take little trees on Arbor Day to people who don't have them, and that's what we'll do—hurrah!"

"Just what we'll do—hurrah!" echoed May, and she jumped up and down in her glee.

This is how it happened that upon the day before Arbor Day mother took Rob and May on a trolley ride to the woods after school, and they gathered into a large paste-board box they had taken with them ever so many tiny trees. There were pines and spruce, there were hemlocks and firs, there were maples and elms. Near the woods was a hothouse, and mother stopped there and told the florist to send to her home two dozen little flower-pots, and soil enough to fill them.

The order was delivered before they reached home; so as soon as they stepped off the trolley with their load of trees they began to fill the flower-pots with the earth and to plant the trees in them.

The next day was as nice an Arbor Day as you could find anywhere. Father packed the potted trees into his automobile, then opened the door for Rob and May to step in, and away they sped to carry the trees to those who had none.

They had not gone far before May exclaimed: "Oh, Rob, do see that pennant."

Rob looked at the pennant which had been placed on the auto. It was red with white letters, and this is what was on it:

"ARBOR DAY FAIRIES."

Brother and sister laughed in glee, and wondered whether the fairies themselves had made that beautiful pennant.

Down one street they whizzed, up another, here, there, everywhere, leaving the dainty trees at homes of all kinds—homes of the rich, and homes of the poor.

And, oh, how pleased all were—especially the children with their trees, and as happy as any were Rob and May. As they told mother about their trip they added: "It's the nicest fun in the world to be Arbor Day fairies."—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

A GIRL'S SONG.

At a terrible accident in the coal mines near Scranton, Pa., several men were buried for three days, and all efforts to rescue them proved unsuccessful.

The majority of the miners were German. They were in a state of intense excitement, caused by sympathy for the wives and children of the buried men and despair at their own balked efforts.

A great mob of ignorant men and women assembled at the mouth of the mine on the evening of the third day, in a condition of high nervous tension which fitted them for any mad act. A sullen murmur arose that it was folly to dig further, that the men were dead, and this was followed by cries of rage at the rich mine-owners, who were in no way responsible for the accident.

A hasty word or gesture might have produced an outbreak of fury. Standing near me was a little German girl, perhaps eleven years old. Her pale face and frightened glances from side to side showed that she fully understood the danger of the moment. Suddenly, with a great effort, she began to sing in a hoarse whisper, which could not be heard. Then she gained courage, and her sweet, childish voice rang out in Luther's grand old hymn, familiar to every German from his cradle:

"A mighty fortress is our God."

There was a silence like death. Then one voice joined the girl's and presently another and another, until from the whole great multitude rose the solemn cry:

"With force of arms, we nothing can,

Full soon are we o'erridden,

But for us fights the godly Man

Whom God himself hath bidden;

Ask ye his name?

Christ Jesus is his name."

A great quiet seemed to fall upon their hearts. They resumed their work with fresh zeal, and before morning the joyful cry came up from the pit that the men were found—alive.

Never was a word more in season than that child's hymn.—Youth's Companion.

TO THE EPWORTH LEAGUERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I wish to call your attention to the meeting of the Mississippi Epworth League Conference at Meridian, June 17-21, and urge you to begin now to make arrangements to attend. We wish every League in the Conference to have at least two representatives besides the president of the League and pastor of the Church, and you may send more representatives if you wish; we will be glad to have them and will entertain them free.

The program for this Conference will be under the auspices of the Third Department, the theme of which will be, "Recreation for Culture." We think this will be the most helpful program we have ever had. We have secured Miss Rosalie Edwards to conduct the devotional services before each meeting. This is worth the entire time and cost to any one to attend. We have also secured Mr. J. O. Van Meter, Secretary community Y. M. C. A., to take charge of the recreation period. It is hoped from this effort of Mr. Van Meter to make it possible after the instruction received during the Conference that every young person go back and put on "this recreation work." It means so much to the Epworth League and the Church; this would also repay you for any expense incurred in attending the Conference. Mr. Van Meter will also deliver an address during the Conference on "The Moral Value of Play." There are many other attractive features to be announced later.

We will have with us from the home office Rev. Paul Kern and Miss Trawick who will conduct the team work and parliaments. They are both very fine League workers.

Meridian promises you the best entertainment ever given to any young people's conference. This will be worth your trip to Meridian. Now, so far, we have promised you on your investment at Meridian four hundred per cent dividend. This certainly is a good investment. Using a common expression, "It is up to you to come and see." We would so much like to have two hundred young people at this Conference, and I know of no opportunity that would be worth more to you than to come to this meeting.

May I not especially urge pastors and presiding elders to come? I feel the program we have would be helpful to them and that it would certainly help and encourage our Leaguers. Any assistance you may render or suggestion you wish to make will be gladly received. I sincerely covet your co-operation and help. Cordially yours,

W. D. HAWKINS, President.

"Be thou faithful—that is all;
Go right on, and close beside thee
There shall follow still and find thee,

Editorial

THE EPISCOPAL ADDRESS.

We published in last week's issue of the Advocate the greater portion of the address of the Bishops to the General Conference, which was read to that body on the opening day by Bishop W. A. Candler. It was written by our distinguished Georgia Chief Pastor, and from beginning to end the stamp of his genius was upon it; but it comes as a message from the College of Bishops as a whole, and may be taken to represent the sentiments of at least a majority, if not all, of its members. We have not at our disposal the space to give this great utterance the editorial notice that it justly merits. Since the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, seventy years ago, our Episcopacy has made to our quadrennial law-making assemblies no abler deliverance than this. It was statesmanlike, comprehensive, and masterful, and it ought to be perused and meditated upon by all our preachers and people.

The keynote of this sound and timely message was the Church. She was exalted to her proper place in human affairs and her true mission clearly defined and its importance convincingly shown. It was pointed out that all other helpful institutions and agencies existing in civilized lands are the beneficiaries of her work and influence, and that the whole wide world is her debtor. Particularly luminous was the discussion of the question of the catholicity of the Church. The notion that true fraternity and unity can be secured only by merging all the Christian denominations into one huge ecclesiasticism was controverted and refuted, and the oneness of spirit that brings the noblest type of Christian charity and unselfish co-operation into the task of building up the Kingdom was held up as the great need of the followers of Christ in the different folds. Overlapping activities and the wasting of men and money in unnecessary, and perhaps hurtful, competition, while needy fields remain unoccupied and millions perish for the want of the gospel, were deprecated, and a clarion call was sounded for a better adjustment of the Master's forces that his great commission to disciple the nations may be more speedily executed. The standard of Christian comity set up for our people was a lofty one, and if they measure up to it, they will lead the way to a closer brotherhood among the various religious denominations in the future, as they have done in the past. The high ground taken by our Bishops in this respect is worthy of unstinted praise, and should be a rebuke to all narrowness and sectarianism. It is a splendid challenge to the other Methodist bodies in the United States, and if they do not respond to it, they ought to cease to prate of fraternity and federation.

But no part of the address of our General Superintendents was stronger and more pertinent than that which related to the Church's duty to maintain her place in the field of education. She alone can develop the three-fold nature with which every human being is endowed and instruct and train our youth for the largest usefulness in life. She cannot turn this important work over to any other agency and meet the full measure of her responsibility to her Lord and to humanity; and if she did so the whole fabric of society would be endangered. The impressive deliverance of the Bishops on this subject may well be pondered and taken to heart by our people. A tremendous warfare is being waged against Christian education in this day; it is charged with being narrowing in its tendencies and with fettering the spirit of inquiry and investigation. But the truth is, of all forms of education, that which is Christian is the broadest in its scope and opens to man the widest of all fields for the exercise of his manifold powers. The statement that the attendance upon our institutions of learning has decreased within recent years was certainly a startling one. The fact that the equipment and endowments of our schools have been largely increased cannot compensate for the absence of our young people from their halls and classrooms. Tools to work with count for little unless there is material upon which to exercise them. It is well enough to standardize our institutions, but let us see that in doing so we do not lift them higher than the existing conditions warrant. The Methodist Church must devise and maintain an educational system that will enable her to REACH AND TRAIN her sons and daughters. One that fails to do this, no matter how perfect it may be when viewed from a theoretical standpoint, is lamentably defective. Our mission is not merely to a select few, but to the great masses. As our leaders have indicated, we must be up and doing in this indispensable department of service, if we would conserve our forces and make the progress that we ought to make in the coming years.

As may have been noted, the Bishops gave a somewhat extended review of the Vanderbilt controversy in a dignified but positive manner, and advised against the Church's maintaining any connection with that institution, in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee. They, furthermore, counseled against granting laity rights to women and the election of any new Bishops. Of course, the General Conference may go contrary to their views, but their suggestions are apt to carry great weight. In stressing the point that the thing of supreme concern is the spiritual life of the Church, our Chief Pastors placed the emphasis where it probably belongs. With almost every paragraph of this vigorous and illuminating statement we are in the heartiest accord, and we hope that it has been widely read and given the thoughtful consideration that it deserves. In this day when there is a Babel of voices giving forth uncertain sounds, it certainly ought to hearten and reassure us to see that our leaders still possess clarity of vision, soundness of faith, and unwavering loyalty to the teachings of the Holy Scriptures. Most fortunate are we to have such men to blaze the way for the hosts of Zion and set her banners forward along all the paths of true progress.

SCARCELY IN ORDER.

"Religion has its comedies. One of these made its appearance in a police arrest in this city last week, when two brothers of the ages of 21 and 18 confessed to one hundred burglaries. Burglary was their business, but they would not pawn a religious emblem, like a cross, but threw it away; and they kept the Sabbath day holy and went to a Lutheran church, 'working' the other six days of the week. Thus religion has its pick of the Commandments; it values the Fourth but gives over the Eighth to the Higher Criticism."

Think of this appearing in The New York Independent, the journal that so heartily felicitated the Vanderbilt Trustees upon having successfully repudiated their obligations to the Southern Methodist Church and of having secured Mr. Carnegie's million dollars that was offered while the case was pending in the Tennessee Supreme Court, with $800,000 of it virtually conditioned upon a verdict in their favor! We are not sure that our contemporary, when its high pretensions are considered, has any right to grow facetious over the inconsistencies of the consciences of these two "professionals." But we will not classify the fluctuations of The Independent's conscience among "the comedies of religion," but rather among its deplorable tragedies.

DIVES AND LAZARUS.

Sunday school goes on next Sabbath will study the lesson of the rich man and the beggar. The rich man fared sumptuously, clothed himself in purple and fine linen, lived in elegant style, and allowed the poor to be fed from the crumbs which fell from his table. Lazarus was the beggar who ate of the crumbs and whose leprous sores, as he was probably helpless to move, were licked by the dogs. Both these men died and their souls went to their respective rewards. Dives had evidently been so engrossed in selfish interests that he had made no preparation for death. The beggar had not had the things of this life to attract him from spiritual necessities and he was prepared. The parable does not teach that just because Dives was rich and Lazarus was poor that the former went to torment and the latter went to heaven. The teaching is apparent, however, that much influence is cast over moral action by the presence or absence of earthly values.

Dives in torment desired Lazarus to touch the tip of his tongue with his finger dipped in water to ease his pain. He was evidently undergoing fearful agony and repented for his evil days after it was too late. He thought a little sympathy from Lazarus would do good; but finding even this was impossible because of the great gulf that was irrevocably fixed between them he requested that Lazarus be sent to warn his relatives of their imminent danger of being forever lost. Dives was told in no uncertain words that it would be useless to send Lazarus since they did not heed the sufficiency of preaching already at hand. What a narrative of warning to men to-day!

Dives was forever lost. We may be certain from this Scripture that there is no universal salvation as is sometimes heretically taught. To plead the love of God and his mercy is useless in the face of continued and awful sin. Just because we are brought into this world and are placed under the dominion of laws operated by God from a natural viewpoint does not entitle us to claim any obligation on the part of the Divine to work out our salvation, whether we do right or wrong. To take the right is the way of salvation, and to do the wrong is to bring about eternal condemnation.

This parable further teaches that whatever soul comes into this world will live forever. Some heretics desire men to believe that only the saved will rise at the sound of the last trumpet, and that the wicked will be annihilated. This is but another cadaverous attempt to pervert the clear and just teaching of the Bible that severe punishment shall befall the sinner. C. A. B.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Professor B. D. Battle, of our Centenary College, Shreveport, La., will study in Germany this summer. He will sail from this country June 3.

From Sardis, Miss., Rev. J. B. Comer sends the Advocate 12 subscriptions. His example is worthy of emulation, and we appreciate his attention to the Advocate's interests.

From Coffeeville, Miss., Rev. W. V. Shearer has just sent in a list of eighteen subscriptions. The Advocate desires that Brother Shearer know it thanks him for looking after its welfare.

Our Sunday school at Durant, Miss., observed Children's Day with much success on May 3, according to a kind note which the Advocate received from Rev. E. Nash Broyles, who is the pastor.

The Advocate is indebted to the following brethren for new and renewal subscriptions not acknowledged elsewhere: Rev. A. H. Parker, Colfax, La., 10; E. H. Curtis, French Camp, Miss., 5; Rev. W. J. Wood, Sweetman, Miss., 5.

In the absence of Dr. Meek, we insert the following from a letter to the Advocate by Rev. W. D. McCullough: "I think there is no better paper for Christian people, and certainly there is none better for a Methodist. Dr. Meek's editorials are sound, rich, and well written."

In a personal letter to the Editor from Camden,

Miss., Rev. C. H. Ellis says he is visiting at that place on account of illness, and adds that his people on the Moscow charge are expecting a prosperous year there. May their expectations be more than realized is our earnest desire for them.

Rev. G. W. Gordon, of Sherman, Miss., is evidently wide awake in his ministerial duties. His charge is in good condition, and he is preparing to observe with a special program Children's Day at four places on his work.

Rev. T. W. Adams, presiding elder of the Port Gibson (Miss.) district, states: "The Port Gibson District Conference will open with a sermon by Rev. J. E. Williams at 7:45 p. m., Monday, June 15, at Port Gibson, Miss."

We acknowledge the receipt of subscriptions from the following friends, and thank them for their diligence in our behalf: Rev. R. V. Fulton, Greenburg, La., 3; Rev. J. W. Price, Benton, Miss., 9; Rev. H. A. Gatlin, Fifth Street Church of Meridian, Miss., 5.

Rev. J. S. Purcell, one of the rising young ministers of the Mississippi Conference, has recently been elected to the presidency of our Training School at Montrose, Miss., to take the place of Rev. T. J. O'Neill, who resigned to become the president of the Port Gibson Female College.

Rev. John F. Foster, our successful pastor at Amite, La., is conducting a series of meetings for Rev. R. V. Fulton, at Greensburg, La. The meeting is reported to be under good headway and the people are interested. We hope that great good will result from these special services.

Since the closing of the session of the Port Gibson Female College, Rev. C. M. Chapman, the late president, has gone to Oklahoma City to attend the General Conference; his address in the future will be Rolling Fork, Miss. Rev. T. J. O'Neill, the new president, will take charge of the College immediately.

Rev. John A. Randolph, Chaplain of the 6th Infantry in the United States army, in a note asking that the address of his Advocate be changed to El Paso, Texas, desires us to state: "Any books or magazines sent to me at El Paso, Texas, will be distributed where they will add greatly to the contentment of the men encamped along the border."

Rev. Robert Randle, our faithful and true pastor at Eros, La., has recently held a meeting at that point with fine results. Rev. David A. Morris did the preaching. Brother Randle reports that the preaching was practical, straight, spiritual, not loaded down with anecdotes, and effective. Twenty-six were added to the Church during the protracted services.

Rev. C. C. Wier, the wide-awake pastor of our Church at Morgan City, La., we learn from the Morgan City Outlook, has arranged for a transfer to bring small children to the Sunday school who live at a distance. The first trip of the transfer was made about two weeks ago, and it was completely filled. The attendance at Sunday school was much larger than usual.

Mr. L. L. Upton, of Slaughter, La., in a letter to the Advocate in renewing his subscription, speaks commending words about his pastor, Rev. J. D. Harper: "We are all happy in having with us again that grand old preacher, Brother J. D. Harper. He is fearless and uncompromising with wrong." There is not a more faithful preacher in our constituency than Brother Harper.

The Advocate is indebted to the following friends for subscriptions they have recently sent us: Rev. D. W. Babb, Charleston, Miss., 9; Rev. S. D. Roberts, Oaknolia, La., 5; Rev. J. E. Napper, Hornbeck, La., 4; and Rev. W. D. McCullough, Ruleville, Miss., 6. Our Church paper reaches the homes of the people through the efforts of our preachers. Their labor, we hope, will not go unrewarded.

Rev. W. M. Williams, manager of the Mississippi Orphans' Home, makes a strong appeal in the last issue of "Our Home" to all the Mississippi presiding elders to aid in getting a financial agent for the Home in each district; and that each district contribute at least $100 per month to the Orphanage. The Orphanage paper shows that $1,091.49 was contributed for the Home during the month of April.

Rev. A. H. Parker, in a personal note to the Editor, says: "Have just closed a revival meeting at Montgomery, La., on the Colfax charge. Rev. H. T. Young, of Shreveport, La., did most of the preaching. Brother Young is faithful, sound in doctrine, and a good preacher. As a result of the meeting we had fifteen additions to our Church. Everything is moving along very nicely on the Colfax charge."

Rev. O. G. Halliburton, of Hickory, Miss., sent the Advocate the following news a few days ago: "The parsonage burned at Hickory on the 9th. It caught from a burning building next door. The insurance had expired and it is a clear loss. Everything was taken out of the building before it burned." The Advocate sympathizes with Brother Halliburton and the good people of Hickory in this serious catastrophe.

Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, the gifted and consecrated worker in North Mississippi for our Sunday school interests, has been ill so as to be confined to her room for two weeks, we are very sorry to say, and the doctor assures her that it will be several weeks before she will be able to assume her duties. The Advocate extends to Miss Kilpatrick its sympathies and hopes she will soon fully recover from this temporary physical disability caused by overwork.

Rev. S. A. Brown desires us to announce that the "Girls' Missionary Conference" will be held at Baldwin, Miss., July 4, 5, and 6. Brother Brown wishes that all the pastors in the Corinth district, Pontotoc, and Okolona Stations, Okolona circuit, Houston, Amory, Nettleton, and Tupelo Stations, would each send the names of five girls, between the ages of 15 and 22, to represent their charges at this Conference. We hope the plans for this Conference will materialize successfully.

Rev. James M. Lewis, of the Carriere (Miss.) charge, in a note to the Editor, states: "Rev. W. A. Terry, of Madison, Miss., is with me in a revival at Carriere. We have made a good start and indications point to a great revival." May the earnest hope of Brother Lewis in this respect be fully realized. Rev. and Mrs. H. P. Lewis, the father and mother of Brother J. M. Lewis, have been visiting their son for some time, and on Sunday evening, May 3, Brother H. P. Lewis filled our pulpit at Picayune.

Several of our preachers have been busy helping to increase the circulation of the Advocate. We acknowledge the receipt of subscriptions, for which we offer our sincere thanks, as follows: Rev. John G. Sloane, Dubach, La., 3; Rev. F. L. Applewhite, Lucedale, Miss., 8; Rev. S. S. Holladay, Pleasant Hill, La., 5; Rev. J. M. Brown, Houghton, La., 10; Rev. G. W. Gordon, Sherman, Miss., 2; Rev. W. W. Murray, Shubuta, Miss., 6; Rev. T. L. Porter, Courtland, Miss., 2; Rev. R. C. Kennedy, Ripley, Miss., 6; Rev. D. L. Griffin, Slidell, La., 5.

Rev. N. B. Harmon, our delightful and efficient pastor at Yazoo City, Miss., we note from a recent issue of the Yazoo City Herald, has been made the recipient of a happy and beneficial surprise by his good people. Brother Harmon was asked to call a church conference after prayer meeting service not long ago; and immediately upon its opening Mr. J. B. Ellis arose and read some resolutions to the effect that their pastor be given a vacation for a period of three weeks that he might attend the present session of the General Conference at Oklahoma City.

Rev. T. L. Porter, of the Eureka circuit, North Mississippi Conference, in a business letter to the Advocate, adds some words about the Editor, and in his absence we take the liberty of quoting them: "We commend you, Brother Meek, in your brave fight for a clean religion, and for your stand against worldliness and the hosts of mammon. It is a great privilege to serve God and fight for the right and endeavor to lead men in the way of salvation. The Advocate improves as time goes by. I never let an opportunity pass without presenting its claims to my people."

The Catholic University of America, located at Washington, D. C., is to receive the greater part of a million dollar estate left by a Mr. Basselin, of Croghan, N. Y. The public has also been apprised of the half-million gift the Episcopal Church has received for the erection of a great Church in Washington. As we know, the Southern Methodists have had on foot for years a move to build a representative Church at Washington. May the day hasten when our Church will consummate this move. We should not be backward in taking for our Church this strategic field.

The commencement exercises of the Methodist Training School at Nashville, Tenn., will begin Sunday, May 17, and close Wednesday, May 20. The sermon will be delivered by Dr. Richard Wilkinson, of Louisville, Ky. The consecration service will be held at 4:30 Sunday afternoon in the chapel, and the address will be delivered by Rev. Paul Kern, of Murfreesboro, Tenn. Monday is Senior Day, and Tuesday is Junior Day. The graduating exercises will be held Wednesday morning, May 20, in the school chapel. The address will be delivered by Dr. O. E. Brown, of Nashville.

The Advocate is in receipt of an attractively illustrated and decorated prospectus of the Blue Ridge School for Boys, 1914-15, that is located at Hendersonville, N. C. From the cuts in the booklet the buildings are substantial and comfortable. The school attendance is limited to forty boys, and the intention of the directors is to properly equip this select number to enter higher institutions of learning, carrying them through those intermediate years when proper company and careful oversight is essential. J. R. Sandifer, B. A., is the head master of the institution. Additional information may be found elsewhere about the school in this issue of the Advocate.

We are in receipt of the invitation of the Senior Class of Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., for their fifty-fourth anniversary, which will take place May 17, 18, and 19. The Advocate would take pleasure, were it possible, in giving the names of the twenty-two young ladies who compose this necessarily charming and beautiful aggregation of graduates who have battled through the past years of study and have reached the glory of a finishing time. Each one has our best wishes for the future. The baccalaureate address will be given by Dr. W. H. La Prade; the Commencement sermon will be preached by Dr. B. F. Jones; and the sermon to the Y. W. C. A. will be preached by Rev. T. B. Clifford.

GUARDING HIS OWN HONOR.

A few months ago a gentleman who stands high in the community where he lives stepped from a train on his return from a business trip to the nearest city, some twenty-five miles distant. Still holding a railroad ticket in his fingers, he gave it to a young boy, a "newsy," about thirteen years of age, saying: "Here, Danny, this will save you a good dollar and a quarter when next you go up to Springfield. That numskull of a conductor never put in his appearance, and it is as good as it was the hour I bought it."

The boy looked embarrassed at first, and in an uneasy manner glanced from the smiling gentleman to the bit of paper in his hand. Then he asked timidly: "But, Mr. Reynolds, didn't you travel to Springfield and back on it?"

"Certainly," returned Mr. Reynolds. "But that didn't hurt the ticket in the least. Don't you see it has not a mark or scratch upon it?"

"Yes, but did you not get the worth of your money out of it?" insisted the boy.

"Of course I did, but that is no reason why you should not do the same," Mr. Reynolds answered. "It was no fault of mine if the conductor did not attend to his business. Passengers are not supposed to risk their necks hunting up railroad officials, are they?"

"No," agreed Danny, hesitatingly.

"Then put it in your pocket and so save fare the next time you go up to see your mother," counseled the gentleman. "A good silver dollar and a bright new quarter were paid for it, and you save that amount by using it, enough to get mother a nice present, something that would both please and surprise her."

For a moment Danny was on the point of yielding, but the reference to his mother's being pleased and surprised made him draw his hand back.

"You are just that much poorer," returned Mr. Reynolds irritably. "As if a big corporation like the B. & O. Railroad Company would ever miss the insignificant amount of one dollar and a quarter."

"Still, I know it would not be right for me to use it," maintained Danny, sturdily. And take the ticket he would not.

Later, when Mr. Reynolds was in need of a boy by whom large sums of money were to be handled, it was Danny, the boy with the peculiar conscience, that he employed, explaining to a friend when he sent for him: "A boy unwilling to take advantage of a railroad will not be a dangerous chap to have in charge of an office with piles of money to be guarded."—Christian Observer.

A WISE ANSWER.

"The late Bishop Bowman," said a New York Methodist, "dined one evening at a fashionable millionaire's in Fifth Avenue."

"Beside the Bishop sat one of those dyed, decollete, elderly women who are always trying to be brilliant."

"This woman rattled off a lot of silly epigrams about Buddha and Mahomet and so forth—then she turned to the Bishop and said:

"What do you really think, Bishop, of God?"

"The Bishop answered, with his calm smile:

"I think, madam, that all that matters is what God thinks of me."

FRECKLES

Don't Hide Them With a Veil; Remove Them With The Othine Prescription

This prescription for the removal of freckles was written by a prominent physician and is usually so successful in removing freckles and giving a clear, beautiful complexion that it is sold by druggists under guarantee to refund the money if it fails.

Don't hide your freckles under a veil; get an ounce of othine and remove them. Even the first few applications should show a wonderful improvement, some of the lighter freckles vanishing entirely.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine; it is this that is sold on the money-back guarantee.

Sister PALMER, wife of our beloved Sunday School Superintendent, J. E. Palmer, after a lingering illness of several months, passed to her reward on April 8, 1914. She was in her thirty-seventh year. Early in life she became a Christian and united with the M. E. Church, South. She lived an exemplary life until her death. She bore her sickness bravely and rejoiced that she was prepared to go. Without doubt we know where to find her. In the presence of a large gathering of loved ones and friends the remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery near Greenwood Springs, Miss. May the blessings of our Father rest upon the family.

A. S. BRISCO, P. C.

CHARLES P. WENTWORTH, son of Brother and Sister J. M. Wentworth, was born on April 2, 1881, and died on April 25, 1914. He was buried at the Methodist Cemetery at Roxie, Miss., the funeral sermon being preached by the writer. The funeral service was attended by a very large audience which attested the fact that he was one of the most universally loved and respected young men in the State of Mississippi. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on April 20, 1902, and lived a consistent Christian life. He was without doubt one of the most saintly young men I have ever been associated with. The chief ambition of his life was to do the will of Christ. He was zealous of good works, and followed his Lord, not afar off, but in the good old-fashioned way, like Daniel, David, and other heroes of old. We hope to meet him in the better world. His former pastor, G. G. YEAGER.

A good little boy has gone from earth to heaven. LEVERT BURDIM was given to his parents, A. L. and Jodie Burdim, on Sept. 12, 1906, and taken to heaven on March 23, 1914. He was sick several months, and during that time all was done for him that skilled physicians, loving hearts and kind hands could do. He was one of Christ's little ones, and with patience bore uncomplainingly his affliction. It was his custom to ask a blessing upon every meal, and the object of his young life was the happiness of others, especially of his papa, mamma and sister. He spoke intelligently of heaven as being the home of himself and a little brother who lately preceded him to the beautiful land. God took him to himself in his childhood's guilelessness. We buried him under the flowers and the tears of a large company of relatives and friends. This community, Charleston, Miss., was his birthplace. May we all one day dwell with him in our Father's mansions above.

D. W. BABB.

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. EUGENIA MILLER SMITH, was born May 7, 1892, and was married to Lloyd Smith May 7, 1912. She departed this life at the home of her father and mother in Tchula, Miss., Feb. 7, 1914. Her life, though so short, had many Christian accomplishments of which older ones might be proud. She was brought up in the care and admonition of God, joining the Church when quite a child, and lived a consistent member, dying a triumphant death. She never caused her parents any anxiety or pain. Of how few can this be said! This writer was her pastor for two years, and looked upon her as a model Christian character. May her heart-broken husband, father and mother, and all sorrowing friends, take courage by remembering these facts and in their hearts say: "The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." On February 9 her remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery at Hermanville, Miss., to await the resurrection morn. May her many friends become reconciled to her death by implicitly trusting in Him who said, "I am the way and the truth."

A former pastor and friend.

O. P. ARMOUR.

EARL MUNNS, the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Munns, died at Coldwater, Miss., on April 25, 1914. He was called to pass through many weary days and nights of suffering before he departed this life, but bore all his suffering with patience. Although he had been sick several months, when the end came his death was a shock to the community in which he had lived; but God knoweth best. He was loved by all who knew him. He was noble-hearted, loving and true, with a cheerful word for all with whom he came in contact. He has gone to his reward, and a crown of righteousness is now upon his brow. Loved ones and friends mourn his earthly death, while angels herald his heavenly birth.

"Far from earth the spirit flies, Finds its God, and rests in Paradise."

His remains were laid to rest in Greenleaf Cemetery. Rev. R. I. Collins conducted the funeral service. He leaves a father, mother, one brother, two sisters, and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

A FRIEND.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.

The Missionary Institute for the eastern side of the Alexandria District convened at Jena, April 29-30. The representation of the clerical portion of the district was very good. Brother May, our excellent and efficient presiding elder, had mapped out a very interesting program, and it proved conclusively that he knows the situation, and furthermore, that he studies his men, for man and subject blended very nicely indeed. The institute was a veritable feast to the soul. High spiritual fervor was felt on the last afternoon when the blessings of God fell upon the preachers and laity, and there was shouting in the camp.

Brothers Alford, Perritt, and Cameron preached very effectively and to the edification of those present. We are sorry indeed that our laymen do not exert a greater effort to attend these gatherings, and we trust that the day is not far distant when the laity will realize that they have a great part in the work of the kingdom. The closing service was indeed an inspiration, and to show their interest in the advance of the kingdom of God the Jena membership pledged more than their assessment for missions. The institute was a fine starter for the revival expected to follow, as we will have Rev. D. A. Morris with us for a meeting. Brethren, pray for us that our work may be blessed of God in the salvation of souls.

Tidings From the Field

Tunica, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: On Sunday night, April 26, we closed our revival services at Tunica. In my opinion, this was a great meeting. The church was awakened greatly and will, no doubt, do even bigger and better things for the spiritual interests in this community. Brother T. H. Dorsey, of the First Church, Water Valley, did the preaching for us. His sermons were enjoyed by every one because of the plain, stirring, and persuasive gospel in them contained; and, further, because of the sincerity of the messenger. The Lord was with us and blessed us greatly. J. D. WROTEN.

Slidell and Covington, La.

This charge is moving along nicely at this writing. We have some faithful and aggressive Methodist people on this work, notwithstanding the fact that we have quite a number of open saloons at both places to hinder our church work, and Catholicism surrounds us on the right, left, front, and rear, at both of these points. I trust the praying people who read these lines will pray for this "valley of dry bones." We have five Methodist Sunday schools on this charge of four appointments and one union Sunday school. A Senior League has been organized since Conference with a membership of 40. The Home Mission Society is aggressive in its work. The parsonage received a New Year's shower which added much to the comfort of the pastor and his family. The writer has received a nice pounding since coming to this work. I have a fine board of stewards at Slidell who do their work thoroughly and systematically. We have just organized a full board at Covington, and I trust they will co-operate with the pastor. D. L. GRIFFIN, P. C.

Davis Springs, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: This is a short sketch of our second quarterly conference, which convened Saturday, April 25. Our presiding elder and pastor were present and looking well. Brother Coleman gave us a fine sermon on giving, from Luke 6:38. It was inspiring and uplifting. I think it brought about new resolutions and renewed obligations. It was good to be there. Brother Coleman made a good impression on the people. We then closed for dinner by singing "Stand Up For Jesus." We spread dinner, and after that we had Conference, with Brother Coleman in the chair. The business was finished and Brother Coleman made a short talk on Sunday school work before he left for another place. Brother Anders preached on Sunday. There was a large crowd, and he preached a good sermon on Consecration. We had a fine service and it seemed as if old-time religion was getting back in Davis Spring Church. There was a shout in the camp, but we must not say that too loudly; you know it is not up-to-date. Now, Mr. Editor, don't you think that if the up-to-date religion would give way and let the old-time religion come into the heart, that there would be rejoicing on earth and in heaven? Brother Anders stands well here and he is doing a good work. Our Baptist people like him, too. They come to hear him preach and seem to enjoy it. We are going to hold our protracted meeting in July and are praying for and expecting a glorious revival. We need it. Pray that we may have a sweeping revival. Mrs. J. D. H.

FROM THE COLPORTER.

I have been able thus far during the year to read, write or travel but little. With difficulty I attended the Greenville and Winona District Conferences, where much kindness and many favors were shown me by brethren and friends.

Two weeks ago by surgical operation the cataract was removed from my left eye, which, following a previous minor operation, it is hoped, will result in restoration of vision after a while. During these operations I was fourteen days in the Baptist Hospital, Memphis, Tenn., where I was kindly and well cared for.

This institution is rendering good service for the comfort and healing of the afflicted and sick who are placed in its charge. I found among the inmates people of all denominations, including many Methodists. I heartily commend this institution to all who may be in need of such benefits as it affords.

I am more than ever convinced of the necessity of our proposed Methodist Hospital in Memphis. For its early completion let the preachers and people earnestly co-operate with our energetic agent, Rev. H. M. Ellis, by their influence and gifts.

I exceedingly regret being deprived of the privilege of attending the district conferences for some weeks to come; but let all be assured of my remembrance and love. In the meantime prompt attention will be given to all book orders and other correspondence. I sincerely thank all who have sent remittances on their accounts, especially those who recently responded to special requests. I hope to hear from the remaining few in a short time.

Brethren, pray for me.

Yours faithfully,

G. W. BACHMAN.

Winona, Miss.

Cultivate the thankful spirit. It will be to thee a perpetual feast. There is, or ought to be, with us no such thing as small mercies; all are great, because the least are undeserved. The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

The Kentwood Sunday school has organized a Primary department with Mrs. J. B. Magee as superintendent, and on the first Sunday in May began with regular programs, the place of meeting being a nearby hall fixed up for the purpose. This work starts off well, and it is hoped by the leaders that the developments will be such as to create a still greater demand for additional Sunday school room, and that ere long the church building may be equipped to more adequately take care of the work.

On the fifth Sunday in March, under the leadership of Rev. R. V. Fulton, the representatives of five Sunday schools met at Day's Church on the Greensburg circuit, and had an all-day Sunday school rally. The speakers were L. B. Duke, Mrs. R. L. Carruth, Miss Clara Humble, and the pastor. As a result of the discussions some of the schools planned to organize home departments, to organize cradle rolls, and to introduce the graded literature in the primary classes. This is the first effort of the Greensburg pastor to use the fifth Sundays for institute purposes, and the success of this occasion argues for the success of the plan.

Two important things to be considered by superintendents and pastors just now is the observance of Decision and Children's days, the first being well associated with the church revival, in which teachers should be trained to lead their pupils to Christ. The program for the latter for this year is fine and no school should fail to make due preparation and to carefully plan for a great and joyous rally, with liberal collections, which will be appropriated to Sunday school extension work. In taking the collection it is well to furnish each pupil with a contribution envelope, and then record the gifts by classes and post the amount given by the school before the collection is taken from the audience.

The Carrollton Avenue Sunday school, New Orleans, has an "absentee superintendent," whose duty it is to look after absent scholars. This is done by means of furnishing each teacher with a simple slip (made in perforated pad) with blanks for the number of the class, pupil's name, address, date, and remarks. This record goes to the secretary with the other records at each session of the school, and is then turned over to the absentee superintendent who devises his own ways and means to find the reason for the absence, and to exhaust every effort to hold the pupils that have once been enrolled. In this way many pupils who would, doubtless be lost to the school are tided over critical periods to remain permanent members.

The Kentwood Sunday School issued its first batch of quarterly certificates of honor on the first Sunday in April to some dozen pupils who had made an average grade of 90 per cent or more for attendance, being on time, having an offering, a prepared lesson, having read the daily home readings, attendance at church for one service each Sunday, and deportment (or in the case of adults, attendance upon monthly business meetings of class or workers' council.) The marking system is that of the O. K. record system that provides convenient blanks. The only trouble found with the system so far is the length of time taken in making the records, which difficulty is being overcome as the system becomes more and more familiar. The names of those receiving the certificates of honor constitute the honor roll for the school.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

The motto for the Chicago Convention, "Jesus Shall Reign," has a wonderful and far-reaching significance, and every Sunday school worker can help bring about this greatest reign if he will only half try.

As in the city, so in the country the Sunday school should have the backing and support of the best people in the community. It must never be simply an organization of children. The organized class is the greatest remedy for this all-too-prevalent condition.

In the home lies the real success or failure of the Sunday schools, and if every father and mother would paste these 16 reminders in his or her Bible, and one by one check them off as accomplished, half of the Sunday school battle would be fought:

A Self-examination for Fathers and Mothers.

1. Are all my growing children enrolled in our Sunday school? Why not?
2. Have I ever visited our school? Do I know its curriculum?
3. Do I know anything about the aim and method of modern Sunday school work, or am I still judging from my impressions formed in my childhood?
4. Do I realize that the Sunday school is at present a necessary link in the education of my children, supplied by no other agency?
5. Do I realize that the successful "home" or "private" Sunday school is only an ideal, even rarer than the successful "home" day school?
6. Do I appreciate the difficulties under which the Sunday school does its work, viz: voluntary attendance, and very largely at that, voluntary instruction? Have I given the Sunday school credit for what it has accomplished in the face of these difficulties?
7. Is my own attitude toward our school such that my children, through me, respect the Sunday school?
8. Have I placed the Sunday school upon at least as high a plane as my children's day school, or music lessons, in requiring prompt and regular attendance, and conscientious preparation?
9. Have I ever talked with my pastor about the possible improvement and the work of the school in so far as my own children are concerned?
10. Am I personally acquainted with my child's teacher? Have I ever met her in my own home? Have I ever conferred with her about my child's work; or thanked her for her faithful service, voluntarily rendered? Have I ever criticised her before my children, or to myself? Have I ever inquired how I might help her?
11. Am I really convinced that I have graduated from the Sunday school myself and need no longer to study the Bible?
12. Do I study the Sunday school lessons with my children?
13. How many books have I read upon the religious development and training of children? Do I know that our church library is full of such books?
14. Have I encouraged my children to feel that the Sunday school is enough and that it takes the place of the church service?
15. Am I really willing to delegate all the religious training and instruction of my children to the Sunday school without help, sympathy or co-operation from myself?
16. Am I personally helping to make my home and our school such places of religious nurture that my children naturally and gladly will confess Jesus Christ, and be eager to take their places in the fellowship and service of his Church?—The Pilgrim Teacher.

This report, submitted by one of Brother Gladney's fine classes, is such an object lesson in regard to class activities that it will be given in full. The question comes back from every newly-organized class, What can we do? Here is one fine answer. In our desire to secure a large number of organized and certified classes, we so often fail to realize that it is only the merest beginning. These "True Blue" girls are a delight to the heart. Class No. 8 of the Kosciusko Methodist Sunday School for the first quarter, ending March 31, 1914: Name of class, Girls' True Blue; class motto, Truth; number of members in the class, 21; number of teachers in the class, 1; total number, 22; number of members offering daily Bible reading and prayer, 22; number of new members added to class first quarter, 2; number of new members added to the Sunday school, 4; number of invitations extended to new members, 12; number of visits to sick, 52; number of refreshments and bouquets sent to sick, 15; number of garments given to the needy, 9; amount of money given to the needy, 50 cents; number of committees in the class, 6; names of committees: Executive, Membership, Social, Devotional, Music, Finance; number of members signed titling cards, 9; number of members present every Sunday during first quarter, 6; amount of money collected on Foreign Scholarship, $8.50; amount of money spent for certificate, 25 cents; amount of money on hand, $9. Class officers: President, Evelyn Meek; Vice-President, Onie Hanna; Treasurer, Amma Cain; Secretary, Sadie Ellis; Organist, Lula M. Campbell; Teacher, Mrs. Onie Guess. IS COCA COLA A FOOD OR MERELY A STIMULANT?

The well known action of Coca Cola in quenching the thirst, in relieving fatigue, and in refreshing both mind and body, has naturally given rise to discussion as to how it accomplishes these results. Chemists all agree as to the composition of the popular temperance drink and their analyses unanimously verify the original statement of the Manufacturers that Coca Cola is composed of water, refined sugar, fruit flavors and caffeine. The water, of course, has no real food value, though when cool and carbonated it is refreshing. The fruit flavors are merely appetizing and tickle the palate. But the sugar is of all food products the most quickly absorbed and the most readily convertible into nervo-muscular energy. Sugar is to the human body what coal is to the steam engine, for it supplies the energy for both nerves and muscles. On account of its sugar Coca Cola must, therefore, be classed as a food, and as this sugar is rendered pure and readily digestible by refining, it is a pure food product.

But Coca Cola is more than a simple food, for it also contains a vegetable substance known as caffeine, which is the refreshing principle found in coffee, tea, cocoa, chocolate and mate. This caffeine, though not a stimulant in the same sense that alcohol and drugs are, nevertheless refreshes and invigorates the nerves and muscles. Its stimulating effect is similar to that obtained from meat extracts or beef tea. It relieves fatigue, but is not followed by a secondary or depressing effect, nor is it necessary to increase the quantity, from time to time, in order to obtain the desired refreshment. Caffeine is Nature's stimulant.

Coca Cola belongs to the same class of food products as tea and coffee, viz., the caffeine-beverages. Though they differ in flavor, they are similar in effect, for caffeine is their common and only active principle. It is the caffeine that relieves fatigue and refreshes mind and body, not by artificial stimulation, but by a natural process analogous to that produced by the xanthin of the human body. Xanthin is a normal ingredient of the blood and flesh of all animals (including man) and is a refreshing principle of meat extracts, such as beef tea. Its action is similar to that of caffeine, in fact, when caffeine enters the body it becomes a xanthin. The caffeine beverages, therefore, have their counterpart in the normal human body, in the form of xanthin, and hence scientists have classed them as "natural" stimulants in contradistinction to the "artificial" stimulants such as alcohol, nitro-glycerine, strychnine, etc.

If you would like to know more about Coca Cola, its composition and its effect in refreshing mind and body, write for free booklet containing the expert opinions of the world's leading scientists who have made exhaustive investigations of the subject. OLD LADY SAGE'S ADVICE.

Knoxville, Tenn.—Mrs. Mammie Towe, of 102 W. Main Street, this city, says: "If you had seen me before I began to take Cardui you would not think I was the same person. Six doctors failed to do me good and my friends thought I would die. I could hardly get out of bed or walk a step. At last an old lady advised me to take Cardui, and now I can go most anywhere." All ailing women need Cardui, as a gentle, refreshing tonic, especially adapted to their peculiar ailments. It is a reliable vegetable remedy, successfully used for over 50 years. You ought to try it.—Adv.

SPRING SICKNESS COMES TO EVERYONE

Spring sickness comes in some degree to every man, woman and child in our climate. It is that run-down condition of the system that results from impure, impoverished, devitalized blood. It is marked by loss of appetite and that tired feeling, and in many cases by some form of eruption.

The best way to treat spring sickness is to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. Ask your druggist for this all-the-year-round medicine. It purifies, enriches and revitalizes the blood.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

If you were the owner of a Mineral Spring which had restored your own health, and if you received thousands of letters like the following from other sufferers, wouldn't you guarantee "Satisfactory Results or Money Refunded," just as I do? You certainly would. Read these letters and accept my guarantee offer printed below.

Dupont, Ga., Nov. 25, 1911.
Shivar Spring, Shelton, S. C.—Gentlemen: I have suffered for years with nervous indigestion and kidney troubles. Derived more benefit from the Shivar Spring Water than from months at Hot Springs, Ark., and numerous other springs. I consider it the very best water extant. Augustus Dupont.

Jacksonville, N. C., July 1, 1911.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.—Dear Sir: This wonderful water has cured me of severe pains in my back and head after twelve years suffering and with no results from medicine and doctors' treatments. This is indeed a wonderful water. Yours truly, Mrs. M. E. Gurganus.

McCall, S. C., R.F.D., Sept. 5, 1911.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.—Dear Sir: The ten gallons of water shipped me on Aug. 24th did me so much good. Please send ten gallons more by first express. Would like to have agency. This water has relieved me of chronic indigestion. Was living on raw eggs and milk. Now am eating anything I want without bad effects. I do not hesitate to recommend this water to all chronic sufferers of stomach troubles. Please give my order prompt attention and ship to Gibson, N. C., and oblige. Yours truly, H. W. Stubbs.

Scranton, S. C., Nov. 21, 1911.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.—Dear Sir: My wife has been a sufferer of rheumatism, and after drinking twenty gallons of your mineral water was entirely cured of the horrible disease. Yours respectfully,

J. D. McCiam.

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 11, 1911.

Dear Sir: Until a few weeks ago my wife was a chronic sufferer from gall stones. She was stricken critically ill and nothing but morphine seemed to relieve her pain by rendering her unconscious. My physician, who is a good one, seemed to do very little good. Rev. A. J. Foster, pastor of Shandon Baptist Church of Columbia, S. C., advised me to take her immediately to Shivar Spring. On consulting my physician he agreed that it would be best to do that without delay. In about three days after arriving at the Spring, she was apparently relieved and had regained her appetite. She has suffered no ill effect of the trouble since. Please publish this for the benefit of sufferers. J. P. Draffin.

P. S.—I suffered for eight years with kidney trouble and inflammation of the bladder. After using this water only a few days, I am entirely relieved and suffer no more effect of the trouble whatever.

These are not selected cases, nor are the results unusual. I receive thousands like them, therefore, am justified in guaranteeing satisfactory results. Sign below:

Shivar Spring,

Box 17K, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

THE TROUBLE IS NOT INSIDE.

The myriads of parasitic germs which cause Tetter, Eczema, Ringworm, Itch, Acne, Salt Rheum, etc., cannot be killed internally. They live and feed on the surface and must there be treated. Tetterine is the common sense treatment that has scientific principles to back it up. E. A. Kennedy, druggist of Brooklyn, Fla., says: "Tetterine has cured quickly and permanently several stubborn cases of tetter that came under my personal knowledge. One of 15 years standing." 50c at druggist's or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

CORINTH DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Corinth District Conference of the North Mississippi Conference will be held at Ecru, Miss., June 18-21. Will the pastors of the district kindly send the names of all persons from their respective charges who will attend the Conference to Mr. A. A. Gates, Ecru, Miss., who is chairman of the entertainment committee. I will appreciate careful and prompt attention to this matter.

A GREAT DISCOVERY OF 1820

During President Monroe's first administration, nearly a century ago, Dr. W. W. Gray, a brilliant young physician of Raleigh, N. C., made a discovery, now a world-wide blessing. This was a certain ointment which prevented blood poison and counteracted all skin diseases. The wonderful dispatch with which Gray's Ointment cured ulcers, old sores, boils, tumors, felons, abscesses, etc., traveled fast, and, despite the absence of railroads and fast trains, soon became known and demanded the country over. The business was moved in 1850 to Nashville, Tenn., and continued there by Dr. W. F. Gray, a son. Anyone by writing Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., can obtain a trial box of Gray's Ointment free of charge. 25c at drug stores.

PORT GIBSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Port Gibson District Conference will open with a sermon at 7:45 Monday night, June 15, in the Methodist Church at Port Gibson, Miss., and it will continue until the work is finished.

The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. J. E. Williams. The pastors will please arrange to have the quarterly conference records on hand.

The local preachers will be expected to attend the session. If it should be impossible for any one to come let him be sure to send a written report and request for renewal of license. Compliance to this is of imperative importance. Failure to do this will be taken as an expression of reprehensible indifference.

Dr. C. F. Reid has promised to be with us one day. Those who come to represent general interests will be given opportunity to do so on Thursday, June 18, on the floor of the Conference.

The last session of the District Conference requested by vote that the session of 1914 should not allow the preaching hours to be taken up with anything but sermons. We propose to magnify the preaching of the Word.

The following are the Committees: License to Preach—C. M. Chapman, R. F. Witt, J. E. Gray.

Recommended for Admission on Trial—T. B. Holloman, L. L. Roberts, J. Y. Bowman.

Deacon's Orders—Jno. D. Ellis, H. J. Maddox, E. J. Coker.

Elder's Orders—C. F. Emery, E. L. Alford, W. W. Simmons.

Ministerial Training—H. B. Watkins, R. H. Kleiser, J. E. Williams.

Quarterly Conference Records—R. F. Harrell, W. B. Alsworth, J. F. Campbell.

Brethren, let no trifling thing keep you from coming, and come praying for a deeply religious Conference.

MRS. POWELL ALMOST DEAD.

Dry Ridge, Ky.—"I could hardly walk across the room," says Mrs. Lydia Powell of Dry Ridge, "before I tried Cardui. I was so poorly, I was almost dead. Now I can walk four miles and do my work with much more ease. I praise Cardui for my wonderful cure." Cardui is successful in benefiting sick women, because it is composed of ingredients that act specifically on the womanly constitution, relieving headache, backache, irregularity, misery and distress. Only a good medicine could show such continual increase in popularity as Cardui has for the past 50 years. Try Cardui, the woman's tonic.—Adv.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Announcements.

The Second Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi Conference will be held in Aberdeen, Miss., June 11-15. Names of delegates and visitors should be sent as early as possible to Mrs. T. B. Sykes, Chairman of Entertainment Committee, Aberdeen, Miss.

All delegates are expected to be present at the opening session and to remain throughout the meeting. Bishop Murrah will preach the annual sermon. Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb will be the Council visitor.

Signed: Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle, President; Miss Mamie Buckley, Recording Secretary.

The Executive Committee of the Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi Conference will meet at 8:30 a. m., June 11, 1914, in Methodist Church, Aberdeen, Miss. Every member is urged to be present.

Signed: Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle, President; Miss Mamie Buckley, Recording Secretary.

Foreword.

We are planning great things for our Annual Meeting at Aberdeen, June 11-15, and hope to have a program full to overflowing with good things. Bishop Murrah will preach our annual sermon, and we feel we will be privileged above the common lot to have our own Mississippi Bishop with us upon that occasion. We are also to have our beloved member of the Council, Mrs. Bessie Lipscomb, with us, who will give us two inspirational addresses—one on the Young People's service, and another one on Sunday evening. Then too, we are to have with us our strong, self-reliant missionary, Miss Julia Wasson, who for the past five years has rendered such efficient service as teacher of Latin and Mathematics in McTyler School, Shanghai, China. Miss Wasson, as you know, is at home on her first furlough, and gave us much help and inspiration in the itinerary she made of the Conference last October.

Miss Mary Daniel, our Conference deaconess, who is at present very busy with her plans for a co-operative home for working girls at Corinth, will also be there.

It makes my heart glow to think of the North Mississippi Conference having the seventh Co-operative Home under the Woman's Missionary Council. Miss Daniel is an untiring worker and has the able assistance of Rev. J. H. Felts and the people of Corinth in her labor of love for the town. She has recently organized a Co-operative Home Board and rented a house for a year in which to test the need for a Co-operative Home in the town. Let us not fail to enroll Miss Daniel and her work on our Prayer Calendars, with the hope that her experiment may result in a Co-operative Home for Corinth, similar to that of Houston, Texas, where our Falla Richardson and Miss Durham are associated together and which shelters seventy-five working girls, and from which hundreds have to be turned away.

Come to our Annual Meeting and hear all about the plans and our work at Corinth from our Deaconess herself. Mrs. S. M. Thames, First Vice-President, is very busy with her plan for the Children's service on Sunday afternoon, which is sure to prove a most interesting and helpful service.

Miss Hartwell, Second Vice-President, is showing deep interest in the Young People's service on Friday evening, and it is my earnest wish to have a large delegation of young people attend our Annual Meeting. There is no department of our work in which I am more deeply interested, and none to which I have given more special attention. One thought advanced in Mrs. Cobb's report to the Council Meeting in 1913 took deep hold upon me, namely, "That the call for young people already equipped for service was most insistent, and that these young people were to be found within our college walls." With this thought in mind I planned to visit our Grenada College and the I. I. & C., hoping thereby to awaken an interest among, and bring as many of our young women as possible in touch with our Woman's Missionary work, by making our Annual Conference a personal visit.

So come to our Annual Meeting, young people, and hear about the College Day observed in the recent Council Meeting at Fort Worth; come and hear about that impressive ceremony when nineteen young women were consecrated to work both in the foreign and the home fields; come and hear how a great host of deaconesses and returned missionaries told of their struggles and triumphs, their sorrows and joys, their invincible courage and monumental faith; come and hear how our Father in heaven calls you to "the fields white unto the harvest;" come and hear how our Council Second Vice-President, Mrs. Stevens, made special mention of our Girls' Conferences, and urged others to follow our example along that line.

I am sure it will be very gratifying to the many friends of our retired President, Mrs. Walter Scales, Jr., to know that she will conduct our workers' conference on the afternoon of June 11. Then, too, our capable Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Department, Mrs. T. M. Clark, will conduct an institute on the work of the District Secretary. It is our purpose to magnify as much as possible the work of the District Secretary, for we realize that there is no office more important. At the executive session held in Holly Springs in February, it was decided to allow the President to fix the time for the election of officers, and that time to be adhered to. Consequently the closing hours of the Conference, on June 15, has been decided upon, and the delegates are requested to make their plans to come for the opening session and remain until the close.

An executive session is called for 8:30 a. m., June 11, in the Methodist Church at Aberdeen. The accomplished President of the Aberdeen Auxiliary, Miss Fannie Haughton, is manifesting great interest in our approaching session and we feel sure that every preparation will be made for our comfort and pleasure while there. Rev. I. D. Borders, our Conference host, is a most faithful champion of our Woman's work, and we feel that no measure for our entertainment will be tabled at his hands.

I trust that my constituency throughout the Conference will look forward to this meeting as a time of joy and a time for the renewal of consecration and zeal in the Master's vineyard.

Enroll this Annual Meeting UPON YOUR PRAYER CALENDARS, and let a great volume of prayer ascend daily to the throne of grace for an outpouring of God's Holy Spirit upon this occasion.

Mrs. VIC THOMPSON HOYLE, President.

MESSAGE FROM THE EX-Secretary OF THE HATTIESBURG DISTRICT.

For the encouragement of the missionary workers in the Hattiesburg District, I will give a short summary of our work in the past 20 months.

Thirteen auxiliaries have been organized. All of the Home Mission Societies that were in the District (six) have taken the Foreign work. All of the Foreign Missionary Societies (three) except one have taken the Home work. In two places the Home and Foreign auxiliaries have been united. There are 28 adult auxiliaries, 21 Children's Departments and 5 Young Peoples Societies in our District. Many of the auxiliaries have done the finest kind of work. One with only four members raised $154.35 during the fourth quarter of 1913; $125 of this was used to send two unprotected girls to Vashli. Another small auxiliary is supporting a girl in school in China, and one of the members and her husband are planning to support a native worker in China.

I am sorry that I will have to give up my work for the present year. It has ever been a joy to me. I want to thank our faithful Conference officers and those consecrated pastors who have assisted me in any way. To my co-workers in the district I cannot express my deep appreciation for your prayers, sympathy, and hearty co-operation. To you, my sisters, is due the credit for all of the good that has been accomplished. You are the soldiers in the field, and you have done the work, you have the tact of keeping your secretary happy all the time. Your incoming secretary need have no fears or dread. I plead with you to stand by her as you have stood by me. May God bless you in my prayer. This message I leave with you: "In His Name Go Forward."

Mrs. J. R. ELLIS.

LITTLETON COLLEGE AT LAKE JUNALUSKA.

Last summer we bought three lots with a frontage of 100 feet on the shore drive of Lake Junaluska, on which we are now erecting a cottage, which, when completed, will contain about seventy-five rooms to be owned by the friends, teachers, former teachers, students, and former students of Littleton College who may become stockholders, and at which these and others who may desire to be with us may have a home during the conference of the Southern Assembly.

The building will have good furnishings throughout, including bath and toilet rooms on every floor and running water and lavatories in all bedrooms.

Plans for the building were made by Smith and Carrier, Architects, Asheville, N. C., who have supervision of the construction work, and the builders are under contract to turn the building over to us with about thirty-five rooms completed by the 1st of July.

Special rates for board will be given to stockholders and desired information furnished those who may wish to consider the matter of taking stock; also to others who may wish to engage rooms. Address J. M. Rhodes, Littleton, N. C.

ASK ANY ONE WHO HAS EVER USED IT!

VOX PACIS.

By Mrs. Lee Lipscomb.

Can this be the land
For which Christ died,
With strife and bloodshed
On every side?

Does the Prince of Peace
O'er this world reign?
And if this be true,
Why are men slain?

Why are good mothers
Weeping to-day
For sons who must fall
In this bloody fray;

And fathers sighing
And grieving to-night,
For boys who have gone
To this Mexican fight?

Long ages ago,
On Bethlehem's plain,
Angels were chanting
This glorious refrain,

Of peace on the earth,
And to men, good will;
And this message rings
Down the ages still.

But men will not heed
This sweet song of old,
For the lust of power
And the greed for gold

Have stifled the voice
Of love and of right;
Questions are settled
By the deadly fight.

Oh, Christian America,
Stay thy swift hand!
There's enough of sorrow
In Mexico's land.

Widows and orphans,
Are bereaved, forlorn—
Their homes broken up,
Their hearts crushed and torn.

Then settle this strife
As true Christians may;
Let the flag of peace
Wave o'er us to-day!

Then angels of heaven
Will sing once again:
Peace, peace on the earth,
And good will to men.

Sardis, Miss.

It has Ended 60 Million Corns

This little Blue-jay is removing a million corns a month.

It is doing that for hundreds of thousands who used to doctor corns in old ways. And every one of those legions of people would gladly tell you this:

That Blue-jay stops pain instantly. That the corn comes out in 48 hours without any pain or soreness.

That Blue-jay is applied in a jiffy. And from that instant one forgets the corn.

That the corns never come back. New ones may come, but the old don't reappear.

Think of that, you who pare corns, you who use old-time methods. A famous chemist, in the one right way, has solved the whole corn problem. And that way—Blue-jay—is at every drug store waiting for your use.

Don't you think it time you tried it—now that sixty million ended corns owe their fate to Blue-jay?

THE NEW ORLEANS Christian Advocate Piano Club MAKES PIANO BUYING EASY

You will never know how easy it is for you to provide your home with a splendid Piano or Player-Piano until you have investigated the splendid money-saving proposition of the New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club. Those who have purchased their instruments through the Club write us that they are surprised and delighted with the big saving in price, the convenient plan of payment and the superb quality of their Pianos and Player-Pianos.

The Ludden & Bates Self-Player Piano

The Player-Piano has come to stay, for it enables everyone, young or old, to perform on the piano, no matter whether they have ever studied music or not. But to play in the best time, with the best expression and with the sweetest tone quality, you must have the Ludden & Bates Self-player Piano. It is really two splendid instruments in one—a regular high-grade Piano for use by musicians and a Self-player Piano for those who do not know one note from another.

If you secure your Player-Piano through the Club you not only save approximately one-third the price, but you also secure the benefit of the Club's Free Music Roll Service, by which you can exchange your old rolls for new selections at a nominal cost to cover postage and the expense of handling. This represents, in the course of time, a tremendous saving. Do not make the mistake of obtaining your Player-Piano from a house which cannot give you a free and comprehensive service in the exchange of music rolls.

And why shouldn't they be surprised and delighted. They are members of a powerful syndicate—a Club of One Hundred Buyers, and are logically entitled to the lowest price at which a high grade Piano can possibly be sold. The factory recognizes this right by making the lowest possible Factory price. Each Club member is responsible only for his own order—the Management fills up the Club.

In addition we have arranged a safe and convenient plan of payment which Club members say is ideal. It is vastly superior to the old installment plan, for it perfectly protects every interest of the Club member and insures him against every disadvantage of the partial payment plan as ordinarily conducted.

OTHERS ARE DELIGHTED, WHY NOT YOU?

The Club will save you approximately one-third the price, or about one dollar out of three. It positively insures your perfect satisfaction with every detail of the transaction. You must be thoroughly pleased with the Quality, Price and Terms, otherwise the Club will, after thirty days, ask you to return the instrument and on receipt of same will refund whatever you have paid.

Do not look upon the Club as an experiment, for it has passed that stage years ago. Thousands of delighted members are ready to assure you that the Club is the ONE PERFECT SOLUTION of the piano buyer's problem. We have printed hundreds of their letters in a book. Write for a free copy and see what they say. Here are a few samples selected at random:

TYPICAL LETTERS FROM CLUB MEMBERS.

Cedartown, Ga., Dec. 31, 1912.
Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.: "The Piano is a treasure, and everyone remarks on the sweetness of tone, and it has been so much pleasure to the family. The Club Plan places the Piano in so many homes that otherwise would have to wait an indefinite time to buy. Accept my sincere thanks for your courteous treatment."
MRS. R. A. SPINKS.

College Grove, Tenn., Feb. 15, 1913.
Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.: "In regard to the Piano, I am perfectly delighted with it, and everyone that has heard it, or has played on it, says they never heard a finer toned one, and I can observe such a vast difference in this one and others that are in this community that have been placed by agents. Too, every one, even those that know nothing about music, can tell the superiority of this Piano over others. Wishing you much success, I am"
MRS. JORDAN RIGGS.

Columbia, S. C., Dec. 28, 1912.
Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.: "I have had one of your pianos in my home for several months and I find that it comes up to your representation in every particular. Your Club Plan for the payment of same strikes me as being very lenient, and I think that every home can afford a Piano on this basis. Trusting that you have a very prosperous business along this line, I am"
MRS. AVA JACKSON.

Bradentown, Fla.
Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.: "Your Ludden & Bates Piano arrived O. K. and am very much pleased with it. The tone is elegant, action easy and finish of case simply perfect. Thank you for selecting such a superb instrument for me."
W. M. BAXTER.

Blowing Rock, N. C., Dec. 29, 1912.
Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.: "Your letter received some days ago and will say that I will be only too glad to recommend my piano to the highest. I could not wish for more in a piano. The woodwork is beautiful and the tone is as sweet as can be. Every day I am prouder of it. I would not do without it for anything. "As to your Club Plan, I certainly think it is the very best way in which the pianos could be sold, and I feel that by joining the Club I got a much better Piano for the money than I could have anywhere else. Thanking you for your kindness, and for the beautiful calendar I received from you, I am"
MISS ROSE EDNA BROWN.

Ardella, Ala., Dec. 30, 1912.
Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.: "In reply to yours of the 29th, I wish to say that the Club Piano is all and more than you claim. It has proven satisfactory to me and to all of my friends, and has won much praise for its sweet tone. Your Club Plan of selling has also proven satisfactory in every respect."
S. A. SMITH.

Vaiden, Miss., Dec. 2, 1912.
Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.: "I am perfectly delighted with my piano. I think the Club Plan a capital idea."

OBJECT LESSONS ON THE KINGDOM.

Men live largely in the realm of the practical, and they understand the common lot of material and human existence. Some attempt a so-called triumph over the natural state, that is the experience of all, by scaling heights of philosophy, through suppression of ordinary impulses, and by fretting introspection. They have missed the true mark. Our master lived in a natural world with natural surroundings. He gave meaning to every form of existence—material substance, plant life, animal life, human life—in his divine insight, connecting all into one great whole through which is written the name of the living God.

The Master taught so men could understand—the unschooled, the grossly ignorant, the diseased, the ditch digger, and all others. There was no question as to the pedigree of an individual, or any thought of his ethnic relations, or any concern over books that had been read and digested; the healing balm of divine help was applied to the body and soul of any who needed and desired the application. Christ's teachings were adapted to the understanding of the illiterate as well as the learned.

And there is no way for an individual, whether living in enlightened America or on the Congo, to mistake what the preacher means to teach on conversion if he explains it with the object lesson Christ employed in talking to Nicodemus: "Ye must be born again." Nicodemus desired to know if he could enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born, and Christ told him he must be born of the spirit. Then, away with this "moral theory" talk that if men live uprightly before the world all will be well. Some endeavor to say that if a child is reared in a good home, is brought into the Church, and makes a good citizen, that is all that is intended for him by divinity. The matter of inbred or original sin is written into the human race and Christ said except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom. The relation between the physical and spiritual birth is that the physical precedes the latter, and is proof of the necessity of the spiritual. There is a vital kinship between them, and for them to be separated means the loss of the soul. The fact of the physical birth bespeaks the absolute necessity of the spiritual birth.

Christ said that he is the Vine and we are the branches. All know that if a branch does not bear fruit it will wither away, and, in the case of a well pruned vineyard, will be cut off and burned. The millions of plants of the natural world are each an object lesson for the members of the kingdom. Every defective tree, every withering leaf, speak a lesson fraught with suffering and humility that should warn and sometimes frighten human beings. Just how much God depends upon these object lessons of nature to teach his kingdom is realized when fruit is borne through their silent messages.

We read in Holy Writ that Christ has atoned for the sins of the world, and all who will may have their sins remitted. But just to state the bare philosophy of the atonement to a suffering humanity is not as much as the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table to feed the beggar. When, however, the atonement is told with the object lessons of the suffering and death of the Master it is vitalized. The ignorant Chinaman would know in what manner our Christ atoned for the sins of the world; the answer to him would be that Christ suffered himself to be spat upon, to be reviled, to be executed by the State, that we should know he meant what he taught, and that he loved us with a consuming passion. It is one thing to theorize about the atonement, and it is another thing to realize it through the lesson of the suffering and death of our Lord. There is a vital relation between physical suffering and the salvation of the soul.

Further, the world has always wanted to believe in the resurrection, not so much of the body, but of the real self. Its conclusive proof came, after thousands of years of groping, in another lesson set in the natural realm. This proof is that upward of five hundred people testified that Christ rose a living man from the tomb where he had been placed as dead. He who conquered physical death authoritatively speaks to men and says that life is eternal. The world has been electrified since this great cynosure in the natural realm that was transferred by the Lord into the spiritual.

In the last place, there is a heaven and hell. Possibly the most vivid object lessons of the Bible lie in the bringing of men to realize the future states of existence of the righteous and wicked. The simplest man can understand from the object lesson of the Bible what hell is. It is taught by fire and brimstone; it hurts; and into a lake of such will the wicked be cast. The branches of the great Vine will be there cast should they not bear fruit. The touch of the hand to a flame, the agony brought about by a material blaze applied to the body, symbolizes the terrors of the world to come to the wicked. We hear of holocausts where hundreds are hurned to death; there are warnings to every individual who does not accept the Master in his teachings about a rebirth. Further, the most extravagant language is used to describe the glories of heaven. The twenty-first and the twenty-second chapters of Revelation contain one of the most wonderful object lessons ever taught to men. The Hindoo or the South Sea Islander cannot mistake its import. Here is a city where its inhabitants, having inherited the kingdom, have all their tears wiped away by the hand of God, and sorrowing and crying and pain are stayed forevermore. The city has twelve foundations upon which are written the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. It has twelve gates in the walls, over which are inscribed the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. The wisdom of Solomon is manifest: "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days." The building of the wall of this Eternal City is of pure jasper, and the city itself is like unto pure gold and clear glass; the foundations are garnished with all manner of precious stones; there is no need for a temple; the Almighty God and the Lamb are the temple; and they are the light of the city also. The river of life flows through this indescribable city, clear as crystal, proceeding from the throne of God and the Lamb, and upon its banks is the tree of life. The mansions of the world to come are symbolized thus in the terms of actual things about us. The object lessons are on every side; the gold, the silver, and the precious stones we see every day speak to the child of the King of the reward that is awaiting him. The sweep of the vari-colored rainbow from the North to the South, the light of the sun shooting from the East into the West, are but lessons from the natural realm indicating the tranquility and happiness of the world to come. THE GENERAL CONFERENCE AND VANDERBILT.

The Daily Christian Advocate of Friday last contained the report of the Special Committee on Vanderbilt University, with its recommendations to the General Conference. A minority report from the committee was also before the Conference, with recommendations of its own. The majority report, according to news in the secular press, was adopted after some debate on Saturday by the General Conference. It recommended that the right and title of the Church in the University be reconveyed to the patronizing Conferences that (as the Church has held) founded it; and that a Commission be appointed, consisting of four Bishops, four preachers other than Bishops, and eight laymen, who should make this transfer for the General Conference. Further duties of the Commission were to be moves in the direction of the establishment of a school of theology for the Church, and also of the founding of an institution, or institutions, of higher education. This report recited in language respectful to the Supreme Court of Tennessee the grounds where the Church had suffered in the recent decision, and stated that the opinion of the Court did not fully determine the real equities involved. The minority report of the Special Committee recommended to the General Conference that it take steps to conserve the rights of the Church in the University defined by the Supreme Court of Tennessee, as it was the opinion of this minority that, while the Church did not receive its proper due in the decision, there were rights left it in the University worth its attention.

After the adoption of the majority report by the General Conference on Saturday we thought that the Vanderbilt controversy was settled so far as the Church at large was concerned. We concurred in and favored the report of the majority. But on Monday the secular press spread forth the news that the action of the General Conference had been reconsidered and that the report had been recommitted. From the indications in the telegraphic reports, however, the majority report is not to be undone, but an addition made thereto, to the effect that the patronizing Conferences be given the proper authority to maintain their rights in the University, which the report in the first instance did not embody. If that be the case, and only this change is to be made, we feel that all may yet be well, and that this harassing matter will soon be determined forever. The Special Committee has done noble and painstaking work. It is to be highly commended by the Church. C. A. B.

"I MUST BE IN MY FATHER'S HOUSE."

John Preston Aylesworth.

Money had built a great cathedral,
Whose beauty stopped each passer-by;
Its towers, like praying hands uplifted.
Directed, mutely, to the sky;
Ever the music, soft and holy,
Issued like incense to the street.
As though to stem the tide of traffic,
And thither turn the earth-tired feet;
But 'twas only those in silk attire,
And those bedecked in jewels rare,
'Twas only those who built the church,
Who now felt free to worship there.
Yet once went I to see the altar—
I'd heard 'twould rival God's own throne—
The church was filled; I could not enter,
So, waiting, stood outside, alone—
Alone, save One! I turned to see
A crown of thorns, a nail-torn hand,
And eyes so very sorrowful!
I knew the truth: I scarce could stand;
I could not speak, nor was there need.
They are but worshiping a creed;
My Name their idol is," He cried,
"The while my Spirit stands outside."

—Zion's Herald.

WORLDLINESS.

By Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr.

What is worldliness? The Standard Dictionary says that it is "Devotion to the world; absence of spirituality." We often hear this term used. We speak of worldliness in the Church. It usually conveys to our minds indulgences in such things as attending the theater, card playing and the modern dance. Certainly those indulging in such practices do show a devotion to this world that will justify one in speaking of them as having become worldly.

But does not worldliness go deeper than these practices mentioned? Our definition says that it is devotion to the world and absence of spirituality. This warrants the belief that worldliness means devotion to the many different matters arising out of indulgence in the lusts of the flesh and the pride of life that is practiced by many to-day. Its unchecked presence in the life, if it has not already done so, will eventually lead to the absence of all spirituality.

This worldliness of which we hear so much seems to be just about what was meant by Paul when he so often spoke of "the flesh." The life of the flesh—worldliness—is the life of self-indulgence. It does not deny itself anything, but finds expression in all sorts of indulgences. It does not stop to consider the hearing that its actions may have upon the lives of others. Sometimes it turns to extravagances in one thing and at other times another. Now it is dress. A lady adorns herself with the most costly robes and bedecks herself in the most beautiful gems. A gentleman arrays himself likewise in garments that are expensive to the last degree. This is done for no other purpose than to gratify a worldly desire by robing oneself in the most expensive and handsome clothing. At another time this worldliness, indulgence of the flesh, finds expression in the partaking of the most delicate and expensive viands when a less expensive hill of fare would be far more conducive to the best interests of good health. However, the animal appetite for food is being satisfied. Again it is the desire to live in a fine home that needs to be heard and gratified. Or it may be that the wanderlust lays hold on one and the desire of the flesh will be gratified only by journeys into distant regions. But wherein is all this worldliness? It is worldliness in so far as it is the expression of the gratification of mere fleshly and earthly desires. In that it is an expression of a devotion to the world. Let him who indulges in such things be careful to see whether this indulgence is for the best interests of himself and of others; or whether, after all, it is not the mere lust of the flesh that calls for this expenditure of the funds with which God has blessed him, in a wholly selfish manner. Let him consider whether he would have been in any worse condition had he used these same funds for the help and the blessing of others, rather than the mere gratification of what after all was nothing more than a fleshly and a worldly desire in his life.

But this is not all that there is in following the flesh and in the indulgence in worldliness. In the fifth chapter of his letter to the Galatians Paul places in the same category murders, drunkenness, fornications, lasciviousness, envyings, backbitings, jealousies, hatreds, factions, and such things. Here the gravest of sins that are accounted by men to be crimes are placed along side of those things that men are accustomed to call vices. Paul says that all these are the works of the flesh. They all arise from the flesh and from worldliness. How often do we see this worldly spirit manifested in the lives of those who are the professed followers of Jesus Christ. Is this in keeping with the life of the Spirit within? Is it not an expression of the flesh that is devoted to the standards of this world and that cannot be overcome except through the presence of the Holy Spirit in the life? "For the mind of the flesh is death; but the mind of the Spirit is life and peace."

Let us not hold up to condemnation as being worldly only those who indulge in the theater, in the modern dance, card playing, and such things. Let us warn any who allow themselves to be dominated by mere fleshly desires, against these things as leading to a devotion to this world and to the banishment of all spirituality from their lives. Because one does not dance, or attend theaters, or play cards is no conclusive argument that such a person is not worldly. The one who does indulge in these practices is certainly dominated by the flesh and by a devotion to this world that is unbecoming to one professing to be a servant and a follower of Him who knew no self-indulgence, and who gave himself to die on the cross that all men might live. Let every one examine himself in order that he may see whether it may not be that the pride of life and the lust of the flesh, whether envy, backbiting, jealousy, or some other such thing—some sort of self-indulgence—may not have come to so control his life that he has become a confirmed worldling. When this spirit of the world and of the flesh has come to gain control and to make headway in the life, then that life is characterized by spiritual barrenness and absence from God.

New Orleans, La.

SHORTAGE IN PHILOLOGICAL CONCLUSIONS.

By Rev. Isaac L. Peebles, M. D.

Brother Swartz seems not to have apprehended fully what constitutes a correct philological conclusion, and hence his shortage in the same. No earthly language is perfect whether living or dead, and therefore when it becomes a dead one, its imperfections become as fixed as its death. The imperfections of a language appear in its lackings in definiteness and fullness of expression, and these must be compensated in the best way possible by circumstances, and therefore, any philological conclusion drawn in disregard of this fact, when such imperfections are manifest, constitutes an inexcusable shortage. This point is patent when attention is called to such uses of eis, ek, and baptizo as the following: "anebe eis to oros," Matt. 5:1; "poreutheis eis thalassan hale," Matt. 17:27; and "kai katehesan amphoterai eis to hudor," Acts 8:38. In these passages, eis is used with reference to a mountain, sea and water—eis the mountain, eis the sea, and eis the water; and yet eis is used in the New Testament 1593 times and in about forty-five different senses, or ways, such as for "into" 572 times, "to" 305 times, "unto" 204 times, "in" 131 times, "toward" 33 times, "at" 21 times, etc. And now how shall one conclude as to which of its forty-five different uses is to be determined in the above passages in which it is said of Christ, "He went up eis the mountain" and of Peter, "Go thou eis the sea;" and of Philip and the Eunuch, "And they went down both eis the water." And too, cannot any one see that so far as eis is concerned that it leaves it indefinite as to whether Peter went into the water at all or not, or waded into it, crawled into it, plunged into it, or went out on it in a boat, or simply stood at the edge of the water? And also leaves it quite indefinite as to whether Philip and the Eunuch went down towards the water, to the water, unto the water, into the water, and too, leaves it indefinite as to whether, or not they waded into the water, crawled into it, stood on their heads in it, swam about in it, rolled over and over in it, kneeled in it, stood in it, or floated on it, or plunged in it?

"EK" occurs in the Greek New Testament 557 times and in 30 different senses. It is used for "of" 365 times, "from" 151 times, "out of" 166 times, "by" 55 times, "with" 25 times, etc. And now how are we to determine which of its 30 senses is intended in such passages as the following: "Kai aphorismos tous poneros ek mesou ton dikaiou," Matt. 13:49; "heos hou ho huios tou anthropou ek nekron egerthe," Matt. 17:9; "stibados hopsantes ek ton argon," Mark 11:8; and "hote de anebasan ek tou hudatos," Acts 8:38? Cannot anyone see that we are dependent on circumstances for anything like a correct conclusion as to its use in each passage quoted, and also as to the one use of eis in each passage quoted in which it occurs? So it is in the use of baptizo. To make a long matter brief: let it be remembered that since all the prophets who prophesied of Christ's coming and that mentioned the use of water at all, then declared it would be poured and that it would be sprinkled, and not one word was said about immersion, and, too, after Christ did come and since he declared pouring is baptizing, and never hinted that immersion is, therefore does it not appear patent that quite a shortage would obtain in any other philological conclusion than that of sprinkling and pouring being the scriptural modes of water baptism? Brother Swartz seems to think because Wescott and Hort labored twenty-five years to form their text that it is rather faultless but he must not forget that Griesbach gave thirty-seven years to his, Tregelles 34 to his, Tischendorf much of his life to his, and Lachmann much to his, and, yet, when it comes to Wescott and Hort's "ek tou hudatos," Mark 1:10, they have "apo tou hudatos," which is "from the water" and also it is thus in the "Textus Receptus," and Mr. Wesley has it "from the water" in his New Testament Notes. Tregelles had access to all the ancient manuscripts, all the ancient versions, and all of the ecclesiastical writers down to Eusebius inclusive, and the Latin Version of Jerome, and finished his a few years before Wescott and Hort finished theirs. But for argument's sake, suppose we were to admit that Westcott and Hort's "ek tou hudatos" is the correct text and therefore leave "apo" out of the text altogether, cannot any one familiar with Bible Greek see, all the circumstances considered, that the correct philological conclusion would be, "from the water?"

The General Conference.

(Condensed from the Daily Advocate.)

Third Day.

The Conference was called to order at 9 o'clock by Bishop E. R. Hendrix, who announced that according to the resolution that was passed the previous day, the time from 9 to 10:30 o'clock would be given to prayer and other devotional exercises. During this time prayers were offered by the following: Dr. E. G. B. Mann, Mr. J. R. Pepper, Bishop W. R. Lambuth, Dr. J. D. Simpson, Bishop Joseph S. Key, Dr. J. W. Cline, of Soochow University, China, Dr. D. W. Carter, who had spent much time in the mission fields of Latin America, and Dr. William Bradfield, the fraternal messenger of the British Wesleyan Church. A stirring and earnest talk on prayer was made by Bishop Wilson, and Mr. T. B. King made a statement relative to the prayer services that the laymen of the Conference were holding each morning before the regular session began.

At the conclusion of this devotional service Bishop Candler took the chair as president for the day.

Alternates were seated, the arrival of various delegates was noted, and a resolution was offered by N. L. Linebaugh that the treasurer of the General Conference pay the delegates their traveling expenses at the adjournment of the Conference, or if they obtained leave of absence before, they should receive the expense money at that time.

The Bishop said, on being questioned, that the delegates from mission Conferences had the right to be heard in committee sessions, but could not vote, just as in the open session of the Conference.

The roll of the Annual Conferences was then called and memorials and petitions were presented and referred to the proper committees.

Dr. H. M. Du Bosc, at this point, presented his report as having discharged his duties as fraternal delegate to the Methodist Church of Canada in 1910.

Various papers from Boards and Commissions were then presented and referred to the proper committees.

The call for reports from standing committees was taken up and the Committee on Itinerancy filed report No. 1. This report recommended non-concurrence to a memorial asking to change the ratio of representation in General Conference delegates, to a memorial asking to empower the Annual Conference to determine the maximum number of charges to be placed in a district, and to a memorial asking to give the presiding Bishop of the Committee on Appeals the right to decide all questions of law; and it recommended concurrence in a memorial asking that ministers coming to us from the Methodist Protestant Church be received on the same basis as those coming from the Methodist Episcopal Church. This report went to the calendar; that is, it was placed in its proper place to be considered by the General Conference.

After some technical discussion about the Rules of the General Conference, the Committee on Church Extension gave their report No. 1. It recommended, according to a memorial from the Board of Church Extension, that fifteen, instead of nine, constitute a quorum of the Board of Church Extension at its business meetings. This report was placed on the calendar.

The Committee on Church Relations presented its report No. 1. It proposed to provide for a more helpful co-operation with the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church and devised a plan that this be brought about in the appointment of a joint commission between the two churches. Considerable debate took place on the report and it was finally made the order of the day at 10 o'clock "to-morrow."

The Committee on the Distribution of the Bishops' Address made its report which was adopted. After a few minor matters were considered the Conference adjourned with the benediction by Bishop Key.

Fourth Day.

After Bishop Candler called the Conference to order, Rev. W. P. Lovejoy, of the North Georgia Conference conducted the devotional exercises. Dr. F. S. Parker, one of the Assistant Secretaries, at the conclusion of the devotional exercises, read the minutes of the proceeding session.

The Bishop then announced the Committee on the General Items of the Episcopal Address, that had been called for the day before, as follows: J. O. Wilson, W. D. Bradfield, and T. D. Ellis. The Bishop also announced that the College of Bishops had appointed J. R. Bond to take the place of C. M. Hay on the committee to consider the Vanderbilt University matter.

Bishop Morrison then took the chair as the president for the day. After the Conference had attended to some minor matters, such as noting the arrival of delegates, the Committee on Rules of Order made its report No. 2. The 21 Rules of Order for the General Conference were then adopted ad seriatim.

A paper, signed by several ministers and laymen, calling for the appointment of a Committee on Evangelism was then read and adopted. Another paper was adopted setting the time at 11 o'clock, Tuesday, May 12, for a special service in memory of the death of Dr. Thomas Coke, Bishop Candler being requested to deliver the memorial address on the occasion. Another resolution was adopted that a commission be appointed to examine the charters of our connectional boards, of the trustees of the Church, and the charter of the Publishing House, to see if they properly secured the holdings of the Church.

Memorials, petitions, and appeals were next presented from the various Annual Conferences. After these and some other minor matters were attended to properly, the Committee on Revisals made its report No. 1, which recommended from various memorials that the Conference change the wording of the Apostles' Creed so that "the Church of God" might take the place of "the holy Catholic Church." A minority report of non-concurrence from the Committee on Revisals was filed on the calendar together with the majority report.

The Committee on Episcopacy next made its report No. 1. It recommended non-concurrence to certain memorials to require the Bishop to consult church and preacher before making an appointment; to make the lay leaders of the districts members of the cabinet; to forbid the transfer of a preacher when the Bishop knew there were complaints against him; to limit the term of a Bishop to eight years, and to elect by the Annual Conference twice the number of presiding elders needed from which the Bishop may make his appointments. The report went to the calendar.

The Committee on Missions presented its report Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4. The reports recommended, according to memorials from the Board of Missions, the formation of another mission conference partly in Texas and Mexico; still another in California, Arizona, and Mexico, the creating of two new Annual Conferences in Mexico, Texas, and New Mexico, and that an Annual Conference for Indians be not formed in Oklahoma. The reports went to the calendar.

The Committee on Church Relations made its report No. 2. It recommended, according to a memorial from the Louisiana Conference, an appeal to the President of the United States and Congress to appoint more chaplains in the army and navy. It was placed on the calendar.

After some minor discussion the Conference took up the calendar and adopted Church Extension report No. 1, given above. Report No. 1 of the Committee on Itinerancy, given above, was next in order and it was adopted ad seriatim. The last item pertaining to receiving ministers of the Methodist Protestant Church caused a lengthy discussion but was finally adopted.

The chair announced the members of the Committee on Charters that was called for previously, as follows: James Kilgore, J. D. Simpson, M. E. Lawson, R. M. Roddie, and Isaac Harr.

After a discussion lasting some time relative to the order of business before the Conference the motion to adjourn prevailed. The Secretary announced the Special Committee on Evangelism, the announcements for public worship for the Sabbath were made, and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Wilson.

Fifth Day.

Bishop Morrison opened the fifth day's session of the Conference at 9 o'clock promptly, and Rev. J. W. Daniel, of the South Carolina Conference, conducted the devotional exercises.

Secretary Watkins then read the minutes of the preceding session, and Bishop Hoss took the chair as president of the Conference for the day.

Reports certifying to the fulfilling of the tasks imposed as fraternal delegates were read from the following: Dr. F. J. Prettyman, who was the fraternal messenger to the Methodist Protestant Church at its last General Conference; Dr. F. M. Thomas, who was sent in this capacity to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Bishop Murrah, who carried a message to the Methodist Church of Japan.

Dr. W. P. Lovejoy, of Georgia, made a motion that, if carried out, would have increased largely the size of the Daily Christian Advocate. Dr. A. J. Lamar, one of the publishing agents, stated that the Treasurer had estimated that the expense of the General Conference would amount to about $30,000, and to thus increase the size of the Advocate would mean an added expenditure. Dr. Lovejoy's motion was lost.

After the roll of the Annual Conferences was called for, appeals, memorials and resolutions, of which there were many presented at this time, and a resolution was passed to add to the name "Committee on Church Relations" the words and Bible Cause," the Committee on Itinerancy made its report No. 2. The report recommended non-concurrence in its three items, which were as follows: To change paragraph 81, section 4, chapter 2, of the Discipline, so that only the presiding elder, after consulting with the preacher in charge, should have authority to call special meetings, etc., of the quarterly conference; (2) to change paragraphs 164 and 165, section 9, chapter 3, of the Discipline; so that a preacher could be superannuated on account of the physical disability of his wife; (3) to change the Discipline so that the district conference committee could examine into all the qualifications of a candidate for license to preach, and leaving the matter of his license, after the report of the examining committee, to the two-thirds vote of the district conference. After a long debate on the house Rules, the report took its place on the calendar.

The Committee on Church Extension made its reports Nos. 2 and 3. It recommended non-concurrence with a memorial advocating that seventy-five per cent of the money collected for Church Extension be appropriated by the Annual Conference and that twenty-five per cent be forwarded to the Parent Board. In report No. 3 the Committee called attention to the widening business and growth of Church Extension work.

The Committee on Boundaries and Finance made its report No. 1. It recommended concurrence with memorials to consolidate the Arkansas and White River Conferences. This important report took its proper place, with others, on the calendar.

The Special Committee on the Episcopal Address presented the following resolutions, which were adopted at once by the Conference:

1. Resolved, That the quadrennium following this General Conference shall fix as its supreme aim the salvation of men, the building up of believers in the most holy faith, and the advancement of the cause of Christian education.

2. That our Chief Pastors shall lead us in these efforts, using any plans that may be formulated, or going forward if no plans be fixed upon.

3. That as one means for awakening and informing our people half a million copies of the Address be printed by our Publishing House and furnished without cost to our people. (Signed by J. O. Wilson, W. D. Bradfield, and T. D. Ellis.) It was decided by the Conference, however, that the number of copies of the address to be printed would be left with the publishing agents, who were to be governed by the demand.

The Laymen's Missionary Committee made its report No. 1. The report consisted merely of a statement of having met and elected T. B. King as chairman and R. F. Burden as secretary.

Other business being exhausted for the moment, the Calendar was taken up and reports Nos. 1, 2, and 3 from the Committee on Missions were considered (see proceedings of the fourth day). No. 1 had been referred back to the Committee on a technicality. Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were adopted by the Conference and became law. Report No. 2 of the Committee on Church Relations (see fourth day's proceedings) was adopted also.

A motion that it be taken up out of order gave precedent to report No. 3 of the Committee on Church Relations. This report recommended that all the work of our Church on behalf of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church be transferred from the control of the Board of Education to the control of the Board of Missions. Considerable debate took place upon this recommendation. Bishop Candler finally expressed his opinion, as he said he was profoundly convinced that this would be a serious error. Upon motion, the report was referred to the Board of Education.

The benediction was pronounced by Rev. Wm. Bradfield, of England.

Sixth Day.

Bishop Hoss called the session to order at 9 o'clock, and Dr. H. M. DuBose led the morning devotions.

After the reading of the minutes of the preceding session and their adoption, Bishop Atkins took the chair as president of the Conference. Resolutions, petitions, amendments, memorials, telegrams, and other papers, all in the regular day's business, came up in these opening minutes in being mentioned, and recorded by the secretaries, and then they took their proper courses to the various committees.

The Committee on Revisals made its reports Nos. 2, 4, and 5. In No. 2 the Committee recommended concurrence in a memorial from the Louisville District Conference, that the preacher when performing the marriage ceremony shall say "husband," instead of "man," in the sentence, "I pronounce that they are man and wife together." No. 4 recommended concurrence in a memorial to substitute the word "church" for the word "society," or "societies," in paragraphs 28, 29, 30, and 31, chapter 1, section 2, of the Discipline of 1910. No. 5 recommended non-concurrence in a memorial to change the Discipline so that trustees of Church property would hold office for nearly a year; non-concurrence in a memorial praying that stewards be permitted to assist in administering the Lord's Supper, and it made no recommendation on a memorial "concerning the method of making the apportionment of connectional assessments." The report took its proper place in the order of business.

The Committee on Education made its reports 1 and 3. In No. 1 the Committee recommended, on account of some objectionable features of the present one, that a new charter be taken out by the Board of Education and that all the charters in the Church be looked into that they might be made intact if found faulty. Report No. 3 recommended that, on the order of the College of Bishops, the Board of Education pay the balance of the expenses of the Vanderbilt University lawsuit.

The Committee on Missions made its reports Nos. 5 and 6. The main import of No. 5 was that it recommended that the Discipline be changed so as to let one Sunday, as is now the case, in every month be Missionary Day in the Sunday schools, but that the entire missionary offering, together with any other missionary offerings, special and regular, made in the school, be a separate fund to be designated as a missionary offering from the Sunday school that shall be sent to the Conference Treasurer, who shall forward it to the General Board of Missions for use in its general work. The pastor shall report by voucher or cash these amounts at the Annual Conferences.

Ten per cent of this money shall be turned over by the Board of Missions to the Sunday School Board. If a Sunday school desires to pay this money on its Conference assessments it is still obligated to report the item to the Board of Missions. Other changes in the Discipline were recommended. Report No. 6 recommended the appointment of a Committee on Evangelism, which, under the department of Home Missions, shall promote revival work throughout the Church. A bureau of evangelism is spoken of in the report that might be under the direction of the Home Mission department. The Annual Conference Board of Missions shall also elect a Board of Evangelism that shall employ and direct and endorse evangelists who are to operate within its bounds. The preachers are requested to get these men to help them in their protracted services instead of any from the outside.

The Committee on Temperance and Social Service made its reports Nos. 2 and 3. There was both a majority and minority report on No. 2 before the Conference. The majority report recommended concurrence in many memorials to require all applicants for the ministry to agree to abstain from the use of tobacco. The minority report advised the General Conference not to take this step on account of its being class legislation, viz: that many ministers could use tobacco and others could not, and that some ministers of the Church would be bound where the laymen were not. No. 3 of this Committee recommended that the Conference express its appreciation of the work done by the Sunday League of America, and that it pledge the League its sympathy and moral support.

The Committee on Revisals in its report No. 2 said it had had before it many petitions, memorials, telegrams, and resolutions praying for laity rights for women, but that it recommended non-concurrence in these and all similar papers to the General Conference. A minority report, however, was made from this Committee which recommended to the Conference certain changes in the Discipline which would give laity rights to women.

The Committee on Education made its report No. 2. This was a lengthy paper commending a proper and well-thought-out plan for the advancement of educational interests in the Department of Ministerial Supply and Training, in maintaining a chair of religious education in conjunction with the other two great Boards of the Church, and in other ways.

The Conference at this time took up the consideration of report No. 1 of the Committee on Revisals, which recommended the before-mentioned change in the wording of our Apostles' Creed. A long and earnest debate ensued which gave way only to the order of the day, that Bishop Candler speak in memory of Thomas Coke.

Bishop Candler's speech on this occasion is printed verbatim in the Daily Advocate. It was a memorable one, well prepared even in detail, and rendered in the choicest of language. The Conference thanked this distinguished Church leader for his estimable address on this occasion.

The debate on the proposed change in the Apostles' Creed continued from this time till the moment of adjournment, when the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Atkins.

Seventh Day.

At 9 o'clock Bishop Atkins called the Conference to order. Dr. S. H. C. Burgin, of the West Texas Conference, led the morning devotional exercises.

The first business for the day was the passing of a motion to hear Dr. C. S. McFarland, a representative of the Federated Council of Churches of Christ in America, at 11:30 o'clock on Thursday.

Bishop Denny took the chair as president for the session.

Time was given for the hearing and referring of petitions, memorials, appeals, and resolutions, and many more were presented from the various Annual Conferences.

The Committee on Itinerancy made its report No. 2 again, and this time accompanied by a minority report. It recommended non-concurrence upon several memorials asking that the time limit be removed in its application to presiding elders and preachers in charge, that the time limit be extended from four to six years; that a Bishop shall not allow any elder to be a presiding elder more than four years; that a preacher be allowed the supernumerary relation on account of the physical disability of his wife, and that the committee of the district conference appointed to examine an applicant for license to preach shall be authorized to investigate all matters of the candidate's qualifications, and that it shall require a two-thirds vote of the district conference to grant the license. The minority report of this Committee concurred in a memorial from the North Georgia Conference asking in substance that the law be changed so that an elder can not be a presiding elder more than four years successively.

The Committee on Church Extension made its report No. 4. It recommended concurrence in the general idea expressed in several memorials that the Board of Church Extension make a study of the subject of church insurance to report to the next General Conference. This Committee further made its report No. 5 at this time, which recommended non-concurrence with a memorial from the Board of Church Extension asking that it be empowered to change its charter so that it could issue bonds to the amount of one-half the loan fund capital. This Committee's report No. 6 recommended, according to memorials before it, that article 11, paragraph 397, and article 13, paragraph 399, of the Discipline be changed in several details, the most important of which was to fix the disciplinary law so that City and District Boards of Church Extension could be incorporated according to the laws of the States within which they operate.

The Committee on Boundaries and Finance made its reports Nos. 1 and 2. Report No. 1 defined boundaries for the change in Conferences in Arkansas; and report No. 2 consisted of a recommendation of non-concurrence in several proposals to change the disciplinary law, the substance of the proposed changes not being given in the memorial, and only the disciplinary references were made.

The Committee on the Laymen's Missionary Movement presented its report No. 2. It recommended several detail changes in the disciplinary law, where it refers to the Laymen's Movement, and further suggested to the Conference that the Executive Committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement as now constituted shall be a standing committee during the next quadrennium to encourage the laymen to organize for effective service.

The Committee on Publishing Interests presented its reports Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4. The most important item in these reports was the recommendation that the General Conference declare its purpose to have an authorized Conference organ, or the general organ, in every home connected with the Church; and that the Church own and control all its church papers, either through the Annual Conferences or the General Conference control, and this ownership to be had as fast as practicable; that merely local or independent church papers, beyond a congregational bulletin, should not be encouraged; and that the General Boards and Conference Boards should co-operate in the matter of publicity. It was also recommended that a Publicity Bureau be established by the Book Committee, somewhat after the order of the Associated Press, that will collect and distribute news among our church papers. It recommended that the territory of the Church be divided into several districts, and that an effort be made to combine papers where there are more than is needed in any given area. The Committee, in report No. 2, advocated not having anything to do with the matter of a "lockout" of the members of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders from our Publishing House at Nashville, after having considered a petition from the Brotherhood, and advised that it was a matter to be referred to the Book Committee. The Committee's report No. 3 advised against a minor change in the Discipline that would give license to an Annual Conference to appoint one of its members to do colportage work in its bounds. Report No. 4 recommended non-concurrence in the memorial from the Louisiana Conference asking that a list of books for a certain purpose be prepared and published.

All these reports took their places upon the calendar.

The discussion of the proposed change in the Apostles' Creed, that of substituting the words "the Church of God" for "the holy catholic Church," was resumed at this time. The debate was long and earnest. Finally a vote of Orders was demanded. This meant that the laymen and ministers should vote separately upon the matter, and to make the proposed change both the body of laymen and the body of clergymen must favor it with a majority vote. The vote was taken on the report No. 1 of the Committee on Revisals, which had recommended that the change be made. The outcome was as follows: Clerical—Ayes 74, nays 57; lay—Ayes 86, nays 59. As the resolution to change did not receive the majority vote of both clerical and lay delegates separately, it was lost.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on Episcopacy (given in the fourth day's proceedings) was adopted. Report No. 2 of the Committee on Church Extension (reported in the fifth day's proceedings) was adopted. The Committee on Church Extension's report No. 3 (reported in the fifth day's proceedings) caused much debate, and it was recommitted.

The Committee on Church Relations and Bible Cause presented its reports Nos. 5 and 6. Report No. 5 recommended approval of the creation of the proposed Ecumenical Methodist Commission; that ten members be appointed by the College of Bishops on the Commission, and that $300 be appropriated out of the General Conference fund for the maintenance of the headquarters of this Commission. Report No. 6 commended the work of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and approved its appointment of H. F. Carroll to open an office in Washington in the interests of that body to promote peace among the nations. These reports went to the calendar.

After adjournment the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Y. Yoshioka, the fraternal delegate from Japan.

Eighth Day.

Bishop Collins Denny called the Conference to order, after which Rev. W. A. Hanna conducted the devotional services. The minutes of the preceding session were read and approved. Bishop Denny announced that Bishop Kilgo was not well enough to preside at this session, and accordingly Bishop Murrah would be the president for the day. Bishop Murrah then assumed charge of the Conference.

After the referring of petitions, memorials, and resolutions to the proper committees, the Committee on Revisals presented its reports Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10. Report No. 6 recommended, after reciting several memorials, that the Conference present to the Annual Conferences the question, "Shall the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, be changed to that of the 'Episcopal Methodist Church?'" A minority report accompanied report No. 6 recommending non-concurrence in this and similar memorials. Report No. 7 recommended non-concurrence to several memorials asking that the Discipline be so changed that the "Joint Board of Finance" of the Annual Conferences be called "the Board of Finance." Report No. 8 recommended, at the suggestion of a memorial, that all reference to class leaders and class meetings be stricken from the Discipline; it recommended non-concurrence to a proposal to allow a pastoral charge to elect as many stewards as might be deemed necessary; it recommended non-concurrence to a memorial to allow the quarterly conferences, and not the district conferences, to license preachers; it recommended non-concurrence with a memorial to allow all members of boards the full privilege of the floor of the Conference on all matters pertaining to the work of their respective boards; and it recommended non-concurrence with a memorial to allow the district stewards to be members of the district conferences. Report No. 9 recommended concurrence with a memorial to strike out the words "when absent" from paragraph No. 118 of the Discipline, and to change paragraph No. 77 by inserting after "the" in the second line "close of the." Report No. 10 recommended non-concurrence with a memorial asking that laws shall be made to prevent dancing, card playing, and whiskey drinking by Church members. While the Committee agreed with the spirit of the memorial, it deemed such legislation unnecessary in view of the clear utterances along those lines in the present Discipline.

The Committee on Education made its report No. 4, which purported to say that this Committee had considered report No. 3 of the Committee on Church Relations, and it recommended in substance that the secretaries of the various boards of our Church confer with the secretaries of the boards of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, and that each of our boards make such appropriations and take such action as it deems wise for the accomplishment of the common tasks of the two Churches.

The Committee on Temperance and Social Service presented its reports Nos. 4 and 5. These reports recommended non-concurrence with memorials asking for the enactment of a law defining the status of a member of our Church who has obtained a divorce, or married a person who has obtained one, contrary to the Scriptures and our book of Discipline; they recommended non-concurrence with this memorial also in that it asked that due consideration be given to the subject of requiring proper health certificates before marriage; and they differed from a memorial that had asked a special commission to be appointed to act during the coming quadrennium on all matters concerning social service, leaving these questions to the Board of Missions.

Reports Nos. 7 and 8 of the Committee on Missions were handed in at this time. Report No. 7 recommended that the Conference strike out paragraph 385 of the present Discipline and insert a whole new section to be entitled "Of the Missions," which may give direction to such work. A memorial came from the Board of Missions to this effect. Report No. 8 recommended concurrence with another memorial from the Board of Missions to make it the duty of the Board of Missions to pay to the Board superintending the Epworth Leagues, as a cultivation fund for the development of mission liberality, a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amounts contributed by the Epworth Leagues for missionary specials.

The Conference at this time, at the suggestion of a telegram received from "some of the brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church," engaged in prayer for the success of the negotiations opening next Monday looking to a pacific solution of the Mexican troubles. Bishop Morrison led the prayer.

The reports that had been placed on the calendar were taken up in their proper order. Report No. 1 of the Committee on Boundaries and Finance was adopted, first by items, and then as a whole. (See the fifth day's proceedings.)

W. D. Bradfield and U. V. W. Darlington presented a resolution that the General Conference had heard with sorrow of the bereavement of Bishop Denny in the loss of his grandchild, and that it express thereby its sympathy with him and the sorrowing parent at home. The Conference adopted the resolution by a rising vote.

The Conference set Saturday, May 16, 11:30 a.m., as the order of the day for hearing the address of Y. Yoshioka, the fraternal messenger from the Methodist Church of Japan.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on the Laymen's Missionary Movement (see fifth day's record) was read and adopted.

Report No. 4 of the Committee on Revisals (see sixth day's proceedings) was read and adopted, but a few moments afterwards a motion to reconsider prevailed. Report No. 5 of this Committee (sixth day's record) was read and a motion to adopt it prevailed, but in a few moments the motion was reconsidered and item No.

1 of the report was recommitted to the Committees. Items Nos. 2, 3, and 4 of report No. 5 were then adopted by the Conference.

Report No. 5 of the Committee on Missions (sixth day's proceedings) came next upon the calendar. After much debate the report as a whole was adopted. Report No. 6 of the same Committee (sixth day's proceedings) was laid on the table until the Committee on Evangelism, since report No. 6 contained recommendations that were interesting to that Committee, could further proceed with its considerations.

Report No. 2 of the Committee on Temperance and Social Service (sixth day's proceedings) was read together with the minority report, the subject being the matter of ministers using tobacco; but the order of the day had been reached for hearing Dr. C. S. McFarland, Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches. After his speech the Conference adjourned, and Dr. W. I. Haden pronounced the benediction.

A session was held in the evening to hear Dr. Samuel P. Rose and Mr. George F. Johnston, the fraternal delegates from the Methodist Church of Canada.

Ninth Day.

Bishop Murrah called the Conference to order at 9 o'clock, and Rev. J. R. Countiss, of Mississippi, led the devotional exercises. The minutes of the preceding day's actions were read and approved and Bishop J. C. Kilgo took the chair.

After the Committee on Rules had made report No. 3, that dealt with the manner of presentation of resolutions to the Conference, alternates had been seated, some memorials had been referred to the proper committees, an invitation from Jacksonville, Florida, that the next General Conference be held there, had been referred to the Special Committee on Entertainment, the house Rules were suspended and a resolution was passed endorsing the Hobson Amendment, now pending in Congress, upon the liquor traffic. A resolution of sympathy in regard to our Mexican missions was adopted, and still another passed the Conference commending the Secretary of the Navy for discontinuing the use of liquors on our naval ships.

The Committee on Itinerancy presented its reports Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6. Report No. 3 contained the nomination of the Committee on Appeals, and it was adopted at once. No. 4 recommended non-concurrence upon various memorials advocating different schemes of changing the present relation of the presiding-eldership with the Church polity; with a memorial to enlarge the presiding elder's districts; and also with a memorial to allow laymen to participate in the trial of a preacher. No. 5 recommended non-concurrence with memorials upon the following: That the trial of a probationer be taken from the power of the quarterly conference of the charge he serves and be placed with the district conference; that all questions involving the location of a traveling preacher be referred to the Committee on Conference Relations and that it require two-thirds vote of the Annual Conference to overrule its decision; and that the Bishops be requested to prepare a course of study for our Indian preachers. The report recommended concurrence with memorials upon the following matters: That a preacher in charge may publicly install all effective officers of the Church upon a day appointed; that the licensing committee of the district conferences be empowered to recommend for readmission into the Annual Conferences; and that a preacher may remain four years in a pastoral charge or upon a district extra to the filling out of an expired term of less than six months. Report No. 6 recommended non-concurrence as follows: "That a preacher under accusation of immorality be allowed to withdraw from the Conference and the record in his case be 'withdrawn under complaints (or charges)'; that it be the duty of the presiding elder to notify the Bishop when a preacher has been suspended; and that without previous reprimand, if the gravity of the case warrants, the committee of investigation shall have full power to try a

THE SUPERNATURAL

By Rev. George G. Barnes.

The Supernatural in the word itself means, is above nature. Who would be willing to stand up before an audience of ordinary intelligence, and say he believed there was not anything above nature that he thought the way the nature he himself, were the highest thought, the wisest way, the noblest nature, the most glorious person in the universe? What kind of a creature would he be, who, with God's handwork about him, God's favoring before him, God's way every where on land and on sea, and in his sanctuary, could believe there is no supernatural? He would be rejected by the blind legend, who hearing a multitude passing by, inquired what this meant. It meant they told him, "that Jesus of Nazareth passed by." That supernatural fact stirred the multitude. Here was the fulfillment of the angel's announcement to the shepherds of good tidings of great joy to all people, that unto us has come a Saviour, who is Christ, the Lord.

The attempt to destroy the supernatural in the Holy Scriptures is a strange working of the mystery of iniquity. Supposing they did destroy the supernatural in the Holy Scriptures, would these men be content to permit the supernatural any relation to human conduct and destiny, and would they allow Jesus of Nazareth to seek and save the lost, and bind up the broken-hearted?

The supernatural everywhere is about us. A child kneels down and prays—there is the supernatural, the child knowing God, speaking to him, and God listening to and blessing the child.

Look up at the stars—is there nothing supernatural about the stars, about their creation, preservation, government? We cannot get rid of the supernatural by denying the miracles of the Bible. The supernatural is in seed-time and harvest, in summer and winter; the promise, the gifts, the ordinances of God. Unless the infidel can explain seed-time and harvest, the sprouting wheat and the garnered grain, he should have no difficulty in believing the miracles of the Bible. Belief in the miracles of the Bible is a thing of perception. A deaf man is not a judge of music. A great singer sings, a great orator speaks in his presence, and he hears neither music nor oratory; not because there is no music and no oratory, but because he is deaf. A blind man is not a judge of colors. A sculptor sees living persons in stones. He takes his chisel and hammer, and breaks away parts of the stones, so that others may see what he sees—the fact, the personality, the soul, the characteristics, the unselfish purpose, the wisdom, courage, patience, the nobility of the benefactor of his kind. Peter saw in the draft of the fishes the deity of Jesus of Nazareth, and fell down at Jesus' feet, praying, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord."

There is more truth in superstition than in atheism. No nation has ever been founded on atheism. There are elements of truth in polytheism; there is no truth in atheism. It is more intelligent to believe in many gods than in none. The polytheistic Athenians built an altar "To an Unknown God." Paul said to them: "What therefore ye worship in ignorance, this I set forth unto you." And the great Apostle of Christ quoted their own poets, who said: "For we are also his offspring."

There is in polytheism a groping after the living God. Atheism, false, faithless, heartless, has no altar to an unknown god, no room, no desire for him.

A water lily shrouds its bloom when darkness falls upon it; it closes its folds about the flower when the night touches it. What in the daylight is a beautiful, wondrous flower, becomes when darkness falls upon it, a hard, unsightly ball. When touched by the light, the bulb opens, the flower comes forth, with its long white petals and its heart crowned with glory. Atheism blights men. When touched by the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, men come forth from their moral death and ghastly fears, live, grow, rejoice, and become the children of God. Paul, crossing over from the Continent of Asia to the Continent of Europe, bringing the Word of God, did more to banish the superstitious fears, and fill of Europe, than all of the philosophers had done. The remedy for superstition is not an academic education, but a Christian education. When the disciples saw Jesus walking on the sea, they thought they saw a ghost and were afraid. Their superstition was not banished, their fears were not removed by philosophy or science, but by the word of the Lord, "Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid."

There was more in the lives of the Bethlehem shepherds than keeping sheep, than milk and calves. The supernatural was in their lives; the angel, the story of the Lord, the Son of God, made flesh. There is more in our lives than the day's labor, the day's wages, the cares which bow down the heart. The sheep were not a sufficient possession for the shepherd, the money not a sufficient possession for the merchant, nor the bank for the banker, nor the book for the author, nor the song for the singer. We need to hear the good tidings of the Saviour, grace for grace, the forgiveness of sins, of life and peace, of divine sympathy, divine redemption.

A French orator, during the French Revolution, said, "God is as necessary as liberty." Without the supernatural there is no liberty. It is God in history who makes for righteousness and liberty. A so-called theology, substituting the empty imaginations of men for the Holy Scriptures, is not theology, but anthropology, and a very muddy anthropology.—The Presbyterian.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Brookhaven District Conference was held in the hospitable town of Wesson, Miss., May 27, 1914.

This was in every respect an unusually good Conference. Rev. Robert Selby, P. E., presided in his characteristic business-like and courteous manner, seeing to it that no interest of the church within the district was neglected.

The pastors' reports were replete with evidences of wide-awake activity, and indicated progress made, and high hopes of better things yet to be.

Revs. M. M. Black, Missionary Secretary, W. M. Williams, of our Orphanage, H. M. Ellis, of the Methodist Hospital, and Dr. J. M. Sullivan, of the faculty of Millsaps College, gave account of their stewardship in their respective fields of labor and made strong appeals in behalf of the enterprises they represent.

The preaching of the occasion was done—and well done—by Revs. W. H. Saunders, B. F. Lewis and T. B. Clifford.

While not a part of the District Conference, mention should be made of a most admirable address delivered by Dr. LaPrade on Tuesday evening of the Conference at the Commencement exercises of the Wesson High School. The Conference accepted the invitation of Prof. Landis, the principal, and attended the exercises which were in every way creditable.

The Woman's Missionary work of the Church was well represented by Mrs. B. F. Lewis for the Home Department, and Mrs. W. H. LaPrade for the Foreign Department.

Two young men, Porter Myers Caraway and Charles Warren Wesley, were licensed to preach.

One of the most interesting features of the Conference was the reading of the report of the Finance Committee, and the discussion following the reading of that report. The report, the discussion, and the conclusions reached, indicate that the thought and conscience of the Church within the district have been awakened on the subject of Church finance and its best methods. The laymen are coming to the front and are ready to do their part in the Church's work.

Mr. V. D. Youngblood was elected Lay Leader for the District.

The following were elected delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference: V. D. Youngblood, P. H. Enochs, T. W. Sullivan and Dr. Henry Flowers. Alternates: E. Z. Minor and C. C. Jones.

Communion was served at the best place of meeting.

The benediction of the pastor and people of Wesson was of the highest type.

According to the latest reports a session was held at Bay St. Louis, the evening following the adjournment of the Conference.

J. A. MOORE, Secretary.

BE BRAVE.

It was a principle with one of England's great modern artists never to reveal the frequent moods of sorrow to which his sensitive temperament made him the victim, but rather always to display a brave and hopeful temper—"to ease life for everybody," as he said. It is a chivalrous way in which to bear one's self for the sake of the encouragement which even the forced attitude of good cheer may bring.

There is a very subtle danger in sorrow; it tends to magnify itself and to induce selfishness. It pushes into the inner circle of all occasions and declares its presence. We must reckon with this, and not permit the thrusting forward of gloom or grief. Life does need to be made easier for everybody, for there is so much in it that is disheartening at the best. We all need to be heartened, and it is the gracious ministry of many who feel the sorrow of the world most keenly to bear themselves so bravely that their very presence brings blessing. In the process of encouraging others we ourselves become braver. One way in which to prevent despair is to make life easier for others by the assertion of what little bravery we have at the moment. This act induces courage. It also helps the battle for our friends.—Zion's Herald.

LIFE'S LONELINESS.

The heart's deep desire for fellowship finds no complete satisfaction except in God. The soul can have no real companion except in him. How easy it is for the strongest ties of love or friendship to be severed. The truth is that the only perfect union of hearts is in God. Between husband and wife, between parent and child, between friend and friend, there is a great gulf fixed that God alone can bridge. The little wall of flesh that incloses the inward man is a prison that neither the inmate nor those without can unlock. The space that separates each life from its nearest neighbor is as impassable as the space that separates us from Mars and Jupiter. But no such wall and no such gulf separates us from the Father of spirits. "Say not in thy heart, Who shall descend into the deep to bring Him up? He is nigh thee, for in Him we live and move and have our being."

He that has never entered into the secret place and found himself in the very presence of Him who dwelleth in secret has never entered the inheritance that God has prepared for all his children. Neither has he ever been really united with any human heart. There is no true or lasting union except in Him. He is the charity, the eternal love that is the perfect bond, the one life in which alone other lives may become one.—Grace Truth.

THE SWEETEST GIFT.

"God thought to give the sweetest gift
In His almighty power
To earth, and deeply wondering
What it should be, one hour
In purest joy and love of heart—
Outweighing every other—
He moved the gates of heaven apart,
And gave to earth—a Mother!"

YOUR FACE BETWEEN MOTHER'S HANDS.

Edgar L. Vincent.

When mother calls you to her side and takes your face between her two hands, looking straight down into your soul, what does she see there?

Ah, how you hope she will find nothing wrong when she thus searches your heart! Not for the world would you have her dear heart made sad by the thought that somehow into the life of the boy she loves so well has come one single thing which would make him less true, less manly, less noble than he was when first she looked into his eyes!

Far rather would you have her see that as the days go by you are growing to be true, strong to stand for the right, worthy of the love and the confidence she places in you. You like to have others think well of you; that may help some day when you want to go out and work in the world's busy fields; but you long for the love of mother! Nothing less will ever satisfy you than that.

How can you be sure that as she holds you face to face she never will turn away with tears in her eyes and whisper to herself, "I have lost him! O, I have lost my pure, sweet, little one!"

There is only one way, and let us be so thankful that there is one way.

The artist who would paint things of beauty must look at the beautiful in the world about him. To help him know what art is he travels the world over and stays long in its greatest galleries. No one who would make a beautiful statue would think of taking his lessons from one whose whole life as a sculptor had been a failure. The most perfect possible must be his models.

What is the pattern of your heart life? That will tell the story of your face and your soul. Thinking pure thoughts, looking long at the life once lived here in the world by the Son of God, holding up before you his matchless ideals—this is the way to keep the life growing better.

Think for a moment of the young girl who day by day seemed to be more and more sweet, tender, and loving. One asked her how it was that she should thus show more and more of the life beautiful, not simply in her face, but in her very soul. With a smile she opened a locket at her neck and showed the friend this little verse from the Bible:

"Whom having not seen we love!"

That was her secret. Make it yours!

MOTHER SILVER'S SPECTACLES.

When Mrs. Silver stopped one day to think about herself, she found that she was past the age at which most people begin to wear glasses. Her husband had put them on long before. It was a wonder she had not realized sooner how much she needed them. A few evenings later she beamed upon her family at dinner time through a brand-new pair of spectacles. "Now this is like living!" she exclaimed. "To think that there's a beautiful pattern in the parlor wall paper, and I never knew it till to-day! Do you hear, father? That paper's been on the wall three years, and I thought 'twas a plain, tan color. And what's this? A new tablecloth?"

Everybody that was looking at her as she sat down protested. "You know when we got this tablecloth and all about it."

"I never saw that rosebud design till this minute," Mrs. Silver declared. "It's lovely, too.

Why, I feel as if I had a lot of splendid new things."

Just then something called her from the table; and while she was gone, her husband said musingly: "Your mother is just the opposite from my Aunt Cornelia when she first put on glasses. Uncle Robin brought 'em home from town one day—he thought maybe she was beginning to need them—and the first thing she did after she got 'em on was to take one of the children by the shoulders and say: 'Mercy! I didn't know you had freckles.'"

"But that's just like mother, not the opposite," small Tim demurred.

"No; the difference is that my Aunt Cornelia discovered freckles and dust in corners and grease spots and everything bad until life wasn't worth living to the rest of the family."

"I never thought of that," said the grown-up daughter. "Mother must be discovering unpleasant things too. She hasn't spoken of one; but if her eyesight has been affected ever since we put that paper on the parlor, just think!"

"Just think!" Her father took up the words playfully. "Think of the lines and changes in my face alone that she hasn't known were there! But you won't catch her speaking of them. That isn't your mother's way."

"Let's make her tell if father's face does look any different to her," some one proposed, just as Mrs. Silver, quite unconscious that she was the subject of discussion, came back to the table.

Everybody was looking at her as she sat down and met her husband's eyes. Suddenly she leaned a little forward and studied his face intently with an expression that was tender, loving, sorry, all in one.

"Caught!" said one of the boys under his breath. "What have you just found out about father's face, Momsie? Tell us."

"H'm! What's that?" Mrs. Silver temporized, looking actually guilty.

"Go ahead and tell 'em, Mother," Mr. Silver coaxed. "I shan't mind."

"Mind!" There was a volume in the one word as she spoke it. Then she took off the wonderful glasses and wiped a little dew from them before she answered, glancing round the circle. "You don't know, children, what it means to me to see your father's smile again across the table as plain as ever. I was thinking, when I looked at him, how many of 'em I'd missed."—Youth's Companion.

SHAKESPEARE AND THE BIBLE.

The influence of the Bible on the writings of Shakspeare is manifested to the most casual reader. Direct quotations number more than five hundred and fifty, covering the widest range of religious thought and sentiment. Allusions of many kinds are used, indicating a literary acquaintance with Scripture, which enabled him to make use of it in simile and easy metaphor. When these quotations and allusions are carefully studied and classified, it is found that out of the sixty-six books of the Bible he quotes passages from fifty-four. This, however, is not all that can be said on this subject. Not one of his thirty-seven plays is without a Scripture reference. To be able to trace the influence of a book into every intellectual product of a great man's life bears a tribute to that Book which can not be disposed of without considerable thought. It is, first, a tribute to the Book. It possesses power to deposit its truths in moral motive and religious sentiment in the thought life of the individual. It furnishes a ready form for literary expression and dramatic plot. Back of all of Shakspeare's great plays is found a religious motive, and its interpretation is always given in the light of Scriptural truth. It is also a credit to the writer to display the influence of the Bible on his thought life. The strong, ethical truth of the Scriptures can not be retained in the life of the individual without eliminating all falsity and moral irregularity. It always manifests a corrective and purging power.

Shakspeare lived in a day when the Bible was one of the family books. It stood upon the shelf of those homes where books were valued as the highest possessions of the household. It was not then a popular book and comparatively few volumes of it were in print. John Gutenberg had given to the world a metal type for printing purposes, and one of the first books issued was a Latin Bible. John Wycliffe had translated the Scriptures into English three centuries before, but the Book was not within reach of the great mass of the people. And yet the people knew something of its teachings, and its stories regaled the evening fireside. In the world of scholarship the one Book which furnished reading for history and supplied studies for all literary art was the Bible. It was the text book for many lines of study. History, literature, religion, poetry, drama, theology, the art of war, and legal precedent all found a rich source of information in the Bible. It was considered a divine authority on all things upon which it had reason to give an opinion. Hence, when the English literature flowered in the great genius of William Shakespeare, its influence can be seen in every play he wrote.—Western Christian Advocate.

HARDEST THINGS FIRST.

There is never so easy a time to do a hard thing as the first opportunity we get for its doing. Every postponement then only makes the task harder. It may seem stupendously hard when we first face it; but if that is the time we ought to do it, it will never be so easy again. Efficient workers have learned, therefore, always to put their hardest tasks ahead of their easiest ones, when they can take their choice. The early morning, immediately upon entering the day's work, is a good time to plunge into the hardest things that await us. After that it is a simple matter to pass on to the easier tasks, and get them done. But how often we take the invitingly easier ones first, and find by night time that the day has been frittered away on them, while the hardest one is left over to be done "to-morrow," as it has been for so many days in the past! Rising up early in the morning seemed to be a favorite practice among the Bible men of strength when they had hard work on hand. We may be sure they did not rise up early in order to do the thing late that afternoon. With most of us, hardest things first, or hardest things not at all, must become the habit of our life.—Great Thoughts.

Few people really wish to make others unhappy, and those few would not be likely to read what I am saying. But it is probable that on the whole more unhappiness is caused by want of thought or of tact than by want of heart. Receive every one with a bright smile, kind words, and a pleasant welcome. It is not enough to love those who are dear to us. We must show that we do so. Many of us through ignorance, thoughtlessness, or want of judgment, wound those whom we love best, and most wish to help.—Lord Avebury.

"If a successful man boasts that he is self-made, do not believe him unless he shows that he is still at the job."

The Modern Home is the Home With a Telephone.

In these modern days, with distance almost annihilated, the home minus a telephone is figuratively cut off and isolated.

Household duties, social requirements, pleasure and entertainment, sickness and business are all more or less dependent upon the telephone.

Lonesome moments may be turned into pleasant conversation with friends and relatives in the next block or the adjoining State.

UNPROFITABLE SERVANTS.

The realization of the limitations of the flesh, in view of the tasks to be done, is appalling. The Sabbath school lesson for Sunday reveals not only Christ's understanding of his own mission upon earth, but that he rightly interpreted what would be the experience of Christians even after having done their best.

What, though Churches are built and congregations are assembled, has been done toward the salvation of the whole world? There are sixteen hundred millions of people on the earth and hundreds of millions of these have never heard the name of Christ. In the United States there are millions who never come into a church. Christians further face the fact that much hard labor is not permanent; for men practice apostasy, they often lack Christian virility, and in the place of a generation of professing Christians there may be later found one indifferent to such interests.

There is no time for a soldier of the cross to stop and commend himself. Neither, having done one's best, is there much of which to boast. Christ commended the confession: "We are unprofitable servants." After one of his missionary journeys, when not a few had been brought into the Church, Paul desired to go to Jerusalem to seek knowledge of those "of reputation" in the Church, lest by any means he himself had run in vain. He would also keep under subjection his body, lest in preaching to others he himself might be cast away. He boasted that Christ came to save sinners, but with inspiring humility confessed, "of whom I am chief." C. A. B.

TEACHING SEX HYGIENE IN SCHOOL.

Don't do it. Much is being said upon this subject at present. It appears to us to be one of these forward moves that are apparent on every side. It is in line with the modern dress, the freeness of talk between the sexes, and the general forwardness of the times in manners and modesty. We recognize the unreasonableness of asking people to keep in certain channels of action and custom merely because our fathers and mothers practiced them. But many do not care to try to practice tried customs because of the fact that our fathers and mothers did do them. Just anything that is different from the past is the demand of thousands.

But about this matter of teaching sex hygiene, it is a very delicate subject, and to leave it to a school teacher to bring before a class of children is to impose a burden that is not wanted, and for which any person not a father or a mother is not prepared.

The matter of sex hygiene was brought before the public some years ago merely to impress upon parents the good of teaching their children in the sanctuary of the home the lesson of life; and there was no thought by its primary advocate of its being urged as a subject for public school teaching.

There is much of the privacy of the home that is being taken away by one thing or other at present. It is hardly possible to preserve family life; parents themselves often find this necessary and must heavily, sometimes, upon the delicate fabric of the family ties that should be sacred.

We are living in an industrial age when the girls of the home in many instances have to take their places in factories and offices beside men and boys to labor for the support of the family. But should the fact of soil produce immorality? The parental roof should be the real shelter, no matter where the day is spent in work. From it should emanate the strongest sentiments in shaping character and destiny. Religion should primarily be taught beside mother's knee, and the Sunday school makes a good supplement. Those delicate questions of sex, that should scarcely ever be spoken above a whisper, should be taught in the privacy of the home to our boys and girls, by Christian parents. C. A. B.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

traveling preacher. The report recommended concurrence as follows: That a committee of investigation shall make an extract of its investigations and present it to the trial committee, but if this investigating committee deems a trial unnecessary, the Conference may appoint another if it so desires.

Reports Nos. 3 and 7 of the Committee on Church Extension were made and placed upon the calendar. Report No. 3 recommended the adoption of resolutions that endorsed the avowed purpose of the Board of Church Extension to increase the loan fund capital to not less than a million dollars during the next quadrennium, and that approved the judgment expressed by the Board at its annual meeting in May, 1914, that the time has come to secure a building better designed for the office of the Board, and to provide equipment necessary for the highest efficiency in its work and to properly safeguard and protect the records, mortgages, notes, deeds, and other valuable papers of the Board. Report No. 7 advocated non-concurrence with several memorials touching unification of the Home Department of the Board of Missions and the Board of Church Extension.

The Committee on Boundaries and Finance made its reports Nos. 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10 and 11. Report No. 4 recommended concurrence with the memorial from the Board of Missions to form the Texas Mexican Mission from that part of the Mexican Border Mission Conference lying in Texas. Report No. 5 recommended concurrence with the memorial from the Board of Missions to form a Mission Conference partly in Mexico and partly in the States of Arizona and California, and the report defined the boundaries of the proposed Mission Conference. Report No. 6 recommended concurrence with the memorial from the Board of Missions to establish two Annual Conferences from the Mexican Border Conference, the Central Mexico Conference, and the Northwest Mexican Conference, to be known as the Mexican Border Conference and the Central Mexico Conference, and the report defined the boundaries of the two proposed Conferences. Report No. 8 recommended concurrence with a memorial from the Illinois Conference to change certain boundary lines between the Illinois and the St. Louis Conferences, and the report defined the proposed changes. Report No. 9 recommended non-concurrence with a memorial from the Little Rock Conference asking for certain changes in the boundary lines of the Conferences in Arkansas. Report No. 10 recommended concurrence with a memorial from the Board of Missions concerning the boundary line of the Mississippi Conference, and the proposed changes were defined. Report No. 11 recommended concurrence in a memorial from the South Carolina Conference, that it be divided into two separate Conferences, and a plan for making the proposed division was formulated. All these reports went to the calendar.

Reports Nos. 1 and 2 of the Committee on Sunday schools went to the calendar. Report No. 1 recommended that all of section 3, chapter 4, be omitted from the present Discipline, and it gave an entirely new chapter to take the place of the omitted. Report No. 2 recommended that the report of the preacher on Sunday schools at the quarterly conference be made to conform to certain instructions in the proposed new legislation of report No. 1.

Reports Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 of the Committee on Publishing interests were made and placed on the calendar. Report No. 3 recommended non-concurrence with memorials relative to the publishing of tracts, saying that the necessary law is already in the Discipline. Report No. 4 recommended favorable action upon a memorial asking that the General Conference appropriate $10,000 for the next quadrennium toward the publishing of the Pacific Methodist Advocate. Report No. 7 recommended favorable action for a memorial asking that a Spanish translation be published of the forthcoming Book of Discipline. Report No. 8 advocated unfavorable action toward a memorial from the Louisiana Conference asking that concise statistical reports of the charges be published in the General Minutes. Report No. 9 advised non-concurrence on another memorial from the Louisiana Conference concerning election by quarterly conferences of agents for General and Conference organs. Report No. 10 favored concurrence with a memorial that asked that the Discipline be published in a more compact and handy form.

The Committee on Church Relations and Bible Cause made its reports Nos. 7 and 8. They took their place upon the calendar. Report No. 7 recommended that an assessment of 2 cents per member be placed upon the Church for the benefit of the American Bible Society, and that the College of Bishops make all arrangements for the participation of our Church in the Centennial celebration of the Society to take place in 1916. Report No. 8 consisted of a review of the actions of the Joint Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Protestant Church, and our Church that met at Chattanooga, Tenn., in May, 1911, and then made recommendations of actual union between the above named Churches, with the proviso that the negro element be set aside into an organization totally their own.

The Committee on Itinerancy made its report No. 3, which was adopted immediately. It contained the nominations of the members of the Committee on Appeals as follows: J. M. Barcus, M. E. Lawson, T. D. Ellis, J. A. McCullough, W. P. Lovejoy, Ocie Speer, and J. D. Simpson.

The Committee on the Laymen's Missionary Movement made report No. 3, which named the proposed executive committee of the Movement. It was placed on the calendar.

The Special Committee on Statistical Blanks made report No. 1, which recommended the appointment of a commission of three—B. C. Horton, J. R. Countiss, and R. E. Turnipseed—to act with the Agents of the Publishing House to prepare uniform statistical blanks for the Annual Conferences.

An address was issued by the Bishops with reference to a day of prayer for the peace negotiations (see report of seventh day's proceedings), and the Conference set Monday, May 18, at 11 o'clock, for a session of prayer to this gracious end.

The Special Committee on Vanderbilt University made its reports Nos. 1 and 2. Report No. 1 unanimously recommended the approval of the acts of the College of Bishops in connection with the litigation concerning Vanderbilt University during the past quadrennium. Report No. 2, representing the majority of the Special Committee, recommended that the Church transfer and convey unto the patronizing Conferences participating in the founding of Vanderbilt University all rights, title, interest, authority over and control in said university. It further recommended the appointing of a Commission consisting of sixteen members—four Bishops, four ministers other than Bishops, and eight laymen—that shall at the ear-best possible time provide for a Biblical school for the Church, and that shall consider the founding of an institution or institutions for the advancement of higher education. The minority report recommended to the General Conference that it proceed to exercise its right in the University, according to the findings of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, through the Board of Education. This report of the minority was signed by W. A. Christian, H. N. Snyder, J. M. McCormick, J. W. Perry, T. S. Garrison, and F. M. Thomas.

An evening session of the Conference was held to hear Dr. Matt S. Hughes, the fraternal delegate from the Methodist Episcopal Church, "who delivered an eloquent address to a large congregation."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Born, May 13, 1914, to Rev. and Mrs. C. D. Atkinson, of Crowley, La., a girl. Her name is Frances Ruth Atkinson, and her weight is 10 pounds.

The American Bible Society has opened up a depository at St. Mark's Hall, 908 Esplanade Ave. Any one desiring Bibles can get them there at actual cost.

Bishop J. H. McCoy will deliver the Commencement Sermon at Millsaps College on June 7, and the Annual Address will be given by Dr. H. M. DuBose, of Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. E. C. Gunn, of the Long Beach (Miss.) charge, called at the Advocate office on Saturday, May 15. Brother Gunn is looking well, and he reports that his charge is doing nicely.

The Advocate has received two well arranged folders containing the order of worship that was followed at Morgan City and Berwick, La., on Mother's Day. Rev. C. C. Weir is a noble and successful pastor.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, of the Bethel and Mississippi City charge, Gulfport, is conducting a series of meetings at our Wesley House, Biloxi. The report comes that "the congregations are large, and interest is growing daily."

Rev. C. M. Morris, our pastor at Mooringsport, La., asks that we print the following: "I will be available for revival work for a number of weeks during the summer months. Will either lead in singing or preach, as desired."

Rev. C. E. Fike, our pastor at Patterson, La., says in a business note to the Advocate: "We are making progress in Patterson. Our number is not great, but we have a faithful and excellent class of people. The Lord is in our work."

Rev. H. M. Johnson, of the Americus charge, Mississippi Conference, reports that his work is moving along nicely, and that he has "expectations of deep spiritual revivals." Brother Johnson has our best wishes and prayer for "revivalistic" success.

Rev. H. G. Henderson, of Lexington, Miss., assisted Rev. J. A. Poe at Cruger, Miss., in protracted services for a week, closing Sunday night, with the result of fifteen additions to the church. The church and community, we understand, were greatly revived.

Rev. E. C. Gunn, who is in charge of our Long Beach and Pass Christian (Miss.) work, has just closed a helpful protracted meeting at Pass Christian. We hear that "the attendance increased until the house was well filled, and much interest was manifest."

We hereby acknowledge, on behalf of the Advocate, subscriptions from the following friends: Rev. H. M. Johnson, Harleston, Miss., 5; Rev. W. H. Mounger, Coldwater, Miss., 4; Rev. C. E. Fike, Patterson, La., 3; Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, Greenville, Miss., 5; Rev. T. L. Bryson, Church Point, La., 7.

Rev. W. B. Perritt, our pastor at McNary, La., observed Mother's Day with much success, we note from the Alexandria Town Talk. A white flower was worn by those who attended the service in honor of the mothers. An exceptional musical program, befitting the occasion, was rendered.

Bereavement has fallen upon the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. May, Jr., of Waterproof, La., in the sad loss of their little daughter, Lila Turner, who was two years and 4 months old. Little Lila Turner was the granddaughter of Rev. H. W. May, of Alexandria, La., the presiding elder of the Alexandria District.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, our pastor at Carrollton Ave., New Orleans, has been indisposed for the past two weeks. But he is much improved now and is able to be about his Church duties. Brother Snelling's new church will be ready for occupancy in a short time. The benches are being installed at present. The church is beautiful, comfortable, and well planned.

A protracted service began at Handsboro, Miss., May 20. Rev. E. C. Gunn is assisting our pastor at Handsboro, which is on the Bethel and Mississippi City charge, Rev. W. T. Griffin, pastor, in this special series of meetings. Brother Griffin has the co-operation of several laymen in keeping all the mission appointments on his charge regularly supplied with leaders.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, until lately holding appointments in the Louisiana Conference, but since engaged in missionary work in Mexico, is in New Orleans. Brother Joyner, we understand, had a very narrow escape from death during the recent excitement in that country. On last Sunday Brother Joyner preached at Carrollton Ave. in the morning, and at Rayne Memorial in the evening.

Rev. G. H. Galloway, pastor of the Court Street Church at Hattiesburg, Miss., is assisting Rev. C. C. Gibson in protracted services at Coalville, Miss. The time of the year has begun when Methodists largely hold their revival campaigns. We are glad to note these special services, and we hope to hear of great results from this meeting and many others. The Advocate believes in revival services.

Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., has just returned from Georgia where he was engaged in holding two protracted meetings. Both at Bremen and Buchanan, Georgia, Brother Bass was quite successful. The people of Bremen have decided to build a brick church, perhaps on account of the meeting. Brother Bass has several open dates and would like to communicate with pastors who may desire his services.

The Advocate has received a kind note from Mrs. Randle, the wife of Rev. T. S. Randle, of the Louisiana Conference. Brother and Sister Randle have been at Brundage, Texas, but now are going to Carrizo Springs, to which place we are happy to change the address of their Advocate. These two beloved people, so long connected with Louisiana Methodism, are missed from the State, and we are glad to have news of them.

The Advocate has received an invitation to the Commencement Exercises of Grenada College, to be held May 23-26. There are twelve young ladies who compose the senior class. Each of them enjoys the good wishes of the Advocate. Bishop W. B. Murrah will preach the Commencement sermon, Rev. L. M. Lipscomb will preach the Y. W. C. A. sermon, and Rev. J. W. Irion will deliver the Commencement address.

"Rev. John Sholars, pastor of our Church at Rayne, La., who has been ill for several months, was on Monday, May 11, operated upon for an abscess of the liver. He is doing nicely, but it will be several months before he can assume his work. We request in his behalf the prayers of the Church." The Advocate is indebted to Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, the presiding elder of the Lafayette, La., district, for this notice. Brother Sholars and his family have the deep sympathy of the Advocate in his affliction.

Rev. W. A. Mangum, pastor of Keener Memorial Church, Baton Rouge, La., has just closed a revivalistic campaign with fine results. Rev. W. W. Drake did the preaching. One of the Baton Rouge papers contained the following: "This is a very loyal congregation, and the church has made great progress in the last two years. The new church will soon be ready for dedication. The pastor is planning to have a Bishop come in the fall and dedicate it. It will be remembered that this church came into existence from a cottage prayer meeting."

Rev. T. J. O'Neill, the newly elected president of Port Gibson Female College, with his two oldest daughters, has arrived at the College and is comfortably installed. Brother O'Neill's wife and other five children will join him in a few days. The people of Port Gibson have received their new president finely. Rev. C. M. Chapman, the out-going president, and Dr. T. B. Holloman, our pastor at Port Gibson, have made the new president feel at home. Brother Chapman desires that all the girls who anticipate going to Port Gibson Female College next fall write him at once and make arrangements.

Rev. W. M. Williams, the manager of our "Home" at Jackson, Miss., spent last Sunday in Greenwood, and at the close of the morning service our Brother Thayer suggested that a club be formed by which its members would obligate themselves to pay a specific amount each month in aid of the Home. In a few minutes a sufficient number had joined to guarantee the sum of fifty dollars a month, to be paid on the first of each month. A canvass will be made and it is hoped to double the amount. The originator of the club plan will see to it that collections are made promptly on the first of each month and the total forwarded to Brother Williams. Others might follow this fine example.

Rev. H. M. Ellis, of the Mississippi Conference, writes the following: "For some days I have been engaged in the Hospital Campaign of Greenville District. The district conference accepted $11,000 as the minimum share of the district, apportioned it on the several charges, and the presiding elder outlined the campaign for me. So far I have been able to present the cause and take collections at only eleven of the smaller churches, but nearly $5000 has been subscribed and a good deal of it paid. At Shelby, Brother H. L. Wilkinson gave $1000, while others gave about $450. Duncan, on the same charge, ran this to nearly $1800. If Alligator does anything like its share the charge will go well over $2000. At Coahoma Brother E. M. Fant, who had already sent in nearly $200, gave $1000, and it is probable this charge will pay another thousand. Shaw responded heartily to the appeal and at once subscribed $1000 in order to have a Memorial Room bearing its own name. At some places circumstances were such as to make postponement necessary. If other charges do as well as those above-named Greenville District will pay nearer $20,000 than the $11,000 accepted."

OUR AFRICAN MISSION.

After spending a month in London purchasing supplies, and two months in Belgium studying French, we set sail from Antwerp, accompanied by Bishop Lambuth and Rev. J. T. Mangum, on Nov. 8, last, for our present scene of labors.

We arrived at Matadi, on the lower Congo, twenty days later; thence two days by rail past the cataracts to Leopoldville, where we were met by the Presbyterian boat, the Lapsley, which they so generously placed at our disposal, and taken to their station at Luebo, and then on again to Lusambo, a total distance by river of more than 1000 miles.

The most trying part of our journey, and that which gives us the greatest difficulty in getting our supplies, is from Lusambo to this place. The distance is estimated at from 150 to 200 miles, and the only means of getting over it at present is to walk. But it is not the distance alone that is our chiefest concern, but the almost impassable condition of the path over that part of it from Lusambo to Lubefu. Sometimes we could scarcely climb through the narrow places between trees, among fallen logs, and up hills so steep that one had to hold on to bushes in order to climb at all; yet this is the only means by which we can hope to get our freight, or have any communication with the outside world, until we can get a boat for which we are praying, which will enable us to cut off this worst part of the trip and bring our things to Lubefu, when our overland journey will be shortened to about 60 miles, nearly all of which is very fair road. We do not see how we could have made the trip without the help so freely given us by the Presbyterians. Our Mission is, in efficiency, a year ahead of what it would have been had they not come to our aid. They fitted us out with a caravan of 200 men, among whom were the 13 native members of our church with 2 native evangelists, carried us and our freight up the river, opened their homes to us, stored our goods, and are now attending to having them sent to us by the caravans, and even sent one of their experienced missionaries to help us get started in the work, who stayed for ten days after we arrived at our station.

We are located four degrees south latitude, and twenty-five degrees east longitude, on an elevation of some 2000 feet, which makes the climate delightful, even though we are in the tropics. Frequently a wrap is needed in the day time, and the nights have always been cool enough for blankets, and, although this is called the wet season, there has not been any more rain so far than was needed for the growing crops, not near as much as is common in our own State of Louisiana.

Our welcome by the chief and his people has been all that we could in any way expect, and we feel greatly encouraged at the prospect. It would be difficult to find a people in greater need of the Gospel. They are in the darkness of heathendom, and, until recently restrained by the State, were among the fiercest cannibals in Africa, even, it is said, eating their own dead. Still they have some fine qualities. They have a magnificent physique, are brave, stand erect, and look one in the eye, and they have the reputation of having more intelligence than other Africans, or the average American negro, a statement which, perhaps, we are not yet qualified to prove.

Thanks to the native evangelists, we are able to begin active work at once, and have a church organized with 19 members, have daily prayer service in the village, and on Sundays two services in one village and one in another, all of which are well attended, and uniformly good attention is given to the speaker. Of course we cannot look for definite results as yet, but we feel that there are good things in store for this mission.

"TIZ" FOR TIRED SORE, ACHING FEET

Ah! what relief. No more tired feet; no more burning feet, swollen, bad smelling, sweaty feet. No more pain in corns, callouses or bunions. No matter what ails your feet or what under the sun you've tried without getting relief, just use "TIZ." "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet; "TIZ" is magical; "TIZ" is grand; "TIZ" will cure your foot troubles so you'll never limp or draw up your face in pain. Your shoes won't seem tight and your feet will never, never hurt or get sore, swollen or tired.

Get a 25 cent box at any drug or department store, and get relief.

FRECKLES

Now is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from any druggist and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than an ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

A beautiful bud has been plucked from the garden of this world and transplanted in the paradise of our Lord to bloom eternally. Little CECIL EDWIN MCCOY, infant son of Mr. C. A. and Annie May McCoy, was called home on Jan. 25, 1914. He was a bright, beautiful baby boy and his stay with his father and mother in this world was of short duration, but was by no means devoid of good. He left the impress of his sweet life on the fond hearts of his parents and relatives, and they will never forget those rosy little cheeks and sweet baby smiles. It is not, however, the longest life that always does the most good. Sometimes God blesses a whole generation through the short life of a little child; and often, if we could only know how many sighs and heartaches were saved, and how much good was done by the early death of the young child, we would rejoice instead of mourn.

May the God of all grace bless Brother and Sister McCoy and may they look forward to a happy meeting with their darling boy again in the home beyond the stars.

HILARY S. WESTBROOK.

THEODORE J. REAMES was born in East Baton Rouge Parish, La., Dec. 25, 1847, and died at Baton Rouge, La., April 22, 1914. A great part of his active life was spent in West Baton Rouge Parish, where he engaged in mercantile business and served as postmaster at Arbroth for many years. During his residence there he became an active member of the Methodist Church, entertaining the preachers in his home, and opening his house for the services of the Church until a church house was built on land given by him. He was always outspoken in his moral and religious convictions, and ready to take an active part in every good cause. In the very last days of the long illness that ended in his death, he talked of plans for work in the Church when he should get well enough, and gladly received the sacrament of the Lord's supper. His expressions of trust and confidence in God were unwavering. Two daughters and a large family of sisters, who were deeply devoted to him; one brother, Rev. I. T. Reames of the Louisiana Conference, now in Oregon, and a half brother, Wm. H. Lake of Covington, La., survive of his immediate family. His remains were interred by those of his parents at the old family burying-ground near Ethel, La.

W. WINANS DRAKE.

Our beloved son, Mr. JAMES W. PARKER, was born March 2, 1875, in Wilkinson County, Miss., and died April 7, 1914, in the Hattiesburg Hospital, following an operation for appendicitis and gallstone trouble, aged 39 years. For two years he had been a great sufferer. Few have been called upon to suffer as did our precious boy, and during all the weary months everything that medical skill could do was done to alleviate his sufferings and prolong his life; but for three months we watched our dear one going down into the dark valley. During this time he had won to himself a host of friends by his patience and gentleness. Not what the world calls "a mixer," he, nevertheless, was so modest and unassuming, so courteous, even when suffering extreme pain, that friends were bound to him by hooks of steel; and the crowds who came to pay their last tribute of respect filled the cottage home to its utmost capacity. Being the son of an itinerant preacher, he attended the high schools of the different towns in which we lived, later going to Centenary College, Jackson, La., for a time, though he was compelled to leave before finishing on account of failing eyesight. During our residence in Jackson, Miss., he was married to Miss Mary Shaw, of that city, at the early age of 19 years. Their married life was singularly beautiful. As the years grew apace their devotion seemed to grow in strength, and they seemed to live more and more for each other, so that when the dark days of pain and suffering came on the wife was absolutely untiring in her ministrations by day and by night. Father, mother, brothers, sisters, wife, and two sweet little girls are left behind to mourn his departure.

Some years ago, at a meeting held in the Twenty-ninth Street Church, Gulfport, Miss., our son was happily converted, but later, amid the stress and the strain of worldly cares, he confessed that he had not been true to the grace given, and had wandered away from God, but with penitence and tears he came back to the Father's house and during many talks with his beloved pastor, Brother Geo. H. Galloway, he gave evidence of his preparation for eternal life. The blessed Heavenly Father revealed himself to him in a marvelous manner just before he went to the hospital. After that he had no fears. As a son, he was singularly devoted, and but few days passed in which he did not write even when his poor body was racked with pain, either to his father, or the "dear little mother," as he called her, and even when the dear hand was so weak that he could scarcely write legibly at all, those precious letters still came, even when we were visiting him almost every week. We are in the grip of the supreme sorrow of our lives. Our hearts are broken. Only the hope of finding him somewhere in the elysian fields sustains us—that and the grace of God.

He was a Woodman of the World, an honored officer in his camp, and after the beautiful ritual service of the Church and the sermon by his pastor, Brother Galloway, at Court Street Church, very tenderly he was laid to rest by his fellow Woodmen.

His sorrowing parents,

REV. and MRS. J. S. PARKER, Seminary, Miss.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONDOLENCE.

(Adopted by the Woman's Missionary Society of Booneville, Miss.)

Whereas, God in His wisdom and love has seen best to take from us our beloved sister and co-worker, Mrs. Walter J. Bolton; therefore be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of an all-wise Providence, who doeth all things well, thanking Him for the inspiration of her beautiful life, and the example of her devoted service in the Church, whose kindly words and affectionate association has been a benediction to her sister members.

2. That we tender to her bereaved family and relatives our heartfelt sympathy, and pray God's richest blessings upon them.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our Society, that a copy be sent to the family of our departed friend, and that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Advocate for publication.

Signed: Miss Mattie Reynolds, Mrs. L. L. Brown, Mrs. A. S. Hoyle, Committee.

Tidings From the Field

Waynesboro, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We are delighted with our work among the good people of Waynesboro circuit, this being our third year as pastor on this charge. I believe it is safe to say that this is the best year we have had as God's humble servants in the ministry. Our congregations at some of the churches are far in advance of what they have been at any other time. The spiritual tide is rising, we are looking forward to and expecting God to be with us in our coming revival meetings. My constant prayer to the God of Israel is that he will keep me humble and help me to so bear the name of our Christ that my life and services will be a blessing to some soul along life's pathway.

We have been able to liquidate the indebtedness on our parsonage, and we have done quite a bit of repair work on and around the parsonage, such as fencing, etc.

On last first Sunday we organized a Sunday school at old Hebron Church with something like thirty members.

I believe that before our next Annual Conference convenes that one and all will be able to say that this has been the best year that we have had on this charge. We are all on the way and happy. Amen.—Hilary S. Westbrook, Pastor.

Leakesville, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: On May 3 we closed a 12 days' meeting. The preaching was done by Brothers Schultz and Sutherland. Their sermons were very forceful and to the point. There were many conversions, some strong men and women, who will mean a great deal to the Church for Christ.

We received into the Church 6 on profession of faith, and 3 by certificate. The church was much edified and the Sunday school took on new life. I hear some say that the different denominations here are working better and are closer together than ever, and that there is a spirit of unity which has not been evident before. We are rejoicing over the fact that such is the case.

We shall not forget these good people for they have stood by us, and tried to help us. They gave us a genuine old fashioned pounding just before the meeting, which was very much appreciated.

Then, to begin our revival, we started a week before with a sunrise prayer meeting which did much good. Many were made to see themselves as they are in these services.

Brothers Schultz and Sutherland endeared themselves to us. Sister Sutherland made her way into our hearts too. She did a great work while here. Little Louis Sutherland who was with his father and mother would pray for the meeting and the preachers too. God is giving us the victory.

I am glad to state that we had with us yesterday Rev. W. D. Upshaw, of Atlanta, Ga., who delivered the Commencement sermon for the Leakesville High School. In his discourse he said "have a purpose in life," and wound up by admonishing the people to establish family altars. About 50 altars were erected. Brother Upshaw is a power for God, he is a forceful man. His lecture last night was "A stainless Flag for America." I have scarcely seen anything like yesterday's service.—H. E. Carter.

Arcadia Circuit, La.

The Arcadia circuit consists of the societies at Church Point, Branch, Maxie, and Prudhomme. The parsonage is located at the last-named place, and is a very comfortable home. The people of the charge have paid for a barn and cistern, both of which had been destroyed, so we have all the conveniences necessary to our comfort. Last December the people of Prudhomme met us at Eunice with wagons and helped us get settled in our new home. They have been very nice and we are well pleased with the location. About the middle of February we were invited to the home of Mr. B. M. Lambert, of Maxie, and there we found assembled the people of the Maxie church as well as of other denominations. They gave us a very substantial pounding, the effect of which we have not entirely recovered from yet. The membership at Maxie is small, but we always have a large congregation and splendid attention. I have not been able to make as many visits at Branch and Church Point as I would like, but have met a good number of the people at church—some in their homes, and find them to be much interested in the up-building of their church. I expect to make a number of visits during May and June. Four revivals will be held on the charge during June and July and we expect to see many souls saved. The dates of the different meetings have not yet been fixed, but I expect to secure the services of some good evangelist or revivalist and arrange the services to begin by June 15. I believe that the Arcadia circuit is one of the best in Louisiana. May God bless our work here and give us a fruitful year.

T. L. BRYSON, P. C.

A CARD OF THANKS FROM MRS. SHIPMAN.

Dear Dr. Meek: I desire to thank our friends through the Advocate for their love, prayers, and sympathy while we were nursing our dear boy who was so very sick in Jackson some time since. We went down to the brink of the grave with him, but God in his love and wisdom gave him back to us. I was in Jackson with him three weeks before I could bring him home, but a stay at home of three weeks put him on his feet again, and he is back now trying to finish up his senior preparatory work. Our debt of gratitude we can never pay to the professors and the entire student body. So many of them were very thoughtful and kind. What would life be without friends? "We love Him because he first loved us."

MRS. W. S. SHIPMAN.

SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Brookhaven District Conference on the Seashore Divinity School:

Resolved, That this Conference heartily endorses the work done, at the Seashore Divinity School, and recommends that each pastoral charge grant a leave of absence to its pastor in order that he may attend the session of this school this summer.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Conference that as far as practicable each pastoral charge should meet the necessary expenses of its pastor in attending the Divinity School.

Sunday School

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

The Challenge of the Country by G. Walter Fiske is a sympathetic and helpful study of our great rural problem; it is illustrated and will cost but 75 cents.

In four cases out of five, selfishness on the part of teachers, officers, or parents is the reason our elementary grades are not better equipped for their work.

By a skillful re-arrangement of the interior of the First Church at Corinth, five new classrooms have been made in order to accommodate the school and grade it along standard lines.

There is a little five-cent booklet which will help the rural Sunday school superintendent and pastor very much, called "Modern Methods in the Country Church," by Matthew Brown McNutt.

Rev. C. H. Northington, Corinth circuit, is planning an attractive Children's Day service in all of his churches. His programs have been printed in the local papers and have received much favorable comment.

Rev. D. M. Gean will hold a Sunday school Institute at Grady's Chapel, May 9, 10. He has a well-prepared and printed program already out and is doing the very ideal thing for a pastor to do—leading, and emphasizing the Sunday school problems and their solution.

"The Missionary News Bulletin and Notes from the Field" for May from Dr. Pinson's office thrills one with the possibilities of what can be done in mission lands if we will but lend a hand. By writing Dr. Pinson any class can find the field exactly suited to its needs, enthusiasm and monetary ability.

The aim of the rural Sunday school with its sparse settlements and few people is to comprehend the whole family, for often this self-same Sunday school takes the place of the preaching service. The village and city Sunday schools must try and devise ways and means for reaching the youth, the country Sunday school must reach, interest and hold the whole family, for if the parents are interested the children will come.

In answer to the question, "Why do you not have a separate opening and closing service for the Primary and Junior Department?" come the replies: "The teachers do not wish it," or "The superintendent likes to see the school all together," "The school looks so much smaller divided into departments." Never once has the reply come: "We believe the children gain more from the Sunday school hour."

Again, ask the question, "Why do you do no hand-work in connection with the lesson?" and there comes the reply: "It makes the room too crowded;" or "Our school will not appropriate sufficient money to cover this item." When explanation is made that it need cost almost nothing if the teacher prepares her own hand-work, then we hear, "Our teachers find it takes too much of their time and labor in preparation, if they would make it interesting."

Why is the blackboard not used? "I am not an artist," says the superintendent; "Someone might see my work on the board and laugh at me." Why do you not use Graded Lessons?

"They cost too much." (Do they?) "As teachers, we cannot find so many lesson helps on the subjects." Or, "Our church families cannot all study the same lesson in the home, if Graded Lessons are introduced." And so the excuses multiply themselves.

Shall we draw the conclusion that a poorly equipped school is a selfish school? Is it selfishness that causes the trouble in your school?

When we put first things first, when we consider, primarily, how best we can meet the needs of the pupils, we shall have well equipped Sunday schools.

THERE ARE STILL A FEW EPWORTH PIANO BARGAINS LEFT AT GENERAL CONFERENCE.

All unsold Epworth pianos, parlor organs and church organs at the General Conference in Oklahoma City must be sold out at once, as our lease on the building expires June 1st. No matter where you live, you can have one of these fine instruments sent for trial, freight paid, and if you like it you can keep it on the special General Conference price and on the easiest of terms. Write a postal something like this: Williams Piano & Organ Co., Chicago, department 347. Please send me information about one of the General Conference (say which) piano, organ, or church organ, and sign your name plainly.

A VOLCANO PUT TO WORK.

About two hundred miles from Honolulu, at the edge of the crater of the volcano Kilauea, is a ranch where a vast herd of pigs is kept. The most remarkable thing about this ranch is that the pigs have their food cooked for them, and the volcano does the work, like a huge steam cooker. Covering the slopes of the mountain, and surrounding the ranch, is a forest in which are giant tree ferns, sometimes fifty feet tall and a foot or more in diameter. Inside the trunks of these large ferns is a pulp which is very good; indeed, for animals if they can get it, but the outside covering of the trunk is almost as hard to crack as the shell of a coconut. One day the ranch owner discovered that he could use the steam that was coming from the cracks in the lava coating of the volcano by building great gridirons above the cracks, and piling the fern trunks upon them to cook. Since that discovery the pigs have lived luxuriously on ferns cooked by a volcano.—(Author unknown.)

ETERNITY.

Here is a word we would hardly expect from the habit-bearded French. Translated from the French of Brodaine by Mrs. H. E. Froehke:

Ah! my brother, upon what, then, do you rely, to consider your last day so distant? Is it on your youth? Yes, you reply, I am still only twenty years, thirty years. Ah, you are totally mistaken.

No, it is not you who have twenty or thirty years; it is death who has already gained twenty, thirty years on you. Thirty years of grace which God has wished to give to you in letting you live—which you owe Him, and which have brought you so much nearer to the time when death must purchase you. Take notice of it, eternity stamps already on your forehead the fatal instant when it will commence for you. Ah, do you know what eternity is? It is a clock whose pendulum says and says again, these two words only, in the silence of the tombs: "Forever! Never! Never! Forever!" And during these awful revolutions an evil one cries: "What time is it?" And the voice of another miserable one replies, "Eternity!"—Central Christian Advocate.

ERUPTIONS CAN BE STOPPED

by internal blood purifiers because they are caused by blood disorders. However, Eczema, Tetter, Ringworm, Itch, Scaly Patches, etc., cannot because they are parasitic skin diseases. It takes a positive skin remedy like Tetterine to destroy the germs and heal the surface. Dr. W. S. Fielder, Electric, Ala., says: "I never use anything else but Tetterine in all skin troubles." 50c at druggist or by mail from Shuprine Co., Savannah, Ga.

LUDDEN & BATES PLAYER-PIANO DELIGHTS EVERYBODY.

Perfectly delighted! That is the way members of the New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club express themselves in regard to the Ludden & Bates Self-Player Piano. It is undoubtedly the greatest home entertainer and educator of the twentieth century. It opens wide the door to the entire world of musical composition so that every member of your family can now enjoy everything that has ever been written in music. Every one can now play the piano, and with the Ludden & Bates Self-Player you really play. You get the purest and sweetest tone, the correct time, and the most delicate shades of expression which enable you to give the correct interpretation to even the most difficult compositions. The entire world of music is yours—the world's best music by the world's greatest artists.

If you secure your Player-Piano through the Club you get the best instrument that the market affords, save one-third the price, and enjoy the special benefits of the Club's Free Music Roll Service by which you can exchange your old rolls for new compositions, at any time, at a nominal charge to cover postage and the mere expense of handling. The Club's proposition is too good to miss. Write for catalogue and full particulars to-day. Address the Managers, Ludden & Bates, New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.—Adv.

BATON ROUGE (LA.) DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Baton Rouge District Conference will convene in Ponchatoula May 26-30. The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. J. D. Harper, on the "Nature and Purpose of the Lord's Supper," at 8 p. m., May 26. After the sermon, the Sacrament will be administered. All members are urged to be present at the opening service.

Let all the pastors look at the eight specific things to be reported upon. We trust that the pastors will have a definite knowledge of what progress has been made thus far in the work of the church. The following are the committees:

License to Preach—W. W. Drake, S. D. Howard, J. B. Fulton, W. S. Holmes, Judge R. R. Reid.

Orders and Admission or Readmission into the Annual Conference—J. D. Harper, J. F. Foster, J. A. McCormack.

MRS. JOHN DREW BETTER.

McLeansboro, Ill.—"About five years ago," says Mrs. John L. Drew, of this place, "I was afflicted with pains and irregularity every month. I suffered continually, was weak and despondent, unable to do my housework. I took Cardui and in one month I felt like a new woman and worked hard all summer. I am now in perfect health and recommend Cardui to all suffering women." Every day, during the past 50 years, Cardui has been steadily forging ahead as a result of its proven value in female troubles. It relieves headache, backache, womanly misery, and puts fresh strength into weary bodies. Try it.—Adv.

THAT TIRED FEELING IN THE SPRING

That tired feeling that comes to you in the spring, year after year, is a sign that your blood lacks vitality, just as pimples, boils and other eruptions are signs that it is impure; and it is also a sign that your system is in a low or run-down condition in which it will be easy for you to contract disease if exposed to it.

Ask your druggist for Hood's Sarsaparilla. This old standard tried and true blood medicine relieves that tired feeling. Get Hood's today.

JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Jackson District Conference will convene at Braxton, Miss., June 16-19. The opening sermon will be preached on Tuesday night, the 16th. Braxton is located on the G. & S. I. R. R., twenty-five miles South of Jackson, Miss. There are three trains coming into Braxton every morning from Jackson: one arrives at 6 a. m.; one at 7:30 a. m.; and one at 12 o'clock. There is no afternoon train coming South from Jackson until 5 p. m.

Let all pastors send me the names of delegates. Let all local preachers send me their names; in fact all should do so who expect to come. I would like to have these names at least two weeks before the Conference. So take due notice thereof and govern yourselves accordingly.

W. B. WALROP, P. C.

MERIDIAN COLLEGE.

The Commencement exercises of Meridian College will begin on Friday evening, May 22, and close with the graduating exercises on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, May 26. Following is the order of exercises:

Thursday evening, Reception for Alumni; Friday evening, Art Levee; Saturday evening, Expression Graduation Recital; Sunday morning, Commencement Sermon by Rev. J. B. Budd, of Georgia; Sunday afternoon, Missionary Service; Sunday evening, Missionary Service; Monday morning, Literary Society debate; Monday evening, Conservatory grand concert; Tuesday morning, Academy and Departmental certificates and diplomas; Tuesday evening, Graduation exercises.

IT IS A SAD SIGHT

to see the face of a pretty girl made unsightly by scaly patches or ugly pimples. We would pity such, were it not so easy to rid the skin of these disorders. Tetterine quickly and permanently ends rough, scaly patches, pimples, eczema, tetter, ringworm, itch, etc., and all cutaneous affections. It is certain to result satisfactorily. 50c at druggists or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

MARRIED.

On Feb. 28, 1914, at the home of the bride's parents, near Big Rock Church, Miss., by Rev. Hilary S. Westbrook, Mr. JACK McMICHAEL and Miss DANTHOR RICHEY.

On April 9, 1914, at the parsonage at Leakesville, Miss., by Rev. H. E. Carter, Mr. A. J. CLARK and Miss PEARL TAYLOR.

On April 20, 1914, at the Court House at Leakesville, Miss., by Rev. H. E. Carter, Mr. LUTHER L. McNAMON and Miss SUSIE V. DER-RICKS, both of Mobile, Ala.

HE FOLLOWED.

A nervous commuter, on his dark, lonely way home from the railroad station, heard footsteps behind him. He had an uncomfortable feeling that he was being followed. He increased his speed. The footsteps quickened accordingly. The commuter darted down a lane. The footsteps still pursued him. In desperation he vaulted over a fence and, rushing into a church-yard, threw himself panting on one of the graves.

"If he follows me here," he thought, fearfully, "there can be no doubt as to his intentions."

The man behind was following. He could hear him scrambling over the fence. Visions of highwaymen, maniacs, garroters, and the like flashed through his brain. Quivering with fear, the nervous one arose and faced his pursuer.

"What do you want?" he demanded. "Why are you following me?"

"Say," asked the stranger, mopping his brow, "do you always go home like this, or are you giving yourself a special treat to-night? I'm going up to Mr. Brown's, and the man at the station told me to follow you, as you lived next door. Excuse my asking you, but is there much more to do before we get there?"—Zion's Herald.

Florida Military Academy

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

A first class military preparatory school, in one of the city's most attractive suburbs. A most healthful location, free from malaria, fine all-the-year-round climate, in modern brick buildings, with every requirement of morality, scholarship and character rigidly observed.

In charge of men of such experience as insures the thorough training of boys; with comprehensive courses of study, carefully taught, preparing for admission to any university. Number of students limited, giving individual attention. A thoroughly equipped home school for many high-toned boys and young men, a "school of gentlemen, for gentlemen, by gentlemen," where faculty and students live and work together. An institution where the life of the student is safeguarded and his highest qualities developed systematically and thoroughly, morally, mentally and physically, to accord with the highest standards. Non-sectarian and Christian.

We invite the careful investigation of discriminating parents and guardians who desire the best at moderate cost. A handsome book of views and catalogue sent on request.

SHE WAS SMOTHERING.

Rockford, Ala.—Mrs. M. C. Paschal, of this place, says: "I was taken with nervous prostration, and had headache, backache, pains in my right side, and smothering spells. I called in physicians to treat my case, but without relief. Finally I tried Cardui, and it gave perfect satisfaction. I recommend it to every sick woman." Are you weak, tired, worn-out? Do you suffer from any of the pains peculiar to weak women? Cardui has a record of over fifty years in relieving such troubles, and will certainly benefit you. It prevents those frequent headaches, and keeps you up, out of bed, feeling fresh and happy. Try Cardui.—Adv.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

We are indebted to the Southern Missionary News Bureau for the following items:

Such a great number of applications have come from married and grown women to enter the McTyeire School in Shanghai that a room in the rear of the church was prepared to receive thirty; but space had to be made for forty. Eight are married, and several have a number of children. Probably the most interesting student in the class is the wife of the leader of the socialist movement. She is the mother of five splendid children, the oldest about 12 years of age.

The oldest royal dynasty in the world is that of Japan, which goes back unbroken 2600 years.

An exchange says: "The Harvard University Register for 1913, published by the Student Council, gives estimates of the expenditures of students for the various items in addition to board and tuition charges. Books cost the students about $71,000 a year, while the bill for drinks is estimated at $73,500 and for tobacco $98,225. Theater tickets, suppers after the shows, and taxi fares amount to more than $200,000.

Haitang is a Chinese island about twenty-five miles long, with a population of about 70,000. About thirty-seven years ago, we are told, an inhabitant traveling on the main land heard of Jesus from a fellow-traveler at a Chinese inn. He accepted the truth, returned to Haitang and did not rest until he had carried the Gospel to every one of the 411 villages on the island. When the missionaries came about ten years ago, they found a prepared people. There are now preaching stations in thirty villages. Some of these poor village Christians give one-fourth of their income for the spread of the Gospel.

David Livingstone, when a lad, received from his dying Sunday school teacher some advice which he never forgot. "Now, lad," were the faithful words, "be constant, make religion the every-day business of your life, and not a thing of fits and starts."

SOUTH CAROLINA TO THE FORE.

The South Carolina Conference heads the list in the results from the Week of Prayer and Self-Denial with a total of $2,005.83. The total amount of the self-denial fund received at the office in Nashville to date is $10,342.90. This will enable the Board of Missions, with other available resources largely the result of the Week of Prayer and Self-Denial, to send out ten new missionaries for 1914. The proposed Week of Prayer for January, 1915, should enable the Board to still more largely increase its missionary force so sadly needed in the fields.

GLEANINGS FROM THE REPORTS OF THE THIRD VICE PRESIDENTS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

It is always well when something good is received to pass it on, so that all may get the benefit. The reports from the auxiliary third vice-presidents for the first quarter of this year sound a most optimistic note, which is very gratifying. Not many can be given special notice; however, all who reported are to be commended for their faithful work. The Durant District led in the number of auxiliaries reporting.

As usual, the first report that came in was from Houston; it tells of progress in this department. The Macon Young Woman's Auxiliary states that they are using "Mexico To-day," and the interest is so great that those members not enrolled in the class come to get the benefit of the study. From Greenville comes the information that interest has noticeably improved. Mrs. Bennett of Oxford reports a class organized and growing in interest. Valden attributes much of the growth of the auxiliary to the awakening of the members in the Study Circle. Both Winona adult societies report a gain in the knowledge of the missionary machinery. Robinsonville's third vice-president, Mrs. F. C. Anderson, always gives a good report, and this quarter says that "The New America" is giving them a deeper knowledge of and interest in the alien.

Carrollton reports that all of her active members are Christian stewards. The work of Mrs. J. H. Guess of Kosciusko is most worthy of mention. In addition to presenting Christian stewardship to her auxiliary, she also influenced eight Sunday school pupils to sign the stewardship cards. What a great foundation for future work!

These are testimonials from auxiliaries in North Mississippi in regard to mission study and Christian stewardship. If your auxiliary is one which has been neglecting this department, do you think you can afford to do it any longer?

Mrs. WALTER CAMPBELL.

NOTICE!

The Second Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference will be held in Aberdeen, Miss., June 11-15. Names of delegates and visitors should be sent as early as possible to Mrs. T. B. Sykes, Chairman of Entertainment Committee, Aberdeen, Miss. All delegates are expected to be present at the opening session and to remain throughout the meeting. Bishop Murrah will preach the annual sermon. Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb will be the Council visitor.

Mrs. VIC THOMPSON HOYLE, President.
Miss MAMIE BUCKLEY, Recording Secretary.

NEW OFFICERS OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY COUNCIL.

This session of the Woman's Missionary Council closed the quadrennium and, according to law, all offices became vacant. Mrs. J. B. Cobb, Secretary of the Foreign Department, declined to stand for re-election. Miss Daisy Davies, Field Secretary, after eight strenuous years of service, also declined to stand for election to any office; and Mrs. Frank Siler also declined election. The elections returned the old body of officers to service, save in the offices of the Foreign Department and Educational and Recording Secretaries. Miss Mabel Head was chosen to succeed Mrs. Cobb, Mrs. Hume R. Steele was elected Educational Secretary, and Miss Mabel Howell succeeded Mrs. Siler.

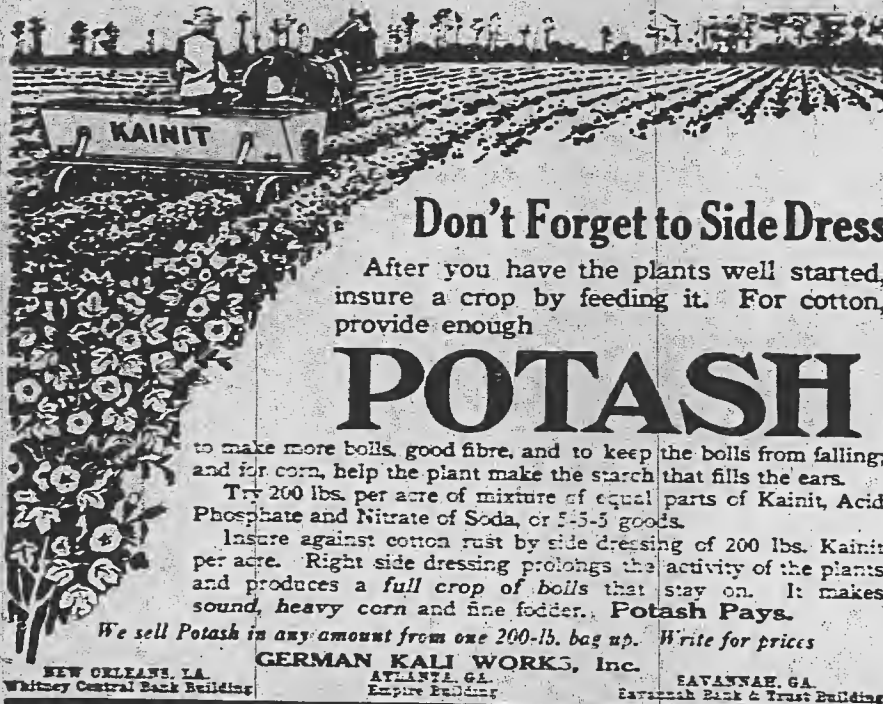

MISS ZUNG A VISITOR AT THE COUNCIL.

A Chinese visitor at the Council was Miss Zung, of Soochow, the daughter of the oldest Methodist preacher in the China Mission Conference. She was educated in our schools at Sungkiang, Huchow, and Shanghai, and then taught in the Virginia school in Huchow. She was on her way to Greensboro, N. C., where she expects to study three or four years and then return to China to teach in one of our mission schools.

Don't Forget to Side Dress

After you have the plants well started, insure a crop by feeding it. For cotton, provide enough to make more bolls, good fibre, and to keep the bolls from falling; and for corn, help the plant make the starch that fills the ears.

Try 200 lbs. per acre of mixture of equal parts of Kainit, Acid Phosphate and Nitrate of Soda, or 5-5-5 goods.

Insure against cotton rust by side dressing of 200 lbs. Kainit per acre. Right side dressing prolongs the activity of the plants and produces a full crop of bolls that stay on. It makes sound, heavy corn and fine fodder. Potash Pays.

FIRST SELF-SUPPORTING MISSIONARY.

Miss Allene Pearce, of the Kentucky Conference, is the first one of our missionaries to bear this honor. She was recommended by the Council for appointment to the foreign fields, and Korea was the field selected for her labors. She is a young woman of rare intellectual qualities, and deeply consecrated. The mantle of the mother must have fallen upon the daughter's shoulders. Not every mother is even willing to part with her daughter, but this consecrated woman gives her best to her Master and furnishes the means for her support. "Many shall rise up and call her blessed."

THE IDEAL SUMMER RESORT.

For rest, health and pleasure, is MINERAL PARK SPRINGS, on the Knoxville Division of the Southern Railway, eighteen miles from Chattanooga. It has Nature's most delightful location amid the beautiful green hills of East Tennessee; with purest air, the most beautiful scenery, and health-giving mineral waters in the South. A purely Christian Summer Resort, with most perfect freedom, all kinds of innocent amusements, but neither dancing, card playing or liquor drinking. Service, in every department, not excelled, if equaled, by any Resort in the South charging double our rates. Hot, cold, sea salt, mineral and shower baths just completed. Railway Station, Express Office, Post Office, Telegraph, and Long-distance Telephone. Open May 1. For annual circular, giving all information, write to MRS. H. P. FITCH, Mineral Park P. NOTES FROM OUR MISSION FIELDS.

The church at Candler College, Puentes Grandes, was recently organized with 12 members. H. B. Bardwell, the president of the College, is pastor. Rev. J. C. Elkins, of the Candler College faculty, preaches in his home several blocks from the campus, every Wednesday night. Thus our big school is becoming a real evangelical center for that entire community.—Evangelista Cubano.

Recently there was held within the chief University in Japan, the Tokyo Imperial University, a mass meeting of its Christian teachers and students, including some recent graduates. They decided to begin aggressive Christian work among its two thousand students. There are in this University 16 Christian professors and over 300 Christian students.—W. K. Matthews, Kobe, Japan.

At one of the services at our new chapel at the East Gate, after five of us had talked, and the hour was getting late, an appeal was made by Brother Tsai, the presiding elder, to all those who felt their sins and were willing to repent and believe on Jesus. 16 stood up before the crowded house in response to his appeal, remained until the meeting was dismissed, for further talk, and all became enquirers.—J. A. G. Shipley, Shanghai, China.

In our Southern Methodist Mission in Japan there is about one woman worker, Japanese or missionary, to 35,000 women.

More than 100 members and candidates on the Guantanamo charge are weekly contributors to the support of the Church. Rev. W. M. Mullen, the pastor, is educating his people in systematic paying. The Remedios Presbyterian Church, South, recently assumed $35 a month of the pastor's salary, besides their regular expenses and missionary contributions. Self-support is coming in Cuba.

During the past quadrennium in the M. E. Church, South, in China, there was an increase of 80 per cent in Church membership; 105 per cent in Sunday school pupils; 72 per cent in students in schools and colleges; 95 per cent in contributions.—Missionary News Bulletin.

NEW ORLEANS UNION LEAGUE.

The regular monthly meeting of the Union Epworth League of the Methodist Churches of New Orleans, Algiers, and McDonoghville, was held at Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church Tuesday night, May 12, with 87 members from the various Leagues in attendance.

The devotional services were conducted by Rev. Robert Vaughan of the Methodist Orphanage at Ruston, La.

The regular business meeting followed with the usual routine reports of the various Vice-Presidents of the Union League as received from the corresponding officers of the various departments of the different local Leagues. Report of the first department, covering religious activities, as a whole was decidedly encouraging, all Leagues reporting good meetings, good attendance, able leaders, willing responses for such work, and genuine interest. First Vice-President Rosenstream of the Union, in concluding his report, gave a very earnest and instructive talk on the proper and profitable disposition of our spare time. The second and third departments, covering charity and help and the social side of our Leagues, appeared to be getting along very nicely. The Missionary, or fourth department, of the various Leagues reported considerable activity, 6 or 7 of them having organized study classes covering foreign fields, and in addition to this each League reported one missionary meeting during the month. From the reports it would appear that all the Leagues are in a very healthy condition, and each one enthusiastic for a bigger and better League.

It was ascertained that there are at present 4 Junior Leagues in the City with a total membership of 50, 3 of which have been recently organized in line with the Union's Young Peoples campaign, and in this connection the Local Leagues are showing a steady increase of from 5 to 15 members monthly, the bigger proportion of the additional members being young men and young women from 17 to 21 years of age. The President urged upon the individual Leagues that each one inaugurate a membership campaign.

An additional officer, known as a Field Secretary, was elected several months ago, and this officer, Mr. John Saint, has been visiting and studying the various Leagues as to their most urgent individual requirements. His plans, however, at the Tuesday night meeting were still in the embryo, but he promises a full report for the next Union League Meeting.

The third department of the Carrollton Avenue League showed itself to be very much alive by providing for the evening a most enjoyable social hour and serving refreshments.

HEED THE WARNING.

The war between right and wrong is still going on. And as we cannot hope for peace and friendship from those whose hearts are not with us, let us take our part of the conflict to Him who is able to give us victory over all the opposing forces of earth. The Vanderbilt battle has been quite an unpleasant one. The Church has lost her Nashville school while the Carnegie financial salt-licks have lost their savor. And as we leave the old homestead with its rusted dollar surroundings, thank God, we are able to wave the beautiful banner that bears the name of honor.

The time has come to shake off the dust under our feet as a testimony against them, and go where our boys will not be entangled with the high class plays at theaters, and other soul-poisoning influences, withdraw our Christian forces from Nashville and place them where they will be appreciated. Let us pray for Mr. Carnegie, and for those who would ask for compromise.

Church News

Revival services have recently been held at Scruggs Memorial Church, of which Rev. H. R. Singleton is pastor. Dr. F. R. Hill, Sr. of New Orleans, did the preaching. One hundred and fifty members have been added to Scruggs Memorial Church since December.

The Wesley Memorial Hospital, of Atlanta, Ga., was the first hospital established by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the United States. It was built by the Southern Methodists of Georgia, and was opened in 1905. It has received since the opening 6561 patients.

The Southern Baptist Convention was in annual session last week in the city of Nashville, Tenn. The Woman's Missionary Union met simultaneously with the Convention, but as usual closed its annual session before the Convention adjourned. Mrs. J. D. Chapman, of Greenville, S. C., was chosen president of the Union.

For several weeks a most inspiring revival has been in progress in the Methodist Episcopal Church in Sofia, Bulgaria. One writer, Dr. Elmer E. Count, says God's presence has been manifested in great power. An old-fashioned Methodist altar service was conducted. It is good news to hear of the advance in the kingdom far beyond the seas.

Bishop J. W. Bashford, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, recently reported that he has never witnessed in any Christian College a more remarkable series of revival meetings than that recently held in Peking University, Peking, China. President H. H. Lowry was in charge of the services, and his audiences, composed largely of students, numbered from 800 to 1000.

The Methodist Church at Bryan, Texas, Rev. Glenn Flynn, pastor, held a banquet on Feb. 27, preparatory to the every-member canvass in the church. The church in 1910 gave for all benevolences $441. In 1911 they began with the every-member canvass and paid $646. In 1912 they paid $1356, and in 1913 they paid $1504. The average contribution per member for all benevolences in 1910 was $9.74. In 1913 it was $14.14. The increase for foreign missions for the same period was from $197 to $1585.36. The average per member going from 34 cents in 1910 to $2.60 in 1913.—Pacific Methodist.

Mr. T. G. Rapier, who was long the controlling power of the New Orleans Picayune, has again assumed newspaper duties in a conspicuous place, as he is now the assistant manager of one of New Orleans' great papers, The Times-Picayune.

Without a roll call, the lower house of Congress passed the administration Naval Bill, which calls for the building of two battleships instead of one, as advocated by the "little navy" men. The naval appropriation amounts to $139,560,334.

Notices have been given of two amendments to the Constitution of the State of Louisiana relating to the State Supreme Court. The notable feature of both amendments is the enlarging of the Court to seven members, where heretofore it has consisted of five.

One thousand saloons in Illinois towns have been closed during this month. Pending a decision of the Supreme Court on the constitutionality of the woman suffrage law, the saloon men will turn their places of business into cigar stores and near-beer parlors. Should the equal suffrage law be declared unconstitutional, the saloons will again take up their devastating work.

The Mexican situation seems to be in as much of a tangle as ever. Since the United States has ceased hostilities in the republic, the two factions that have torn it asunder have set upon each other with new enthusiasm. It seems at present, however, that the Federalists are about to succumb, and that President Huerta will soon be deposed. Gen. Villa is now marching upon Saltillo and gathering his forces for the assault on that city.

The police of the City of New Orleans arrested the heads of an art store last Saturday and confiscated many obscene pictures that were displayed in the show windows of the store. To prevent the display of such matter before the public is commendable. But we do not see the consistency of the police force in New Orleans in being careful along this line when on every Sabbath all the saloons, practically, of New Orleans violate the law and remain open for the selling of strong drink.

According to the report of the municipal markets commission to the City Council, recently made, Chicago is paying $51,393,304 too much a year for its meals. The annual cost of food eaten was estimated at $321,208,146, of which the producer receives $170,240 and the railroads $22,484,570. The wholesaler and the jobber receive $32,120,815 and the retailer $96,362,444. The last two items, the commission found, might be cut to $12,848,326 and $64,241,629. This, it was figured, would result in a per capita saving of $21.47, or a saving of $98.76 a year to the average family.

The city of Jerusalem is to be modernized at an early date, according to reports. It will be transformed into a city with many of the conveniences and luxuries of the leading cities of Europe. Jerusalem is reported to have 75,000 inhabitants; 45,000 of these are Jews, 15,000 are Christians, and 10,000 are Moslems, and the remaining number is made up of a heterogeneous collection from all nooks of the world. The ancient walls and towers are to be torn down to widen the streets, car lines will traverse the city, and electric lights will blaze forth. May Jerusalem awaken to its obligation to the world as the "Holy City."

From a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post we clip the following interesting item: "An alarm signal, to give warning that it is time to depend no longer on fading daylight, but to turn on the gas lights or electric lamps, is now being devised. The great usefulness of a successful device of this sort is apparent. Records have shown that the greatest strain on the eyesight comes in the late afternoon hours near sundown, or on dark, dull days when it does not seem to be dark enough to turn on artificial lights. Each case is a matter for some individual, and the tendency is to delay turning on the lights. In offices, schools, libraries—and to some extent in stores—the lights are switched on many a day after a period of eyestrain for all the people in the place; so illuminating engineers have called for a machine that will decide at just what moment lighting should begin."

THE GRATEFUL SAMARITAN.

Much had been done for this man, as Luke narrates in the seventeenth chapter of his gospel. He was a recognized and avoided leper of such physical danger to others that, on the approach of a stranger, he must cry out a warning. He and nine others had prayed for mercy at the hands of Christ, and having obeyed his command to go and show themselves to the priest they were healed. The thoughts of the Samaritan turned back toward him who had worked this inexpressible benefit, and with a loud voice he glorified God and gave thanks at the feet of Jesus.

He evidently became a convert. The riches of the mercy of God bore upon him; his soul was flooded with a realization of the unseen spiritual realm that now had played such an important part in his life. The stronger emphasis of his heart did not fall upon the clean and fresh body, though it was invaluable, but upon him who could work the transformation of driving out the physically diseased substance of the flesh and replacing it with the sound and well. The more clearly he beheld the great gift of unimpaired health with its largess of free social intercourse, the greater seemed the power that brought to pass this astounding fact. Still more reflection did not incite self emulation and self congratulation of a great good fortune to the extent of paralyzing the vision for objects outside of self. He was not transformed into a madman with one wild idea of extolling his new found physical virtues before the passer-by on the country highway or before the throngs of the city thoroughfare. A great sanity possessed his soul, and he was impressed with the good graces and virtues of his benefactor. Instead of being swept off his feet by selfish ecstasy, his heart forgot these considerations and glorified God.

When a hand full of lilies is carried to a friend the beauty and fragrance of the flowers flood the room; but should their material attributes be more invading than the spirit of friendship or love that they represent? Should not their blessedness but emphasize the extended felicity of our friend? Every varied shade of light cast from their convoluted petals may lose its own natural beauty in its declaration of constancy for our friend. The clean pure body of the healed Samaritan became an inviolate bond between Christ and him.

As to the nine who approached Christ with the Samaritan—they were now healed. They needed no longer to hold themselves in contempt because of a putrid mass of sores; there were to be no more cries of unclean; equality with others was realized and anticipation of social joys was too great for utterance. Hugging the prize of new physical life they rushed to the priest and thence doubtlessly among friends to exploit their great fortune. They perhaps behaved as men often do in the present, who, after attaining the means, run headlong into the gale of fleeting existence, never thinking of Him who has turned in their direction the great end of the horn of plenty. The picture of the ingratitude of the nine is a sad one. Let us, in the temple of the soul, dwell with the grateful Samaritan. C. A. B.

THE PRESENT VANDERBILT SITUATION.

In the light of the action of the recent General Conference, what course has the Church mapped out for herself in dealing with Vanderbilt University? We assume that this is a question of much interest to the readers of the Advocate, and we shall, therefore, proceed to answer it briefly.

1. We desire to say that the report of the majority of the Special Vanderbilt Committee does not contain a single note in favor of any sort of compromise. It regards the present relations between the Church and the University as absolutely intolerable and does not indulge the least notion of perpetuating them. To be sure, the General Board of Education is vested for a limited time with the power to confirm or reject the trustees elected by the Board of Trust of the University, but they are instructed to confirm only such persons as "will endeavor to carry out most heartily the aims and purposes of those who founded the University" and "who will fairly represent the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church in said University." It is difficult to see how any one of the rebellious majority of the present Board of Trust can be confirmed under these directions; and if they are not, doubtless the courts will soon be given an opportunity to pass upon the so-called rights that we are said to have left in the institution.

2. The movement to transfer the rights in the University that were formerly ceded to the General Conference back to the eight patronizing Conferences which figured in the establishment of the institution is not in any sense an evasion of responsibility or shirking of duty. The majority of the General Conference did not regard these rights as of sufficient value to be held on to, but before letting them go it seemed to be just and proper to let the former owners, from whom the important trust was received, pass upon this question. Moreover, there were some lawyers who took the position that this transfer would afford the best possible way for getting the case reopened in the Federal courts. So the patronizing Conferences are notified that if they desire to undertake such litigation, the whole Church will stand behind them and bear the expense of it. This is not placing a heavy burden upon weaker bodies, as was alleged by some, since the claims of the patronizing Conferences will, if there is any difference, be stronger and more direct than those of the General Conference, and they themselves are not expected to make the fight, but only to furnish the grounds for doing so.

3. The Commission of sixteen men appointed by the College of Bishops is vested with plenary power, and may be trusted to safeguard and promote the educational interests committed to its care in every possible way. It is composed of the following persons: Bishop W. A. Candler, Bishop J. C. Kilgo, Bishop W. B. Murrah, Bishop J. H. McCoy, Rev. P. T. Durham of the Western North Carolina Conference, Rev. F. J. Prettyman of the Baltimore Conference, Dr. A. J. Lamar of the Alabama Conference, Rev. W. D. Bradfield of the West Texas Conference, G. T. Fitzhugh of Memphis, W. M. G. Thomas of Chattanooga, Asa G. Candler of Atlanta, John P. Scott of Shreveport, W. D. Thompson of Atlanta, J. E. Cockrell of Dallas, H. R. Fitzgerald of Danville, Va., and T. T. Fishburne of Roanoke. This Commission is charged with the task of effecting a transfer of the rights in Vanderbilt University now held by the General Conference back to the patronizing Conferences; but if this cannot be done, its hands are not by any means tied, as is shown by the following resolution: "In case it is found impossible to effect this transfer, we hereby authorize and instruct the Commission herein named to take such steps as in their opinion may be necessary to preserve and defend the interests and honor of the Church." This Commission is also instructed to provide at the earliest possible time a Biblical or Theological School for the training of our young ministers, making, if deemed advisable, temporary arrangements for such work; and they are further empowered to proceed to provide higher institutions of learning for our people without delay locating, if they can, one university east of the Mississippi River and one west of the Mississippi River.

4. This Commission is not authorized to start negotiations of any kind with the trustees of Vanderbilt University, nor have the trustees been notified in any manner that it is open to overtures. If any movement of this character is inaugurated it will have to be done by the Board of Trust of the University. Furthermore, all monies held by any of our Boards for Vanderbilt have been ordered held up until the Commission shall direct what use is to be made of them.

But wherein did the Minority Report differ from that of the majority? (1) It turned away from the College of Bishops and proposed to deal with the educational situation through the new General Board of Education, a body which at that time was unnamed and the complexion of which was wholly unknown. In our opinion, such action would have been heralded all over the country as a slap at our Chief Pastors and a triumph for those sympathizing with the Vanderbilt Board of Trust. The latter gentlemen had concentrated their strength in the Committee on Education, and if they had won before the Conference, they very probably also would have dominated that Committee and have named the new Board of Education, placing upon it men who would never have raised any sort of issue with the Vanderbilt trustees.

(2) This Report expressed a desire for harmonious relations with the Board of Trust of the University, reminded them that they are the servants of the Church, and appealed to them to protect the Church's interests. Such an appeal to the men who had stirred up this rebellion against the authority of the Church, who had trampled her rights underfoot, and who had concurred in the pleadings that resulted in the spoliation of her property, would have been, in our opinion, nothing less than a humiliating sacrifice of her dignity and self-respect, and as a course of procedure, positively farcical.

(3) The Minority Report contained an additional provision, that if a clash should arise between the Board of Education and the Vanderbilt trustees, the former body should seek to maintain the rights of the Church in the courts of Tennessee or the Federal Courts; but this was to be a dernier resort, brought into requisition only when the proposed pacific policy had failed. It was also declared that the Board of Education should proceed to enlarge the educational facilities of the Church by providing other places for theological instruction and additional institutions of higher learning, but the program outlined lacked the definiteness and the urgency to immediate action of that outlined in the Majority Report.

Such were the essential differences between the two papers submitted to the General Conference and around which the storm of debate raged. One of the most noticeable things in the contest was that all the men closely allied with Vanderbilt University and all who had been against the Church in the antecedent fight were lined up solidly behind the Minority Report. On the first test ballot, which was the crucial one, the representatives from our patronizing Conferences voted, as follows: For the Minority Report—R. H. Wynn, F. S. Parker, J. M. Henry, A. M. Mayo, W. A. McKennon, A. P. Holt, R. W. Millsaps, A. F. Watkins, and G. J. Leftwich. Against the Minority Report—W. H. Coleman, R. O. Randle, I. W. Cooper, J. T. Leggett, P. D. Hardin, L. P. Brown, J. W. Beeson, P. L. Blackwell, J. R. Countiss, R. A. Meek, H. S. Spragins, B. P. Jacob, J. G. McGowan, J. H. Sherard, and E. V. Hughston.

In this connection, it may be well to give the names of the members of the Board of Education, which is vested for the time being with the power to confirm or reject the Vanderbilt trustees, and which is thought to contain a majority who may be depended upon to stand up resolutely for the maintenance of the rights and honor of the Church. They are as follows: Bishop E. E. Hoss, Bishop James Atkins, Bishop J. C. Kilgo, H. H. Sherman, James Cannon, Jr., R. L. Flowers, H. N. Snyder, C. O. Jones, Andrew Sledd, G. W. Read, J. R. Bond, P. D. Maddin, I. W. Cooper, J. M. Henry, James Kilgore, L. S. Barton, J. W. Robbins, W. A. Shelton, J. L. Clark, B. P. Taylor, and Stonewall Anderson, Secretary of Education.

A ROSE TO THE LIVING.

A rose to the living is more
Than sumptuous wreaths to the dead.
In siliing love's infinite store.
A rose to the living is more
If graciously given before
The hungering spirit is fed—
A rose to the living is more
Than sumptuous wreaths to the dead.
— Dixon Waterman in "A Book of Verses."

THE INFLUENCE OF SORROW UPON GREAT AUTHORS.

Rev. Edwin Whittier Caswell.

The book of Job is the portrait of the soul's triumph over colossal sorrow. As Zophar said to Job:

"Then shall thy life be clearer than the noonday:
Though there be darkness, it shall be as the morning.
And because there is hope, thou shalt be secure:
Yea, thou shalt look about thee, and shalt take thy rest in safety:
Thou shalt lie down, and none shall make thee afraid."

The Psalms are the exhalations of exquisite anguish from the broken heart of David, rising like incense to God, and spreading over the earth like the fragrance of a crushed flower. The beauty of the Twenty-third Psalm blossomed out of the sweet singer's sorrow when he was exiled from his throne, when his own beloved Absalom had turned against him, and when evil men hunted him like a beast of the forest. It was then, as he looked down the grassy slope, where the flocks were feeding, and thought of the shepherd boy's early days, that he sang, what has comforted the hearts of millions for three thousand years: "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."

The influence of prosperity has never been able to inspire a song of such pathos and soul-power as this Psalm.

It is well to remember that the books which will never die were wrought out under the awful pressure of indescribable afflictions. As pressure produces power in the physical world, so suffering, when rightly endured, wakens all the forces of being in the effort to rise superior to the pain, resulting in the greatest triumphs of human genius.

Without recourse to libraries, literary aids or favorable influences, some minds have in their writings reached the highest summits of spiritual, moral and intellectual achievements. The Apostle Paul wrote his matchless Epistles chained to a soldier in prison, probably without even a scrap of the Old Testament parchment to aid his thoughts. Just as surely as the apostle felt that he must see Rome, so he was impelled and inspired to write for his Divine Master and his many churches, or die in the attempt. He penned his imperishable letters under most awful conditions; his prison became a spiritual powerhouse, electrifying the world through millenniums of time.

John Bunyan, with little education and narrow knowledge of men, wrote his masterpiece, the "Pilgrim's Progress," the book that stands second only to the Bible, during the twelve years of his imprisonment in Bedford jail. It is said that he knew well only two books—the Bible and Fox's Book of Martyrs. He mastered these, and then he was prepared in his solitude to master the world with a story which will live forever.

The beloved John, imprisoned on the Isle of Patmos, composed the only vision and view of the heavenly life the human mind has given to man. Every obstacle was in the way of such an achievement, except the Divine illumination and his own resiliency of spirit rising superior to the outward loneliness of his sorrow and banishment. When the soul endures pressure above measure, then latent powers, unfettered, fly away on immortal pinions.

Dane's "Divine Comedy" was written under the stress of sorrow for his departed Beatrice, and under the ban of banishment from the city of Florence. In great poverty, a poor wanderer, sentenced to be burned at the stake if he returned to Florence, without home or friends, he wrote his great poem and, though completed in 1320, it was more than five hundred years before the "Divine Comedy" was fully known and appreciated by mankind.

The human heart in great distress often writes for relief of its own anguish, at the time not expecting friendly readers or great popularity. Such productions bubble up from the inner depths of being, like a perennial fountain, which God has uncovered for a world's refreshment.

Would John Milton have written his immortal "Paradise Lost" if he had not been afflicted with blindness, with loss of fortune and with fear of death by execution for the part he played with Cromwell in the conviction of Charles I. The great storms of sorrow beating upon him in his old age led him to the great achievement of his life. Such characters often arise to these heights of sublimity after defeat, loss and apparent overthrow.

Milton evidently did not realize that he was composing a poem of worldwide power; perhaps he thought he was only avoiding idleness in his blindness; for he wrote

"Doth God exact day labor, light denied,
I fondly ask? Patience, to prevent
That murmur, soon replies: 'God doth not need Either man's work or his own gifts: who best
Bears his mild yoke, they serve him best: his state
Is kingly; thousands at his bidding speed,
And post o'er land and ocean without rest;
They also serve who only stand and wait.'"

Sometimes, the pathway of life leads through seas of turbulence, deserts of death, plains of hunger, valleys of sorrow, Gethsemanes of agony, and up-hills of Calvary. When one reads such inscriptions on the guide-board along the journey, he may be sure he has not lost his way, nor mistaken the path, for his Master's footsteps have marked the journey with blood and struggle.

We may fittingly conclude this subject with words from the lips of the eloquent Bishop Matthew Simpson, when he exclaimed: "Listen to what the voices speak out of the cloud! The martyrs who were stoned, the men who were torn of wild beasts, those who passed through fire and blood, who conquered in the name of Jesus—they are in the cloud, and they are looking down upon us, and they are saying: 'Trust God, and all shall be well. Death lasts only a little while: glory comes afterwards. Suffering is but for a few years—the morning is breaking. Driven from the company of men to be in the company of angels. Driven from a life of suffering to be crowned with eternal glory before the throne of God.'"

Helen Hunt Jackson beautifully expresses our thought in her poetic lines:

"Is it true, O Christ in heaven,
That the highest suffer most?
That the strongest wander farthest,
And more helplessly are lost?
That the mark of rank in nature
Is capacity for pain,
And the anguish of the singer
Makes the sweetness of the strain?"

"Is it true, O Christ in heaven,
That the fullness yet to come
Is so glorious and so perfect
That to know would strike us dumb?
That if ever for a moment
We could pierce beyond the sky
With these poor dim eyes of mortals,
We should just see God, and die?"

—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

DANCE MAD.

One of the most eminent and victorious tours now in progress is being made by a certain New York couple—a year ago unknown—who are appearing before crowded houses in the larger cities giving exhibitions of the latest dances. At Chicago last week the most commodious concert hall was crowded twice and the door receipts exceeded $5,000. In New York, where this couple are fairly worshiped, they have made a fortune out of the "tango," "Texas Tommy," and a dozen or more perverted steps and gyrations. The country is dance mad. In a short year and a half the flame has burst forth with consuming force. It has reached the very doors of the sanctuary itself and more than one Church has thrown its doors open to the dance.

In city hotels daily dances are given in public; there is hardly an entertainment offered by society leaders that does not divide the time between cards and dancing by "artists," the "movies" have brought them in as special attractions and children are thus brought into familiar contact with this latest demoralization.

The other evening we received a report from one of the highest grade "movie" houses in Chicago to the effect that the performers had shifted their crude performance to startling acrobatics in which the man picked up his partner, holding her in many indecent positions, and ending with reversing her feet and head. The applause was wild. He had captured the audience and incidentally ten dollars, for managers have taken to offering prizes to the best dancers.

Dancing has broken into our public schools until parents who have scruples are either compelled to compromise with their consciences or withdraw their children from practically all social life and subject them to ostracism. Many parents, rather than bring this disappointment to their boys and girls, have yielded to the popular craze.

The wave may recede in time. It probably will, but the evil effect of the dance obsession as at present indulged will not soon, if ever, depart. In this hour there is only one line of action for the Church and that is to stand unhesitatingly against the innovation. To countenance it now and under the circumstances would be fatal to the very life of Methodism.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

WHY HE DIED.

We have just heard the inner story of a friend, a minister who died a little time ago. When he came under the physician's care he was thought to have but a slight affliction, a matter of a moment, with perfect health awaiting him in a few days at the most. Instead he died within those few days.

When an examination was made it was found that certain organic changes had occurred in his body that had made death a certainty. What was the trouble?

He was highly educated, an Apollo in personal appearance, social, born, it was believed, to the people for the high places in the ministry. But early he contracted the expectation of preferment. He expected to be called to the foremost pulpits—the next time. He was encouraged to think that this was his destiny. He picked out his future. He gave his mind to what he would do next year when he would be in the front ranks.

But when the hour came for making the appointment another was called. He had not quite made good in the "inferior" place, and the promotion, based upon his success, was withheld. He was disappointed. But he went back to his charge only to begin his dream as to how at the next Conference he would be summoned to a given high place, which now possessed him. He forgot to do his best work in the field he was in because it was somewhat humble.

When the next Conference convened he brimmed with expectations. His friends spoke to him of what was in store. He spoke freely of his anticipations. But the appointments were read—and it was the old story.

Thus he aged. And when he was taken down with a petty complaint, it was found that he was an old man. He had lived such a life as makes men old. He had aged before his time. While still scarcely out of his twenties he passed, an old man, to the grave.

And yet this is a false philosophy—it is American, but it is wrong. All places are big in the eye of Christ, because there are souls there for whom he shed his blood.—Central Christian Advocate.

The General Conference.

(Condensed from the Daily Advocate.)

Tenth Day—Morning Session.

Bishop Kilgo called the Conference to order at 9 o'clock, and Rev. D. H. Kern, of the Baltimore Conference, conducted the devotional exercises. After the secretary had read the minutes of the previous day's session, Bishop Lambuth took the chair.

It was fixed as the order of the day that the report, and the minority report, of the Special Committee on Vanderbilt University be taken up at the conclusion of the address to be made at 11:30 o'clock by the fraternal delegate from the Methodist Church of Japan.

Bishop Lambuth called for memorials, appeals, and resolutions. After the referring of these to the proper committees, a telegram was read by the Secretary to be sent to Mexico expressing the sympathy of the Conference with our Mexican brethren.

The Committee on Revisals at this time made its reports Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, which were sent to the calendar. Report No. 11, after reciting many memorials relative to matters to be taken up in the order of business in the quarterly conferences, recommended the amendment of paragraph 90, chapter 2, section 4, of the Discipline, so as to include all those things the Committee thought wise to provide for. Report No. 12 advised the amendment of the Discipline so that the standing licensing committee of the district conferences, in the interim of the sessions of the district conferences and the Annual Conferences, might duly recommend a local preacher to the Annual Conferences for admission on trial; it further recommended concurrence in a memorial to strike out that part of a paragraph about a day of fasting before the sessions of the quarterly conferences; and it also favored the plan of cross indexing the Discipline. Report No. 13 recommended an expression of appreciation to the Commission on the Constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the painstaking labor this Commission had performed in its findings, and advised the publication of its report in pamphlet form. Report No. 14 recommended concurrence with a memorial from the Sunday School Board proposing disciplinary forms for the "Ministration of Baptism to Children and Youth," and for the "Reception and Recognition of Children as Members of the Church." The report also recited the paragraphs to be inserted in the Discipline to carry this recommendation out. Report No. 15 recommended non-concurrence in its three items as follows: A resolution proposing the insertion of the words, "Forasmuch as the spirit of this deceased child," in the ritual for the burial of the dead to be used in the burial of a child; a petition asking that Scripture be selected for the ritual of the burial service other than 2 Samuel 12:16-23; and a resolution that "The Lord's Supper shall be administered monthly on stations and quarterly at each church on circuits, unless the pastor is not an elder." Report No. 16 recommended non-concurrence in a memorial asking that the Apostles' Creed be changed relative to the words "holy catholic Church" in that the General Conference had already acted upon the matter. Report No. 17 begged leave to amend the Committee on Revisal's report No. 4 (sixth day's record) by substituting "non-concurrence" for "concurrence," since the report dealt with the changing of the Restrictive Rules, and that involved the submission of the question to the Annual Conferences.

The Committee on Education presented report No. 5, which was sent to the calendar, together with a minority report. No. 5 recommended non-concurrence with memorials asking "a new division of the funds raised for educational purposes." The minority of this Committee, however, made a strong and convincing report saying they "found it impossible to agree with the majority of the Committee on one item of their report of the memorial of the Board of Education to the General Conference," and it moved to amend the majority report by striking out those words "containing all expressions that would enact into law that no Annual Conference shall appropriate money to, give any financial aid to, or recognition to, an unclassified institution of learning." The minority report further defined its position by reciting the paragraphs in the majority report as they would read after being amended. It was signed by R. A. Meek, J. H. Sherard, J. W. Deason, R. O. Randle, Thomas Whitehead, M. M. Parks, C. R. Jenkins, and I. W. Cooper.

Reports Nos. 9 and 10 of the Committee on Missions were made and sent to the calendar. Report No. 9 recommended the amending of the Discipline so that the words "two Editorial Secretaries" shall be stricken out of paragraph 355 that recites who shall compose the Board of Missions of the Church; and to carry out the intention of this recommendation, the striking out of paragraph 362 of the Discipline was advised. Report No. 10 recommended the adoption of a resolution to the effect that the Bishops should assign one of their number for four consecutive years for the superintendence of the work in the far East, and another for the work in Brazil and Mexico.

Reports Nos. 2 and 7 from the Committee on Boundaries and Finance were sent to the calendar. No. 2 recommended concurrence with a memorial proposing names as Trustees of the Superannuate Endowment Fund. No. 7 advised, since there had long been dissatisfaction touching the boundary lines of the Western Virginia, Kentucky, Holston, Baltimore, and Virginia Conferences, that a Commission be appointed to report upon this matter to the next General Conference and offer such advice as it sees fit. The report provided an equitable plan for the establishing of this Commission.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on Epworth Leagues was sent to the calendar. It recommended non-concurrence with memorials touching the union of the Epworth League and Sunday school interests. The report, on a memorial from the Epworth League Board, recited a new constitution for the Epworth League Board, to be inserted in the Discipline in lieu of the present one.

The Committee on Church Relations and Bible Cause reported an amendment to its report No. 6 (seventh day's proceedings), which went to the calendar. The amendment advised approval of the efforts of the Federal Council of Churches to see that a propaganda of Christian evangelism of commanding size be maintained in San Francisco during the time of the Panama Exposition.

The Special Committee on Evangelism made its report No. 1, which recommended non-concurrence with a memorial asking that a General Board of Evangelism be created, with an office and executive head, or secretary. Report No. 2 of the Special Committee on Evangelism offered for adoption some resolutions that invited and welcomed the leadership of the Bishops toward a more abundant spiritual life in the Church in accordance with the lofty views set forth in the Episcopal Address. The resolutions urged upon the preachers their supreme duty as true evangelists and also commended the stirring up of "the gift that is in us."

The calendar was taken up at this time and report No. 6 of the Board of Missions was allowed to take its place on the calendar as it had been before held up.

The following resolution was adopted: "That the General Conference meet in its next quadrennial session on the first Thursday in May, 1918, at 9 a. m., the same being the second day of the month."

Dr. William Bradfield, our fraternal delegate from Great Britain and Ireland, was introduced to the Conference and made a farewell speech.

The Secretary next read the credentials of Dr. Y. Yoshioka, the fraternal delegate from the Methodist Church of Japan. After the Bishop had given some of the personal history of Dr. Yoshioka, he delivered his interesting and sincere message to the General Conference. Among other things, he said, "During the past quadrennium the membership of the Church (of Japan) has grown from 13,000 to 14,300, and the yearly amount raised for all purposes from 50,000 yen (or $25,000) to 64,000 yen (or $32,000). These figures may mean to you almost nothing, but in our estimate they show steady and healthy growth and development, which is a great source of encouragement to the young Church to go forward with greater zeal and brighter hopes for the future."

At the close of Dr. Yoshioka's address Bishop Lambuth said, among other remarks, "You have taken notice of the beautiful English in which our brother has expressed himself. I asked him once why he was so deliberate in speaking in English. He said he was constantly reviewing the rules of English grammar while he was speaking." Bishop Wilson led in prayer for the work in Japan at the conclusion of Bishop Lambuth's talk. A resolution passed the Conference to the effect that it had heard with peculiar pleasure the fraternal address of Dr. Yoshioka, and that it assured him of its abiding interest in the Church and people he represented, and in all the people of Japan.

Secretary Watkins offered a resolution which was immediately adopted that the Chair appoint a committee of five secretaries of Annual Conferences whose duty it would be to consider a plan of uniform minutes for the Annual Conferences as to size, type, and arrangement of matter; that such uniform publications would simplify the work of many of the general officers and of the editor of the General Minutes; and that this committee report its findings back to the General Conference. The Chair appointed on this committee: J. A. Burrow, F. S. Parker, J. R. Counsell, A. J. Meaders, and M. T. Haw.

Report No. 1 (ninth day's proceedings) of the Special Committee on Vanderbilt University was adopted. The Conference allowed Judge Linebaugh the privilege of a change, merely in a minor detail, in report No. 2 of this special Committee.

W. A. Christian here made a formal motion that the minority report be substituted for the majority.

Dr. A. J. Lamar then spoke on the matter of the reports from the Special Committee on Vanderbilt University. He strongly favored the majority report and said "we trusted them (the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt) in the past, and we trusted them to our sorrow; and I, for one, am no longer willing to trust them."

Dr. James Cannon took a stand favoring the minority report. He said that to refer the matter back to the original paronizing Conferences would be to own that we are whipped and unable to defend the trust reposed in us; and that now we must not just turn it back, thus ridding ourselves of it. He referred to such an act as one of cowardice. His plan was to let the Board of Education begin to exercise the rights we had in the University; and to make a test case in the very beginning by refusing to confirm the election of Chancellor Kirkland.

The Conference moved to meet in the afternoon of the same day at 2:30 o'clock.

Tenth Day—Afternoon Session.

Bishop Lambuth called the Conference to order; and Rev. W. B. Taylor, of Tennessee, conducted the devotional exercises. After the approving of the minutes, Bishop Waterhouse took the chair.

W. D. Bradfield made the first speech of this session. He spoke for the adoption of the majority report of the Special Committee. He followed up the history of the encroachments of the Board of Trust on the rights of the Church and spoke of the further alienation of the University by the Carnegie Pension Fund for teachers.

Judge J. M. McCormick, in his speech, stated that he had never been in the University buildings but once, that he knew nothing of its past history, and that he had come to his conclusions through careful study. He held that the Court had decided only two things; and these were that the Bishops under the Memphis resolutions did not have visitatorial power and the General Conference did not have the absolute right to fill resolutions upon the Board of Trust, and further, that the Board of Trust was not empowered to do so. He said that the only course of action would be to take it to the Supreme Court. He said: "I favor the minority report because it carefully carries out and interprets what the Church and University always intended to be their right and duty, as recognized now by the Supreme Court of Tennessee."

Dr. T. N. Key stated that he would not express himself editorially for some time after the Supreme Court had handed down its decision in March of this year, but he referred in prayer what course to take and after consulting with those by his convictions. He said in his speech: "My feelings and thoughts during all this time have crystallized into the conviction expressed by Brother Brantley, who said that there must be complete separation or complete cooperation."

Dr. H. M. Dubose spoke energetically in favor of the majority report. He said in his remarks: "Men have sent to this General Conference a written document and have said: 'Here is hospitality of buildings and here are possibilities, and we are in good relations before all the Church.'"

Osie Spear, of Texas, spoke in favor of the minority report. He said in his speech: "You are the common whipped crowd I ever saw. I am accustomed as a lawyer to fight, and I despise a coward, and your committee are committed to fail."

B. H. Marbury was in favor of the minority report, contending that the Court had decided only two questions, and not the whole of the issue. "Under this opinion" (referring to the Supreme Court of Tennessee), he said, "under the law of charitable trusts, you cannot hand back to the several Annual Conferences that which the Board of Trust does not agree to, and that the Annual Conferences by resolution do not agree to."

T. D. Samford contended that "they (the Board of Trust) have accepted a gift of one million dollars from Mr. Carnegie with a statement and conditions attached thereto which the Bishops in their veto and statement to the Church have said that the Church cannot accept with consistency and honor. If that be true, there can never be any reconciliation between the Church and Vanderbilt University until that matter is eliminated or the Church recedes from its position, because the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, through its Annual Conferences, has practically unanimously endorsed the veto and the statement of the Bishops and that proposition."

Judge N. E. Harris, one of the lawyers for the Church in the recent controversy, spoke in favor of the majority report. He contended that there never was a transmission of property rights from the patronizing Conferences to the General Conference. In this case he desired that the control be given back to the patronizing Annual Conferences that they may conserve the University for the Church.

Dr. E. G. B. Mann said he was not only a delegate from the Kentucky Conference, but spoke "as editor of one of our Conference organs, representing three Annual Conferences with a total membership of a hundred and twenty-five thousand and with four hundred preachers. I am also president of the Southern Methodist Press Association. And I represent my people, the body of members in my constituency . . . Dr. Mann arraigned the partakers in the demonstration at Nashville for their conduct, and said there was no use begging the Board of Trust to conserve the interests of the Church, that they would not do it; and the only course would be to turn the University back to the proper authorities."

Dr. G. C. Rankin said that he was editor of the Texas Christian Advocate that had 26,000 subscribers, but that he did not in any sense represent the people of Texas as he stood before the Conference since none of the Annual Conferences had convened since the decision of the Supreme Court (save the Baltimore) and that not one of them had expressed themselves as a body on the matter at all, and, therefore, he spoke for himself. Dr. Rankin favored the minority report and blamed most of the trouble confronting the Church upon Chancellor Kirkland.

Rev. H. D. Knickerbocker spoke a few minutes only and favored the majority report.

Tenth Day—Evening Session.

Bishop Waterhouse called the Conference to order and Rev. J. W. Perry conducted the devotional exercises.

After the minutes of the afternoon session were read and approved Bishop Mouzon took the chair.

P. T. Durham was the next speaker upon the Vanderbilt matter. He favored the majority report of the Special Committee. His opinion was that the Conferences that began the plan for a University were able to handle the situation only, and take it into the United States Court if necessary.

Dr. H. N. Snyder favored the minority report and advised this to be the course for the present at least. Dr. Snyder recognized his pleasant connections with the University when he was there as a student and expressed his love for it.

Dr. W. F. Tillet favored the minority report. He pleaded earnestly with the Conference that it maintain its hold upon the University. He said that in 1817 all the Board of Trust will have had to be confirmed by the Board of Education, and just on the verge of these confirmations, he would not have the Church give up.

Easton Anthony said that a great deal of the trouble had come about through local sentiment in Nashville. He said the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has never owned Vanderbilt University, but that ownership rested in the patronizing Conferences. He therefore favored the majority report that they might maintain their rights in the University.

John R. Pepper favored the minority report because he thought that was the opportunity to hold on to what the Church might control. He thought it unfair to turn the matter back to the patronizing Conferences when it was in such trouble and confusion.

Dr. W. A. Christian spoke in favor of the minority report and said it was doubtful if the Conference could recover its rights to the patronizing Conferences. He doubted the ability of the very patronizing Conferences to handle the matter; they would have to be incorporated, or establish some kind of common working basis. It might cause discord among the Conferences. Dr. Christian indicated that he had not lost faith in the Board of Trust and that all might come out right.

Judge D. H. Linebaugh then made the closing speech against the minority report which was before the house for adoption. He said the Board of Trust was a capable and understanding body of men; they were resourceful; they thought out their movements, and they have said that the Church does not own Vanderbilt University; therefore, they cannot recede from their position.

A motion prevailed that a vote of ayes and nays be taken. The Bishop explained that the minority report was before the house for adoption. The vote stood at 146 for adoption and 151 against. The majority report was then put before the house. The vote stood 152 for adoption and 134 against. The majority report was adopted.

After the doxology was sung, Bishop Lambuth pronounced the benediction.

Eleventh Day.

Bishop Mouzon called the Conference to order, and Rev. T. F. Sessions led the devotional exercises.

After the minutes of the preceding session were approved, Bishop McCoy took the chair.

Judge D. H. Linebaugh arose and spoke to a question of personal privilege. He said that he had blundered in trying to discuss in Saturday's session such a great matter before the Conference in a limited time of fifteen minutes, as the speeches had been thus limited. He desired to make public amends if he had wounded the spirit of any member of that distinguished body by any remark he had made. He reaffirmed his grounds for favoring the majority report—because he believed the patronizing Conferences could better deal with the situation; they were in a position to go to the Board of Trust and tell them that they were the title holders of Vanderbilt, and if they saw fit they could say to the Board of Trust that they must give back the million dollars that Mr. Carnegie had given the University. Judge Linebaugh further said that some remarks had been inadvertently made about Chancellor Kirkland, and he wanted to express the sentiments of every man in the Conference, that the Chancellor had the best wishes of all.

Other speakers made short talks. W. A. Christian again reaffirmed his conviction that the minority report was the one the Conference should adopt.

Judge N. E. Harris spoke again at some length about the power of the patronizing Conferences in dealing with the matter about to be placed in their hands. He said the Court had said that the General Conference had only a contract right in Vanderbilt, but it had never said that the patronizing Conferences did not have charter rights. Judge Harris stated that the majority report of the Special Committee said that "we are also of the opinion that under the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee the control of the General Conference in the Vanderbilt University is so small and remote as to be negligible." He was afraid this statement would hurt future litigation if the patronizing Conferences should decide to enter the courts.

The majority report was reconsidered and re-committed to the Special Committee with the reservation that it report back to the Conference with a report following the spirit and purpose of the majority report and in harmony with the Conference this morning.

The order of the day was taken up, which was to engage in prayer for the peace negotiations proceeding at Niagara Falls.

Report No. 6 of the Committee on Education was placed on the calendar. It presented a lengthy and detailed number of recommendations for disciplinary changes; recommendations concerning Annual Conferences making educational assessments; concerning what schools shall receive the support of the Church, and on other matters in line with the present contents of the Discipline upon the subject of education.

A supplement to report No. 1 of the Committee on Epworth Leagues (seventh day) was sent to the calendar. The supplement provided for collections on Epworth League Day and two other minor matters.

Report No. 4 of the Committee on Church Relations and Bible Cause (sixth day) was read and adopted.

Report No. 3 of the Committee on Education (sixth day) was read, but not adopted. It was left before the body.

From the secular press we learn that report No. 2 of the Committee on Temperance and Social Service (reported in the sixth day's proceedings) referring to ministers using tobacco, was adopted by the Conference, but we found no record of this act in the Daily Christian Advocate. From its report this question was pending at the close of business on the morning of the eighth day's session.)

After the singing of the doxology, the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Matt S. Hughes, of California.

Twelfth Day, May 19.

Bishop McCoy took the chair at 9 o'clock, and called upon Dr. J. S. Chadwick, the assistant Editor of the Christian Advocate (Nashville), to conduct the devotional exercises.

After the reading of the previous day's minutes by the Secretary, Bishop A. W. Wilson took the chair.

Report No. 2 (sixth day's proceedings) of the Committee on Education was the first matter before the Conference. As this report contained a protest against the General Conference directing the appropriations of the Board of Education, saying that "the General Conference should not tie the hands of the Board," etc., it created a good deal of discussion. Some did not desire to give the Board so much authority, others wanted the Board of Education to have the same authority as was vested in the Board of Missions. The report was finally adopted as recommended.

Reports Nos. 15, 19, 20, 21 and 22 of the Committee on Revisals went to the calendar. Report No. 18 recommended the amending of paragraph 52 of the Discipline so that Questions Nos. 26 and 27 would be combined, and so that Questions Nos. 28, 29 and 30 would be also made into one. Question 44 was recommended to be amended so as to include parsonages. Other small changes in the Discipline were recommended. Report No. 19 contained numerous recommendations for small disciplinary changes. Report No. 20 referred a matter of change in the course of study for the deacon's orders to the College of Bishops. Report No. 21 recommended, after the Committee had considered several memorials on the subject, that Junior Churches be organized wherever practicable on such a plan or plans as the Sunday School Board may direct. No. 22 recommended the addition of words to paragraph 135 of the Discipline to the effect that whenever possible the preacher must send the address of a person moving from his charge to the preacher into whose charge the person moves.

Reports Nos. 7 and 8 of the Committee on Education went to the calendar. No. 7 defined who could be trustees of schools, colleges and universities in our Church. A trustee should, among other things, be a member of our Church, and he must be confirmed, nominated or elected by some governing body of the Church. No. 8 was divided into seven sections, the first four of which provided for several detailed changes in the Discipline that would promote ministerial supply and training; the important matter in the next three sections was the cutting out of the Discipline any reference whatever to the Correspondence School of the Church at Vanderbilt University, the placing of the matter of ministerial supply and training in the hands of the Board of Education, which Board should keep before the Church its responsibility in raising up ministers, conduct a Correspondence School, and do other things along the lines indicated above. The report recommended changes taking away the option of the Annual Conferences in accepting the certificates of the Correspondence School at Vanderbilt, and providing that the Committee on Examination at the Annual Conferences must examine the candidates themselves.

Reports Nos. 11, 12 and 13 of the Committee on Missions were filed on the calendar. No. 11 recommended non-concurrence with a number of memorials too many to mention. No. 12 recommended concurrence with a memorial asking that the Annual Conference lay leader be made a member of the Annual Conference Board of Missions. No. 13 recommended that at least eight members be allowed on any Annual Conference Board of Missions, but ordinarily it should be composed of a layman from each district and an equal number of preachers.

Reports Nos. 5 and 6 of the Committee on Temperance and Social Service were reported to the calendar. No. 5 contained several resolutions leveled at the liquor traffic. No. 6 advised against a memorial advocating the establishment of a tuberculosis hospital in New Mexico.

After a debate on a report from the Special Committee on Rules, Dr. Matt. S. Hughes, the fraternal delegate from the Methodist Episcopal Church, made a speech of farewell.

Reports Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the Committee on Episcopacy went to the calendar. In Report No. 2, the death of Bishop Fitzgerald, having occurred within the past quadrennium, was noted, and a short history of his life was given; No. 3 recommended that Bishop Wilson be superannuated and that Bishop Key remain on the retired list, and that the College of Bishops so arrange their work as to give Bishop Hoss a year of complete rest; No. 4 recommended that active Bishops be given $4800 a year, retired Bishops $2400 a year, and widows of deceased Bishops $1000; No. 5 recommended no election of Bishops at this General Conference; No. 6 recommended a request that the College of Bishops divide the Church into episcopal districts, that a Bishop be assigned a district from year to year for a quadrennium, and that the Bishop assigned to an Annual Conference shall call the presiding elders together immediately after Conference to discuss the needs of the work; No. 7 recommended that the General Conference direct the Bishops to submit a change in the Restrictive Rules to the Annual Conferences allowing the division of the Church into episcopal districts.

Report No. 4 of the Committee on the Laymen's Missionary Movement was sent to the calendar. It recommended some changes in the wording of the Discipline relative to missionary interests in the individual churches or charges.

The Conference granted the privilege of the floor to two ladies, one to speak for, and one to speak against the matter of granting laity rights to women. Miss Belle Bennett represented the side favoring laity rights, and Mrs. T. B. King, of Memphis, spoke against laity rights. The report No. 2 of the Committee on Revisals, together with the minority report (see sixth day's proceedings), being the paper before the Conference upon this matter, the minority report was first voted down and then the majority report was adopted, which failed to give laity rights to women.

The committee appointed to nominate the Committee on Entertainment of the next General Conference presented the following names, and the report was adopted: J. H. Eakes, U. V. W. Darlington, W. B. Williams, B. C. Clark, F. M. Weaver, V. P. Smith, E. F. Storey.

The General Conference adopted some resolutions that fixed May 25, at 5 o'clock p.m., as the time for adjournment of the body.

Report No. 2 of the Committee on Itinerancy (seventh day) was before the house. The Conference adopted the report of the Committee that recommended the retention of the time limit, and, further, to keep the limit at four years.

Rev. J. H. Eakes pronounced the benediction.

Thirteenth Day, May 20—Morning Session.

Bishop Wilson took the chair and asked Dr. A. J. Lamar to conduct the devotional services. The Secretary read the minutes and Bishop Hendrix took the chair.

A. J. Lamar requested that he might withdraw report No. 3 of the Committee on Episcopacy from the calendar, and that this Committee might withdraw from the house and hold a meeting.

After the presentation of a gavel from one of the Conferences in the West to Bishop Waterhouse, the Conference fixed 4 o'clock, instead of 5 o'clock, as the hour for final adjournment Monday afternoon.

An invitation was given to the Conference for an automobile ride. A resolution was adopted that the powers of the Commission on Church Federation be so enlarged that it be enabled to treat with all Churches of kindred faith to ours on matters relating to union and federation.

The Committee on Itinerancy made its reports Nos. 8 to 15. They went to the calendar. Each report recommended non-concurrence in a number of memorials too numerous to mention, except No. 11, which recommended who shall compose the Committee on Appeals, and its time of duration.

The Committee on Revisals made its report No. 23, which recommended non-concurrence in every one of its 21 items (which we do not give). It was placed on the calendar.

Report No. 8 of the Committee on Church Extension went to the calendar. Its chief import was to continue the work relative to the Church building enterprise for Washington City.

Reports Nos. 14 and 15 of the Committee on Missions were sent to the calendar. No. 14 recommended non-concurrence with memorials concerning the assessments of the Board of Missions and concerning the Conference Board of Missions (the report did not embody details). No. 15 favored the passing of resolutions that it recited emphasizing the great advisability of continuing to propagate missions in Greek and Roman Catholic countries.

The Committee on Boundaries and Finance made its reports Nos. 12 to 17, which went to the calendar. No. 12 recommended a provision for an assessment for the Superannuate Endowment Fund. Nos. 13 and 14 advised some changes relative to boundaries. No. 15 recommended non-concurrence in each of its items except the first two, which required no action. The report did not embody details. No. 16 consisted of matters relating to boundaries, and the disposing of the funds of a bequest. No. 17 recommended that the Conference make it lawful for the Joint Board of Finance to appropriate money to a local preacher who has served for fifteen years or more if he is incapacitated by age or disease. It refused to approve the placing of the salary limit of a preacher at $1000.

Report No. 1 of the Special Committee on Annual Conference Journals was adopted. It specified a form to be used by all the Conferences.

A resolution was adopted appointing a commission to look into and make such changes as it sees fit in all the charters of all the property holding boards belonging to the Church at large. The commission is as follows: Bishop McCoy, W. F. McMurry, F. M. Boyles, T. D. Ellis, E. C. O'Rear, W. W. Hughes, E. C. Reeves, J. A. McCullough and W. H. Thomas.

The Special Committee on Vanderbilt University again made its report No. 2. It was accompanied by a minority report that differed from the majority report only in one word, which was "legally," and it was added to the 5th resolution so as to make it say that the Board of Education shall have the responsible work of confirming the trustees of Vanderbilt University until such time as the transfer to the patronizing Conferences is "legally" complete. The reports directed the formation of a commission of sixteen members that shall reconvey to the patronizing Conferences the rights of the General Conference in Vanderbilt University. This commission also was to be empowered with the matters of founding a theological school for the Church and of also starting institutions of higher education.

A lengthy debate occurred upon the presentation of these reports. Those participating were James Cannon, A. J. Lamar, W. A. Christian, D. H. Linebaugh, V. P. Smith, and P. D. Maddin. Aye and no vote was called for; 114 votes were cast for the minority report, and 176 against it. The majority report, upon motion of W. A. Christian, was adopted unanimously.

Dr. Y. Yoshiooka pronounced the benediction.

Thirteenth Day—Evening Session.

Bishop Hendrix called the Conference to order at 8 o'clock.

Rev. C. N. Bishop, of the North Texas Conference, conducted the devotional service. The minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

Bishop Candler took the chair.

Bishop Denny presented a communication from the College of Bishops naming the committee to nominate the Book Committee as follows: R. E. L. Morgan, W. C. Lovett, J. G. Putman, W. P. Few, L. W. Davis, U. V. W. Darlington, J. D. Simpson, W. A. Hanna, and F. S. H. Johnston.

The Rules were suspended and reports Nos. 2, 3, and 9 of the Committee on Episcopacy were taken up out of their order. No. 2 (twelfth day's proceedings) was immediately adopted. No. 3 (twelfth day), which recommended, among other things, the superannuation of Bishop Wilson, after some debate, was adopted. No. 9 (we cannot find reported in the Daily Advocate) was also adopted.

The motion to adjourn prevailed, notices were read, and Bishop Wilson pronounced the benediction.

GENERAL CONFERENCE NOTES.

By the Editor.

(These notes were written in Oklahoma City while the General Conference was in session, being intended for the Advocate of May 21. Because of delayed mails, however, they did not reach the office until that issue of the paper had gone to press.)

Oklahoma City, where the Conference is being held, has a population of about 60,000. It is a very attractive city, with fine streets, many imposing buildings, splendid churches, and a number of excellent hotels. The delegates are being much better cared for than they were in Asheville four years ago.

St. Luke's Church in which the Conference sessions are conducted is a modern, up-to-date structure which was erected in 1908 at a cost of $75,000. Its architecture is admirable, it presents a beautiful appearance, and its appointments provide ample facilities for all the departments of church work, but its seating capacity is scarcely large enough to accommodate the General Conference without crowding the delegates considerably.

The Bishops' Address to the General Conference, which was prepared and read by Bishop W. A. Candler, is universally conceded to have been a masterful and illuminating message. Many competent judges have pronounced it the ablest paper ever given the Church by the Episcopal College in the history of Southern Methodism. It will probably be put in pamphlet form for general distribution throughout the connection.

Bishop A. W. Wilson, much to the delight of all, seems to have regained his health and looks to be pretty vigorous for one of his advanced years. He presided on the first day and has been present at nearly all the sessions of the Conference. Whether he will be continued on the active list, is not known at this writing, but there is a very strong sentiment among the delegates against his retirement. (Since the above was written Bishop Wilson has been superannuated, but there was a large vote against such action.)

The placing of one layman and one preacher on each of the standing committees, which was done by a resolution on the opening day of the Conference, was, we think, a serious mistake. It has resulted in swelling the size of every committee to 75 or 80 men, which is too many for a free interchange of thought and the accomplishment of the best result. There has been apparent throughout the Conference a disposition upon the part of some to array the lay delegates against the clerical members, with a view of achieving, if possible, certain desired ends. We are glad to state, however, that these attempts do not seem to have made much headway. Our laymen entertain too high an opinion of our Bishops and preachers to be easily arrayed against them.

Bishop E. E. Hoss, though not in vigorous health, is alert and takes an active interest in all the proceedings of the Conference. Of all our chief pastors, he is the most richly endowed with the elements of leadership, and though he has no disposition to offer gratuitous advice, the brethren freely seek his counsel. His room is nearly always thronged with visitors, and he finds it difficult to go anywhere without being frequently stopped by persons who want a word with him. It is probably that Bishop Hoss will be given a year of complete rest. He is perhaps the best loved man in Southern Methodism.

One of the most spirited debates that have taken place thus far was on the proposal hereafter to require all candidates for admission into the itinerancy to abstain from the use of tobacco. It began on Friday, May 15, and extended into the next day's session. During the discussion speakers advocating the affirmative side were liberally applauded by persons in the galleries, the ladies in particular waving their handkerchiefs to attest their approval. The measure carried by a vote of 182 to 116.

The effort to strike out from the Apostles' Creed the words, "the holy catholic Church," substituting therefor the words "the Church of God," resulted in the Committee on Revisals bringing in a majority and a minority report, the former in favor of the change and the latter against it. The debate was an extended one, taking up a considerable part of two sessions of the Conference. On motion of Dr. A. F. Watkins the vote, which was by yeas and nays, was taken by orders, the lay and clerical delegates voting separately, and a majority of each being required to pass the measure. The vote stood as follows: For the change—clerical votes, 73; lay votes, 88; total, 161. Against the change—clerical, 39; lay, 57; total, 146. Some of the ministerial delegates seemed to think that they had accomplished a great feat by defeating this proposal in the manner described above; but we do not think the will of the majority concerning a question of this kind should have been thwarted by invoking the assistance of this provision of the Discipline, which doubtless was intended to be brought into use only when measures of a grave constitutional character are involved.

On Wednesday evening, May 13, the Rev. Wm. Bradfield, fraternal messenger from the British Wesleyan and Irish Conferences, was heard, Bishop Hendrix making response to the greetings from the Mother Church. On the following (Thursday) evening Rev. S. F. Rose and Mr. G. F. Johnson, the representatives of Canadian Methodism, were received and made happy addresses. Bishop Wilson presided and spoke for our Church on this occasion. On Friday night Dr. Matt S. Hughes, who brought a message from the Methodist Episcopal Church, spoke with commanding force and eloquence, and Bishop Hoss replied in a manner which brought frequent outbursts of applause. It seems to be the well-nigh universal verdict that no fraternal messenger from the Northern Methodist Church ever made a stronger and more notable utterance to one of our General Conferences.

The Home Circle

THE PRAYER OF ONE GROWING OLD.

Be with me, Lord! My home is growing still,
As one by one the guests go out the door;
And they who helped me once to do thy will Behold and praise thee on the heavenly shore.

Uphold my strength! My task is not yet done,
Nor let me at my labor cease to sing;
But from the rising to the setting sun
Each faithful hour do service to my King.

Show me Thy light! Let not my wearied eyes
Miss the fresh glory of the passing day;
But keep the light of morn—the sweet surprise
Of each new blessing that attends my way.

And for the crowning grace!—O Lord, renew
The best of gifts Thy best of saints have had;
With the great joy of Christ my heart endure,
To share the whole world's tears, and still be glad.

A LEAF FROM BOARDING SCHOOL DAYS.

By C. L. Burnham McMath.

"I don't want to go down to-night. Just fancy! having prayer meeting every night for a week." Janet turned indignantly toward her best friend, Alice, who was standing in the door.

"But," Alice protested, "this is the Week of Prayer all over the world. Dr. Janes invited all Y. W. C. A. workers who wished to meet him in the Venetian parlor for only fifteen minutes each evening, for a prayer meeting. We won't lose the study hall fun only a little while. I'm going." Alice turned a firm back to Janet and three girls, gathered to gossip after dinner in the fashionable boarding school.

"I know mother would like me to," she added.

"Oh! yes," Janet answered. Then a sudden impulse seized her.

"Wait, Alice, I suppose I'll go."

The Venetian parlor was lighted dimly with the glow of high lamps. Dr. Janes sat tapping his cane, waiting for a response to his invitation.

As Alice and Janet entered, three others strolled in also.

"How many of us are there, girls?" Dr. Janes asked, for he was blinded to this world, but his spiritual insight was doubled by the grace with which he carried his cross.

"Only five," Alice answered.

"Five out of fifty girls?" Dr. Janes tapped his cane.

"Now, girls, as we come here to pray, do you realize God's people are praying all over the world?" Not only in this city but every city of this country and Europe, Australia, China and Japan. All seeking, with an earnest purpose, to lead some one to Christ. Let us each take a friend and pray definitely that they may surrender their hearts to the Master.

"Now I don't mean for you to tell me the name. You just stop and think who of all your friends is not confessing Christ? Who can you lead to Christ? Let us all be silent and think—each definitely in your own mind name a friend. Pray for her night and morning, morning and night afresh. The incense of consecrated prayer is precious in the sight of the Lord. After a few minutes of silence, let each one, starting at my right, give a sentence of prayer."

The silence was prescient with deep feeling. The girls had all been impressed with their personal part in the Week of Prayer. One after another, with bended knee, told in simple words the hope that "Our Father would grant the petition for Christ's sake."

Four of the girls had prayed and then there was a silence. Dr. Janes started to close the little prayer service, by a united petition for all, when the fifth voice broke the stillness:

"I can't pray for any one else. It's just me, only me, who needs praying for."

The head was raised and tears shone on the cheeks.

"I only came down to please Alice and God don't want that kind of prayers. I can't ask Him for contrary old me."

"I need Thee, every hour, most gracious Lord." Dr. Janes burst into song and the heads bowed to the music, as to a prayer.

At the close of the last verse a few words of earnest prayer followed. The girls passed to the study hall with a new purpose in living and a deeper insight into the personal purpose of the Christ life.—Herald and Presbyter.

THE CALL OF THE FLOWERS.

Spring is moving northward trailing garments of bloom. Everywhere is the stirring of new life. The burdened business man, the woman harassed with home cares, the children all long for a day in the open. There is joy in filling the last lobe of the lungs when the air is scented with wild crab apple bloom.

The flowers represent the tenderer side of nature. The mountains frown out of the sky with ragged escarpment and dizzy leap of granite in complete indifference to the pygmies called men. The sea is full of mystery and laves the shore at your feet with waves that have traveled thousands of miles from regions unknown. The rivers send their floods over rocky shallows or sweeping through silent pools, relentlessly on to some destiny, they know not whither but impatient of delay. But the flowers are nature's smiles. They are her beckoning hands. They invite us to come near and be friendly. They appeal to the finest and best in us. They help us express our deepest emotions, joy and sorrow. "There's rosemary, that's for remembrance; and there is pansies, that's for thoughts." What we cannot frame in speech we expect the flowers to convey with an eloquence not of earth, but perfectly understood on earth.

The spring flowers are not double but single. It is not until man comes with his floriculture, hot-house, and cross fertilization that we have the double varieties, hybrids, and abnormal growths. Strip any of these of their artificial support and they would revert to type.

The wild flowers call us back to the great simplicities of life. We are involved in complex conditions. Life is organized, socialized, commercialized. It is difficult to be free. Many have protested against the artificial requirements of society. Wordsworth shouts "the world is too much with us." Carlyle leaves the conventionalities of London for Craigenputtock, where he can give himself to plain living and high thinking: Thoreau takes up his abode at Walden Pond. Agassiz refuses a trip to Europe because he is more interested in a rock ledge in his back yard. Multitudes are to-day finding something restful and healing in contact with nature and her ministries. Many have thus been recovered from the vain struggles, the false values, the deluding hypocrisies of the world. "If I had two loaves of bread, I would sell one and buy lilies" runs the proverb. It would be a good investment, for man cannot live by bread alone.

As the flowers are infinitely varied, but each comes to its perfection in the place appointed for it, so it is with life. Some are like the bluebells swinging their fragrance through wooded dell with each passing breeze and plucked at last by the fevered hand of some eager child; some like water lilies spreading their pure white petals above the muck from which they grow, bringing encouragement to all who are evilly environed; some like red poppies flaming forth in yellow harvest fields to be cut down by the merciless reaper and yet suggesting how beauty may be joined to utility; some lives are like sunflowers and golden rod adorning with gaudy splendor the dusty highways where plod weary pilgrims; and some are like roses that come to their glorious perfection under watchful care and in a shelter from the driving storm or beating rain or burning heat. Every life may be beautiful if rooted in Christ and trained by the Husbandman.—Charles N. Pace, in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

TO THE LOUISIANA PASTORS.

Through the District Secretaries and through the columns of the Advocate a request has been made of each pastor in the Conference to present the cause of Christian education to his people during the month of May. We proposed to each pastor who did not care to do this himself that we would have it done by some representative of the Conference Board of Education.

Our efforts to have this done during this month have largely failed because most of our pastors have failed to respond to our letters. There were many and urgent reasons why this should have been done in May, and still more urgent reasons why it should still be done at least before the 1st of July.

Literature has gone from this office into every pastoral charge in the Conference explaining our plans. We are trying to make this work as little burdensome to the pastors as possible, but it will be impossible to make it go without a measure of co-operation upon their part.

It will be a physical impossibility for the Conference Secretary to get into every church in the Conference. However, we believe that we can command enough assistance to have this matter presented to every congregation during this year if the pastors will only indicate their desire and willingness in the matter.

We deeply appreciate the kindness shown us in this work by many of our brethren, and cannot help but feel that all of our pastors will yet fall into line.

Please, brethren, do your servants in this work the great kindness to reply to our letters, if only on a postal card.

PAUL M. BROWN,
Secretary of Education.

THE WORK OF THE CHURCH.

It is well to turn attention to the humanizing effect of the Christian Church when people are questioning the efficiency of that institution. One critic was asked what he thought the city in which he lived would be like if it were not for the churches. It happened that the man had spent some years in Arizona where there had been no churches. He looked thoughtfully at his questioner and answered bluntly: "I can tell you what it would be like—it would be like hell." This was a candid expression from one who had lived in a churchless community, and it is not strange that the question started a train of thought which resulted, several days later, in his making a voluntary contribution to the work of one of the churches in his city. It is not in any fair-minded man to deny the great uplifting power of the Christian Church. And a work like that calls for and deserves the best that men and women have to offer.—Zion's Herald.

Editorial

AFTER THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

While many may be disappointed that some measures they had strongly advocated were not enacted into laws at the General Conference, nevertheless, the common sense and the true balanced state of the Church at large are apparent from the recent actions of its great delegated body. Just because one's personal propaganda was not carried out, one need not necessarily think that the Church is at a standstill, is old-fashioned, and will soon begin to lose ground. There were memorials that we all perhaps thought suggested decided improvements for the Church, but the Conference possibly saw fit not to make their contents into laws. To become discontented and embittered because everything did not move along as we liked, is to make matters worse.

The reports from Oklahoma City seem to indicate that the Conference was somewhat radical in its feelings. The delegates were inclined to listen to memorials suggesting various changes; their attention was given closely to the hearing of several questions which, had they been passed into law, would have been innovations. In fact, the Discipline was cut up and patched over at a great pace; the Board of Education was given almost plenary power; all reference to the Correspondence School at Vanderbilt was pared from the book of law; what little right the Church may, perhaps, have had left in Vanderbilt University after the recent Tennessee Supreme Court decision was placed in the hands of a commission to turn back to the original patronizing Conferences; a law was put into effect that young ministers coming into the Conference should agree not to use tobacco; the Conference came very near changing some of the wording of the Apostles' Creed which some considered hardly within good taste, in view of the ancient and venerable history of the Creed; a strong debate took place upon the floor when some endeavored to persuade the Conference to pass a law limiting service in the presiding eldership to four years, consecutively; and the Conference suggested to the Bishops that they divide the Church into episcopal districts to continue throughout a quadrennium.

One can hardly say that this was a severely conservative body after such laws and near laws as indicated above were enacted and discussed. There were thousands of memorials sent to this great body, and if all of them had been made into law we would never again recognize the present familiar appearance of our beloved Church. There would have been patches here and new decorations there; in fact, some would have clothed her in an altogether new garb. And this writer himself (not the New Orleans Advocate) recommended for her a new name! Of course, this writer thinks a new name applied to the old, familiar Church would have been advantageous; but just because the General Conference did not act according to his wishes, he is not disposed to cry out calamity. It can readily be seen how easily the Church could be despoiled by too much legislation.

We believe in the providence of the all-wise God; and that he directed the affairs of his people and his Church at Oklahoma City. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in its present status of doctrine and polity, is the Church of the fathers and mothers of most of us who belong to it to-day. It has made wonderful strides in advancement through establishing the Christian virtues of those inheriting it. Most of us are indebted to the great Methodist Church, as it now stands, for what we are. Long may it live!

THE PLAN OF EPISCOPAL VISITATION.

We are publishing elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate the plan of episcopal visitation for the year 1914. As will be seen, each of our three patronizing Conferences will be under the supervision of a different Bishop. But they are fortunate in that each of them has fallen into good hands. The Louisiana Conference will continue to have the services of Bishop Candler, who as an administrator and preacher has no superior. We feel sure that this arrangement will greatly please the Methodists of the Pelican State. The Mississippi Conference will be held by Bishop Denny, who is a wise and resourceful leader, and who may be trusted to leave a favorable impress upon the Methodism of South Mississippi. Bishop Waterhouse, who has been given charge of the North Mississippi Conference, is well poised, possesses a clear judgment and is certain to make his influence widely felt for good. A warm welcome will be extended to each of these Chief Pastors by our preachers and people when they shall come to labor among them.

It will be a source of gratification to the Methodists of Mississippi that Bishop Murrah has been given one of the choicest episcopal districts that could have been arranged. As will be noted, Bishop Atkins will go to the Orient, Bishop Lambuth will go back to Brazil and Africa, and Bishop Mouzon to the Pacific Coast.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. J. M. Henry, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, was placed on the General Board of Education at the General Conference, to serve during the next quadrennium.

Mr. R. O. Randle, of Monroe, La., one of the lay delegates to the General Conference from the Louisiana Conference, was placed upon the General Board of Church Extension.

The Louisiana State Epworth League Conference will be held at Shreveport, June 17-21. It is hoped that every pastoral charge in Louisiana will be represented at this gathering.

Judge J. Q. Robins, of Tupelo, Miss., will deliver the Baccalaureate Address at the graduating exercises of the senior class of Martha Washington College, Abingdon, Va., June 2, 1914.

The Board of Directors of the Mississippi Orphans' Home will meet in annual session at the Home in Jackson, Miss., at 9 o'clock, a. m., Wednesday, June 10, 1914.—J. B. Streater, Secretary.

The Methodist Sunday schools of the city of New Orleans had a union picnic at City Park on Saturday, May 23. The plan was novel and successful. One part of the Park was allotted to the Methodists for the day.

Rev. John Paul has been appointed, at the request of the South Carolina Conference, editor of the Way of Faith, which is published at Columbia, S. C. The former editor refused re-appointment because he was getting old.

The new $3000 Southern Methodist Church at Oaknolia, La., was formally opened last Sunday. The Sunday school of this congregation is also being reorganized with a view to bringing it up to the highest standard of efficiency.

The Aberdeen (Miss.) District Conference, to be held at Prairie, Miss., opened its session at 9 o'clock a. m. to-day, May 28. The initial service, however, was held last night, May 27, and Rev. R. M. Evans preached the sermon.

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of the Booneville (Miss.) Charge, reports his work to be in good shape. Brother Bowlin's wife had a severe attack of la grippe some time ago, but we are glad to state that her health is now very much improved.

Rev. J. D. Simpson, of Pickens, Miss., has just closed a protracted meeting which lasted eight days. The meeting was of good effect. Rev. T. H. Dorsey, of Water Valley, preached for Brother Simpson. The sermons were "strong, scriptural, and convincing."

Rev. J. C. Rousseaux is conducting a protracted meeting at Zwolle, La., and Mr. R. N. Jeffery is leading the singing. Rev. S. J. Davies has just closed a good meeting at Fisher, La., where Brother Jeffery also assisted by taking charge of the music.

Mr. F. A. Howell, of Durant, Miss., in sending several subscriptions to the Advocate, speaks commendingly of the preacher, saying: "Rev. E. Nash Broyles, our pastor, is doing a fine work, is well liked by his members, and is appreciated by the town people generally."

Rev. J. G. Snelling will hold the opening service in the beautiful new Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans, on Sunday afternoon, May 31, at 4:30 p. m. Dr. Fitzgerald Sale Parker, of the Louisiana Conference, and Editor of the Epworth Era, will preach on this occasion.

Dr. R. H. Wynn, President of Centenary College, Shreveport, La., and Dr. F. S. Parker, of Nashville, Tenn., both members of the Louisiana Conference, filled important pulpits of the Methodist Church in Oklahoma City, May 24, the Sunday after the General Conference adjourned.

Rev. George H. Thompson writes: "Please announce in the Advocate that the Hattiesburg District Conference will be held at Mize, Miss., June 9-12."

Under date of May 25, Rev. B. F. Lewis, of Crystal Springs, Miss., writes: "On Yesterday we observed Children's Day. It was one of our best celebrations, and our offering was the largest in over sixteen years."

Dr. S. Halsey Werlein, the distinguished pastor of our First Methodist Church, New Orleans, on Sunday, May 24, uttered a scathing philippic against the Reinhardt bill that is now pending before the Louisiana legislature, which, if passed, will permit race-track gambling in Louisiana.

Dr. A. P. Watkins, President of Millsaps College, who was the Secretary of the General Conference at Oklahoma City, was stricken with illness a few days before the Conference adjourned and was taken to a sanitarium. The last reports state that Dr. Watkins is much improved.

Rev. T. B. Holloman, of Port Gibson, Miss., writes as follows: "Will the pastors in the Port Gibson District send me at their earliest convenience the names of all delegates and other persons who will attend our approaching District Conference? Please do not delay in doing this, brethren."

Prof. W. H. Smith, of Durant, Miss., has been appointed by Gov. Brewer State Superintendent of Education in Mississippi, to succeed Prof. J. N. Powers. Mr. Smith is a capable educator and is in every way well qualified for the position to which he has been called. He is a member of our Church at Durant.

Our esteemed young friend, Rev. W. M. Langley, sent us a club of subscribers from Vaiden, Miss., last week. Brother Langley is "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," and he serves a choice and attentive people. The Editor once had the pleasure of shepherding this flock and knows this to be true.

Rev. A. W. Turner, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Louisiana, preached a temperance sermon in the First Methodist Church at Alexandria last Sunday evening. Brother Turner is looking faithfully after the prohibition cause before the State Legislature, which is now in session at Baton Rouge.

The Advocate is indebted to the following friends for new and renewal subscriptions, and we thank most heartily each one for his diligence: Rev. J. D. Harper, of Zachary, La., 7; Rev. Osmond S. Lewis, Brandon, Miss., 8; Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, Greenville, Miss., 5; Rev. J. F. McClellan, Ellisville, Miss., 6; F. A. Howell, Durant, Miss., 3.

Writing on May 24, Rev. T. M. Bradley sent us the following note from Shelby, Miss.: "We are closing a series of revival services at this place which have greatly helped our church and town. Rev. J. T. Lewis, of Greenville, Miss., assisted in the meeting. He gave us a number of excellent sermons, and large congregations heard the Word gladly."

Rev. S. A. Brown, of Booneville, Miss., began a revival meeting last Sunday. Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Birmingham, Ala., who is one of the most effective evangelists in the Southern Methodist Church, is assisting him. Brother Brown and his son, Albert, were among the North Missis-sippians who visited Oklahoma City while the General Conference was in session there.

Mr. H. H. Ahrens, a local preacher of our Church in New Orleans, and a staff reporter for the New Orleans Times-Picayune, did exceptionally fine work in reporting the proceedings of the recent General Conference at Oklahoma City for that paper, thereby keeping the people of this section accurately and immediately informed of the important actions of the Conference.

A note from Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick states that she is now able to sit on the gallery of her home and write, and that she hopes to be able "to get out before long." We regret to know that Miss Kilpatrick's mother, who does her typewriting for her, has also lately been quite ill. We trust that both of these "elect ladies" will soon completely regain their health.

Children's Day was observed with appropriate exercises in the First Methodist Church at Lexington, Miss., on Sunday, May 17. Mr. W. A. Pierce, the superintendent, was the master of ceremonies, and the children, who were trained by Mrs. Frank Clower, Mrs. Joe Moore, and Mrs. Andrew Pease, acquitted themselves most creditably. The collection which was taken up by the pastor, Dr. H. G. Henderson, amounted to $12.

Mr. G. H. Simrall, Justice of the Peace, Glass, Miss., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, says: "I enjoy reading the Advocate not only for its able editorials, but also for its Church news, thereby keeping posted on the various movements of my Church. I consider it the bounden duty of every family of the Church within the bounds of the Conferences of which it is the official organ to subscribe for the Advocate."

An interesting Sunday school institute was held at Grady's Chapel, near Aberdeen, Miss., on May 10. Both Baptists and Methodists united to make the day a success. Those who took part on the program were: Miss Millage R. Wiggul, T. F. Griffith, M. V. Owings, W. C. Ballard, Lonie Griffith, Miss Marigreen Dollar, Miss Bettie J. Bailey, Mrs. Annie Mai Crouch, Mrs. B. T. Cother, Mrs. Amma T. Harris, Mrs. B. Ballard, W. N. Rutledge, and Rev. D. M. Gean.

We acknowledge the reception of attractive invitations to the Commencement exercises of the University of Mississippi from Mr. E. C. Brewer and Rev. J. E. Stephens, both of whom will be graduated from that historic institution on Tuesday, June 3, the former from the Law, and the latter from the Literary Department. Mr. Brewer has been honored by being chosen to deliver one of the three Senior orations on Commencement day.

Prof. J. N. Powers, who for several years has been the State Superintendent of Education in Mississippi, has been elected to the Chancellorship of the University of that State, and has signified his acceptance of the position. Mr. Powers is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a man of fine appearance and address, and is a fluent and forceful public speaker. We wish him success in his new and responsible field of service.

Rev. W. W. Jones, of Carrollton, brought us under obligations to him a few days since for a club of subscriptions from his charge. Referring to his work, Brother Jones said: "The latest development in our Sunday school is a class prayer meeting. This class is made up of young men. Brother Norquist, who is beloved by all, is the teacher. These young gentlemen spend the time between the close of the Sunday school and the beginning of the preaching service in their room in prayer."

Among those from our patronizing territory who visited Oklahoma City while the General Conference was in session we noted the following brethren: Rev. Wm. Schuhle, Rev. C. C. Miller, Dr. G. E. Cameron, and Geo. S. Sexton, of Louisiana; Rev. C. F. Emery, Rev. J. M. Morse, Rev. N. B. Harmon, Rev. H. B. Watkins, Rev. L. L. Roberts, and Mr. I. C. Enochs, of South Mississippi; Rev. J. H. Felts, Rev. T. M. Brownlee, Rev. R. P. Neblett and Mr. R. M. Weaver, of North Mississippi.

In a note to the Editor, Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., of Poplarville, Miss., says: "Our second quarterly conference will be held here on June 9. The Seashore District Conference will convene in our Church June 10. We purpose to begin special revival services, with Brother Dan Kelly to do the preaching, June 14. We desire the prayers of the Church and of God's people that all these occasions may be blessed of God to the good of our Church, the town, and all the people concerned."

Rev. R. O. Weir, formerly an esteemed member of the Louisiana Conference, but who is now stationed at Anderson, Texas, passed through New Orleans last Monday, en route home. Brother Weir had been on a visit to relatives at Birmingham, Ala., and to Florida, where he visited his friend, Dr. H. G. Davis, and conducted a meeting for his brother at Lemon City. Brother Weir had with him his little daughter, Frances, who had been spending some time with her grandparents in Alabama.

Rev. N. G. Augustus, a widely known member of the North Mississippi Conference, and Miss Josephine Pinson Blount, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis B. Blount, of Texarkana, Ark., were united in marriage in that city on Tuesday, May 12, 1914. Mr. and Mrs. Augustus will reside at the family homestead of the groom, "The Oaks," near Macon, Miss. We extend to the contracting parties our hearty congratulations, and pray that Heaven's richest blessings may be showered upon their pathway through life.

Dr. C. E. Dowman, of the North Georgia Conference, died last week. He was one of the leading figures of Methodism in Georgia. Dr. Dowman at the time of his death was at the head of the Biblical department of Emory College. In 1898 and 1899 he was president of that institution. He had just returned to Oxford, Ga., from Oklahoma City, where he had gone to serve as a member of the Board of Education, when he was stricken with pneumonia, and after a few days passed into the world beyond.

The Commencement exercises of Mansfield Female College will begin on Friday evening, May 29. On Sunday, May 31, the Commencement sermon will be preached by Rev. N. E. Joyner, and at the evening hour of the Sabbath a sacred concert will be given. On Monday, June 1, at 11 o'clock a. m., the Class Day Program will be rendered, and the Annual Musical Concert will take place at 8 p. m. On Tuesday, June 2, at 10 a. m., the Senior orations will be delivered, and at 8 p. m. the Baccalaureate Address will be given and the diplomas awarded.

Under date of May 22, Rev. W. F. McCrory, of Marksville, La., writes: "We have just closed a meeting at this place in which the preaching was done by Rev. Martin Hebert, who is connected with our French Mission work. The members of the church were edified and strengthened and 8 new names were added to the roll. Our prayer meeting and Sunday school are in excellent condition, and we have the literature on hand for an Epworth League which we expect to organize soon. We think that Marksville ought to have three-fourths, if not the whole, of a pastor's time next year, and we shall try to shape things to this end between now and the next session of the Annual Conference."

An International Summer Training School for Sunday school workers will be held at Crystal Springs, Miss., July 15 to 21. The purpose is to give special training in the special departments of Sunday school work to those who have the time to spend a week at this delightful resort. Among the speakers on the program are: Rev. Frank Nelson Palmer, D. D., Winona Lake, Ind., teacher of English Bible and author of "Search Series of Bible Textbooks;" Rev. George D. Booth, Laurel, Miss., pastor First Presbyterian Church; Rev. W. A. Borum, Jackson, Miss., pastor First Baptist Church; Rev. B. F. Lewis, Crystal Springs, Miss., pastor First Methodist Church; W. Fred Long, Jackson, Miss., General Secretary.

Prof. G. L. Harrell, in a note to the Editor, states that the fine astronomical observatory at Millsaps College has been overhauled, in accordance with the plans formulated at the last Commencement, and that the excellent telescope mounted therein is now in use. All the exercises of the approaching Commencement will be held in the Capitol Street M. E. Church, South, except the meeting of the Alumni on Monday evening, June 8, the program of which will be given in the Chapel of the Preparatory School, and the banquet in the dining room of the same building. The corner stone of the new Main Building will be laid on Monday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

On May 25 Rev. J. C. Park, our pastor at Tupelo, Miss., wired us as follows: "Thomas Alexander Young, son of Rev. and Mrs. W. M. Young, died of acute appendicitis at Amory, Miss., on May 23, 1914. He was 17 years of age. He was buried from the Baptist Church at that place, the service being conducted by me, assisted by Rev. L. T. Sargent, Rev. J. A. Lowe, and Rev. R. Blaylock, the Baptist pastor at Amory. A great congregation attended the obsequies." We regret more than words can express to chronicle this sad occurrence, and our heart goes out in tenderest sympathy to Brother Young and his stricken family in their sore bereavement. May the heavenly Father comfort them as only he can, and may the hope of a happy reunion with the departed loved one in the sweet by and by enable them to bear bravely up under the weight of their great sorrow!

Secular News and Comment

The Congregationalist remarks concerning the recent observance of Mothers' Day: "Having once more sung the praises of Mother, let us now take hold and give her a lift with the housework and the children."

The Baptist World says: "Twelve million of the seventeen million inhabitants of Spain can neither read nor write. No wonder Spain is and has been for centuries the most intensely priest-ridden country of the world. Sixty per cent of the land is uncultivated. Spain ranks lowest among civilized nations."

The Post Office Department has just repeated in the current postal guide supplement, the instructions through which rural carriers are to report forest fires to the proper authorities during the coming season. These instructions were first issued in May, 1912, and during the past two years many fires have been thus detected and suppressed.

Under the new constitution of China, the President is given almost despotic power. He can assemble or adjourn the legislature at will, pass upon all budgets, appoint and dismiss civic officials, declare war and conclude peace, and will be at the head of both army and navy. China is hardly recognizable as a republic now.

It has been suggested that there could be no better cure for the high price of meats than better health among our live stock. The Department of Agriculture of our country estimates $150,000,000 as the enormous loss sustained by our farmers from disease among their stock. About one-half of this vast sum results from losses of hogs from cholera. This represents no less than one billion pounds of meat.

An interesting feature of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition will be the five acre Palace of Education and Social Economy. There will be displays that will take the form of automatic working models; such as animated models made of wax, blown glass, and metals, of human beings and other forms of life. There will be shown a human heart so large that visitors may walk through it and watch the pumping of the red and blue blood through the ventricles and auricles.

Colonel Theodore Roosevelt landed in New York City on May 19 from his extended trip in South America. He was accompanied on landing by two naturalists of his party, George K. Cherry and Leo E. Miller. Among the first things he said after landing Mr. Roosevelt denied that he had expressed himself as to presidential probabilities in 1916, and declared he would not run for governor of New York. After ten days in this country he will sail for Spain to attend the wedding of his son, Kermit.

The Louisiana Legislature, now in session, has before it the Reinhardt Racing Bill. This bill is but a blind, and is not to merely legalize racing, as it would seem from the face of it. Racing is already allowed in the State by law. But this bill contains clauses that, if passed, will legalize race-track gambling. It is hoped that the Legislature will not pass such a bill and perpetrate another fearful evil upon the State to rob it of its manhood. The Times-Picayune is of the opinion that it will be voted down in short order, and it uses its influence against such a backward measure.

The reason Boston is called the Hub City is because Oliver Wendell Holmes characterized the Boston State House on Beacon Hill, with its great dome, "the hub of the solar system." By usage the city is spoken of as "The Hub." Boston is soon "to erect a memorial to Dr. Holmes upon the banks of the Charles River, directly in the rear of the former home of the poet-essayist on Beacon Street." The memorial will not be a statue, but a great semi-circular seat of stone. Just in the entrance will be a circular pedestal upon which will be built a sun-dial.

By a recomputation of the value of the Kaiser's forest properties and farming lands, Mr. Rudolph Martin, author of the "Almanac of German Millionaires," states that the Kaiser is the richest person in Germany, his wealth being estimated at 19,700,000 pounds. The second richest person is the Grand Duke Adolf Friedrich Mecklenburg-Strelitz whose fortune is put down at 17,750,000 pounds. Frau Kraupp's fortune has grown to 16,000,000 pounds, and the fourth place among the richest people in Germany is given to Prince Albert von Thurn and Taxis of Bavaria, who is said to be worth 13,500,000 pounds.

Dr. Diesing, a staff physician in the German service, says that Europe is not secure against an invasion of the sleeping sickness. While the disease originates with a small fly, the glossina, he has succeeded in proving that infected animals can communicate the disease to others in regions where this fly does not exist; and he assumes that it can be just as easily transmitted from man to man. Dr. Diesing proposes therefore that a sanitarium be established in the Canary Islands, where Europeans returning from Africa infected with the disease shall be quarantined until cured.

We quote the following from the Christian-Evangelist: "In the past few months 40,000 men and women have withdrawn from the state church in Protestant Germany. It is estimated that the number will run to 200,000 this year. The exodus is in part a protest against twenty per cent of the income tax going to the state support of the church, a tax so drastically collected that even the household goods are sold if necessary. It is also a protest against the idea of a state church and in no small part, no doubt, to the general Socialist protest for freedom of religious worship and the end of state and church."

Here are four facts given as final reasons why a Christian university should be built in Cairo, Egypt, which is said to be the greatest single opportunity on earth to-day:

"First—The men are there to fill it.
"Second—The Christian community is there to give it backing.

"Third—The Moslem mind is open to its message.

"Fourth—The Moslem world gets its message from Cairo.

NEWTON (MISS.) DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Newton District Conference was held in the Methodist Church, Morton, Miss., May 12-15. The Conference was organized with Dr. H. Walter Featherstun, presiding elder, in the chair. A large number of preachers and delegates were present at the opening session.

The attendance throughout the Conference was unusually good. All the pastors in the district were present, except Dr. Moulner, of Fourteenth Avenue Church, Laurel, who was detained on account of revival services in progress in his church. Ten local preachers and fifty-two delegates answered to their names; and, besides, there were many visitors.

The reports made by the pastors on the different phases of Church work were generally encouraging and a spirit of optimism pervaded the Conference. Many signs of steady progress in the work were in evidence. The report on Sunday schools showed the organization of several new schools, and indicated a live Sunday school spirit over the district. The report on Missions was very encouraging, indeed; especially with reference to the work being done by the Woman's Societies, and the work among the Choctaws in the district. Several new missionary auxiliaries were reported. This condition is doubtless largely due to the fact that our presiding elder, Dr. Featherstun, who is full of missionary enthusiasm, held early in the year a series of missionary institutes—16 in all—covering the district from Dan to Beersheba. A large majority of the 1250 Choctaws in Mississippi reside within the bounds of the Newton district and constitute a needy and fruitful field for missionary labor. While some work has been conducted among them from time to time for years past it is not commensurate with their needs. Dr. Featherstun is giving special attention to this work, and there are now four native preachers at work among them, two of whom were licensed at this Conference. Simpson Tubby, pastor of the Choctaw mission, with four of the Choctaw brethren, attended the Conference. They sang with spiritual fervor and to the delight of all who heard, some of the old hymns of the Church in their native tongue. Brother Tubby preached at one service and made a strong and touching appeal in behalf of his neglected people. He insisted that the white man and the Indian be "hohashela" in the deepest and truest sense.

Nine young men were licensed to preach, which brings the total of local preachers in this district up to 46; more, probably, than in any other district in the State, if not in Southern Methodism. Seven young men were recommended for admission on trial at the Annual Conference.

Rev. J. S. Purcell, newly elected president of Montrose College, spoke encouragingly of the prospects of that institution. A great work is being done for Methodism in this section of the State by the school at Montrose. There were about twelve ministerial students in attendance last session.

Rev. M. M. Black, secretary of the Board of Missions; Rev. T. J. O'Neil, president of Port Gibson Female College; Rev. W. M. Williams, of the Orphans' Home; Rev. R. Selby, secretary of the Board of Education; Rev. W. J. Dawson, secretary of the Board of Church Extension, and Prof. J. M. Sullivan, of Millsaps College, each addressed the Conference in behalf of the interests they severally represent.

The ministry of the Word was magnified, the following brethren preaching helpful sermons: O. G. Halliburton, A. S. Byrd, Simpson Tubby, J. S. Purcell and B. H. Somers.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: J. H. Bassett, O. M. Abney, A. A. Sims and Dr. W. H. Mars. P. L. Blackwell was elected district lay leader. H. F. Tolle, W. W. Graves, W. A. Hays and O. G. Halliburton were named as the ad interim licensing committee.

Philadelphia was selected as the next place of meeting.

The good fellowship of the Conference was delightful, indeed, and all left Morton with most pleasant memories of the royal hospitality dispensed by her good people, and the thoughtful attentions of Brother J. T. Abney, our pastor there.

W. A. HAYS, Secretary.

THEY WERE ACCOMMODATING.

He was undeniably from far beyond the suburbs, and, as he was walking along a city street, he stopped in front of the fire engine house and looked in.

"Have many fires in this town?" he asked.

"Yes, we have them pretty often," replied the fireman.

"Ever try to see how quick yew can hitch up?"

"Oh, yes."

At that moment an alarm came in. At the first stroke of the gong the men rushed to their posts, the doors of the stalls opened, and within a few seconds men, horses and cart were speeding down the street.

The young man watched the proceedings with admiration. "Well!" he exclaimed when speech returned: "there ain't many towns where they'd go to all that trouble to show a stranger what they can do."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Sunday School

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick

June days will bring the summer tug against the loss of membership and interest; so prepare good music, varied lessons and winning welcomes to win these laggards back to winter's constancy.

Quite a number of charges have already held interesting Children's Day services and many more will celebrate this good day in the next few Sundays. An every-charge report is greatly desired by everyone interested in this great work.

The largest red button (A. B. C.) parade ever attempted is being planned for the International Sunday School Convention in Chicago. It is hoped that 50,000 men will be in this body of Christians, men interested in Bible study, Christian conquest, Christian citizenship and civic righteousness. The parade will take place Saturday afternoon, June 27.

May, June and even Fourth of July parades are quite popular means of accenting the Sunday school work in city or town. On late evenings or afternoons, after a program of music and good words suited to the season, the Sunday school or possibly all the Sunday schools in the community may form a parade and show outside folks how many really fine Sunday school enthusiasts there are in the neighborhood. These occasions may be styled the "May or June Walk," if the word parade is not liked. Any such out-of-door occasion is helpful to the class or Sunday school, or they may even be planned for the Sunday school hour, if preferred.

In many Adult classes very many Sunday schools report attractive and helpful Mothers' Day services some of which were unusual. One school used white sweet peas for everybody and sent out many bouquets to the sick and shut-ins; another, a men's class, sent one great perfect white carnation, snugly packed in a tube of pasteboard to distant friends, to the sick and shut-ins. Another class used fragrant, old-fashioned pinks that a few years ago grew in every mother's garden, and they brought back many memories, some sad, others happier, no doubt. One school had everybody whose mother was living to wear a red nose and all whose mothers had passed away, a white one. Originality and variety in class anniversary programs are greatly to be desired.

IMAGINE THE MISERY of a 7 years' case of persistent eczema and then the joy of its final disappearance. This is the experience of L. S. Giddens, Tampa, Fla.: "For 7 years I had eczema on my ankle. I tried many remedies and doctors. I decided to try Tetterine and after 8 weeks am entirely free from the terrible eczema." If you suffer with Eczema, Tetter, Itch, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, or Piles, you know what to do. Tetterine, 50c at druggists or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

THE NEW MAIN BUILDING AT MILLSAPS.

Through the kindness of Prof. G. L. Harrell, we are able to give above a picture of the handsome new Main Building at Millsaps College, which is now in process of erection. Of this fine structure, Prof. Harrell says: "Both the architect, Mr. H. A. Austin, and the contractor, Mr. I. B. Garber, are Jackson men. The new edifice will be forty-six feet longer from north to south than the old one, and the main entrance will be in the same place that that of the former structure was. The chapel will be a thing of beauty. There will be on the first floor six recitation rooms and the offices of the President, the Secretary, and the Treasurer. The Y. M. C. A. room and the Literary Society halls will be on the second floor, and in the basement a fine heating plant will be installed. The work on this building is progressing nicely and will go steadily on until it is completed."

THE FIRE OF YOUTH.

What is it that gives to young people and to all young animals their characteristic vivacity, agility and enthusiasm? Is there some chemical substance—an elixir of life, so to speak, which our bodies gradually lose as we grow older, and the absence of which leaves us sedate, conservative and even morose? These questions seem to be nearing solution for the scientists have already discovered an essential and significant difference in the chemical make-up of the human body in youth and old age. They find a much larger percentage of xanthin (pronounced xan-thin) in the bodies of the young, and the quantity diminishes steadily with the advancement of age.

In this connection it is interesting to note that xanthin belongs to the same family or chemical group as caffeine. Both are known to the chemist as dihydropurins. Xanthin is found in the bodies of animals, including man, while caffeine is found only in plants such as coffee, tea, cocoa, mate, also in Coca-Cola. To make this family relationship closer and more interesting the scientists now tell us that caffeine, after being digested and assimilated, is converted into a substance called para-xanthin, which is a twin brother of xanthin.

But more interesting still is the similarity between the twins, xanthin and caffeine, in their effects upon the human body. If xanthin is in reality the substance which gives to youth its vivacity and alertness, then caffeine, its twin brother, may be regarded as a vegetable substitute for xanthin and we thus have a logical explanation of why the caffeine-containing beverages refresh and invigorate the body. In old age when the fire of youth is burning low and the supply of xanthin is nearly exhausted may it not be that caffeine as contained in Coca-Cola, tea, coffee, etc., serves a useful and even vital purpose in refreshing the nerves and muscles, and renewing the vitality as well as the sensation of youth?

Coca-Cola belongs to the same class of food products as tea and coffee, viz., the caffeine-beverages. Though they differ in flavor they are similar in effect for caffeine is their common and only active principle. It is the caffeine that relieves fatigue and refreshes mind and body, not by artificial stimulation, but by a natural process analogous to that produced by the xanthin of the human body.

Xanthin is a normal ingredient of the blood and flesh of all animals (including man) and is a refreshing principle of meat extracts, such as beef tea. Its action is similar to that of caffeine, in fact, when caffeine enters the body it becomes a xanthin. The caffeine beverages, therefore, have their counterpart in the normal human body, in the form of xanthin, and hence scientists have classed them as "natural" stimulants in contradistinction to the "artificial" stimulants such as alcohol, nitroglycerine, strychnine, etc.

If you would like to understand more fully the beneficial effects of Coca-Cola in relieving fatigue and in refreshing the mind and body write for free literature containing the expert opinions and analyses by the world's most eminent scientists. EFFECT OF ONE BOTTLE.

Crandall, Tex.—"After my last spell of sickness," writes Mrs. Belle Teal, of this city, "I remained very ill, and stayed in bed for eight weeks. I couldn't get up, all this time, and though my doctor came to see me every day, he didn't do me any good. I had taken but one bottle of Cardui, when I was up, going everywhere, and soon I was doing all my household work. Cardui helps when other medicines have failed, because it contains ingredients not found in any other medicine. Pure, safe, reliable, gentle-acting—Cardui is the ideal medicinal tonic for weak, sick women. Try it.—Adv.

SKIN TROUBLES FROM SCROFULA

Among the many manifestations of scrofula are eruptions on the face and body. These are both annoying and disfiguring. How often the complexion would be perfect if they were not present!

Other manifestations are bunches, inflamed eyelids, sore ears, wasting of the muscles, and general debility.

Ask your druggist for Hood's Sarsaparilla. This great medicine completely eradicates scrofula and builds up the whole system. Get it today.

THE PIANO BUYERS' GUIDE.

If you are interested in the purchase of a Piano or Player-Piano you should by all means write for a free copy of the booklet which has been issued by the Management of the New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club. It is the clearest and most logical guide for piano buyers and fully explains how to secure the best in quality at the lowest possible cost.

The price which you pay for a Piano or Player-Piano usually includes the cost of manufacture plus the cost of distribution through dealers and agents. The Club booklet explains how, by forming a syndicate of one hundred buyers and by having the pianos shipped direct from the Factory, we are able to reduce the cost of manufacture and cut out all of the unnecessary expense in distribution.

In addition to the tremendous saving in price, the Club provides many other attractive features, including a special plan of easy payments, which is considered the best ever devised. This plan does away with all the objectionable features of the old installment plan and gives the credit-buyer as square a deal as if he were paying cash.

If your home is in need of a high grade Piano or Player-Piano write for this Club catalogue. It will be the means of saving you approximately one-third the price and will insure your perfect satisfaction in every particular. Address the Management, Ludden & Bates, New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

WORTH WEIGHT IN GOLD

Abingdon, Va.—Mrs. Jennie McCall, of this place, says: "I had been troubled with female complaints for over ten years. I could not walk or stand on my feet, and had been almost confined to the house, for a long time. I began to take Cardui, the woman's tonic, and now I can walk anywhere I want to go. Cardui is worth its weight in gold." This is a high estimate of a plain, herb medicine, yet there are thousands of women who would gladly pay this price for a remedy to relieve their suffering. Cardui has helped others. Why not you? Try it. Your druggist sells it, in $1 bottles.—Adv.

DID IT SAVE A LIFE?

"While playing around the house," writes Wm. Buchli, of Nashville, "I stuck a rusty nail in my heel. The doctors lanced it three times. One said my leg was so drawn up that it never would be straight. For four months I could not get about only on crutches. A friend brought me some Gray's Ointment, which I began to use at once, and in four weeks I was sound and well, out playing ball." Gray's Ointment can always be depended upon to prevent serious blood poison, and to relieve malignant skin diseases such as Ulcers, Boils, Carbuncles, Old Sores, Festered Wounds, Poison Oak, etc. For a Free Sample, write Dr. W. THE BIGGEST LITTLE SPOT ON EARTH.

In the Piedmont Region of South Carolina, sometimes called the Mineral Paradise of America, there is a secluded spot on a high tableland overlooking the confluence of the Broad and Tiger Rivers. Great forest trees and massive rocks look down in silence upon a beautiful spring which gushes from a crevice in the solid granite and, sparkling in the sunlight, flows in and out among the ferns and flowers to find its way to the great river several hundred feet below.

A beautiful spot! Yes, but more, for into that spring of crystal clearness Nature has instilled from the bowels of earth a wonderful power. Its healing waters are bringing health and gladness to thousands whose suffering knew no relief. From the palaces of the rich and the cottages of the poor, from the frozen North and the Sunny South, every mail brings letters of gratitude to the owner of this little Spring.

The traveler who visits this sequestered spot and lingers to read the letters of testimony from the multitude of sufferers who have found relief in its healing water, involuntarily echoes the words of one who credits his life to the Shivar Spring, "Here in Truth is the Biggest Little Spot on Earth." (Written by a visitor.)

If you suffer with any chronic disease which has not responded to drug treatment, Mr. Shivar invites you to try the water. If no benefit, no charge. Sign the following letter:

"THE OLD RED MILL" TURNS CANE JUICE INTO DOLLARS

Most any Cane Mill will crush the cane, but the mill you want is the one that will grind out the most DOLLARS while it presses the juice.

You want a Cane Mill that is strong, light running, finely finished and economical in operation. You want a mill made by the Chattanooga Plov Co., a mill that's familiarly known wherever cane is grown, like THE OLD RED MILL, a mill which years of use has proved the best under all conditions and for all varieties of sugar cane and sorghum—the planter's standby.

Has steel shafts, almost no friction, steel set screws, which regulate pressure on rolls, preventing mashing at ends; patent bottoms preventing juice from wasting or getting in oil box; working parts enclosed; strongest, easy and economical to operate; most reasonable in price and so simple a child can run it.

Thousands in use—each one an actual proof of the superiority of "THE OLD RED MILL" over any mill made.

The Old Red Mill is always ready—always reliable—ranges in size from light one-horse to four-horse—and is correctly proportioned by proved principles.

Before you think of buying a cane mill write for our free catalogue describing the unequalled Chattanooga line. Write now and it will be sent you immediately, without one penny of cost to you. It contains clear and accurate illustrations and descriptions of our mills and tells just what to seek and what to avoid when buying cane mills of any make. Write to-day.

Woman's Missionary Work

Edited by Mrs. R. P. Harrell, Centerville, Miss.

Conference Publicity Superintendents:

Louisiana Mrs. A. C. McKinney, Baton Rouge, La.
Mississippi Mrs. J. L. Neill, Laurel, Miss.
North Mississippi Mrs. Walter Campbell, Winona, Miss.

All communications for this department should be sent to the Editor at the address given above.

"Ah, sisters, 'tis for us to tell the story
For us to bid salvation's waters roll
To us the alien races look expectant
And dumbly lift to us the shakled soul."

Their ignorance has claims upon our

And shall they cry—and we refuse

Our very privileges make us debtors:
To let them die forbids our right to live."

PUBLICITY THE MAINSPRING.

We hear much about the home and the foreign fields of missions, but what of the home base?

Mr. Webster tells us that "base" means foundation, pedestal. Then the home base is the foundation or pedestal on which the whole of our missionary enterprise rests. Hence, our first requisite is to strengthen the home base; to do this there must be an awakening of our people to the conditions to be remedied; we must tell the need, again and yet again, by voice, pen and object lessons.

Without an awakened interest in the subject, few people will read missionary literature or even attend mission study classes. Realizing this, the Woman's Missionary Council has had a Publicity Bureau since its organization, but heretofore it has not received the recognition nor help from the Council necessary for so important a feature.

The last Council, held at Fort Worth, Texas, through the untiring efforts of Mrs. Luke Johnson, placed the Publicity Department more nearly where it belongs. It now remains for the Conference and auxiliary to wake up. We must by our charts, posters, and maps; and by our articles in church and secular press, make public the needs and work in an attractive manner.

May we ask each auxiliary superintendent in North Mississippi to use her ingenuity in providing charts and posters, as well as placing snappy articles in her county paper, not merely telling of your own meeting in your own auxiliary, but real missionary items that will interest the general public to know.

May we say with Mrs. Luke Johnson: "Pray that God's children, may not perish for lack of knowledge, but that great may be the company who publish His Word."

At the Annual Meeting to be held in Aberdeen June 11-15, we are anxious to have a Publicity Exhibit and we ask each auxiliary superintendent to send any maps, charts or posters they may have used in their auxiliaries, or any papers containing an article written by themselves to Mrs. Walter Campbell, Winona, Miss., not later than June 5, to be used in this exhibit.

Sister Superintendents, may we realize that "Our ignorance may haffle the plans of the Almighty" and therefore pray: Our Father, guide us in our search for truths and teach us to place them irresistibly before the people that they may be moved to active service.

Mrs. WALTER CAMPBELL,
Pub. Supt. N. Miss. Conf.

WOMEN MISSIONARIES.

Women are a tremendous factor in the promotion of foreign mission work. Mr. J. Campbell White recently declared that women are a generation ahead of men in their interest in missionary work. For this reason nation-wide missionary campaigns have been inaugurated in the hope that men might be awakened to the great responsibility resting upon them of carrying the message of Christ to all the world. Mr. White states that of a total of 31,207 missionaries, 11,639 are women. "It has devolved upon women to shape the characters of young people that their energies may be turned into the channels of more serious endeavor. It is given to women to decide the plans of life we shall follow and to get the pace in religious and social service."

VIRGINIA K. JOHNSON HOME.

The King's Messenger for April contains a letter from Mrs. Virginia K. Johnson in which she writes of the deep humiliation which was hers at the Council when she was forced to report a deficit of $12,000 on the Virginia K. Johnson Home. She quotes from Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith's stirring address to the Council in which the latter presented the appalling need for this work. She said: "It's a tragic shame that the number of downfallen young women and girls is increasing daily. We are facing tragedies of neglect every day. They are growing worse and more numerous. It is a condition of affairs that is not only prevalent in our own midst, but one that is increasing with alarming rapidity all over the country. We have got to fight it! It is worse than all our wars. Think, over 50,000 young women, are being claimed every year for the 'scarlet life,' and our Church is standing idly by apparently happy in its ignorance. It is up to the Church, the schools, the institutions, the individual, and most of all, the parents to save these girls. Laxity will no longer be accepted. Action must be taken and stringent action."

In the same issue of the Messenger appears an article, copied from the Texas Christian Advocate, entitled "Animalism Rampant," by Rev. L. I. Cohen, Jr., Dallas, Texas. Among other things he says: "Here's an institution (V. K. Johnson Home) that in less than two decades has sheltered and cared for in a vocational, cultural and religious way more than 1600 poor girls, ranging in age from 12 to 22, who have been 'more sinned against' than sinning."

"What a redemptive work this Christian institution is doing may be learned when one considers that nearly one thousand precious babies, through the wise administration of 'mother Johnson,' have been placed and adopted in Christian homes."

"When one studies the statistics of what becomes of the babies of 'out-cast mothers' and learns that nine out of ten of them become either paupers or criminals, it is cause enough to 'stir a fever in the blood of age' and inspire every lover of mankind to support both morally and financially this great Methodist Rescue Home and Training School."

"Think of it! To our shame there is a debt of $12,000 on the Home that must be paid soon, or the great institution will be embarrassed."

These two appeals were made to the people of Texas and especially to the Methodist ministers urging them to observe Purity Sunday. Should not the appeal be taken to heart by every man and woman in Southern Methodism? We are a part of our great church, and whatever redemptive work it undertakes it needs a united working force and "energized" prayers back of it.

When thou art beginning to correct an evil habit, though thou shouldst transgress thy law a first, a second, a third, nay, a twentieth time, do not despair, but rise up again, and resume the same diligence, and thou shalt surely prevail.—S. Chrysostom.

REVIVAL AT SENATOEIA, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have just closed a revival that was an epoch in the spiritual life of Senatobia. Our esteemed pastor, Rev. S. B. Myers, had secured the services of Rev. Dan Kelly, of Hattiesburg, to begin April 19; but Brother Kelly was indisposed to such an extent that upon the advice of his physician he did not reach us until Sunday, April 26; Brother Myers having very ably conducted the services the previous week. Brother Kelly was accompanied and assisted by his brother, John Kelly, an exceptionally fine cornetist, from Gloster, Miss.

The congregations continued to increase, the interest became more and more manifest, the various denominations gradually came closer together, and the meeting became the theme in the home and on the street corner.

As we entered on the third week of the meeting, a spirit of deep interest began to manifest itself; men and women, strong in their own convictions, rose and testified. The revival spirit took hold of the services in the good old-fashioned way. The song, "Old-time Religion" was sung and felt, perhaps as never before, by many. A citizens prayer meeting was held in the afternoons in the Commercial Club's room, on Front street, every seat being taken, and every person present responding to the call for a short prayer. A ladies prayer meeting was promoted in the Sunday school tent on the church lawn, with overflow crowds at every service.

Thus it went on until May 12. Many ladies renounced the social practices that are pronounced by the Church as worldly, and a number of men and boys declared their intention to live on a higher plane.

There were thirty-nine additions to the Methodist Church and a number of additions to the other Churches in the town. I believe many lives have been blessed and home made happier through the meeting.

E. T. KEETON.

REPORT OF THE HOSPITAL COMMITTEE.

Brookhaven District Conference.

Our District Conference would reaffirm its conviction of the pressing need for a Methodist Hospital. We rejoice in the success our Field Secretary has already achieved, and we urge all our members to that large and Christ-like liberality which will hasten the completion of this institution.

We approve the plan for a District campaign, and are pleased to know that our presiding elder has already apportioned to our several charges the amount accepted by our last District Conference as our minimum share for this cause, namely, $1,000.

We recommend the appointment by the presiding elder of a Hospital Committee, consisting of one member from each charge, who, with the pastor, shall, with the assistance of such local committees as are needed and they may appoint, distribute literature, circulate announcements, create interest, secure congregations, and perform any other service necessary to thoroughly prepare for a sweeping campaign of the District.

We request the Field Secretary, Rev. H. M. Ellis, and our presiding elder, with such other help as they shall secure, to make a thorough and rapid campaign of our District as soon as convenient.

We urge all our people and Church organizations, to prove their interest in and appreciation of this greatly needed institution by earnest prayers and liberal contributions. Our wealthy members can find no better way of using their money for Christ and humanity than that of building and endowing Memorial Rooms in our Methodist Hospital, and no member of our Church should fail to give all he is able to help provide this relief for suffering mankind, which will at the same time be a powerful arm of service for our Methodist Church.

J. S. DECELL.

A LESSON IN PATIENCE.

"We'll set to work now, Essie," said grandma, after school; "and see if we can't get an hour or two on your party dress before supper time. How pretty it is, to be sure," she added, shaking out the shimmering pink folds.

It was a cool, crisp September afternoon, when work seemed like play, and the shining needles were soon flashing busily in and out. But only a few minutes had passed when Louise's voice called from the library: "O, grandma, I've tried to play this piece over and over, and I just can't get the time right. Won't you please come and count it for me?" And a moment later grandma's cheery voice echoed back from the library. "It is a hard kind of time; I remember trying it when I was a girl," she said; "but it's so bright and pretty when you do get it, that it pays for the trouble. One—two—three, now, deary, isn't that better?"

"The child is improving every day, Essie," said grandma a few minutes later, picking up her sewing.

Again for five long minutes the needles flashed on their way: when Rob's curly head appeared in the sitting-room door.

"I've been working at this problem ever since school," he said fretfully, "and it just won't come out right. Don't you s'pose you could help me a little, grandma?" "I never did understand long division."

"It's been a good many years since I studied long division," said grandma, smiling, "but sit ye down here, my lad, and we'll try. There you are," she added, after the brown head and the gray had bent over the slate together for a few minutes. "Who says we can't do long division?" And her smile was as delighted as the child's.

"We won't get done very fast at this rate," said Essie, frowning at Rob's disappearing figure.

"I have one sleeve almost basted," said grandma.

Just then little Ted's voice was heard in a shrill scream from the back yard. "O, I've stepped on a piece of glass and my foot's a-bleeding! O! O! O!"

Of course grandma was out in the yard in no time with a soft bandage and her favorite liniment. "The poor little fellow has got a pretty bad hurt," she said, when she came back at last.

"How can you have so much patience, grandma," said Essie; "always running from one thing to another, with never five minutes to call your own?"

"Do you think I have, child?" asked grandma, her dark eyes shining with pleasure. "Well, I didn't always have as much as I have now; but you see, deary, I've lived a long time and I've learned that sometimes the little things that bring comfort and happiness to others and smooth out the hard places mean more in the Lord's sight than the big task we lay out for ourselves. We'll get the dress done before the party, never fear, but we'll not neglect the music and the problems and the dear little cut feet, either."

Just then Ted's round face appeared in the doorway, with the traces of tears still on the rosy cheeks. "My foot's better, some," he said, "but I'm awful thirsty, and I can't reach the bucket."

"Bless his little heart, I expect he is," and away hustled grandma, leaving her little sermon only half finished.—The King's Business.

WANTED—CHRISTIAN PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Urgent Need in China and Korea for Two Well-Equipped Men.

For several months the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has been looking in vain for a thoroughly equipped physician and surgeon to take charge of the hospital at Choon Chun, Korea, of which Dr. Newton H. Bowman was for some time the very efficient principal. Dr. Bowman has been called to the Union Medical School and Severance Hospital in Seoul and since his departure the hospital in Choon Chun has been without a head. The Board has had under consideration a number of volunteers for this work, but so far has been unable to find a man whose professional training and surgical skill seemed to justify his acceptance. Dr. Bowman set a very high standard and developed the work to a point of great influence and efficiency. To succeed him there is needed a man of thorough medical education, hospital training, and sufficient experience to make him capable of handling successfully and with confidence a large and exacting work. The building and equipment do not amount to much, but the need and the opportunity are great enough to satisfy the consecrated ambition of any man who desires to lay out his life in unselfish service of his fellows.

Another opening, no less important, must shortly be filled in China. Our great Soochow Hospital, under the direction of Dr. W. H. Park and Dr. John A. Snell, treating annually 15,000 cases, requires another physician and surgeon. The work is growing tremendously. Drs. Park and Snell are pressed already to the limit of their strength. They must have assistance, or else development must cease.

The Board of Missions desires to get into correspondence at once with Christian physicians and surgeons who are professionally fitted for these openings and are willing to make the necessary sacrifice in order to carry the gospel of physical and spiritual healing to the multitudes who stand in such desperate need. Anyone who would like to consider the matter should write at once to Rev. Ed. F. Cook, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

THE CARROLLTON AVENUE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

This fine structure, which is now complete, except the installation of the organ, will be formally opened next Sunday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock. It is very attractive in its outward appearance and there is no prettier house of worship in the interior in the city of New Orleans. Pastor J. G. Snelling and his worthy flock deserve to be heartily congratulated upon the consummation of this splendid enterprise. The building was designed by Mr. Sam Stone, Jr., assisted by his brother, Frank, who is one of the officers of the church. Mr. Sam Stone, Sr., of the firm of Swiler & Co., building contractors, who erected the structure, is president of the Board of Trustees.

PROBABLY RIGHT.

They were discussing the North American Indian in a rural school, says a British Weekly, when the teacher asked if anyone could tell him what the leaders of the tribes were called.

"Chiefs," answered a bright little girl at the head of the class.

"Correct," answered the teacher. "Now can any of you tell me what the women were called?"

There was a silence for a minute or two, and then a small boy's hand waved eagerly aloft.

"Well, Frankie?" asked the teacher.

"Mis-chiefs," he proudly announced.—Youth's Companion.

Editorial

"Little 'twill matter at nightfall
The path our feet have trod,
Whether 'twere rough or stony,
Or over the flower-gemmed sod—
If only we walked it bravely
And it led to the hills of God."

Sincerity must lie at the foundation of all noble character. If that be lacking, no other gifts and graces, however splendid, can supply the defect. It is better to be true than to be brilliant or great. Veracity is the crowning attribute of the Divine Nature. The highest function of the Christian religion is fulfilled when a man is empowered and inspired to be faithful to himself, to his fellow-men, and to God.

A writer in The British Weekly says: "So vastly have we improved upon the original (Christianity) that it is doubtful if Christ would recognize it were he to come to earth to-day." If the Master should return, there might indeed be a lack of recognition of the religion that he set up amongst men, but we scarcely think it would be due to the superiority of the type into which they have developed it. As an exhibition of pharisaic egotism this utterance tops any that we have seen.

It is surprising to what an extent a comparatively good man will sometimes allow himself to be swayed by an unworthy motive. He fancies that he has been slighted perhaps, and while feeling resentful, does things that he would not think of doing when in a normal condition. While in a pouting mood one is in great peril. Such was the mood of Benedict Arnold, who had been a gallant soldier in the Colonial Army, when he betrayed his country. Happy is he who has such a mastery of himself that he can avoid falling into this unfortunate state of mind.

There are not a few ministers who apparently had rather strive to reform than to regenerate men. Is this not evidence of their own lack of spirituality? Reformation has to do with things that are outward and visible; regeneration with things that are inward and unseen. The latter work is far more difficult and vastly more important. It is when the preacher sinks self out of sight and lets the Holy Spirit operate through him that it is most successfully accomplished. The bringing of a human soul into vital touch with Christ is the noblest service that man can possibly perform, and when a prophet of the Lord turns aside to any other task, no matter what it is, he addresses his energies to something less than his highest duty. If by the power of God we can make righteous the individuals of the race, the reformation of society will inevitably follow. Nor will it ever come in any other way. Heaven is what it is because every inhabitant is pure in heart and holy in life.

ETERNITY'S GREAT REVERSAL.

It was said of Jesus, "Never man spake like this man." And judging him even by the printed page, this pronouncement is true. His recorded utterances stand unique and unapproachable in the world's vast literature. There is in them a note that sounds divine—a superhuman sweep nowhere else discoverable in the writings of men. Take, for instance, what he said about the Rich Man and Lazarus—what an extraordinary deliverance it is! To the covetous, selfish, and self-sufficient Pharisees to whom it was made, it must have seemed to be a veritable flashlight from heaven, searching the very depths of their souls; and though nineteen hundred years have passed since the Master painted in simple words these two remarkable pictures—the one of the rich man and the poor man in time, and the other of them in eternity—the world has continued to gaze upon them in wonder and awe. But while this is true, it must be confessed that mankind has been exceedingly slow in learning and profiting by the tremendous truths therein set forth by Him who comprehended fully both the meaning and possibilities of this life and the secrets that lie beyond the tomb.

These two pictures, the products of the Divine Mind, are well worth looking at again and again and meditating upon prayerfully. We are familiar with the great paintings in our art galleries, but we like to stand repeatedly before them and let them flash their enkindling messages anew into our souls. We need to be taught over frequently the great spiritual facts set forth in the Bible that they may exercise the proper influence upon our characters and lives. It is for this reason that blessing and inspiration are always found in the Book of Holy Writ.

In the first of these scenes depicted by our Lord, we behold two men widely apart in life. The one was rich; the other was poor. The one dressed in purple and fine linen; the other had only a few rags to hide his nakedness. The one fared sumptuously every day; the other subsisted upon the crumbs that fell from the wealthy man's table. The one apparently was healthful; the other was grievously afflicted. The one was doubtless attended by servants; the other was so neglected that the homeless curs of the streets licked his sores. The one, we dare say, was adjudged by the world to be a great success and was flattered and honored by society; while the other was pronounced a failure and viewed with loathing and contempt. At last these two men died: the poor man, perhaps, unattended and alone; the rich man, no doubt, surrounded by physicians and nurses and every comfort that money could command. Nothing is said of the burial of Lazarus; imagination suggests that it may have been at the public's expense; and we fancy that we can see his body rudely handled, and borne privately away and deposited in some potter's field in a grave unmarked and soon to be forever forgotten. We are told that the rich man "was buried." The natural inference is that he was laid away with imposing pomp and ceremony; that the casket was a magnificent one; that flowers bedecked it; that mourners in large numbers flocked to the scene; that eloquent tributes were spoken; that the long procession then moved to the cemetery where in an inviting spot the body was laid to rest in a costly marble tomb, with chiseled inscriptions to commemorate the deeds and virtues of the distinguished dead. Such was the wide difference between these two men in the present life; and such the world's appraisal of their comparative worth.

But their careers did not end in the grave. The Master lifts the curtain and lets us follow them into eternity. And what a transition is presented in the scene that there unfolds before our vision! The pauper is now the rich man, and the millionaire has become the beggar. Lazarus is in Abraham's bosom—in Paradise. His sufferings have ceased; he wants for nothing. He is no longer unattended—no longer an outcast; but is close to the illustrious father of the Jewish people—has been welcomed to a glorious inheritance. But the once rich man is now in the direst poverty. Gone, forever gone, are fortune, comforts, pleasures, and friends. Keen and unceasing suffering is his portion, and there is no hope of a better day. His terrible doom is forever fixed.

How tremendous in its import is the lesson here taught! It is that a selfish life, out of which Christ is shut, no matter with what achievements it may be filled, or to what heights it may rise, or what estimate short-sighted men may put upon it, is at last an utter failure. On the other hand, it shows that the lowliest life that one can live on earth, even if darkened by misfortune, suffering, and complete material destitution, if it is dominated by Christ, must be in the final end a grand success. The truth is, the world's ideals and estimates of values are nearly all wrong, and the frightful effects of accepting them are beyond the power of description. They intrude themselves even into the Church and confuse our conceptions as to the real worth of things. We need to think more as God does and to see more as he sees. The true nobility of earth are not they who dwell in royal palaces, but they who have been quickened into spiritual life and adopted into the Heavenly family, wherever they may be. Theirs is the inheritance that shall never fade away—the abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom, the white robes, the palms of victory, the radiant crowns, and the eternal reign with Him who is to be acclaimed Lord of all and whose scepter shall sway the widely extended universe.

"Oh, learn ye, learn; be wise in time,
Set heart and soul on things above,
See glory in the strife with crime,
See beauty in each act of love."

THE DIFFERENCE.

"Unbelief is like a man with his back turned toward the sunshine, walking in a shadow that he himself makes, while faith, reversing the order, faces the sun and then lives in the light of hopefulness with the shadows all behind it."

FAITH.

How can we know that the flowers will bloom.
When blue, and scarlet, and gold,
Lighting no more the forest's gloom.
Lie slain by the frost and cold?

How can we tell that the birds again
Will warble from leafy spray?
Garden, and copse, and wood, and fen,
Saw them all fly away.

And yet, serenely, for bird and flower
We wait spring's fragrant breath.
Faint hearts, shall we not trust His power
To lift the veil of death?
—The British Weekly.

THE POWER OF A HYMN.

The Rev. E. P. Scott, while laboring as a missionary in India saw on the street one of the strangest looking heathen his eyes ever beheld. On inquiry he learned he was a representative of one of the inland tribes living in the mountain district, and who came down to trade once a year.

He found that the gospel had never been preached to them, and there was great danger to venture among them because of their murderous disposition. He went to his lodging, fell upon his knees, and asked for divine direction. Then packing his valise, and taking his violin with which he was accustomed to sing, he started in the direction of the field. His fellow-missionaries, as they bade him farewell, said: "We shall never see you again. It is madness for you to go." But he answered: "I must preach to them."

He traveled for two days, scarcely meeting a human being, until at last he found himself in the mountains and surrounded by a crowd of savages. Every spear instantly pointed at his breast, and he expected every moment would be his last. Not knowing of any other assistance, he tried the power of singing the name of Jesus to them.

Drawing out his violin he began with closed eyes to sing and play, "All hail the power of Jesus' name." Afraid to open his eyes he sang on till the third verse, and while singing the stanza "Let every kindred, every tribe," he ventured to open his eyes, and to his delight he saw that the spears were dropped from their hands and big tears were rolling down their cheeks. They afterwards invited him to their homes.

Two years and a half he remained laboring among them, when he was compelled to leave them because of impaired health, and return to his native country. As he was leaving, after they had followed him for thirty miles, they said: "Oh, missionary, come back to us again."

There were tribes beyond which had never heard the gospel. He could not resist their entreaties. After visiting America he went back and continued his labors till he sank into the grave among them. That blessed hymn opened up his triumphant labors.—Mrs. N. C. Allen, in Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

"I BELIEVE IN THE HOLY CATHOLIC CHURCH."

The General Conference has decided to retain this clause in our confession of faith, as formulated in the Nicene Creed. I, for one, agree most heartily with the decision of our Church's highest representative council. I adduce the following reasons:

"Catholic," as most of us know, means universal, and in this sense the Methodist Church is the most catholic, all-embracing Church I know anything about. In her inception she was a protest against Church bigotry and narrowness, and has never in any of her utterances claimed a monopoly of the kingdom of God. She has ever and still recognizes the saints and children of other spiritual households as heirs of eternal life, bids them welcome to her communion, and freely shares with them her spiritual benefits.

The reason assigned by some that the term "catholic" requires explanation in countries dominated by Romanism, I do not think valid. For the very explanation meets and confutes the error of papal pretensions. Let us always remember we are protestants against errors in the Catholic Church and were never secedents from the true apostolic doctrines. If we do not believe in the holy, apostolic, catholic Church, there is need for some one to protest against us. The Church of the New Testament is the catholic Church—not the Romish hierarchy, with its seat on the banks of the Tiber.

Again, this clause in the confession is in accord with the trend and spirit of the creed itself. It is universal in its statements of faith. The Fatherhood—power, creative agency of God—is stated. The Almighty Father, creator of earth and heaven, and hence universal in his nature. Then faith is expressed in the Christ of the New Testament, his sonship, his birth, his suffering and death, his burial, resurrection, ascension, and assumption of the part of a mediator, and his final office of judge of the living and dead. All these doctrines belong in common to every Christian believer the world over. And then follows a profession of faith in the Holy Spirit. One can scarcely conceive of this blessed messenger of life and truth, emanating from Father and Son, in any other than an universal sense. The Spirit is the world-wide attestant of every blessed and holy doctrine to the human consciousness. He is pre-eminently the universal spirit.

With these facts before us, why should we not have this rich heritage of the past, replete as it is with memories of heroic faithfulness, stained with the blood of martyrs, and forged from out the fires of the sufferings and toils of the saints of God in many fierce spiritual wars, as a part of our present confession? Turn anew to your Church history and read what it cost to formulate the creed and learn how it molds and crystallizes into enduring form the faith of an age mighty in faith. I for one believe in the Holy Catholic Church and would like to see it printed in capital letters in our common confession.

S. J. DAVIES.

A LETTER FROM JAPAN.

Dear Dr. Meek: Our presiding elder, Brother Yanagihara, was with us on last Saturday and Sunday. Fortunately, Saturday was the regular day for our Woman's Society to meet and we had the privilege of having an address from Brother Yanagihara.

The membership of this society is largely made up of women who have not yet accepted Christianity, and his talk was intended principally to reach the understanding and to touch the hearts of those who have not a lively hope in Christ. He took as his text the first part of Romans 8:28, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God." I am not going to reproduce his talk, even in outline; I shall only give two incidents he used and a lesson to be deduced therefrom.

Twenty years ago near Todotsee a man and his wife heard the Gospel preached and were converted and received into the Church. Now this man had the job of cleaning the street lamps of the town. His wife worked with charcoal, putting it into bundles and getting it ready for market. Both were dirty occupations and these two people had no ambition to rise above their environments—scant clothing, blackened hands and faces, tousled hair—these things contented them. But when their hearts were touched by the Gospel new desires were created. They were enabled to improve their surroundings and to give to their children advantages that had been denied to them. One daughter has taken a common school education and is now in the training course at the Red Cross Nurses' Hospital in Takamatsu. This girl's life is for Christ—thirty women have been influenced by her to go to our pastor there for Bible study, and seven of them were received into the Church some few weeks ago (Mr. Wilson had the privilege of receiving them). She has two more years in this school. May she be used still more largely in bringing souls to a knowledge of God!

gain, in the Yamaguchi Circuit, a little over twenty years ago, in a small out-of-the-way place a policeman was converted. This man was contempt to get out of life such pleasures as the wine cup would give, but when God spoke these things became distasteful to him. He and his wife were converted, and for 18 years he has been a local preacher and has always been used as a supply of some circuit. To-day, one of his sons has gone through the Kwansei Gakuin Theological Department, has had two years experience in the pastorate, and is now in America to enter Yale University to further equip himself for usefulness to his own people; a daughter has gone through the Hiroshima Girls' School, completing the kindergarten course, taught 3 or 4 years, and is now the wife of a Christian teacher in a government school; a second son has just completed a higher English course in Tokyo and is teaching English in Fukuyama.

These parents were enabled by accepting Christ to bring to their children, blessings and advantages and a larger outlook upon life than they could have gotten in any other way; and as Brother Yanagihara said while we can see in these cases that all things have worked together for good to them that love God, and although we very often are not able to trace the "working together for good," still we know that always God does honor his own promise, for not even a sparrow falleth to the ground without His knowledge.

This Gospel of assurance we are giving to this people, and it is comforting to have brought to our knowledge once in awhile these positive examples of God's power to uplift and save.

Yours most sincerely,

MRS. W. A. WILSON.

Okayama, Japan, April 28, 1914.

A MISSIONARY SUGGESTION.

Dear Advocate: Through your columns I wish to make a suggestion regarding some practical domestic mission work that can be economically done in our own Conference, with a little sacrifice upon the part of a few.

First—I suggest that the pastors of our strong churches recognize the privilege and duty of helping the brethren in the weaker charges. One of the brightest young men in the Louisiana Conference said to the writer recently: "It is almost impossible to get the brethren in the strong churches to come out into the country and help us in anything." This is not right, and the brethren who can render good service ought to be willing to go to the weak charges and put in some first-class work for the Master and the Church. The conditions are not always inviting, but if your brother pastor must stand it all of the time, you might stand it for a short while. Many of our pastors would thus do more good than in any other way in a whole year.

Second—I suggest that the Boards of Stewards of our strong churches release the pastors for such work as this as a part of the missionary work of the church for the year, and encourage their pastors to go. No money spent in the year will bring such large results. Excuse the pastor, get a supply in his place, and help the supply hold things together while the pastor is away, and it will prove a blessing to the charge visited, to the pastor, to the supply, and most of all to the laymen who get under the burden while the pastor is away. And it will please God.

The Louisiana Conference, by general action in this respect, would see the largest year of ingathering that it has known for many years, and a revival spirit would permeate the strong charges and prepare the way for great winter revivals.

By all means let us do the thing at hand, while waiting for the opportunity to do something larger, if there is anything larger.

The General Conference.

(Condensed from the Daily Advocate.)

Fourteenth Day—Morning Session, May 21.

Bishop Candler called the Conference to order at 9 o'clock. Rev. W. I. Carter conducted the devotional exercises. The minutes of the previous session were read, corrected, and adopted.

Bishop Morrison took the chair as president.

Dr. J. A. Rice offered resolutions, which were adopted, endorsing the position of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America on many social and industrial problems (recited in the resolutions) of the present day.

Report No. 3 of the Special Committee on Vanderbilt University was placed on the calendar. It recommended that all officers and boards of the General Conference be instructed not to turn over to Vanderbilt University, or any department thereof, any moneys until the proposed Educational Commission, provided for in report No. 2 of the Special Committee on Vanderbilt University, should so authorize.

The Committee on Sunday Schools made its report No. 3, which went to the calendar. It recommended non-concurrence with memorials proposing to merge the Sunday schools and the Epworth Leagues of the Church; and it referred to the General Sunday School Board a memorial that requested authorization from the General Conference for the Editor of the Sunday School Literature to compile, and have published in the Church papers, a course of reading for the young people, ranging from the primary to the senior year of the high school, and that he also prepare a book of Scripture selections to be used in family worship.

Report No. 17 of the Committee on Itinerancy went to the calendar. It advised the General Conference to earnestly request the Bishops to continue no man in the presiding eldership longer than four years successively, save in exceptional cases.

Reports Nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 of the Committee on Episcopacy were sent to the calendar. No. 10 recommended that a resolution, which it recited, be referred to the Committee on Revisals concerning the matter of having the episcopal decisions printed in the body of the Discipline instead of in the Appendix, as at present. No. 11 advised concurrence with a memorial to the effect that a Bishop shall not allow any preacher to remain in the same circuit or station for more than four years successively, except by the consent of the majority of the College of Bishops. This report was accompanied by a minority report recommending that the Conference do not concur with No. 11. No. 12 recommended non-concurrence with memorials asking for the fixing of episcopal residences, and putting a time limit on episcopal service, as in the case of pastors and presiding elders. No. 13 advised dissent from a memorial to elect a Bishop for four years, and that a Bishop be eligible for only two terms. No. 14 recommended non-concurrence in its four items with memorials to make novel laws regarding the episcopacy and the presiding eldership.

The Committee on Epworth Leagues made its report No. 2, which went to the calendar. It nominated for members of the Epworth League Board: J. W. Shackford, P. B. Kern, I. L. Holt, E. O. Harbin, G. W. Thomasson, and R. M. Roddie.

Report No. 9 of the Committee on Education was made and it went to the calendar. It recommended that permission be given to the General Board of Education to pay over to Vanderbilt University, Biblical Department, such sums as may be due up to June 30, 1914; but that the proceeds from the assessments ordered by the General Conference of 1910 for the Conference year, 1914, be disposed of by the Board of Education at its discretion in accordance with the actions of the General Conference. It further recommended that the assessment for Education be fixed at $105,000, to be expended as the Board of Education sees fit, provided it shall take into due consideration the causes of ministerial education, mountain schools, ministerial loan fund, and the education of the colored people.

The Committee on Missions made reports Nos. 16 and 17, which were placed on the calendar. No. 16 contained recommendations for several disciplinary changes, the most important of which was the striking out of the Discipline of paragraph 370. This paragraph contains the following, as it reads in the present Discipline: "It (the Board of Missions) shall conduct the Methodist Training School in affiliation with Vanderbilt University." No. 17 contained the nominations for the Board of Missions and Woman's Missionary Council.

The Committee on Church Relations and Bible Cause made its report No. 9, which was sent to the calendar. It recommended the adoption of a resolution, recited in the report, addressed to the President of the United States and those in authority to appoint army and navy chaplains, that they have due regard to the fact that this is a Protestant nation and that the Protestant bodies of the country be accorded a consideration to which their numbers and influence justly entitles them.

The Committee on Layman's Movement made its reports Nos. 5 and 6. No. 5 recommended, after the Committee had considered sundry memorials, that no further actions be taken, relative to their contents, than was embodied in the Committee's reports Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4. No. 6 recommended the Conference to endorse the movements in establishing the Southern Assembly Grounds near Waynesville, N. C., on Lake Junaluska, and bespoke a large attendance for the six conferences to be held at that place during the coming summer.

The following connectional officers were elected by the Conference at this time: Publishing Agents, D. M. Smith and A. J. Lamar; Book Editor and Editor of the Quarterly Review, Gross Alexander; Editor of the Christian Advocate, T. N. Ivey; Editor of the Sunday School Literature, E. B. Chappell.

Report No. 2 of the Committee on Layman's Missionary Movement (seventh day's proceedings) was read and adopted, except its item No. 2, which recommended that all lay members of the quadrennial Annual Conference boards be members of the Annual Conference.

The Conference adjourned. Bishop Wilson pronounced the benediction.

Fourteenth Day—Afternoon Session.

Bishop Morrison called the Conference to order, and the devotional service was conducted by Rev. F. W. Brandon. The minutes of the morning session were read and adopted.

Bishop Hoss took the chair.

Report No. 8 of the Committee on Church Relations and Bible Cause (ninth day's proceedings) was read and Dr. J. A. Rice made a motion to adopt it. Dr. F. M. Thomas spoke to the report and stated that the Committee desired that the Conference adopt it unanimously. When the motion to adopt was put by Bishop Hoss, he requested all who favored it to stand. The entire body rose. Enthusiasm was manifested.

The Committee on Church Relations and Bible Cause made its report No. 10, which was adopted. It contained resolutions of appreciation of the visit of Rev. Wm. Bradfield, the fraternal messenger from the British Wesleyan Church, Rev. S. P. Rose and Mr. G. F. Johnston, fraternal messengers from the Methodist Church of Canada, and Dr. Matt S. Hughes, the fraternal messenger from the Methodist Episcopal Church.

After three ballots were taken, W. W. Finson was elected Secretary of the Board of Missions.

A resolution was introduced and adopted requiring the Sunday School Board, to issue a handbook suggesting an ideal for the local Church as an efficiency agency for religious education.

On the first ballot W. F. McMurphy was elected Secretary of the Board of Church Extension.

Dr. Rawlings, fraternal messenger of the General Conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, presented his report, which was read by Secretary Parker, and then was ordered to record.

Report No. 10 of the Committee on Education was presented, and it went to the calendar. This report asked that a resolution be adopted by the General Conference that the blank, to be left in the new constitution of the Board of Education for the purpose of inserting the names of the city and state where the Board shall be located, shall be filled in by the Commission on Charters when said Commission shall finally act.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on Publishing Interests (see seventh day's proceedings) was read. It dealt with the proposed combining of Church publications where it might be judged advantageous, with the matter of Church ownership of these publications, and with the purpose to place a Church periodical in every home.

Fourteenth Day—Evening Session.

Bishop Hoss called the Conference to order. Rev. W. L. Oliver conducted the devotional service. The minutes were read and approved.

Bishop Atkins took the chair.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on Publishing Interests (see just above) was adopted. Report No. 14 of the same Committee, recommending some radical changes in paragraphs 427 and 428 of the Discipline that referred to the Book Committee, was read, and was not adopted.

After two ballots were taken, Dr. F. S. Parker was elected Secretary of the Epworth League Board.

Dr. H. M. Du Bose presented resolutions, signed by a large number, to the effect that the Commission, appointed by the General Conference to look into charters of schools, etc., be also required to investigate the desirability and advantages of re-locating our central Publishing House now at Nashville, and that this Commission shall report to the College of Bishops, and, if the Bishops see fit, they may present the matter to the Annual Conferences for a decision during the quadrennium, and that the Bishops shall be empowered to act in this matter if the Annual Conferences cast a majority vote for the re-location of the Publishing House. The resolutions were adopted.

After two ballots Stonewall Anderson was elected Secretary of the Board of Education.

The Conference adjourned. Rev. J. A. Burrow pronounced the benediction.

Fifteenth Day—Morning Session, May 22.

Bishop Atkins called the Conference to order. Dr. E. B. Chappell conducted the devotional service. The minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

Bishop Denny took the chair.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on Sunday Schools (ninth day's proceedings) was taken from the calendar and, with a few changes, was adopted.

By general consent, P. D. Maddin, who was not in the room when Dr. Du Bose presented his resolutions the day before relative to moving the Publishing House, was allowed to speak on the matter. Mr. Maddin strongly opposed such a move and presented arguments, concerning freight rates and location, at some length to uphold his view. H. M. Du Bose, James Cannon, and J. J. Stowe made speeches upon the subject. A motion was made to reconsider the adoption of the resolution of the day before, but it was lost.

Rev. Y. Yoshioka, of Japan, said a few words of farewell. Bishop Denny made an appropriate reply to his remarks.

The Committee on Church Relations and Bible Cause made its report No. 11, which was immediately adopted. It consisted of a resolution of appreciation of the visit of the fraternal delegate from Japan.

A telegram of fraternal greeting was ordered to be sent to the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, then in session at Wagoner, Oklahoma.

T. T. Chao, professor in Soochow University, China, made a short speech.

The report of the Commission ordered to make the nominations for the Book Committee was received and adopted. The Book Committee is as follows: J. C. Morgan, W. C. Dibrell, J. H. Fall, W. R. Odell, D. H. Linebaugh, A. V. Lane, C. W. Hardwicke, J. S. Frazer, E. V. Regester, W. C. Lovett, W. B. Taylor, G. A. Morgan, and G. S. Hardy.

Dr. J. H. Moore, the fraternal delegate from the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, addressed the Conference.

A message of fraternal greeting was sent to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, then in session at Kansas City, Mo.

Report No. 2 of the Committee on Epworth Leagues (thirteenth day's proceedings—evening session) was read and adopted.

The Conference adjourned. Rev. W. J. Young pronounced the benediction.

Fifteenth Day—Afternoon Session.

Bishop Denny called the Conference to order at 2:30 o'clock. The devotional service was conducted by Rev. W. J. Young. The minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

Bishop Denny announced the names of those appointed by the College of Bishops to serve as members of the commission ordered by the General Conference touching Vanderbilt University and a possible university to be owned and controlled by the Church, as follows: W. B. Murrah, W. A. Candler, J. H. McCoy, J. C. Kilgo, A. J. Lamar, P. T. Durham, F. J. Prettyman, W. D. Bradfield, G. T. Fitzhugh, A. G. Candler, W. G. M. Thomas, J. P. Scott, H. R. Fitzgerald, J. E. Cockrell, T. T. Fishburne, W. D. Thomas.

Report No. 12 of the Committee on Church Relations and Bible Cause was presented and adopted. It nominated the following as members of the Federal Council of Methodism: A. W. Wilson, E. E. Hoss, Collins Denny, F. M. Thomas, W. J. Young, J. M. Moore, M. L. Walton, H. N. Snyder, and Percy Maddin.

Report No. 6 of the Committee on Education (twelfth day's proceedings) was adopted in practically all of its items, save the one that would have prevented Annual Conference boards from making appropriations to unclassified schools. An amendment was adopted to strike out that item of the report.

Fifteenth Day—Evening Session.

The Conference was called to order by Bishop Kilgo. Dr. F. S. Parker led the devotional service. The minutes were read and approved.

Bishop Murrah took the chair.

Mr. John R. Pepper called the attention of the Conference to the four boys who had faithfully served as pages throughout the entire session of the body. An offering was taken for them, and they were thanked for their good services.

The Committee on Sunday Schools made its report No. 4, which contained the nominations for the Sunday School Board for the ensuing quadrennium. It was adopted.

Report No. 4 of the Committee on Education was made and adopted. It presented the nominations for the Board of Education for four years more.

Report No. 7 of the Committee on Missions

(eighth day's proceedings) and report No. 16 of the same Committee (fourteenth day's proceedings) were taken from the calendar and adopted.

Dr. F. S. Parker presented report No. 2 of the Committee on Epworth Leagues, nominating the Epworth League Board for the coming quadrennium. It was adopted.

Report No. 3 of the Committee on Church Extension (ninth day's proceedings), report No. 12 of the Committee on Boundaries and Finance (thirteenth day's proceedings), report No. 5 of the Committee on Temperance and Social Service (twelfth day's proceedings), and report No. 4 of the Committee on Laymen's Missionary Movement (twelfth day's proceedings) were read to the Conference and adopted.

The Conference adjourned. Dr. J. H. McLean pronounced the benediction.

Sixteenth Day—Morning Session, May 23.

Bishop Murrah called the Conference to order at 9 o'clock. Dr. J. M. Moore led the devotional service. The minutes of the previous session were read, corrected and approved.

Bishop Murrah stated that Report No. 6 of the Committee on Missions (sixth day's proceedings) was reached on the calendar. A substitute was offered for the report by a delegate from the Holston Conference.

Bishop Lambuth at this time took the chair.

A motion was made to adopt the substitute. J. A. Baylor spoke at length in its favor. The Committee on Evangelism was to be appointed, according to report No. 6, he said, to look after the evangelistic interests of the Church by selecting regular evangelistic preachers for the work. The substitute, for which he spoke, laid the emphasis upon evangelism in the Church by the pastors themselves. Methodist preachers have always been evangelists, he said, and it would be a good plan to adopt ideas along the same line as was followed in the great personal campaign which has just been so beneficial in St. Louis, where hundreds were brought into the Church through the efforts of the pastors, with the aid of their constituency only. A central committee might issue literature for the help of the pastors in this special work, and in that way forward the movement.

Dr. J. M. Moore said that it was perfectly proper to have a committee on evangelism, such as the one the Church has already been maintaining for three years; and he further thought the time had come when the Church should not allow too many roving evangelists. The paper provided, he said, for the appointment of men to do evangelistic work in the Conferences; then the Church would be sure of the character and ability of its evangelists, as they would be amenable to the Church, and as much so as the ordinary preacher.

W. A. Christian stated that Dr. Baylor had evidently misunderstood the paper from the Board of Missions which the Committee on Missions had recommended for favorable action. He said that this report authorized the organization of evangelistic work in each Conference; and when a local preacher desires to become an evangelist it must be with the endorsement of the Conference Committee on Evangelism.

L. P. Law, a lay delegate to the General Conference and an evangelist, affirmed his conviction for the need of such legislation. He stated: "We (the evangelists) ought to be in the Church and have our characters passed, as the character of every Methodist preacher is passed by his Conference."

J. A. Burrow moved the previous question. The substitute, which was before the house, was not adopted. A motion to adopt the original paper prevailed.

Dr. C. B. Spencer, editor of the Central Christian Advocate of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was introduced to the Conference.

Dr. W. F. McMurry introduced report No. 9 of the Committee on Church Extension, which contained the nomination of the membership of the Board of Church Extension for the coming quadrennium. The report was adopted. R. O. Randle, of Monroe, La., was one of the members elected. Report No. 8 of the Committee on Church Extension (thirteenth day's proceedings, morning session) was read and adopted.

Report No. 7 of the Committee on Church Relations and Bible Society (ninth day's proceedings), report No. 1 of the Special Committee on Statistical Blanks (ninth day's proceedings), report No. 6 of the Committee on Episcopacy (twelfth day's proceedings), and report No. 8 of the Committee on Episcopacy (fourteenth day's proceedings), the last report recommending that the Conference request those Bishops assigned to the mission fields to spend at least half their time in said fields, were all read and adopted.

Report No. 10 of the Committee on Missions (tenth day's proceedings), was read, but was by vote laid on the table.

A resolution was introduced to the effect that the Conference adjourn Saturday (that day) evening at 11 o'clock, but that the expenses of all delegates be paid who remained until Monday evening, if they tarried until that time.

Bishop Denny, on behalf of the College of Bishops, read the appointments of the ten practical educators whose duty during the quadrennium will be to classify our institutions of learning. They are as follows: J. O. Willson, R. E. Blackwell, R. L. Hyer, C. R. Jenkins, F. N. Parker, J. D. Simpson, J. H. Reynolds, P. H. Linn, J. J. Tigert, W. P. Few. Bishop McCoy was announced president of the Epworth League Board.

Report No. 11 of the Committee on Itinerancy (thirteenth day's proceedings, morning session), was read and adopted. Bishop Murrah was announced chairman of the Committee on Appeals.

Report No. 6 of the Committee on Revisals (eighth day's proceedings, morning session), together with the minority report of this committee, dealing with the subject of the change of name of the Church, was laid on the table. J. A. Batchelor stated that those who favored such a change had consented to defer agitation out of deference to the action of the Conference upon the report of the Committee on Church Relations, as the agitation of the change of name might embarrass a movement for unity during the coming quadrennium.

Report No. 9 of the Committee on Missions (tenth day's proceedings, morning session), report No. 5 of the Committee on Education (tenth day's proceedings, morning session), report No. 11 of the Committee on Boundaries and Finance (ninth day's proceedings), report No. 3 of the Committee on Sunday Schools (which we fail to find printed in the Daily Advocate), report No. 8 of the Committee on Church Relations (ninth day's proceedings), and report No. 5 of the Committee on Itinerancy (ninth day's proceedings), were read and adopted.

Report No. 7 of the Committee on Episcopacy (twelfth day's proceedings), on motion, was laid on the table.

The Conference adjourned; announcements were made; and Rev. G. W. Read pronounced the benediction.

Sixteenth Day—Afternoon Session.

Bishop Lambuth called the Conference to order at 3 o'clock. Rev. R. C. Elliott, of Mexico City, led the devotional service. The minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

Bishop Waterhouse took the chair.

Report No. 11 of the Committee on Revisals (tenth day's proceedings, morning session) was read and adopted.

Report No. 9 of the Committee on Education (fourteenth day's proceedings, morning session) was read, but a substitute was adopted making the assessment of the Board of Missions $95,000, instead of $105,000, as was in the original report.

Report No. 12 of the Committee on Missions (twelfth day's proceedings) was read and adopted.

Report No. 18 of the Committee on Boundaries and Finance was read to the Conference. It purported to be a plan to establish a commission of finance composed of six ministers and six laymen. It would be their duty to make one assessment upon the Church for all the Boards of the General Conference, which would take the place of the various assessments of the Boards, and the proceeds would be divided according to the needs of the said Boards; and various other changes in the Discipline were recommended in this report. After some debate a substitute was offered and adopted to refer this whole report to a commission composed of a bishop and the secretaries of the Boards. Dr. John M. Moore was later placed upon the commission also.

Report No. 6 of the Committee on Church Relations (seventh day's proceedings) was read, amended, and adopted.

Report No. 5 of the Committee on Itinerancy (ninth day's proceedings) was read and adopted.

Report No. 14 of the Committee on Revisals (tenth day's proceedings, morning session) was read, but a motion prevailed to postpone consideration of the report until the evening session.

Announcements were made. Rev. J. B. Cochran pronounced the benediction.

Sixteenth Day—Evening Session.

Bishop Waterhouse called the Conference to order at 8 o'clock. Rev. T. F. Marr conducted the devotional service. The minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

Bishop Mouzon took the chair.

A report from the Committee on Conference Journals, and report No. 13 of the Committee on Church Relations (contents of these reports were not given) were recorded on the minutes.

Reports No. 4 of the Committee on Education (eighth day's proceedings, morning session) was amended and afterwards adopted.

Report No. 14 of the Committee on Revisals (read just before the close of the afternoon's session), report No. 7 of the Committee on Publishing Interests (ninth day's proceedings), report No. 12 of the Committee on Boundaries and Finance (thirteenth day's proceedings, morning session), reports Nos. 4, 5, 6, 9, and 10 of the Committee on Boundaries and Finance (ninth day's proceedings), reports Nos. 13, 14, and 16 of the Committee on Boundaries and Finance (thirteenth day's proceedings, morning session), report No. 8 of the Committee on Education (twelfth day's proceedings)—this last report provoking much discussion, and report No. 13 of the Committee on Missions (twelfth day's proceedings), were all read and adopted.

The secretary read resolutions, which were adopted by a standing vote, thanking the people of Oklahoma City for their courtesy and kindness.

F. M. Thomas presented a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the College of Bishops to arrange a program for a memorial service at the hundredth anniversary, which will occur March 31, 1916, of the death of Francis Asbury. The resolution, further, approved the suggestion that the Epworth Leagues of America erect a suitable monument to Francis Asbury in the City of Washington.

The minutes of the session were read and approved.

Bishop Mouzon asked that Bishop Hendrix, the Senior Bishop of the Church, take the chair. The Conference sang No. 223 from the Hymnal: "Blest he the dear uniting love." Bishop Hendrix asked that Dr. J. H. Weaver lead the closing prayer. Bishop Hendrix made some touching remarks upon Bishop Wilson, the retiring senior Bishop of the Church. Bishop Wilson came forward and made an effective speech regarding his own personal connection with the Church, in which he became a minister in 1852. He stated that this was his last message and it was appropriate that he make some personal remarks. Every one present was profoundly moved.

The seventeenth General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, adjourned sine die. The benediction was pronounced by Bishop Hoss.

TULANE IN NEED OF FUNDS.

A statement of the receipts and expenditures of Tulane University for the year ending September 30, 1913, shows that several Departments of that institution are in serious financial straits. The deficit in the Medical Department was $19,803, and the output in the Colleges of Arts and Sciences, Technology and Law exceeded the income by about $13,000. The Dental Department also reported a shortage. In order to remedy this condition of things, an appeal has been made to the general public for financial assistance. Newcomb College, which is under the same management as Tulane University, is better endowed, and is not embarrassed by a lack of funds for its maintenance.

A PROGRESSIVE LEADER.

The Hon. David Lloyd-George is said to be of humbler birth than any other man who has ever been at the head of the fiscal office of the British Government. He is a Welshman, and is sprung from what is termed in England "the lower middle class." Doubtless it is because of his close connection with the toiling masses of his country that this brilliant statesman has shown such an active and unceasing interest in their welfare. He has been "an advocate of social reform, land reform, old age pensions, national insurance, better housing, and a general improvement of the condition of the common man and woman." Not a few well-informed persons regard Mr. George as to-day the most important single factor in the public affairs of Great Britain.

The Baptists of Mississippi have completed the task of raising $200,000 for the endowment of their college at Clinton.

Bishop W. A. Candler is reported to be writing a life of Thomas Coke. If his address on the little Welshman at Oklahoma City is a sample of what this volume will contain, it will indeed be a notable contribution to our Methodist literature.

The present circulation of the Nashville Christian Advocate is 16,650, a gain of nearly 2000 since 1910. The Epworth Era has a circulation of 16,000, having lost 1700 subscribers during the past quadrennium. The Methodist Review (Quarterly) now has a circulation of 4200, against 4000 in 1910.

Bishop E. E. Hoss will preach the Commencement sermon for the Southwestern University, at Georgetown, Texas, on Sunday, June 14; and following the Commencement exercises, he will deliver a series of lectures before the Summer School to be held there on "Methodism in its National Phases."

Since they were acquired, our Publishing House lots in Nashville and Dallas have largely increased in value; the former from $22,800 to $93,750, and the latter from $24,500 to $69,500. The sales of our Publishing Houses during the four years just ended exceeded those of the preceding quadrennium by the amount of $918,418.67.

For the eighth year in succession the British Wesleyan Church has had a decrease in membership. The loss in full membership was 1282, and that in the number on probation for membership was 875. In what they call their junior membership there was an increase of 2788. This showing in the Mother Church may well excite grave concern.

The Southern Presbyterian General Assembly, in session at Kansas City, Mo., went on record last week as being "opposed to the use of tobacco among clergymen, candidates for the ministry, and church officials." As to whether grape juice or wine shall be used in celebrating the Sacrament, this body decided to let each congregation settle the question for itself.

The College of History building, the first structure to be completed on the campus of the American University (Methodist) at Washington, D. C., was dedicated on May 27. Among those participating in the exercises were President Wilson, Hon. W. J. Bryan, Bishops Cranston, McDowell and Hamilton of the M. E. Church, and Bishop A. W. Wilson of the M. E. Church, South. The movement to establish this institution was begun in 1899 by the late Bishop John F. Hurst.

No member of the late General Conference made a finer impression than Dr. A. J. Lamar, of Alabama. He is gentle and kindly in his manner, but possesses convictions and the courage to maintain them. In all his appearances before the Conference, he acquitted himself admirably, and his speech on the Vanderbilt question was pronounced by many competent judges to be the best that was delivered. Dr. Lamar was re-elected to the position of Publishing Agent by a large majority on the first ballot.

Of the new men in our recent law-making assembly, none gave a better account of himself than Rev. Plato T. Durham, of the Western North Carolina Conference. He served on the Special Vanderbilt Committee where he made his influence felt and he also won his spurs as a debater on the floor of the Conference. Mr. Durham is at present presiding elder of the Charlotte District and is one of the best educated ministers in the Church. The Bishops did well to give him a place on the Educational Commission. We predict a career of large usefulness for this gifted young man in the coming years.

Dr. Stonewall Anderson, backed up by a majority of the Committee on Education at Oklahoma City, sought to get the General Conference to take away from the Annual Conferences the right to appropriate money to their unclassified schools; but this proposal was defeated after a spirited debate on the subject. The fight against stripping the Annual Conferences of this right was led by Dr. C. R. Jenkins, the accomplished President of the Wesleyan Female College, at Macon, Ga. Bureaucracy was in flower at the late General Conference, however, and most of the Boards came with cut-and-dried programs and succeeded in getting pretty nearly what they wanted.

COMMENCEMENT AT PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

The seventy-fourth session of this honored institution came to its close May 5, 1914. From 1840 to 1914 spans a long and useful history, during which time many young women have gone from these halls to bless the world. These many years have not brought decrepitude to the institution, but the Alma Mater never stood in greater favor with her daughters, and her friends were never more ready to urge her claims than now.

The session just closed was one of success from every consideration. The boarding attendance has been good, and there has been a fair representation from the young ladies of the local community. Every department has had its quota of pupils. The discipline has been excellent, and the health of the young ladies exceptionally good. The college spirit and contentment of the student body was manifested in the declaration, almost universal, of the purpose to return for another session.

On Sunday, May 3, Rev. John D. Ellis, of Woodville, preached the Commencement sermon, which was full of practical, wholesome suggestions. He made frequent reference to the pamphlet "Why girls should go to College," by Miss Mary Norman Moore. At the evening service, Rev. T. J. O'Neil represented the missionary cause before the student body, which, no doubt, broadened the vision of work for the Master to those who have been interested in that department of the college life.

On Tuesday—Commencement Day—Brother Lambuth Neill, of Laurel, came with a message to the young ladies of the institution which was replete with fine suggestions, and spiced with many pleasant incidents. Old and young alike will remember much of this splendid address to profit thereby.

Diplomas and certificates of proficiency were awarded to ten, four of whom were graduated with the A. B. degree. Four received certificates of proficiency in the teachers' course, three of whom had already secured teachers' license in the counties adjoining.

For personal reasons, Rev. C. M. Chapman felt compelled to give up the presidency of the college, and Rev. T. J. O'Neil was elected in his stead. While Brother Chapman has guided wisely and well the affairs of the institution, keeping its standard of scholarship abreast of the times, and looked faithfully to the interest of the Church and the student body, the board feels that we have in the Rev. Mr. O'Neil one who will guard well all of these points, and to whom they can refer all parents seeking college training for their daughters. A residence of nearly four years and a growing acquaintance with the needs of the people for higher education in the section adjacent to Port Gibson Female College, justify the writer in heartily recommending the institution to the parents of our Methodism. During the past three sessions I have had three nieces attending the institution and I have been pleased with the instruction which they received and their scholastic advancement. All of education is not to be gotten from text-books, and the fact that it is situated in this old, intellectual and refined community where the social and moral atmosphere is pure and wholesome, should commend this long-honored school to our people.

ANENT VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY AND THE PLAN TO REMEDY ITS LOSS.

(The following is the full text of the Majority Report of the Special Vanderbilt Committee at the late General Conference, which, finally, was unanimously adopted by that body. It defines what the Church conceives to be its present relation to Vanderbilt University and sets forth the general educational policy which she will now seek to work out. A statement from our Educational Commission provided for by this Report and which has been duly appointed will doubtless be forthcoming in the near future.)

We, your committee appointed to consider the relation of the Church to Vanderbilt University, beg to report that we have had before us, and under consideration continuously since our appointment that portion of the Bishops' Address and all documents referred to us relating thereto. We have also had before us, at our invitation, several distinguished members of our Church and of this body representing divergent views as to their policy in this matter; and after a careful consideration of that portion of the Bishops' Address, and of the documents referred to us, together with the numerous addresses to which we have listened with interest, and after a careful consideration of this great and grave question, we beg leave to report as follows:

We have read with regret the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, did not, through the representatives of certain Annual Conferences, found Vanderbilt University, and that the Church does not own said University. As the highest representative body of our Church, we herewith place on record our sincere and positive conviction that the opinion does not fully determine the real equities involved. In the expression of this conviction, we are not unmindful of the respect that should be accorded to the legally constituted civil authorities; but there are times when it is a duty to enter a solemn protest against the action of the civil authorities, lest injustice should become common and the courts be brought into contempt.

We believe that the statement of the court in reference to the possibility of contumacy on the part of the Church is a needless and gratuitous reflection.

We maintain that the charter of Vanderbilt University, containing, among other provisions, what is known as the "Memphis Resolutions," secured to the founders—the patronizing Conferences adopting such resolutions—the ownership and control of the University, and by the ninth paragraph thereof secured unto the Bishops of the Church the right to "act as a Board of Supervisors of the University, or any of its departments, and, jointly with the Board of Trustees, to elect officers and professors and prescribe the plan of study and form of government." But the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee, the highest judicial tribunal in that State, in an opinion rendered on the 21st day of March, 1914, with reference to said ninth article of said Memphis Resolutions, say in one portion of said opinion, "Whether the seventh and ninth of these Resolutions do not attempt an unwarrantable and illegal interference with the normal and legitimate powers of a Tennessee corporation and its governing body of directors or trustees presents a very serious question, but it is not an issue here, and for that reason not discussed and decided;" and in another portion say, "Whether this Resolution invests them with legal power of any kind, we very much doubt." And the court in this opinion further say: "We are further of the opinion that the inherent power of the Board of Trustees to fill vacancies in its own body authorizes it to elect and install members to fill vacancies; and that such new members are entitled to their seats on the Board ad interim until such time as they may be rejected by the General Conference, or its Board of Education acting for it and under its authority. It has the right to keep its membership full and cannot legally divest itself of that power and duty, except conditionally upon the refusal of the General Conference to confirm its appointees." And as to the right of confirmation declared by the court to be in the General Conference, the court say: "Of course, at any time, if it should voluntarily surrender or renounce this relation or contumaciously refuse to confirm members elected, and cease to co-operate with the University, its rights to representation in the Board of Trustees, and its management would as a consequence cease."

We are of the opinion that said decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee, as to the parties litigant, construing the statute of said State, is final, authoritative, and determinative of the questions of law involved, so far as the courts of Tennessee are concerned.

We are also of the opinion that under said decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee the control of the General Conference of Vanderbilt is so small and remote as to be difficult of effective enforcement.

tive enforcement.

We believe that the differences that have arisen between the Vanderbilt Board of Trustees and the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, so long as conditions remain as they are, are irreconcilable for the following reasons:

(a) In the pleadings in the case before the Supreme Court of Tennessee, the Board of Trustees denied the ownership and control of our Church over the affairs of the University.

(b) The Board of Trustees accepted a gift of one million dollars from Mr. Andrew Carnegie, which gift was tendered by the giver with certain statements and conditions, the acceptance of which was declared by the College of Bishops in their "Veto" and "Statement to the Church" to be in breach of our trust and dishonoring to our Church.

(c) The Church, through its ministers and representative laymen, assembled in our Annual Conferences throughout the connection, almost unanimously indorsed and approved the position of the Bishops and their statement that the acceptance of this gift would be a breach of our trust and a dishonor to our Church.

(d) The Board of Trustees, in our opinion, have failed to execute their trust in such a manner as to conserve the interest either of the original patronizing Conferences or of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In the light of the consideration above, we express the belief that the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to prevent injury to itself, or to the University, and to subserve the high interest of all parties concerned, should return to the patronizing Conferences the rights received from them in and to Vanderbilt University.

Therefore be it resolved:

First—That a commission be and is hereby created, to be appointed by the College of Bishops of our Church, to be composed of sixteen members, four of whom shall be Bishops, four ministers other than Bishops, and eight laymen, to be known as the Educational Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Second—That said commission, when appointed, be and they are hereby given full power and authority and directed to transfer and reconvey unto the patronizing Annual Conferences of said Vanderbilt University—to-wit, the Tennessee, Memphis, North Mississippi, Little Rock, Arkansas, White River, North Alabama, and Louisville Annual Conferences—all right, title, and interest, authority over and control in said University, that the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as such, has or may have, by virtue of the resolutions of conveyance to it adopted by the Annual Conferences in and to the property, right of supervision and control, or confirmation of the members of the Board of Trustees of Vanderbilt University.

Third—We recommend to said patronizing Conferences that they assert by proper legal proceedings, their right to the ownership and control of said University, guaranteed to them by the charter of said University, and as establishers and founders of Vanderbilt University, a charitable trust. Should said recommendation be favorably acted upon by said patronizing Conferences, the expenses of such litigation shall be paid by the Board of Education of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the direction and supervision of the commission hereinbefore provided for.

Fourth—That the patronizing Conferences of the Vanderbilt University are requested to elect one commissioner each to work in co-operation with the Educational Commission authorized and created hereunder in the accomplishment of the transfer of the rights to the said aforementioned patronizing Conferences and the legal procedure necessary to enforce the same and to act for and on behalf of the patronizing Conferences in the assertion of the rights to Vanderbilt University.

Fifth—That the General Conference hereby commits to the General Board of Education, until such time as the transfer to the patronizing Conferences is complete, the responsible work of the confirmation of the trustees of Vanderbilt University. This right of confirmation, we believe, implies of necessity the right to reject any person selected by the Board of Trustees who, in the judgment of the General Conference or of its agents, the Board of Education, will not properly discharge the duties pertaining to the office; that the Board of Education is hereby instructed that in the performance of this duty it shall confirm no person as a trustee of Vanderbilt University unless satisfied that such person will in the performance of his duty as trustee fairly represent the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in said University.

Sixth—The General Conference instructs the aforesaid Board to safeguard to the utmost the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the Vanderbilt University by confirming as trustees those persons only who will endeavor to carry out most heartily the aims and purposes of those who founded and who labored to develop a great university for the training of our ministers and in every other department in the training of our young men, and who will magnify our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, honor his Church, and emphasize by their life and teaching his pre-eminence and leadership in all the work of life.

Seventh—In case it be found impossible to effect this transfer, we hereby authorize and instruct the commission herein named to take such steps as in their opinion may be necessary to preserve and defend the interests and honor of the Church.

Eighth—That the commission herein provided for shall have all the power and authority of this General Conference to complete and make effectual the formal surrender and transfer of the powers, relations, and rights of the General Conference over said University to the said patronizing Conferences and to take all steps necessary to carry out the said transfer so as to make the same effective and complete.

Ninth—That said commission, when appointed, shall provide at the earliest possible time for the establishment and maintenance of a Biblical School or Department of Theology where young men may be taught and trained for the ministry of the Church; and to this end said commission is directed, if necessary, to arrange for the temporary establishment of such Biblical School or Department of Theology either separate from or in connection with some institution of learning under the control and management of our Church.

Tenth—Said commission, when so appointed, shall consider and determine the advisability and wisdom of establishing an institution or institutions of higher education of the grade of a university of, for, and on behalf of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, it being the intention of the General Conference to, and it does hereby, confer upon the said commission authority to establish and provide for the location, maintenance, and endowment of an institution or institutions of higher education and to establish and provide for the location, maintenance, and endowment of a school or schools of theology, with full power and authority, in this regard, to act for and on behalf of this General Conference as fully and as freely as it could or would act for itself.

Eleventh—Said commission is hereby empowered to receive and act upon proposals for the establishment and location of said institution or institutions; to solicit and receive subscriptions and donations for the establishment, building, maintenance, and endowment of such institution or institutions.

Twelfth—Said commission shall have the power to acquire property by gift, donation, devise, or purchase, to make contracts and do and perform all of the acts necessary or advisable to be done and performed in the discharge of their duties hereunder and in carrying out the will of this General Conference.

Thirteenth—If said commission shall determine to establish such institution or institutions of learning, it shall take such steps as are necessary to incorporate the same so as to secure to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the ownership and control of the same in perpetuity.

Fourteenth—Said commission is hereby authorized and empowered to take over any institution of higher education now established; provided the ownership and control thereof be secured to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, or to some other governing body of the same, in perpetuity.

Fifteenth—Should any vacancy occur upon said commission by death, resignation, or otherwise, such vacancy shall be filled by appointment of the College of Bishops.

Sixteenth—The expenses of said commission shall be paid by the General Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, out of any funds in its hands.

Seventeenth—We recommend to the commission that in the establishment and location of any institution or institutions provided for hereunder, they consider the needs arising by virtue of the large territory embraced in our Church.

Eighteenth—We express the belief that there should be east of the Mississippi River one such institution and one such institution west of the Mississippi River, and in this connection we express our pleasure at the establishment, by the membership of our Church in the State of Texas, of a Southern Methodist University, situated and located in the city of Dallas, in said State, and commend such institution to the said commission for its consideration.

Nineteenth—We recommend to the College of Bishops the appointment of said commission at their earliest convenience, and to said commission, when appointed, that it meet at as early a date as practicable, and issue to the Church a full and complete statement of its aims and purposes.

LOVE ONE ANOTHER.

It was Saturday night, and two children small
Sat on the stairs in the lighted hall,
Vexed and troubled and sore perplexed,
To learn for Sunday the usual text;
Only three words on a gilded card,
But both the children declared it hard.

"'Love,' that is easy—it means, why this"— (A warm embrace and a loving kiss);
"But 'one another,' I don't see who Is meant by 'another'—Now, May, do you?"

Very slowly she raised her head,
Our thoughtful darling, and gently said,
As she fondly smiled on the little brother,
"Why, I'm only one, and you are another,
And this is the meaning—don't you see?—
That I must love you, and you must love me."
Wise little preacher! could any sage Interpret better the sacred page?

—Good Cheer.

A LITTLE BOY'S DREAM.

Once upon a time there was a little boy who had a dream. He thought he was sitting on a fence so high that he could see almost the whole world. He could see farms and fields for miles and miles away.

On one farm there was a barn and a house. As the little boy looked at this house, he found that he could see right in at the windows, although he was sitting on the high fence. In this house he saw a little boy who would not get up when his mother called him in the morning.

"Jimmie," called the mother; but the little boy shut his eyes tighter than ever.

"I never did that," said the little boy on the fence. Then he said: "How queer that other little boy's name should be Jimmie, just like mine!"

Slowly the little boy awoke. His mother was standing beside his bed, calling "Jimmie, Jimmie."—New York Christian Advocate.

WHY THINGS ARE SO.

We bow to our friends as a matter of courtesy, because that has been the sign of submission ever since man has known anything about himself, as a man.

Men and boys remove their hats as a sign of respect to girls and women, but the origin of the act lies in the fact that in the days when warriors wore helmets they doffed them before women to show their confidence in the gentleness of those who never fought.

Shaking hands is simply an elaboration of the open, gently proffered hand, which has always expressed friendliness. It shows the hand guilt-less of a weapon.

The clenched fist of hate shaken in the air is the gesture with which our savage ancestors brandished a spear, a hatchet or a lance.

Flinging the hands upward, with the palms out, which most of us do when horror struck, is part of the instinctive invocation to God for help and protection which primitive people always make when frightened or in danger.

The three buttons on the back of a man's coat serve no purpose now, neither do the buttons on his coat sleeves, but not so many generations ago they were in active use.

The buttons on the back allowed the flaps of the coat to be fastened so as to allow more play to the legs when riding horseback or fencing, while the slits in the coat "tail" were arranged for the sword.

Sleeve buttons are survivals from the time when duelling was frequent. In those less peaceful times, when roads were unsafe and robbers always to be feared, every gentleman was supposed to be able to defend himself at a moment's notice. To do this, he hastily unbuttoned the cuffs of his coat and pushed them up, so that his wrist would have better play in using the sword.

TAD'S SISTER.

She was only an ordinary girl with an ordinary schoolbag hanging over her arm, and, as my mind was busy with other objects, I should scarcely have noticed her at all, had it not been for the kind words I heard her utter.

I was waiting on a street corner for a car, and she, with some other children, was standing there, too.

"Oh, come on, Daisy!" one of her companions exclaimed. "What are you waiting for, anyway?"

"I am waiting for Tad, of course," she answered good-naturedly.

"Oh, well, let's not wait for him!"

"Why, I promised him, you know," was the serious reply, "and I couldn't go without him, Sarah."

"Well, he's only your brother. You needn't be so particular about keeping your promise to him."

"But I need to be particular about keeping my promise to anybody—my brother just as much as anybody else," Daisy replied firmly, but in the same low, sweet tone, "I never disappoint Tad, if I can help it, and he knows it, too, and depends upon me. Mamma says breaking a promise is as bad as telling a lie, and you don't want to do that, you know."

"Well, what is he about? Where is he, anyhow?
He ought to be here by this time," remarked one of the boys.

"He went home at 2 o'clock to go on an errand for father, and he was to meet me here to go with me to the concert."

"I'm afraid we'll be late," grumbled another lad.

"Yes, we will!" some one else said.

"Then suppose you all go on and don't wait for me," Daisy said quietly. "I shall not mind, but I wouldn't go without Tad for anything."

"Oh, it wouldn't be nice to go without you!"
Sarah objected.

"Well, here he comes now," cried the boy who had spoken; and just then a lad of about ten years could be seen hurrying along the street.
In a few moments he joined the group, and asked anxiously, "I didn't keep you waiting long, did I?"

I looked at Tad, and saw there was nothing about him that would attract the attention of a stranger, except it might be his bright, happy face, but his sister's eyes rested upon him lovingly as she replied, "Only a few moments, Tad."

"There, Daisy," he said, "I brought your waterproof and rubbers. It looks cloudy, and I'm almost sure it will rain before we get home. No, you needn't take them;" and he held on to the bundle he had in his arms. "I can carry them; I just wanted you to know they were on hand."

"Oh, thank you, Tad," the girl said heartily; "I shall probably need them."

They were starting off now, and as Sarah took her place hastily beside Daisy, she remarked, wonderingly, "How polite you two are to each other! Do you always act that way?"

As they hurried on I caught only a part of Daisy's surprised answer, and that was, "Of course; why shouldn't we be?"

And the question will bear being repeated with some addition: Why should not all sisters and brothers be happy in the same love and confidence that Tad and Daisy gave to each other?—

IN MEMORY OF Y. C. McCLURG.

On the 14th of April, 1914, the grim reaper
Death entered our midst and claimed as his victim one of the oldest and most esteemed citizens of this county, Y. C. McClurg. He had been spared to reach the ripe old age of 85 years, and had lived in the vicinity of Vaiden for 60 years.
It was our pleasure to know him well, and we always found him cheerful, affable and courteous, with a kind word for every one he met. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church, an honest, honorable citizen, a devoted husband, an affectionate father and a true friend. Another honored Confederate veteran, has answered the last call. He leaves a wife and six children:
Monroe McClurg, of Greenwood; John E. Mc-
Clurg, of Vaiden; Hub E. McClurg, of Ruleville;
Mrs. M. Tillman, of Vaiden; Mrs. Harrell, of Oklahoma City, Okla.; Mrs. M. Windborn, of Mc-Comb City.

We extend our deepest sympathy to his heartbroken wife, grief stricken children and all other sorrowing ones. May the Father of mercy look with tender compassion upon these loved ones, pouring the balm of consolation upon their bruised hearts; giving them grace sufficient to say, "Thy will be done;" and causing them to remember that this separation is but for a while, and that in that land of perfect day, where all is joy and peace and love, they will soon join him, knowing that,

"In that bright, eternal city
Death can never, never come,
In His own good time he'll call us
From our rest to home, sweet home."
"For what is death but life stopped in its singing
To take breath for endless song."

TO BISHOP ALPHEUS WATERS WILSON.

By Rev. Charles O. Jones, D. D.

O Sage of Methodism, on whose good gray head
The hand of fourscore years has gently pressed,
And many thousands thou hast greatly blessed;
Thy life an inspiration; thy lips have spread
O'er land and sea the words of Him who bled
That men might live as Jesus lived, nor faint
As Christian racers. Preacher, Statesman, Saint!
Long mayst thou still abide with us to shed
The fragrant influence of thy heart and brain
On Church and State and those who are to be Rescuers to save the world from woe and pain
That come from sin. Our love goes out to thee,
O man of God. When called, mayst thou ascend,
Like Enoch, to the life that ne'er shall end!

Editorial

TO OUR FRIENDS.

The dull season is now upon us, and we hope that our pastors and other friends will not be unmindful of the interests of the Advocate in their work. Even small remittances are very helpful in this time of financial dearth, and we shall be especially grateful if persons who are in arrears for their subscriptions will settle for them without further delay. In some of the charges club lists have expired and many names will have to be dropped from our files in the near future unless they are promptly renewed. We urgently appeal to our preachers to give this matter immediate attention in order that the Advocate may not cease to enter homes into which it has been going. The revival season is a favorable time for securing new subscribers, and we trust that while our people are spiritually quickened the brethren will emphasize to them the importance of taking and reading the Conference organ. Never in the history of the Church has there been such an urgent need for placing wholesome periodicals in the hands of our members as at present when vicious publications are being scattered broadcast over the land.

THE BRIGHTENING BOW OF PEACE.

The mediation proceedings at Niagara Falls are going steadily forward, and it was stated some days ago that the negotiations would probably soon reach the protocol stage. The factor which seems to be causing the most apprehension among the participants in the conference at present is the absence of representatives of the Constitutionalist faction in Mexico, which undoubtedly must be reckoned with in any plan to establish good order and a stable government in that torn and distracted country. It was given out from Washington a few days since that our Government is insisting upon General Carranza and his followers being represented in the deliberations at Niagara Falls, since otherwise any policy of pacification agreed upon may prove to be abortive. It is not at this writing known whether the Constitutionalist can be induced to send envoys to Niagara Falls, though up to the present they have seemed disinclined to do so, and have definitely announced that they will not consent to an armistice while the mediation proceedings are in progress.

All things considered, however, it may be said that the prospect for a peaceful settlement of the Mexican trouble is brighter than it has been for years. The war spirit has appreciably abated in the United States. Huerta seems much more amenable to reason than heretofore, and, with the leading South American countries actively exercising their good offices to adjust matters amicably and avoid further strife, the outlook seems to be decidedly encouraging. If the Wilson administration shall succeed by diplomacy, instead of by armed intervention, in bringing order out of the confusion and chaos that have long prevailed in Mexico, it will indeed be a great achievement—one that will shed glory upon it and be pointed to with gratification and pride for all time to come.

It would be well for Christian people everywhere to pray daily that the envoys and mediators now conferring upon our northern border may have the guidance of God in their difficult work and led to such conclusions as will make for the peace and prosperity of the nations of the western hemisphere, and of all the world.

SOMEWHAT SUGGESTIVE.

In writing in opposition to having a paper in each episcopal district in the Methodist Episcopal Church, controlled by the resident Bishop, the New York Christian Advocate, among other things, says:

"Moreover, the present system of episcopal administration was never designed by those who conceived it to lead us toward a diocesan episcopacy. It was rather invented with a view to restraining us from going too far in that direction. It looks like a very clever method of obtaining the advantages of the diocesan system without adopting its obvious faults and embarrassments. Yet our ministers who work in Conferences within the residential areas of Bishops who issue local papers cannot escape the impression that the diocesan system is being quietly introduced. (Italics ours.) One of our most effective pastors prints on his letter-head the words, 'Philadelphia Diocese,' following it with the name of his Conference. There is a measure of justification for his appropriation of this language so long as the Bishop of the Philadelphia area insists on the circulation of a paper for which he is chiefly responsible."

This editorial utterance of the leading journal of our sister Methodism is quite suggestive, and we respectfully commend it to the consideration of those in our Church who think it would be a great thing to create episcopal districts and have resident Bishops to serve the same group of Conferences for a quadrennium. We do not hesitate to predict that if such an arrangement is ever effected for Southern Methodism it will be the entering wedge that will ultimately destroy our itinerant General Superintendency. The men who can do the most to avert the coming of such an innovation are our Bishops themselves. If they will travel through the Conferences assigned them and work chiefly within their bounds, as the Church has a right to expect them to do, the clamor for this modified form of diocesan episcopacy will likely cease; but otherwise it will not. Such a thing as a Bishop having charge of a Conference and practically never visiting it at all until he comes to preside over it at the end of the year cannot be defended, unless he has been provisionally kept away. We do not write this because of any fondness of criticising our Chief Pastors (we feel that our record is such as to give us immunity from such an accusation); but because we desire to see our present form of episcopacy preserved and because of a sense of duty to the Church.

THE FACTS IN THE CASE.

The Midland Methodist of last week contained the following:

"Our esteemed contemporary, the Midland Methodist, which has seemed to us to be somewhat ruffled ever since the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee in the Vanderbilt case was rendered, remarked in a recent issue that the Church has spent fifty thousand dollars in the litigation, only to learn that she stands now with reference to the University where she did thirty-five years ago.—New Orleans Christian Advocate. "Dr. Meek is usually correct in what he says, but this time he is mistaken. Perhaps he read what some one else said in the Midland Methodist, but the editor never said any such thing. The Midland Methodist has stood by the Church in the Vanderbilt case throughout, and now has no regrets for the position it has taken."

The statement referred to in our former issue, which we correctly represented, was contained on page eight—the page headed "Notes and Personals"—of the Midland Methodist of April 8. It will be observed in the paragraph quoted above that we did not credit the utterance in question to the Editor, but to the Midland Methodist. However, it stood unsigned on a page commonly regarded as editorial, and had we ascribed it to Dr. Schuler, it would have been only a natural and legitimate inference. If we mistake not, it is customary to hold an editor responsible for all the unsigned utterances appearing in his paper, especially if they are published in the editorial parts of it. The Midland of April 8, which contained the statement that we quoted and commented upon, also carried on the first page another brief editorial, entitled "Vanderbilt," which was altogether different in tone. It was this double blast that the Midland was giving out that caused us to refer to it as being "somewhat ruffled." But we are delighted to know that Dr. Schuler has stood, and still stands, four square on this great issue which has so vitally affected the educational interests and general welfare of the Church. We respectfully suggest, however, that it might be well in order that he may not be misunderstood to make those who express in the Midland views different from his sign their contributions.

THE MORAL ELEMENT AROUSED.

The proposal to have the State Legislature pass the Reinhardt Bill, a measure that would make it possible to license race-track gambling in Louisiana, has aroused great opposition among the moral and religious people of the commonwealth. About the first man to sound a bugle blast against this movement was Dr. S. H. Werlein, the alert pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of New Orleans, who in a masterful discourse from his pulpit exposed the iniquitous design of the contemplated legislation. Since then other leading citizens have spoken out strongly against this scheme, and last Sunday afternoon a large and enthusiastic mass meeting was held in Lafayette Park, under the auspices of the various woman's organizations of the city, with a view to creating sentiment in opposition to it. We scarcely think the measure can be passed, but nothing should be taken for granted, and the moral forces of the State are acting wisely in organizing and seeking to make their influence felt with the members of the Legislature. We respectfully suggest that it would be a good thing if the people in every parish would circulate petitions against the Reinhardt Bill and forward them to their representatives at Baton Rouge. The sooner this is done the better. There is no time for delay.

We have also been pleased to note that a movement is under way in New Orleans to secure the enactment of legislation looking to the abolishment of the restricted district and the suppression of the social vice in the Crescent City. Even if this undertaking does not succeed, it is a healthful and encouraging indication. It shows that our people are dissatisfied with the existing conditions and that a wholesome moral leaven is at work among them. But this effort ought to win. Absolutely no defense that amounts to anything can be made for the policy of licensing prostitution. A restricted district is a leprous sore upon the body politic that tends to poison with deadly corruption every part of it. The only proper treatment for it is to cut it out completely.

THE CARROLLTON AVENUE OPENING.

The opening of the handsome new Carrollton Avenue Church of this city last Sunday afternoon was an occasion of much interest. The auditorium about the chancel was beautifully decorated with palms, and a large congregation was in attendance. The sermon was preached by Dr. F. S. Parker, of Nashville, Tenn., General Secretary of the Epworth League, who twenty-eight years ago preached the first sermon in the old church. The discourse was an able and appropriate one and was listened to with eager attention. The following other visiting ministers, some of whom took part in the exercises, were present: Rev. W. E. Thomas, Rev. John L. Sutton, Rev. H. W. Jamieson, Rev. W. L. Doss, Rev. R. H. Harper, Rev. C. A. Battle, Dr. J. M. Henry, and Dr. J. T. Sawyer. The collection taken at the close of the service amounted to $1476.70.

The completion of this substantial and attractive house of worship is a great achievement, and reflects much credit upon the energetic pastor, Rev. J. G. Snelling, and his faithful co-workers. The Building Committee, which was highly commended for its work, was composed of the following gentlemen: A. H. Ahten, Jacob Cohen, C. O. Chalmers, J. H. Carter, L. Herman, Sam Stone, Sr., Frank Stone, D. C. Worrell, and J. A. Foster. A pipe organ has been contracted for and will be installed in the near future. With the splendid facilities now at their command, the Carrollton Methodists may be expected to make their influence strongly felt in their section of the city and to accomplish large things for the Master in the coming years.

FINANCIAL HELP NEEDED.

We are reliably informed that the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League is urgently in need of funds to carry on its important work. It is stated that only twelve Methodist Sunday schools in the State reported anything from the observation of the Anti-Saloon Day ordered by the last Annual Conference. Rev. A. W. Turner, the efficient Superintendent of this work, is now in Baton Rouge, where the Legislature is in session, seeking to secure such enactments as will strengthen and promote the temperance cause, and he must have money for printing and various other necessary purposes if he is to achieve anything worth while. We, therefore, urge our pastors and interested laymen to bring this matter to the attention of the people in every community AT ONCE, and to remit any amounts that may be secured to Brother Turner at Baton Rouge. We cannot afford to fail to stand by him in this crucial hour. We dare say that the liquor representatives at the Capital will not lack for money to accomplish what they have been sent there to do.

THE SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

The approaching session of this School will open on Tuesday, June 23, and close on Thursday, July 2. The program offered is a most attractive one. Among the speakers are Bishop W. A. Candler, Bishop F. J. McConnell, and Dr. J. A. Rice. Every pastor who can should go and whet anew his intellectual appetite. It would be a kindly and generous thing if many of our congregations would make up purses and send their ministers. We hope to hear that quite a number of them have done this.

A WORD OF THANKS.

We acknowledge ourself greatly indebted to Rev. C. A. Battle, of New Orleans, for valuable service rendered the Advocate during our absence at the General Conference. He had full editorial control of the paper, and how well he did his work is known to our readers. Brother Battle is studious, scholarly, and has unusual gifts both as a preacher and writer. We shall not soon forget his kindly and generous assistance given in a time of need.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mrs. J. D. Barbee, of Greenville, Miss., is visiting relatives in Memphis.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb will assist Rev. J. M. Guinn in a meeting at Crawford, Miss., which will begin next Sunday, June 7.

Dr. J. W. Malone, who is well known in North Mississippi, has been re-elected President of Andrew College, at Cuthbert, Ga., at an increased salary.

Rev. C. A. Battle, pastor of the Felicity Street Church of this city, has had as his guest for the past few days, Prof. B. D. Battle, of Centenary College.

Dr. I. W. Cooper was due to preach the Commencement sermon for the High School at Belzoni, Miss., last Sunday and to take part in the closing exercises of the School at Flora, Miss., this week. Dr. Cooper is much in demand for such occasions.

Dr. Franklin N. Parker, of Trinity College, has been named by the College of Bishops as one of the Committee to fix the standard for the classification of our schools. A better selection could not have been made. This Committee will serve for the next four years.

Rev. T. B. Reagan, of Corvallis, Montana, was in New Orleans last Monday and paid the Advocate office an appreciated call. The Editor, however, was not in and missed seeing him, much to his regret. Brother Reagan was a delegate to the late General Conference.

Rev. T. W. Lewis, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Memphis, Tenn., delivered the Commencement Sermon at the Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Starkville, Miss., last Sunday. The press dispatches stated that "his discourse was a brilliant and scholarly one."

Under date of May 25, Rev. J. C. Rosseaux of Zwolle, La., writes as follows: "We closed quite a successful meeting here last night. Rev. F. R. Power, of Logansport, was with us for three weeks. The church was greatly revived, and there were 36 accessions to its membership."

The second quarterly conference of the Oak Grove (La.) charge was held at Pioneer, La., at a date including last Sunday. The pastor, Rev. G. D. Purcell, is an active and tireless worker, and the reports submitted were encouraging.

We are indebted to Rev. J. L. Neill, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of Laurel, Miss., for programs of his Sunday services for the past three weeks. Brother Neill is one of the live wires of the Mississippi Conference. His letter also brought us a number of subscriptions to the Advocate from his charge.

Dr. Felix R. Hill, Jr., was one of the speakers at the mass meeting held in Lafayette Park, New Orleans, last Sunday afternoon in opposition to the Reinhardt Race Track Bill now pending before the Louisiana Legislature. What he had to say was forceful and to the point, and he worthily represented Methodism on that impressive occasion.

Mr. J. H. Ledyard, the wide-awake and resourceful superintendent of our Sunday school at Tupelo, Miss., was placed on the General Sunday School Board of the M. E. Church, South, at the recent General Conference. This was an honor worthily bestowed, and that Brother Ledyard will make a useful member of the Board, no one who knows him will for one moment doubt.

The alumni of Vanderbilt University residing in and near Atlanta, Ga., numbering about 60, gave Chancellor Kirkland a banquet in that city on the evening of May 26, at which time the Chancellor made an extended address. According to the Atlanta Constitution, among the guests on that occasion was Prof. Thomas Carter, of the Vanderbilt Theological Department.

In the last issue of the Advocate we spoke of a $3000 church having been opened on Sunday, May 24, at Oaknolia, La. We should have said, at Oakdale, La. This mistake was in consequence of writing hurriedly from memory, after we had glanced at the notice in the Times-Picayune.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., of Poplarville, Miss., sends us the following request for publication: "Let all the brethren outside of the Seashore District representing Conference Boards or other interests who expect to attend the District Conference to be held here, June 10-12, please drop me a card a day or two in advance of their coming telling me on what day and by what train they will arrive."

Rev. F. N. Sweeney, of Wilson, La., was in the city last Monday, and we are glad to say that he found his way to the Advocate office. He had been attending the Baton Rouge District Conference at Ponchatoula. There is no truer, worthier man in the Louisiana Conference than Brother Sweeney, and he never fails to give a good account of himself in any field to which he is assigned.

From the Western Methodist (their official organ) of May 28, we take the following: "The members of the Oklahoma Conferences are greatly pleased with the appointment of Bishop W. B. Murrah to hold those Conferences this fall. He will receive a glad welcome throughout the State." The more the Oklahoma brethren learn to know Bishop Murrah, the more they will esteem him and appreciate his worth.

We acknowledge the reception of the following card: "Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Merritt announce the marriage of their daughter, Allena, to Mr. Clifton Chapman, on Wednesday, May 20, 1914; Indianola, Miss." The bride was reared in Jackson, Miss., where she is held in high esteem and has many friends. The groom belongs to one of the leading families of Sunflower County. The Advocate extends congratulations and all good wishes.

Grenada College closed last week what is said to have been the best session in its history. In the absence of Bishop Murrah, who found it impossible to meet his engagement, Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, of Sardis, Miss., preached both the Commencement sermon and the sermon to the Y. W. C. A., and his discourses are reported to have measured up to a very high standard. This excellent institution, under the guiding hand of Rev. J. R. Countiss, is moving steadily forward to larger things.

We have in hand a copy of the Catalogue of Mansfield College for 1914. It is a most attractive publication and contains much interesting information. This school is enjoying increasing prosperity under the administration of President R. E. Bobbitt, and has a very bright outlook. The graduating class this year numbered fourteen. The Methodist parents of Louisiana, or any others, for that matter, will make no mistake in sending their daughters to Mansfield. Write President Bobbitt for a catalogue.

Through the kindness of the President, Prof. E. F. Puckett, of Tupelo, we are in receipt of a draft of the program of the North Mississippi Epworth League Conference, which is to be held at Columbus, Miss., June 12-14. None of the speakers for the occasion are announced, but we are informed that nothing will be left undone to secure competent ones and to make the meeting interesting and profitable. We hope that this gathering will be largely attended by the young people in whose interest it has been arranged.

Rev. J. L. Sutton has stated that he will ask to be relieved of the pastorate of the Louisiana Avenue Church, of this city, by June 15. The reason for Brother Sutton's action is that his orphanage and prison reform work are making such demands upon him that he is left without the requisite time for the care of a pastoral charge. He has wrought well for the Louisiana Avenue congregation, and its members will give him up with great reluctance. Who will serve Louisiana Avenue after Brother Sutton leaves has not yet been announced.

Rev. J. R. Jones, pastor of the Central M. E. Church, South, of Meridian, Miss., under date of May 28, writes: "The many friends of Rev. I. L. Peebles will be pained to know that he has recently undergone a very serious surgical operation at the Meridian Hospital. I am glad to say that he is now considered out of danger. Let his many friends among the brethren pray for the recovery of this faithful and useful servant of the Church." We regret very much to hear of Brother Peebles' affliction and we trust that his restoration to health will be speedy and complete.

We have on our table a copy of Rev. W. S. Harrison's new book entitled "The Articles - of Religion as Amended, Supplemented and Explained." The following is the dedication: "To the members of my Sunday School Bible Class, in Starkville, Miss., including our faithful pastor, Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, B. D., this little book is affectionately inscribed by the author." A striking likeness of Brother Harrison adorns the volume as a frontispiece. We shall have more to say of this work, which we do not doubt is good to the use of edifying, as soon as we can find an opportunity to read it.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: "Rev. Chas. E. Downer, Foxworth, Miss., 2; Rev. Algie Oliver, Matherville, Miss., 5; Rev. D. H. Crowson, West, Miss., 3; Rev. L. E. Crooks, Glenmora, La., 4; Rev. P. H. Grice, Derby, Miss., 5; Rev. J. H. Grice, Glancy, Miss., 3.

Rev. P. D. Hardin, presiding elder of the Jackson (Miss.) District, writes: "Please call attention to the fact that we have two splendid young men, both members of the Mississippi Conference, who will graduate at Millsaps College at the approaching Commencement. They will be available for pastoral work right away, and I shall be glad to correspond concerning their employment with any presiding elder in your patronizing territory who has a vacancy to be filled." The two young ministers referred to are Rev. John W. Chisolm and Rev. Robert E. Selby, both of whom will receive the Bachelor of Arts degree.

In our issue of last week, in referring to Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick's illness a regrettable error was made in stating that her mother, who does her typewriting, was also ill. It was her typewriter's mother who was sick, and not her own mother, who never uses a machine in writing. The explanation of this mistake is that the item was gleaned from a note which, because of her indisposition, Miss Kilpatrick had written with a pencil in lines that were very dim. Our readers will be delighted to know that Miss Kilpatrick continues to improve, and that the present indications are that she will be up and out at an early date.

Prof. H. P. Todd, who is generally recognized as one of the most capable educators in Mississippi, has accepted the position of vice president of Whitworth College, and will henceforth be connected with that historic and growing institution. In referring to Prof. Todd's work as president of Stanton College, at Natchez, the Daily Democrat of that city, among other things, says: "During his administration at Stanton Mr. Todd has placed this excellent literary institution for young ladies upon a firmer footing than it has had since its establishment twenty years ago. He is in the prime of life, a man of scholarly attainments, a consistent member of the Methodist Church, and stands firmly and unequivocally for what he believes is right and just."

The Snyder (Texas) Signal of May 22 devotes nearly a page and a half of space to an account of a great union meeting at that place conducted by Rev. W. M. McIntosh, of Iuka, Miss., and his singer, Mr. Anderson, of Greenville, Texas. The Signal says: "The meeting has been in progress for two and a half weeks, and its influence is manifest in the conversation of the people in the stores, in the shops, about the streets, and everywhere. The crowning glory of the work, however, is seen in the hundreds of homes where families have reconsecrated themselves and where God's altar has been set up to perpetuate the governing presence, of grace, humility, love and reverence. * * * Dr. McIntosh is one of the greatest evangelists in the South." We are happy to know that God is so wonderfully blessing the labors of our long-time friend in the West.

Rev. T. B. Cottrell began a revival meeting at Tylertown, Miss., on May 27, with Rev. Thomas J. Norsworthy to do the preaching. With these two capable workers to lead the campaign, we dare say that great and lasting good will be accomplished. The Sentinel, of Yazoo City, one of the leading weeklies in Mississippi, in a recent issue expressed a very high appreciation of Brother Norsworthy and his work, which we quote in part: "Rev. T. J. Norsworthy has just returned from Florida, where he has been engaged in revival work, and where he has been conspicuously successful. He preached at the Methodist Church here Sunday and delivered a powerful sermon that carried conviction to his hearers. Mr. Norsworthy's home is in Yazoo City, and his splendid success in the ministry as an evangelist is a source of gratification to his many friends here."

Captain Charles G. Palotta, of Jackson, Miss., the official head of the Gospel Army Service, was a pleasant caller at our office last Monday. This organization was started in Jackson in the spring of 1913, being chartered by Captain C. G. Palotta, Mary A. Palotta, and W. R. Flemka. It is reported to be making its influence felt for good in Jackson, and has also extended its operations to Columbus, Water Valley, Hattiesburg, Gulfport, and other points along the Mississippi coast. Its work has been mostly among foreigners (chiefly Italians), and it has been especially active in seeking to rescue and redeem fallen women. Captain Carlotta is a Methodist, and holds his membership in our Rankin Street Church at Jackson.

On April 2, 1914, Mrs. J. M. Smith, widow of J. M. Smith, died at her home in New Orleans. She was born in New Orleans and was the daughter of J. M. Smith. She was married to J. M. From the garden of this world a beautiful but brief life has been taken to bloom in the Paradise of God. Little ELIZABETH PALMER HOWELL, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Elizabeth Howell, of Aberdeen, Mass., a bright, beautiful baby boy, was taken from his sorrowing father and mother on May 14, 1914. His life in this world was short, but precious to those who loved him, and the memory of the sweet baby will be fondly cherished by his parents and relatives. They will never forget those peaceful cheeks and bright laughing eyes. It is not the longest lives that always do the most good for themselves. God blesses a whole generation through the short life of a little child. And often if we could only know how many sighs and heartaches were saved, we would be led to rejoice instead of mourn.

May the God of all grace bless the heartbroken father and mother, and may they look forward to the time when they shall be with their darling boy again in the home where God shall wipe away all tears. His grandfather, J. Z. P.

FRECKLES

Don't Hide Them with a Veil; Remove Them with the Othine Prescription.

This prescription for the removal of freckles was written by a prominent physician and is usually so successful in removing freckles and giving a clear, beautiful complexion that it is sold by druggists under guarantee to refund the money if it fails. Don't hide your freckles under a veil; get an ounce of othine and remove them. Even the first few applications should show a wonderful improvement, some of the lighter freckles vanishing entirely. Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine; it is this that is sold on the money-back guarantee.

Tidings From the Field

Eunice, La.

Dear Brother Meek: I have been wanting to write the Advocate a letter for some time. It will make us feel good if you will publish a little account of our work here in Eunice.

We have just closed a gracious revival in Eunice. Rev. M. Hebert was with us two weeks. The results were, 3 accessions by baptism, 5 on profession of faith and 5 by letter, with more to follow. Thirty-five members have been added to the whole work since Conference. Two new Leagues have been organized by the pastor's wife. The Sunday schools are flourishing and everything is looking up. We are in the midst of a campaign for a new church at Eunice. We are going to build a $3000 church here.—A. A. Bernard.

Mansfield, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: Mansfield is still the best charge in the Louisiana Conference. We have just finished installing a blower for our pipe organ, emancipating ourselves thereby from the reign of "the brother in black," besides getting much better service. The Sunday school, under the superintendency of Mr. J. H. Thatcher, is growing steadily in numbers and interest. The College is closing one of the best sessions in its history, with prospects for an enlarged attendance next year. The old Methodist house of worship has been sold and is now being dismantled for removal. I regret that the balance of the money for the lot is not in hand, so that we can deed the property to the College. We still hope to get it somehow.—Thomas H. Morris.

Mantachie Circuit (North Miss.)

I am delighted with my work on the Mantachie Circuit. This is my first year with the good Methodist people, and I love Methodist doctrine because it is Bible doctrine. The people of this circuit love the Lord and they are willing and ready to do what comes to hand to honor and glorify him and to advance his kingdom. They have been good to me and I appreciate their kindness. We have good Sunday schools and prayer meetings on a part of the work. Our Children's Day at Mantachie was the best I ever saw. The children did extraordinarily well and the collection was very good, all of which was due to the good women of Mantachie, who were so faithful in training the children. May the Lord bless them for their labors. Pray for us that we may have a great year—that many souls may be saved, and that the Church may be built up.—C. C. Clark.

McComb, Miss.

Our second quarterly conference was held on May 23, at the Topisaw camp ground. Brother Selby used Matt. 5:13 for a text, and "our hearts burned within us," as he talked of the possibilities of a Christian's saving power in this world; the Spirit of the Lord was felt in nearly every heart present as the preacher talked about a good man's influence in the world. Oh! that we had more men like Barnabas, who was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and faith!

On the following Sunday morning Brother Selby preached on "The Unity of the Church in Prayer and its Results" (Acts 2:1); and the Lord blessed us, as he pleaded that we might all be "with one accord in prayer." Another thing that contributed to my own joy on this occasion was the fact of my wife's presence at both services—the first quarterly conference she has been able to attend since the first quarterly conference in 1913. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." The indications are for a revival wave over the Circuit ere long. Pray for us.—J. A. Wells.

Artesia, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have just closed a most remarkable revival. Rev. J. L. Morrill, of Hawkinsville, Ga., did the preaching, and beyond all doubt he is God's man, one of his most gifted revivalists. His exposition of the Scriptures, the clear manner in which he presented the Word of God, got for God here a mighty name. The entire church was revived. Sinners were convicted and came to the altar broken and undone, crying for mercy. We had an old time mourner-bench-come through revival. It wasn't a question of who ever wants to go to heaven, just hold up the hand, scratch the left side of the nose, or sign a card; but, instead, the work was deep and earnest. Sinners came to the altar confessing their sins, promising to forsake sin and exercised believing faith in Christ as their Redeemer. Lives were re-consecrated and family altars were erected. Many now pray in public who never did so before. We had 20 genuine conversions. Seventeen joined our Church. We feel truly thankful and grateful to God for the great victory he gave us here.

May God bless you and use you to his glory for many years to come.—E. G. Mohler, Jr., P. C.

Foxworth, Miss.

The Buford charge, as a whole, consisting of six appointments, is making reasonable progress. We have had two official visits from our efficient and considerate presiding elder, Brother Selby, whose presence and inspiring sermons did much to inspire our people to seek the accomplishment of greater things for our Lord and Master. During the month of April Brother R. A. Maddox was with us for five days. His work measured up to the usual standard. Brother Isaac L. Peebles preached for us fourteen strong doctrinal sermons, which were calculated to convince more firmly and clear any doubting or questioning minds in interpreting the Scripture on the subjects discussed. Next came our Educational campaign, which was conducted by Brothers W. H. Lewis and J. A. Moore. The claims of Church Extension, A. B. S., Home and Conference Missions and Education, were forcefully and practically presented. We feel grateful to each of these brethren for his splendid work with us. Children's Day has been observed at Summer Chapel and preparations are being made for this occasion at each appointment. We are praying for and expecting great spiritual awakenings as the result of our approaching revivals. "For without Me ye can do nothing." I have truly felt the significance of this message, and God has directed my pathway amid the many new experiences incident to my service for Him, in which I am happily engaged. Our prayer meeting here is fairly well attended and the six Sunday schools of the work are being maintained with some increase in interest. May we each realize the vital need of more piety in our home life with our children and those of our neighbors.—Chas. E. Downer, Pastor.

Louisiana State Normal School
Natchitoches, Louisiana

A State Institution for the Training of Public School Teachers

Fall Term Opens September 15, 1914.

With material equipment valued above half a million dollars, and faculty of 49 select instructors, this institution thoroughly trains and prepares young men and young women as skilled, efficient and progressive school teachers. Established in 1884 by the General Assembly the school offers free tuition to students who pledge to teach a year in Louisiana. Courses are offered which may be completed in two years by the high school graduate. Students may enter from the ninth grade. Fall quarter opens September 15, 1914.

The demand for teachers, thoroughly trained, is greater today than ever before. This honored and highly respected profession offers large opportunities, with a minimum of time for preparation. State Normal School courses develop the personality and impart the scholarship and technical skill necessary to the successful teacher. Our diploma is recognized throughout the country, and our employment bureau is always able to place graduates to best advantage and to find teaching positions for undergraduates.

Well equipped buildings and dormitories number over 20. Steam laundry, electric power plant, steam heat, every convenience. Pure water and milk supply, under school control. Beautiful campus, athletic grounds and agricultural tracts aggregate 267 acres. Special courses in domestic science, manual training, music, art, rural teaching. Pleasant social life: social organizations, literary societies, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A. Catholic societies. Enrollment last year, 1,326. Necessary expenses, exclusive of tuition, about $19 per month.

The Sunday School.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Mr. R. A. Maddox and Rev. B. F. Lewis.

The third Sunday in May is gone. Did you see it go by without Children's Day? Of course you are either going to have the Children's Day program rendered, or at least take up a collection for the cause.

The Field Secretary will be in the field until September 1, and as he has two weeks in July and the whole of August that he would like to give some one before he goes out of the work, if you need any of this time, write him at once.

Every pastoral charge in the Brookhaven District, save two, has ordered Children's Day programs, and as one of these has never failed to observe the Day, we feel sure that it also will be in line. Now, if the only remaining one will just do as well, this District will show a clean balance sheet.

The Sunday school at the Rankin Street Church (Jackson, Miss.) has made wonderful progress and improvement. The teachers, superintendent, and pastor have one of the best teachers' meetings, that it has been my pleasure to attend. Brother Meigs, the pastor, with his corps of earnest teachers, has almost doubled the attendance in the Sunday school. If you want to see your Sunday school grow, just put life and spirit in it, and it will do so.

A most charming act was performed by the Crystal Springs Sunday school teaching force a week ago. Miss Mattie Barrington, who for several years has been teaching a class of boys whose age ranges from fourteen to sixteen, has been forced by ill health to cease from all active employment. She sent her resignation to the Sunday school superintendent, as teacher of this class. Because of her faithful and most efficient work, the teachers, by unanimous vote, agreed to furnish conveyance every Sabbath for Miss Barrington, if she would keep the class. This she has agreed to do. A committee was appointed to see that a livery team is at her door at 9:15 o'clock a. m. every Sunday.

The Sunday school at Collins, Miss., is doing very good work, but is getting ready to do better work. During a visit of the Field Secretary recently, they organized three teacher-training classes and one made up of the teachers and officers of the school. Just stop a minute! WHY CAN'T THIS BE DONE IN EVERY SUNDAY SCHOOL? In addition to other things, Brother J. C. Chambers, the pastor, is superintendent of one of the best home department classes in the Mississippi Conference. If Brother Chambers can do this, why can't others? It is easy for the pastor to look after this while visiting his people. Of course, he talks to them about the Bible and the blessings of God, and the home department work and the lesson would be a fine starting point. Suppose you give it a trial.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

During the year two mission schools have been organized on the Kentwood charge, one having already enrolled about 75 scholars, and the other about 30. Both schools are doing good work and are planning for Children's Day services.

Since the union meeting the men's Bible class has received a substantial increase in membership and adopted as its name "The Golden Rule," and "By love serve one another," as its motto. Mrs. H. C. Kreuger was elected president; W. A. Haughton, Esq., vice-president; J. W. Sessions secretary-treasurer; J. L. Davis, teacher, and C. B. Vetter assistant teacher. All the committees were appointed and a forward move was enthusiastically planned.

There is a recent verified record of a public school teacher who was referred to a passage of Scripture in the Epistle to the Romans, and was so unfamiliar with the Bible that she had to call for help in finding the passage desired. While most people of intelligence would have through index or otherwise succeeded in locating the scripture text sought, nevertheless this is but indicative of the ignorance of many people of the Bible even among our Protestant Sunday school scholars. The trouble is that in too many cases people do not go to Sunday school a sufficient length of time to gain an intelligent understanding of the Bible, and even those who go longer often do not learn much because the grade of our teaching is so poor, or even when it is good in other respects the pupils have been allowed to use lesson helps to the exclusion of the Bible itself. If Bible knowledge is the test of the efficiency of our Sunday school teaching, then some teachers need to increase their knowledge or change their methods.

Following the close of a recent union revival meeting in Kentwood the entire membership of Mrs. Wing's Presbyterian Sunday school class of eight boys joined the Church at one service, not one of whom had been a church member before, but one even having been baptized. Upon inquiry we learn that the pastor's wife and the teacher by personal effort led the boys to this declaration of their faith and to the active consecration of their lives, the revival having, of course, helped in arousing their interest. How easy it would have been to let this door of opportunity close unentered! And yet when a consecrated effort was made nothing was more natural or easy of accomplishment than that these boys just at this time should have been led to confess Christ, while even one year later might have found some of them under circumstances so different that they might never have been reached. And we are persuaded that every revival meeting has just such responsibilities to meet, and alas! many teachers do not do as did this one at Kentwood, and so many who enter and are taught in our Sunday school classes are never known in the fellowship of church membership.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Dr. Franklin McElfuch has a new and helpful volume just out on "The Training of Sunday School Teachers and Officers." It should be in every workers' library.

Mr. Curtis has been endeavoring to start a teacher training class in every church he has visited, and has been very successful along this great line of Sunday school work.

A letter of sympathy from Rev. W. L. Graves of Belle Haven, Florida, reports a happy and successful year's work. He also evinced the keenest interest in his old Conference and its success and future.

Our Conference Sunday school work feels further complimented in that Mr. Ledyard was placed on the new and enlarged General Sunday School Board of twenty-five. He will be a valuable member, indeed.

"The Cradle Roll Story" by Miss Phoebe Curtin, Elementary Superintendent of Ohio, is a most helpful little volume and would be valuable to every cradle roll superintendent looking to the betterment of her department.

The superintendent can not be a true leader of the modern Sunday school simply by standing on the platform, announcing hymns and ringing a bell. He must have an intelligent grasp of the work of the whole school. Hence, he needs his workers' council as well as his teacher-training class.

Mr. J. H. Ledyard, of Tupelo, possesses a real genius for making programs for his special days, full of sentiment and striking originality and spirituality. His recent Mothers' Day program is so well worth while, that it is to be regretted that space can not be used to print it in full. No day in our Church's and the world's calendar is so much a real saint's day as Mothers' Day.

Adult Bible class work should be done for results all the time. It is never possible to tell just how soon the opportunity of doing something for an individual will be passed. It is a day of moving boundaries—people and positions. The opportune hour in which a needy life can be touched into loveliness and helpfulness is the psychological moment to use every influence for good, for the individual's sake, as well as for the new place to which his hurrying feet are bound.

The supreme question concerning the pupil is not, "Does he know about God, the Bible, the Church and Christian service?" but "Does he love them?" The supreme question concerning a teacher is not, "Does he hold a teacher-training diploma?" but "Can he teach so as to lead the pupil to love the things of God?" Of course, one cannot love without knowing, but it is all too possible to know without loving, and we become what we love, not what we know. The law of life is eternal and unchanging, "What I love I will seek and seek until I secure."—Mrs. A. A. Lamoreaux.

NOTICE.

I have made arrangements with my Presiding Elder, Rev. W. S. Shipman, whereby I can give all of my time this summer and fall to evangelistic work. I prefer to lead the singing in revival services, but can preach in a few meetings if necessary. I am making my headquarters at 505 Tombigbee Street, Jackson, Miss., and am ready to go anywhere. I love to sing the Gospel, and am not afraid of work. I have had experience with the best men in the State. Brother J. M. Morse, of Jackson, Rev. J. C. Park, of Tupelo, and Brother W. M. Campbell, of Minter City, can tell you about my work as a soloist and chorus leader.

Brethren, I am at our service.

Woman's Missionary Work

Edited by Mrs. R. F. Farrell, Greenville, Miss.

Conference Publicity Superintendents:

Louisiana: Mrs. A. C. McKinney, Eunice, La.

Mississippi: Mrs. J. L. Nell, Laurel, Miss.

North Mississippi: Mrs. Walter Campbell, Vidalia, Miss.

All communications for this department should be sent to the Editor at the address given above.

A REQUEST GRANTED.

We wish to call attention to the recommendations presented by the Publicity Committee at the recent annual meeting of the Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society which was held in Laurel in the latter part of April.

The first recommendation reads: That we ask the Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate for one issue of the paper during the year that we may present our woman's work more fully to our constituency and that we ask the co-operation of the other two participating Conferences—the North Mississippi and the Louisiana—in furnishing matter for this issue of the paper. This recommendation was enthusiastically received, and after some discussion and a presentation of the arduousness of the task it was decided to push the undertaking, provided the Editor of the Advocate saw his way clear to grant the request. We wish to announce that Dr. Meek has most graciously consented to give us the issue of the paper, and we know that we shall have his hearty co-operation in getting same in proper shape. The date for issuing same has not yet been decided upon, but as soon as we can consult with the 2 Publicity Superintendents and come to a definite agreement, the same will be announced in these columns. We want to keep this subject before our constituency, for our women must give us of their time and talents. Every missionary worker in the three Conferences must consider herself a co-laborer with the Editor, and put her shoulder to the wheel and keep pushing onward and upward until we have reached the goal of a successful edition of our Advocate. Remember, we want only "live" items, and the articles must be concise and to the point.

It is a great thing that we have asked Dr. Meek to do for us and we must prove worthy of the trust he has placed in us. Let us bend every energy to make this edition one of which he shall be proud—any other would not be worthy of our Christian womanhood.

The other recommendation which really precedes the above reads like this: That the Woman's Missionary Conference in annual session pledge the securing of one hundred new subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and request the co-operation of the other two Conferences in securing the same number of subscribers from their members.

Copies of these recommendations have been forwarded to the three Conference Publicity Superintendents and we are sure they will lose no time in getting them before their membership, who in turn will gladly unite in fulfilling both obligations. Start a campaign for new subscribers right away before your enthusiasm dies out. There are 116 auxiliaries in the Mississippi Conference—less than one new subscriber from each auxiliary. It is a small thing we are asking of you. Suppose we enter upon a contest and see which Conference will secure their hundred first. Who will head the list? Show your appreciation for the department which was granted you nearly two years ago and work untiringly for the Advocate. It is your own Church paper, and if you don't help it, who will? As you send in new subscribers, report same to in new subscribers, report the same to this column so that we may publish re-harvests! Be in earnest about this matter, for it is a part of the Master's work and it is time we were "up and doing."

NOTICE

The Second Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference will be held in Aberdeen, Miss., June 12-13. The names of delegates and visitors should be sent as early as possible to Mrs. T. B. Sykes, Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, Aberdeen, Miss. All delegates are expected to be present at the opening session and to remain throughout the meeting. Bishop Merritt will preach the Annual Sermon. Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb will be the Council chorist. Mrs. V. T. Hoyle, President. Miss Mamie Buteley, Sec. Gen.

ORGANIC UNION IS OURS.

We are in receipt of a letter from Mrs. A. P. Holt, one of the Louisiana Conference Corresponding Secretaries who attended our General Conference in Oklahoma City. She writes: "Just a line to say that the changes proposed by the women for the Council Constitution passed the General Conference at 9:30 last night—May 11. We are now a united missionary society—organic union is ours—and the Council officers here will begin work on July 1st. A president, a first and a second vice president, a superintendent of literature, a superintendent of social service and local work, one Conference corresponding secretary, one treasurer, and one recording secretary, show how the official force will be. The third and fourth vice presidents will be superintendents of departments now, whereas the first and second vice presidents have to do with organizations."

NEWS AND NOTES.

There are now 344 medical missionaries in China. It was agreed at the triennial conference of the Medical Missionary Association that the primary need at the present time is to concentrate energy on the training of the Chinese as fully qualified medical missionaries.

The number of foreign secretaries of the Young Men's Christian Association in China and Korea increased from seven in 1901 to seventy in 1912, and the number of oriental secretaries from three to eighty-five in the same period. There are now twenty-five city associations and 145 student associations. Associations have been formed in two government schools, and there appears to be abundant opportunities for work among the students of these institutions.

PHILIP WERLEIN, LIMITED,
 New Orleans, La.

GREENSBURG, LA.

Rev. John F. Foster, of Anite City, on the night of May 5 began a series of meetings at this place, which continued eight days. He preached 15 sermons of such power and depth that they will not soon be forgotten. Brother Foster, being a gifted and eloquent preacher possesses the far-seeing vision and loving persuasion of John, the beloved. After the morning service on the Sabbath, he administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, assisted by the pastor. At the closing service 5 candidates for membership—Misses Alice Duke, Marguerite Holland, Carrie and Cora Jackson, and R. Y. Fulton, Jr., were received into the Church, the ordinance of baptism being administered to the first four. During this meeting Rev. H. W. Bowman was with us. He held our second quarterly conference, attending three services; and proved to us he was indeed a fisherman, as well as a fisher of men.

On the night of May 21, Brother Foster came to us again, and delivered his lecture entitled "Glimpses of the Land of Christ," taking us through the Holy Land, and showing us the scenes made sacred by the life, death, and resurrection of our Lord. The points visited were Nazareth, Cana of Galilee, the Sea of Galilee, Capernaum, Endor, Nain, Shunem, Gilboa, Jezreel, Dothan, Shechem, Jacob's Well, Joseph's Tomb, Shiloh, Bethel and Jerusalem. Brother Foster presented his subject beautifully and eloquently; the pictures were so real that one was all but there. We appreciate and thank him for his new vision.—R. V. Fulton.

ZWOLLE, LA.

I have just returned home from Zwolle, La., where I have been assisting Rev. J. C. Rousseaux in a meeting. We had a great meeting of which I suppose Brother Rousseaux will write you the particulars. I think there were about forty added to the Church. There were several infants and children dedicated to the Lord in baptism.

Rousseaux is a fine man to be with in a meeting. He led the singing the first two weeks of the meeting, when Brother R. N. Jeffery chanced to stop off at Zwolle and remained with us through the third week leading the music and singing gospel solos. Brother Jeffery is a good gospel singer. Brother Sharp, one of the faithful laymen of Leesville, La., was with us a few days and presided at the organ. His vocation while in Zwolle was tuning pianos, but he found time to be in the meeting.

Zwolle is a splendid town, having many fine people within its bounds. They certainly know how to pay a preacher for holding a meeting, and I learned that they have the pastor and presiding elder paid up to date.

The big mill at Zwolle bought an 8 years' cutting a few days ago, which gives the assurance that the mill will be there for some time yet, and that gave new life to the citizens and to the church members; and a new church building is practically assured. Rousseaux will get busy right away and raise the money, and the Church will soon be going up; and no doubt the Church at Zwolle will take the full time of a preacher next year.—Francis R. Power.

HOUMA (LA.) MISSION.

May 24, 1914, was a great day for Houma Mission. About 8:30 a. m. two large boats with seventy-five people on board left for Bayou Blue to tie up alongside other launches from other points on the work. Autos, wagons, and cane carts transferred old and young to the spot where the first Methodist Church in this field was organized under a hay shed some six years ago. The hay shed was gone, but under two large pecan trees, sitting on benches and chairs were some 350 or 400 people, members of and sympathizers with our work, most of whom were having their first experience in attending a quarterly conference with "preaching and dinner on the ground." Fourteen officials and Sunday school teachers were present. Between 150 and 200 received communion. It was a very sacred hour. The organ and cornet were accompanied by silver-throated birds who claim first right to God's first temples—the groves. Save for the music, a holy hush was felt and all hearts were touched and lifted at this act of remembrance and consecration. Five members were received into the Church, and three exhorters were licensed, giving us, in all, five who work without pay.

Brother Hoffpauir lived up to his reputation of being one of Louisiana's best preachers. We shall not soon forget the picturesque setting and his burning words. The platform was built under a large pecan tree which was fringed with moss. To see, under its spreading protective branches, this man of God who has taught the good fight and kept the faith for more than half a century, and to hear his words like living coals fall upon the hearts of the audience, and to see these eager, hungry-hearted people in rapt and spell bound, made heaven seem only a short way off and Paradise even nearer.

The quarterly conference was held in the afternoon. Splendid reports from the field were given. With the three exhorters and two new Sunday schools soon to be launched we felt that we were really going forward. Comments from all quarters of our field were to the effect that Sunday, May 24, was the best day in the history of the Houma Mission.—C. V. Breithaupt, Pastor.

TETTERINE CURES PILES.

Every sufferer from Piles ought to read these words from H. S. Head, Bel-Aire, Mich.: "For 16 years I had been a sufferer from itching piles. I got a box of Tetterine and less than half the box cured a complete cure. Tetterine gives instant relief in all skin diseases such as Eczema, Tetter, Ringworm, Ground Itch, etc., and constitutes a permanent cure. See Dr. Tetterine's or by mail from Shoptine Co., Savannah, Ga."

USE OF THE STANDARD HYMNAL URGED.

Resolutions adopted by the Brookhaven District Conference on Hymns used in the services of the Church:

Whereas, Methodism is historically a hymn-singing Church, and whereas we believe that the songs sung have much to do with the religious conviction, sentiment and life of a people; and whereas in some communities there is not that regard for the character of songs used in church, Sunday school and prayer services that the importance of the matter demands; therefore resolved,

1. That it is the sense of this Conference that the Hymnal and other song-book publications of our Church afford the best collections of hymns and songs for our people to use.

2. That the Standard Hymnal, especially, contains hymns of the highest merit and loftiest devotional sentiment.

3. That we urge upon our pastors and people the importance of using these hymns in the services held in their churches.

DISTRICT CONFERENCE ANNOUNCEMENT.

To Pastors and All Concerned in Seashore District.

The people of Poplarville will welcome the District Conference, rightly expecting to receive from it gracious and lasting returns upon the investment of their hospitality.

Let us concentrate there in such spirit as shall more than meet this expectation, leaving the measure "heaped up, pressed down and running over."

Pastors will please have delegates' names sent to me immediately; we save time by having the roll ready. Send also the names to H. P. Lewis, Jr., who needs them, as pastor and host.

Rev. W. L. Blackwell will preach on Tuesday night. A Sacramental service will follow Wednesday night's service.

The Committees are as follows:
Admission License—Rev. W. L. Linfield, Rev. J. L. Sells, Rev. M. B. Sharbrough.

Orders—Rev. W. B. Jones, Rev. M. L. Burton, Rev. H. W. Van Hook.

Thursday afternoon will be open to the interests of missions, during which time visiting representatives of the Boards will be welcomed and given hearing.

MONTROSE COLLEGE

Dear Dr. Meade: Having just returned from attending the Commencement exercises at Montrose College, I would like to say a word concerning our school there. I found the school in a successful condition and saw eighteen young people receive their diplomas, ten of whom were former preachers. The people are delighted with the services of Rev. T. J. O'Neil and they are busy to see him leave; but proud to see him entering into a larger field.

The writer, having attended school for three years at Williams College with the new president-elect, Rev. J. S. Parrell, feels sure that he is a man equal to the occasion as President of Montrose College. Brother Parrell had many difficulties to overcome in securing his education, but in as a result of his struggles now better fitted to guide others of all classes to that goal. We feel that this is a great institution, since it serves as a step between the common school and the college. As the school is growing, it needs more and better equipment and we feel that the Church should rally to its aid. Money given to this school work, be wisely applied.

J. M. KENNEDY.

GENERAL GRANT'S ERROR.

Charles Francis Adams, when Third of States minister to Great Britain during the Civil War, met with some surprising evidence of the lack of knowledge concerning this country among the English upper classes—even among those who might be supposed to be well informed the army officers.

"I presented the news of the battle of Gettysburg and the fall of Vicksburg in the same hall," he once told a visitor to his home in Quincy, "and in celebration of those two great victories I held a reception shortly afterward at the American Legation. Among the guests was a distinguished officer who had made a great reputation in the campaign against the Sepoys in India."

"After extending his congratulations the general remarked:

"Mr. Adams, some of us army men were discussing these two victories, and though we admired the skill of your generals, Grant at Vicksburg, and Meade at Gettysburg, we agreed that they were both guilty of serious errors."

"In what way?" I queried in surprise.

"In this," replied the general: both these victories were achieved on the same day. There was nothing more to be done at Vicksburg, but, at Gettysburg, Gen. Robert E. Lee's army, although defeated, was not conquered. Why, then, did not General Grant unite his forces with those of General Meade during the night, and falling on General Lee early the next morning, utterly destroy his army?"

"I hardly thought it consonant with courtesy," concluded Mr. Adams, with a smile, "to tell my guest that in order to accomplish that feat, General Grant would have had to march. I don't know the exact distance, but certainly more than a thousand miles."—Youth's Companion.

Editorial

"Let all the good thou doest to man
A gift be, not a debt;
And he will more remember thee
The more thou dost forget."

The person who stays close to the Cross and keeps his light brightly burning is pretty certain to attract others to it. The radiance of such characters is worth vastly more as a saving agency than all the beating of tom-toms in which some would-be soul winners spasmodically engage. More such shining beacons to light the way to safety for those lost in darkness is the supreme need of the Church to-day.

A contemporary quotes Dr. J. W. Lee, of St. Louis, as having said that the writings of Shakespeare show that he was a Christian. A better test of that question is one's conduct; and it scarcely can be claimed that the life of the Bard of Avon was that of a saint. By the way, we think that this business of converting dead men is being somewhat overdone in this day. We are rather inclined to the view that the Master expects us to make disciples only of those who are yet living.

There is no sadder sight than to see a preacher high in the councils of the Church who plainly has little of the mind that was in Christ. Neither ecclesiastical position, nor oratorical, nor intellectual gifts, can make a truly great minister. Depth of piety and self-forgetfulness, spiritually helpful service to others, is the only proper measure of one's standing in the kingdom of God. Would that all could learn this tremendous truth, and that the Church could have in her most responsible places those most like her Lord! A leader in Israel, first of all, ought to be a holy man.

The Continent tells of a large religious poster set up in a public place in a city, which upon one corner shows Jesus taking little children in his arms and blessing them, while upon the main body of it is exhibited a picture of a beautiful house of worship, toward which men and women are walking, carrying children with them. Underneath these scenes are the words: "TAKE YOUR CHILDREN TO CHURCH; GIVE THEM THE RIGHT START." Such a poster ought to do good. The agents of evil use the billboards freely; why should they not be used in the interest of righteousness?

"The best of all, God is with us." Such was the last utterance of the great Wesley. Do we believe these words? If so, we ought to count the school in which Christ is enthroned and honored, meager though its equipment may be, as of more value to the Church, than the great university where worldliness and infidelity reign. If our Lord could take humble Galilean peasants and with them revolutionize human society in the first century, he can repeat the performance in the twentieth century if necessary. To keep him as our leader and co-worker in every sphere of life is the thing of chief importance. If we lose touch with him, we shall soon lose all.

THE NEED OF WATCHFULNESS.

One cannot carefully read the utterances of the Master as recorded in the Gospels and not be impressed with the stress that he lays upon watchfulness in his references to the Christian life. He counted vigilance a necessary thing if a person was to triumph over evil and preserve his purity and uprightness of character, and repeatedly in his earnest exhortations he linked it with prayer as the proper attitude of the soul in a world where it is surrounded by dangerous enemies. But it seems to us that this need of one being constantly on guard is not in this day as much emphasized as it ought to be. Along with the class meeting and the keeping of diaries in which the experiences and struggles of the Christian were chronicled, the habit of constant alertness upon the part of the disciples of Christ appears to have become largely a thing of the past. We do not seem to be nearly so much concerned as were our fathers to "avoid all appearance of evil," and in our clamor for a larger freedom, we are much more disposed to take chances of being injured spiritually than were they.

We regard this disposition as most unfortunate. Sin is exceedingly insidious in its first approaches and it is guarding against its beginnings that counts for most. Satan must be repulsed in the outset if we would be certain of vanquishing him. No soul is enticed and lured to ruin by a single appeal; its ensnarement and subjugation to evil is a gradual process. This undoubtedly was true even in the case of Judas. As Canon Farrar says, "We only see him in the poisonous crimson flower and deadly fruitage of his wickedness, in the concentrated degradation of slavery to a mean temptation. But he was once an innocent child; he was once, perhaps, a bright-hearted boy, an ardent youth, capable of noble aspirations, not yet possessed by the seven devils of a brooding sullenness and an unresisted temptation." Had he been watchful and prayerful, as the great teacher urged his little band of followers to be, he might never have been "the son of perdition" and the betrayer of his Lord.

"We are not worst at once. The course of evil begins so slowly, and from such a slight source, An infant's hand might stem the breach with clay. But let the stream grow wider, and Philosophy, Aye, and Religion, too, may strive in vain To stem the headlong current."

OVERCOMING OPPOSITION.

Dr. Charles H. Morgan, writing in a recent number of the New York Christian Advocate, claims that the opposition to Billy Sunday which has been so marked among some of the churches and clergymen of the North is obviously abating and that a new appraisal of the renowned evangelist is being made in many circles hitherto quite antagonistic to him. An illustration of this is seen in the remarkable invitation which has recently been extended to Mr. Sunday to conduct a meeting in Philadelphia, which was concurred in by 205 ministers who went to Scranton on a special train furnished by The North American to represent their case as strongly as possible. Included in this large delegation, were seven Episcopalian and ten Lutheran preachers, and among the papers submitted to Mr. Sunday urging him to come was a letter from the Protestant Episcopal Bishops. It is also stated that a general call from pastors in New York to Mr. Sunday to come to that city and conduct a revival campaign will likely be forthcoming in the near future.

The thing that is silencing criticism against this foremost of American evangelists and winning favor for him is his work. His success is such that it cannot be denied or belittled. For instance, as a result of his eight weeks' campaign in Pittsburg there were 26,000 conversions; the main Presbyterian denomination of the city reported for the year 10,000 additions to its membership, one church alone having a gain of 550 (this growth is admitted to have been chiefly due to the Sunday meeting). Other denominations likewise had large numerical increases. Dr. Maitland Alexander, pastor of the First Presbyterian, thus sums up the effects of this notable campaign: "It shook the city; clarified thought on religion; made men take one side or the other; solidified Christian forces, so that any reform now has united support; caused even men not converted to clean up their lives morally; produced astonishing results for temperance; and absolutely changed the political map of this section." But nothing that resulted from Mr. Sunday's work in Philadelphia was more astonishing than the action of the Chamber of Commerce of that city in adopting a strong resolution asking Congress to pass the prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution. Such action by so important a commercial body is said to be unprecedented in the history of the Nation.

The great lesson to be learned from Mr. Sunday's remarkable ministry is that the old-time Gospel when preached faithfully and earnestly has not lost its power. He has no patience with higher criticism and the so-called "new thought," but accepts the teachings of the Scriptures without reservation and proclaims them as messages from God. His theology may not pass muster with rationalistic scholars, but, like that of Wesley, it stirs the hearts of men and brings them in penitence to Christ. It has that most incontrovertible of all credentials, ABOUNDING FRUITFULNESS.

WHO CAN PRAY EFFICACIOUSLY.

Power in prayer is one of the fruits of constant communion with the Heavenly Father. It is they who know the most of God who can trust him most implicitly and call upon him for the things needed with the greatest confidence. A personal realization of his goodness and love, obtained in the school of experience, gives to faith its mightiest stimulus and prepares it to achieve its grandest triumphs. Efficacious praying, unless it springs out of penitence and is a plea for one's own forgiveness, must have as its background a surrendered and holy life. Notice the restriction in St. James' affirmation (American Revised Version V-16): "The supplication of a RIGHTEOUS MAN availeth much in its working."

TRAVELING WITH GOD.

My path was made I thought my path all bright and clear.
My heart with gladness overflowed, the world seemed full of cheer.
My Lord I wished to serve, to take him for my Guide.
To keep so close that I could feel him by my side.
And so I traveled on.

But suddenly, in quiet so clear and full of light,
The clouds came thick and fast, the daylight changed to night.
Instead of paths so clear and full of things so sweet,
Rough things, and thorns, and stones seemed all about my feet.
I scarce could travel on.

I bowed my head, and wondered why this change should come.
And murmured: "Lord, is this because of aught
I've done?"
Has not the past been full enough of pain and care?
Why should my path again be changed to dark from fair?"

But still I traveled on.

I listened—quiet and still: there came to me a voice:
"This path is Mine, not thine: I made for thee
the choice.
Dear child of mine, this service will be best for thee and me.
If thou wilt simply trust and leave the end with Me."

And so we traveled on.

A GREAT MESSAGE.

(Delivered by Bishop A. W. Wilson to the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, at Oklahoma City when the time for adjournment had arrived.)

Bishop Wilson was received as he came forward by the rising of the Conference and the Chautauque salute. He spoke as follows:

"This is my last message, brethren, and it is perhaps appropriate, and you will not blame me at least, if I indulge in a few personal reflections. It is something more than sixty-two years now since I began my ministry. I preached my first sermon on the 24th of March, 1852. It is a long time as I look back upon it. Almost two generations have passed away. The men whom I knew as leaders in the Church and men who made Methodism what it is are all gone to their reward. Sometimes I feel as if I had fallen into an entirely different sphere of being. The changes have been very great. You perhaps have not noted them as carefully and minutely as those of us who have come to be watchful of the drift and movement of things. Through it all I have tried first of all to maintain the character of a Methodist preacher, than which there is none higher on earth. I have sought to preach the gospel, only the gospel. I have not cared for side issues that have been raised. I have paid but little attention to the opposition of the world. I have had implicit faith in the power of the truth when it makes its appeal to the conscience of men in the sight of God; and I have drawn my lessons and my inspiration from the Word of God and from that only. I dare to say that I have not suffered the manifold vagaries of the Neophytes of our time, of various eccentric writers, to influence me to any extent. I have not been unmindful of them as perils to the Church or dangers to which we were seriously exposed, but I have never feared for the issue and never doubted for a moment that the final result would be the triumph, the glorious triumph, of the kingdom of God, and especially of that kingdom of God as it has been manifested in our own much blessed Church.

When I look at our own Church and its history, I am surprised, and yet I can say that my personal history has some sort of comparison with it. In my earlier days I had to go through great difficulties—was often worn and weary, broken in health, and in the midst of conditions that threatened my very life. Yet I staggered on and stumbled and again arose and went the way the old fathers went, and I may say it frankly and honestly, without fear. I have gone through every experience of the Methodist preacher from the top to the bottom, as a preacher to the circuit and then to the station, and in the presiding elder's circuit, until you put me where I have had the heaviest burden of my life. Nobody can know what I have had to bear in the last fifteen years. Thank God, I have come through it all so surely, peacefully, and without any disturbance of my faith and without any loss to the Church. The Church itself had to go through the calamity of the war, broken and when the war ceased there seemed but little prospect of its survival. Every force in the land was against it, and yet it gathered itself up in the strength of its great Leader and Head determined to pursue its course unflinchingly in spite of appearances and evil conditions. And it grew steadily until in its course it outstripped every form of Methodism in its faith, its conquests over sin and the world, on the continent. It was a surprise to me, I confess, and yet it was with something I was going to say of pride, which is not a good word to use, that at the Ecumenical Conference at Toronto, when the reports of the gains of Methodism on the continent in all its branches were spread out, it was seen that our own Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had made more than half of all the gains that the Church had made. We may well congratulate ourselves upon such reward of fidelity to the Church and to God. Only God could have brought us through with such measures of gain. I thank God for it all.

I am perfectly content with what you have done. I lay down the burden that you laid upon me with a sense of relief that no man can know. I would gladly have labored on had you said so. But to have gone on would have been but to labor, and to labor under difficulties. I might have done something more; but God has willed it otherwise; and it has been my course all the way through to leave everything in the hands of God. And I am sure that it is his will that I should be where you have said that I must remain. I thank you for all the courtesy and kindness that you have shown me through all these years. I have dealt with you in the Annual Conferences and here with perfect fairness and honesty. I can say before my God that I have suffered no partiality or prejudice or personal consideration to influence at any point or to any extent my administration anywhere. I have always, at all times, laid all matters concerning the Church and myself before God, and left it to him to decide the issue. I am grateful for what has come out of it all.

The world is just opening up before you. You have no conception of what is coming within the next few years. One who reads the signs of the times and carefully considers the movement of all the forces in earth can hardly fail to see that we are going to meet the most tremendous issues that have ever confronted the Church, and that within a very short time. Look at the vast combinations on one side and the other. The Churches are getting together, consolidating their forces, determining the issues of all their joint work. The combinations on the other side, the secular forces, are being made with a rapidity and a power that none of the legislative influences of earth can control. And they are bound to clash. That clash has begun, in fact, and it will become more intense and widespread as the years go on. And they will compass about the camp of the saints. I have no doubt, by and by, and we shall find it necessary to rely not upon our organization and not upon our wise legislation, but simply and solely upon the presence and power of the Spirit of God and upon the living Word of God as he shall direct its use. You may depend upon that. We have come to think a little too much, I fear at times, of our elaborate organizations. We have many of them. There is hardly a department of the Church and ministry and religious life that we have not tried to put into some form of machinery, and oftentimes the machine is so perfect that the man is lost sight of. Such perfect machinery must produce results, but of what sort? We may gain on one side, and by neglect of things that make up the realities of life we may lose on the other. We must be very careful, brethren, and not let our notions of the methods and the means employed set aside our views of what the means were intended for and the methods ought to lead to. We must be careful about that.

Our business first of all is to save men. Remember that I do not care how perfect your order is. There are magnificent organizations in this country in the Churches. There are organizations so perfect, so well planned, so thoroughly equipped with everything that seems needful to the accomplishment of their ends, that the world itself looks upon them admiringly and wonderingly, yet after all they do not reach down after the masses of the people and save them. They are dying still, growing more degraded still, sinking lower still. The pressure is upon them as hard as ever. And the more largely these great combinations continue to grow, the less hope there is for the lesser and feebler and weaker men. Take care of them. Your Heavenly Father, who looks after the sparrow that falls, looks after the least of them and your neglect of them and disregard of them while you are fortifying up your weapons and perfecting your machinery will bring upon you a curse instead of a blessing. Be careful, I say. First of all, save men. Save them. Do not let them die, whatever may become of your various plans and schemes of every sort. I don't condemn them, but be careful that they do not supersede the great purpose for which the whole Church was set up on earth. The Church of the living God, which he purchased with his own blood, was intended to be simply the channel through which the mighty forces of his love and truth and power should come down on men for their salvation. The old Church of the Catacombs, the Church of the Martyrs, the Church of the Confessors, that was the Church of power. They had none of your associations and none of your organizations. The one association that they had was the Church, the Church of God alive, alert, ready to act, ready to die for him who had died for it. And that is what we want to-day. We want a Church that will stand in the face of all the world and say: "You may destroy every building we have, you may tear down all our defenses, you may put away from the midst of us everything that we count precious and dear to us; but you cannot take our gospel and our Christ and our God from us, and in the name and by the power that is his, and by this only, we will conquer. We will die in conquering, if need be; but we will conquer at last." I want you to go to your homes with this conviction in your hearts.

Build up all the waste places. Do the best you can with your organizations for every class of men. But don't lose your interest in the gospel, your personal right to save men. You laymen, God has called you as much as he has called the preachers of the gospel to minister to men in the highest and holiest things, to save them. You cannot talk with a man on the street, in your business, in your homes socially, without influencing him one way or the other. You make an impression, good or evil. You help him toward God or the other way. Be careful, I say. Let your light shine so that all men may see it. And wherever you are and whatever you are doing, in your business, in your courts, in your legislative halls, in your social assemblies, whatever you are doing, let Christ be first and foremost in your thought and purpose. It is he that has laid his hand upon you to save you, and through you to save those about you and those afar off. Take care that you live up to the demand of God.

I am very grateful to you. I can never express the debt I owe to the Church. It has guarded me. It has cared for me. While I have labored for it and suffered for it, it has been tender in its dealing with me. It has made me feel as though it regarded me as some precious thing. I want you to have that same care for my brethren who fail into the same line of work behind me. I love them. I shall miss their fellowship. We have been one in heart. We have had strong divisions sometimes; but we have never lost the heart of love for each other and, through God's grace, we never will. We may differ as widely hereafter. But we are striving together for the faith of the gospel, for the upbuilding of the Church of God, for the redemption of the world; and we are one in the great purpose of God, and we intend to remain one. It will be so as long as I live, and I pray God that the time may never come when we shall have an episcopacy that is divided in heart. I do not care what their differences of opinion may be and I do not care how plainly they speak them out. But one in heart they must be, or the Church will be divided. Remember that. And pray for these men. They need your prayers. Honor them. You have put them in their high position. Don't distrust them and treat them as though they required to be fettered all the time. Give them all the freedom that the high place in which you have put them requires. Let them do the work that belongs to their place, with their eye upon God and their hands in God's hand. And so may they be blessed in their personal experience, in their work, and in the results of their work among you and in all lands.

Methodism is world-wide to-day. It is not limited. More than world-wide, it has reached up to the throne. The principalities and powers in heavenly places learn the manifold wisdom of God through it as much as through any other Church in all the earth. It is a great thing. See that you keep it great. Don't belittle it. Don't speak slightly of your church. It may be a homely church in a lonely situation. It may be out in the woods. It may be a log cabin. But it is the Church of the living God, no matter where you find it. And it is worthy of your uttermost thought and care and ought to be treated with all reverence and regard as sacred, because it is God's. God's hand is upon it. Care for it. Lift it up. Make it honorable among men by the purity and the integrity of your life and your fidelity to your high profession. And may the blessing of Almighty God rest upon the entire Church in all its parts, in all places, until the day shall come when he shall assemble us all before himself and speak to us one by one. He will take us separately, brethren, then, for every one of us shall give account of himself. And he will say to each one: "Well done! well done! good and faithful servant!" I would rather hear that voice from his lips than hear the choir of angels sing the loftiest song that ever pealed through the skies of heaven. Just to hear that voice—"Well done!" May God keep you and guide you and guard you!

A Prayer.

At the close of his address, Bishop Wilson offered the following prayer:

O Father, great God, Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Maker and Ruler of all things, who hast given thy Son to be Head of all things to the Church, which is his body, do thou mercifully look upon these thy servants. They have labored here from day to day in their effort to find the right thing for thy Church to do and to make the right plans upon which the Church shall operate in its conflicts with sin and the world. Let them go from here with the consciousness that thou dost approve their work. If they have done any wrong, pardon them. If they have mistaken the end, forgive their error. And let it be that thy hand shall turn to good all the evil, if there be any, among all their doings. And may the work be wrought with such vigilance and care in years to come, as that in the ages to come, God's exceeding kindness toward us through Christ Jesus shall be clearly seen. And bless us in our homes. Make our families Christlike. Fill them all with the Spirit. Let our children grow up in the faith of their fathers, the faith of the Apostles. Let them grow up into the likeness of the Son of God. And may the generations coming on be better than this, purer, truer, more devoted. May we not lose any element of power that has been handed down to us from the generations behind us; but rather may there be accretions until we shall be fully furnished for every good word and work in this world. God, hear us and bless us, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THE RELIGION THAT KNOWS.

Spiritual experience is the life-blood of Christianity. Christianity languishes only when spiritual experience pales. The religion of Christ differs generically from all religions besides in offering personal communion between the soul and its Creator. If it can make good that offer to men to try it, nothing can shake its strength in the world nor hinder its progress. On the other hand, if conscious experience of fellowship with God ever fails among Christians, neither grandeur of past history nor orthodoxy of present theology can maintain the Church's power.

Of late years in Christian lands there has spread through the Church an insidious skepticism as to the reality of Christian experience. In consequence, the force of the Church, in comparison with the effort expended, has declined. During the same period in mission countries the effect of Christian effort has been augmenting. The difference in results has been almost wholly a difference in the way that Christian teachers in these contrasting conditions have stressed the importance of realized communion between the Christian and his Savior. Missionaries have found it easy to teach childlike new converts to pray and then listen for God's voice in their souls. But in civilized lands the preachers of Christ have, consciously or unconsciously, yielded place to a subtle feeling in the general mind that individual relations of men with the Creator of the universe are unthinkable—or if credible, quite too uncanny to be invited. Hence has followed a great decline of prayer among Christians—particularly of that kind of prayer which is vividly described as "waiting on God," prayer which avowedly craves a divine intimacy. So has been lost almost wholly that character of Christian living which goes about the daily tasks of life conscious of a glorious Companionship.

The religion which replaces this is a faithful and honest purpose to be good—for the sake of God, indeed, but at a distance from him.

The devitalizing shortcoming of modern Christianity is that it does not want to get close to God. It is hardly too much to say that the typical Christian of the time is the Christian who would dread having a Christian experience—who shudders at the thought of it as superstitious people shudder at fear of meeting a ghost.

The reasons for such reactions against soul-touch with God are not all, however, to be charged against the present day Christian as to blame him. Undoubtedly a good part of his distaste for spirituality is a proper revolt against travesties on religious experience. There has been current, for example, in all ages of the Church, far too much of that false interpretation of the spiritual life which makes it something strained and distorted—something unnaturally at war with human fellowship.

Out of this misconceived spirituality sprang the asceticism of the ancient Church, which the Reformation fathers repudiated. It ought to be repudiated—more now than ever. Nothing in the true walk with God needs to take a man out of any path of honest and upright comradeship with his friends nor make him strange to them or them to him. Worse still, to cause revolt of many men from the practise of the spiritual life has been the cant with which many too unctuous Christians have advertised their own sanctity. No wonder sound men are not allured to a pretentious piety.

None of these reasons, however, fully account for the separation of the modern Christian world from immediate company with God. There are graver causes in the present fleshiness of humanity's desires and the materialism of its uppermost ambitions. The Church has forgotten its mystic spiritual privileges because its eyes also have been infected with the blindness of a prosperous world. Like the world, it has come to be able to see little but the visible. The invisible has faded.

To get back a clear sight of things invisible and eternal, all that's necessary is to restore to Christians the longing for God's fellowship in place of the present dread of it.

For such restoration, however, no man can write an easy recipe. It would be vanity of vanities—grotesque, indeed—to try the old method to which the organized Church so usually turns for reclamation of lost ground—the appointment of a committee. No committee can revive spiritual experience among Christians. The only means is for those who know the need to seek for themselves a new and closer communion with their God and Saviour. Then let them speak humbly of what they receive, praying that others may hear and learn to desire the same.

All the hope of Christianity in the world turns on the question whether those who thus seek the Lord in the quiet of their own souls do find Him present and answering there. If this is only imagination—something which men must work themselves up through dream states and ecstatic passions to believe in—then Christianity is indeed a hopeless foundation for men to build life on, and no better than any other poetic vision. But if it is real—if men who pray, who reverently read the Bible, and who brood in the silences, do in all actuality feel thrilling through them the counsels of God; if they get strength for deeds they could not do apart from God; if they find power thus to resist evil and overcome it with righteousness—if all this is fact, verifiable by those who care to verify it, then serious-minded men can't afford to do without it.

To be afraid of spiritual experience in such case—to slack any search to find it if this is its real worth and value—is the impossible folly of one who is sick and refuses help, who is weak and desires not to be strong, who is poor and will not be rich.

No infidelity can despoil a religion that now today by current experience knows God and Jesus Christ, whom He has sent. Sometimes in zeal for inspired Scripture, some risk disparaging the ever new experience of Christians. These tactics would be disastrous if successful. The actual castle of Bible authority in every age lies in the blessedly sure and unaltering fact that those who fully receive its truth enter into the spiritual experience which its message promises.

As long as the Bible and Christian experience renew day by day their unfailing accord, the Bible will never lose an iota of power.—The Continent.

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

486 Per Cent Gain in One Year.

Some weeks ago I received from Bryan, Texas, a statement showing an increase in contributions to Home Benevolences in three years of 309 per cent, and, during the same time, an increase of contributions to Foreign Missions of 785 per cent as a result of the Every-member Canvass.

Now come results of a single Every-member Canvass from First Church, Athens, Ga.—C. C. Jarrell, pastor—showing an increase of contributions to Home Benevolences from $1,268 to $3,357, and to Foreign Missions from $330.98 to $1,941.

If any one can beat this or even approximate it, I should like to hear from him.

Dr. John Wilford, the noted Baptist minister of England is seventy-seven years old, and has been preaching for sixty years.

The present Sunday school enrollment of the Methodist Episcopal Church South is 1,114,000. The number of church members is 1,004,058.

The six American Missionary Boards having work in Korea have agreed that Seoul is the proper place for the proposed Christian University.

The Founder's medal for oratory at Vanderbilt University was won by Mr. Chas. D. McGee, of Cranford, N.J., in a contest held on the evening of May 17. Mr. McGee is a Junior in the Theological Department and the president of his class.

The Board of Publication of the North Carolina Christian Advocate will launch a campaign to extinguish the text on the Advocate building, erected in Greensboro where the paper is issued. Dr. Blair, the editor, states that the main purpose of the Board is to endow this worthy journal.

The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church has a new Bishop, Rev. R. A. Carter, formerly presiding elder of the Atlanta (Ga.) District. He was elected by the General Conference of that denomination, lately held. Bishop Lane, on account of his advanced years, was retired from active service.

Rev. Sir William Robertson Nicoll, who has so ably edited The British Weekly since 1884, the year of its establishment is 64 years of age. He was knighted in 1904, being the first preacher in England to be called "Sir." He began writing for the public prints when he was seventeen years of age, and is the author of a number of valuable books.

The Hon. Charles S. Whitman, District Attorney of New York County, the greatest prosecuting officer in the world, who has made such a brilliant record in the public service, is the son of a Connecticut Presbyterian minister, Rev. John S. Whitman. Mr. Whitman disposed of 15,000 cases during the year 1914, some of which were of national importance.

Under the caption, "A Beautiful Old Age," the Chicago Record-Herald recently published an interesting two-column article concerning Bishop John H. Vincent. Along with the article, was printed a picture of the Bishop in company with his mother. There is no nobler figure in American Methodism than Bishop Vincent. He has wrought enduringly and his fame is secure.

The total cost of publishing the Pacific Methodist Advocate (based at San Francisco) for the quadrennium just ended was $22,994.17. The total income including the $12,000 appropriation authorized by the General Conference of 1910, was $21,113.44 leaving a deficit of $271.69. The late General Conference provided for another subsidy of $12,000 for the quadrennium now beginning.

The North-western Christian Advocate says: "It is interesting to note that the three largest churches of the Western Coast if, not in all Methodism, have as pastors the sons of Methodist preachers, the record being: the Rev. Charles E. Locke of First Church, Los Angeles; the Rev. Matt S. Hughes of First Church, Pasadena; and the Rev. A. D. Leonard of First Church, Seattle. The combined membership of these three churches is considerably in excess of seven thousand."

It is stated that there are in the Southern Presbyterian Church 725 pastorless churches and 275 places where churches could be organized if ministers to do the work were available. There is a lesson in this for Southern Methodists who think that the only ministerial problem that needs to be considered is that of raising the educational requirements for men who desire to preach. Quantity, as well as quality, is a factor that must be taken into account in planning to secure workers to give the Gospel to the people.

The bill recently passed by the British House of Commons providing for the disestablishment of the Welsh Church enjoys the unique distinction of being the first measure to become a law without the concurrent action of the House of Lords. The justice of this enactment is clearly apparent when the small strength of the Anglican Church in Wales is considered. Of 742,000 Protestant communicants in 1910, only 193,051 belonged to the Established Church, while 550,280 were Nonconformists. When in this large number, principally composed of Congregationalists, Baptists and Methodists, is added the very considerable number of Roman Catholics, the uselessness of trying to marry people to support a single small denomination is beyond question.

From a summary of the proceedings of the recent General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, which met in Kansas City, given the Times-Picayune by a New Orleans delegate, we take the following: "One of the great features of the assembly was its splendid missionary meeting presided over by Dr. George Sumner, in which Bishop W. R. Lambuth and Bishop E. R. Bendix of the Methodist Episcopal Church South made addresses. Dr. Sumner was most happy in his introduction of the two distinguished visitors. Both Bishops were deeply moved by the expressions of brotherly love and sympathy. Bishop Lambuth referred to the great kindness of the Presbyterians in Africa in assisting him to establish the Congo Mission at the village of Wembo-Nama, the Presbyterian Church furnishing the Bishop with evangelists, interpreters, guides, and porters. The great meeting resolved itself into nothing less than a love-feast between the Methodist Episcopal Church South and the Presbyterian Church. Never before in the history of the Church has there been such a scene witnessed as the appearance together on a general assembly platform of two of the 'chief pastors' of a sister Church alongside of the assembly's officers, and the whole of the congregation celebrating together their common work for Christ in Darkest Africa."

ACTION BY THE GENERAL CONFERENCE RELATIVE TO OUR EDUCATIONAL WORK.

(Compiled in the office of the Secretary of Education at Nashville, Tenn.)

An examination of the several reports of the Committee on Education which were adopted by the General Conference at Oklahoma City, shows that the following provisions were made:

(1) That the Secretary and the Board of Education continue their policy of bringing the charters of our schools and colleges into conformity to the law of the Church in the matter of the selection of the Boards of Trustees.

(2) That the Board of Education, the Board of Missions, and the Sunday School Board should co-operate in aiding to place a permanently endowed chair of religious education in each of our colleges, where practicable, during the present quadrennium.

(3) That the Board of Education be instructed to make special efforts to secure during the quadrennium $500,000, or more to be invested as a permanent endowment.

(4) That the Board of Education be requested to give careful study to the problem involved in the presence of a large number of Methodist students in State institutions, and that in co-operation with Annual Conference Boards of Education and other agencies, it assist the local churches in the religious development of students.

(5) That the Board of Education be instructed to strengthen in every way possible its department of Ministerial Supply and Training.

(6) That our pastors everywhere be called upon to acquaint their people with our institutions of learning and advise them to patronize the schools of the Church, and that our people be called upon to give earnest attention to the character of the institutions of learning into whose hands they intrust the education of their sons and daughters during the critical period of adolescence.

(7) That our approved institutions of learning be commended to our people as the best possible schools for Methodist youths.

Changes in the Discipline were made, providing for the following:

(1) That the number of the members of the Board of Education be increased from eighteen to twenty-one; three Bishops and the Secretary of Education must be members, and as many as ten laymen may be members.

(2) That Annual Conference Boards of Education co-operate more closely with the General Conference Board in securing educational statistics, in classifying institutions of learning, in the establishment of new institutions, and in the recognition and support of those already existing.

(3) That the assessments for General Conference and Annual Conference education be continued as one educational assessment, and the amount divided pro rata.

(4) That each annual conference have a Conference Secretary of Education who shall be ex-officio a member of the Annual Conference Board of Education.

(5) That all the educational institutions owned and controlled by the Church be classified as Academies, Secondary schools, Junior Colleges, Colleges, Theological Seminaries, or Universities.

(6) That the General Conference Board of Education may serve as a Board of reference or arbitration, and when necessary, may take measures to protect the property interests of our educational institutions.

(7) That the amount of assessment by the General Conference for education remain the same, $50,000, annually. In the expenditure of the proceeds of this assessment the Board of Education shall give due consideration to the merits of the following causes: Ministerial education, mountain schools, ministerial loan fund, and the education of the colored people. Furthermore, the assessment of $50,000 annually for theological education remains the same amount; but instead of being directed to the Biblical Department University as during the past quadrennium, it is to be placed subject to the order of the Commission of Sixteen appointed by the last General Conference, to be used by them in the establishment or support of theological schools.

(8) That no fixed assessment for aid to the work of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church be made, as formerly; but the Board of Education, in co-operation with the other connectional boards, shall have control of all of our work in behalf of this Church, and these several boards are given authority to jointly or separately make any appropriations or take any action they deem wise for the accomplishment of the common tasks of the two Churches.

Certain changes were made in the Discipline touching the Department of Ministerial Supply and Training. The following should be noted:

(1) The pastor in charge is directed to report to the quarterly conference, as well as to the Annual Conference Board of Education, and to the Department of Ministerial Supply and Training of the General Conference Board of Education the names and addresses of all who have been licensed to preach during the year, and of all candidates for the ministry.

(2) The educational requirements for candidates for admission on trial must be equivalent, so far as the English branches are concerned, to the requirements fixed by the Commission on Classification for admission to a standard college; provided that English, History, and Science may be accepted in lieu of the foreign language requirements; that this shall not apply to German and Mexican preachers; and that, an Annual Conference, by a two-thirds vote, may admit a candidate who does not meet these requirements.

(3) All ministerial candidates are strongly urged, before entering the traveling connection, to secure, if possible, a thorough collegiate and theological training. The Examining Committee may accept a certificate of graduation from a secondary school of good standing in lieu of the English branches of the course prescribed for candidates for admission; one from a standard college in lieu of any or all collegiate subjects prescribed for Conference undergraduates, and one from a Theological Seminary in lieu of the Biblical and theological subjects prescribed for candidates for admission or for Conference undergraduates.

(4) The College of Bishops shall select annually a postgraduate reading course of four or five volumes, which course, although entirely voluntary, all preachers who have finished the Conference Course of Study will be encouraged to read.

Senator Fletcher, of Florida, and Senator Cummins, of Iowa, were renominated to succeed themselves in the U. S. Senate last week.

King George V of Great Britain was 50 years old on June 3. The official celebration of his birthday will take place on the 22nd of June.

The Legislature of Louisiana has been asked to make an appropriation of $15,000 to the State Museum, in the Cabildo in New Orleans.

The graduating class at the Louisiana State University this year was the largest in the history of that institution, 102 degrees being conferred.

The Pennsylvania Chautauqua Company has booked the Hon. W. J. Bryan, Secretary of State, for a series of lectures this summer, beginning in North Carolina on July 4.

Representative Johnson, of the State of Washington, has introduced in Congress a bill authorizing the Surgeon General of the United States to establish in a suitable place a national lepers' home, and appropriating for this purpose $150,000.

Five new buildings for the education of women in Turkey, the property of Constantinople College at Arnaukeuy, on the European shores of the Bosphorus, were dedicated on June 3. This is thought to mark the beginning of a new era for womanhood in the benighted land of the harem.

The Board of Supervisors of Coahoma County, Miss., on the 3rd inst. authorized the issuance of $100,000 worth of bonds for the construction of good roads. It has been the boast of its citizens for a number of years that Coahoma County has the best highways of any county in the Magnolia State.

The 8000-foot tunnel underneath the Cumberland Mountains which will make possible a railway extension from Dante, in Russell County, Va., to Elkhorn City, Ky., is nearing completion. It is said that this achievement will open to commerce new and valuable coal fields in both Virginia and Kentucky.

On June 3, the 106th anniversary of his birth, the oil painting of Jefferson Davis in the Mississippi Hall of fame was decorated by Dr. and Mrs. Dunbar Rowland with ivy taken from the home of the late Bishop Charles B. Galloway, the ivy being interspersed with clusters of roses and other blossoms. It has for several years been the rule of the Superintendent of the Mississippi Department of Archives and History annually on this date to connect in the public mind by this means these two distinguished sons of the South, who were citizens of the same commonwealth. This is certainly a very beautiful custom, and we hope that it will be kept up indefinitely.

The monument in honor of the 267 dead Confederate soldiers buried in the Arlington National Cemetery was unveiled on Thursday, June 4. Mrs. Daisy McLaurin Stevens, President of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, making the presentation speech and President Woodrow Wilson delivering the speech of acceptance. The design of this monument is described as follows: "An heroic-sized figure, typifying the South; in her extended right hand a laurel wreath with which to crown the dead; her left hand resting on a plowstock, while underneath on a circular base, are figures representing the heroism and sacrifices of the men and women of the South." We quote also the main inscription on the monument: "Not for fame; not for place, or for rank; not lured by ambition, or goaded by necessity, but in simple obedience to duty as they understood it, these men suffered all, sacrificed all, dared all—and died." The money to erect this memorial was chiefly raised by the Daughters of the Confederacy.

Alexandria, La., is making a serious effort to take from Baton Rouge the honor of being the Capital of the State. She is offering for this distinction a free site for a State House and a cash bonus of $500,000. She provided on Tuesday, June 2, a special train to transport the legislators from Baton Rouge, that they might inspect her advantages, and many of them accepted the invitation to become her guests. It is claimed that the cause of this question being raised anew is that Louisiana is in need of more modern and commodious buildings to house the various departments of the State government, and that when they are erected, it ought to be on the best site that the commonwealth can furnish. Alexandria is more centrally located than Baton Rouge; but the latter is rich in historic associations that are calculated to appeal strongly to public sentiment and has the great advantage of being already in possession of the coveted prize. The Capital can be changed only by the adoption of a constitutional amendment to that effect by the people, and to submit such an amendment will require a two-thirds vote of both houses of the Legislature.

SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

The Year Book of the Seashore Divinity School is now out, and I trust each preacher of the co-operating Conferences has received a copy. It will open to all a splendid opportunity for the year. Give it a careful reading.

The Session opens Tuesday night, June 23, and closes at noon Thursday, July 2, taking only one Sunday away from the charge. Every preacher who can do so should avail himself of this opportunity.

We are fortunate indeed in securing the speakers for this year. The gifted, scholarly, and eloquent Bishop, F. J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, our own great and inimitable Bishop, W. A. Candler, and our learned and popular Dr. John A. Rice, who is in demand for platform work in all such gatherings, are sufficient guarantee of a profitable and delightful session. It will be a serious loss if one misses the messages these men bring.

In addition to the regular course for each of the four classes of under-graduates, instruction is provided for those seeking admission into the Conferences on trial. In each of these classes there is an official representative present to look after the members of his own Conference. Certificates will only be issued to those who, before undertaking the examination, have studied all the course for the class of which they are members. Lucky guessing will not be accepted. The School cannot lend itself to cheap and negligent methods, or to an effort to dodge honest work. While it provides a teacher in addition to the study, the study will be required.

The railroads all now have special summer rates to the Gulf Coast towns which are lower than any rate we could secure. These round trip tickets can be had anywhere within Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, and allow all the time desired for the trip.

Take time to attend. The principle involved in the old saying, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," cannot safely be overlooked by the preacher. He owes it to the Kingdom he serves, as well as to himself, to break out of the ruts, brighten the outlook, freshen the energies and take new angles of observation. No books can take the place of changed environment and contact with other and great personalities. Break away for a time from the wearing tasks in order that you may go back to them with new spontaneity and power.

CONCERNING OUR EDUCATIONAL WORK.

Report of the Committee on Education made to the Brookhaven District Conference.

Dear Brethren: Your Committee on Education beg leave to make the following report:

In view of the universal interest now taken in education and because of diverse and often erroneous views concerning schools and school work, we would urge upon the Church the absolute necessity of directing and controlling the education and training her own children, especially in the higher branches of learning. This has ceased to be a matter of mere expediency, and, if we would hold our position as one of the dominant forces of life, has become a matter of obligation. Our young people must enter the field of active effort with right conceptions of life and its meanings, as well as with cultured and disciplined minds. We contend that the church school, definitely committed to Christian education, must be sustained and developed, and that our people must be brought to see both the need and the practicability of furnishing ample and permanent equipment for all our schools.

We congratulate our Conference on the excellence of the institutions now serving our people. Whitworth College and Port Gibson College for girls, Millsaps College for boys and girls, and the Montrose and Seashore Fitting Schools for both sexes, are equal to, and in many particulars superior to, any schools in the State of their several grades. They merit, and should have, our hearty approval, our liberal patronage and unstinted financial support. They should be regarded by the Church not as incidental to her life and work, but as integral and necessary. We rejoice in their excellence and in their prosperity, and pledge this Conference to energetic effort in their behalf.

Vanderbilt University.

While this institution, according to the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, is not the property of the Church, nor to any appreciable extent under her control, yet because of past relations and the pressing need that the Church should determine and declare her policy with reference to future relationship to the University, we make the following declarations:

1. That we are convinced that the aforementioned Court decision is not in accord with the facts of history nor the principles of equity.

2. That our great Church needs, and must have, a central university, subject to her discipline and fully under her control.

3. That in the event of the failure of the Board of Trustees of Vanderbilt University to place that institution in such relation to the Church as to secure to us the necessary management of the same, our conviction is that the severance between them should be declared complete, and that our General Conference should proceed at once to found, organize, and sufficiently endow, a great university which shall be in every particular our own, and absolutely under our own control.

Respectfully submitted.

FACTS CONCERNING WOMEN.

Catherine Booth-Clibborn, eldest daughter of General William Booth, who is the leader of the Salvation Army on the European continent, is known as "The Marechale." General Booth is said to have called her his Blucher, because she was given to re-enforcing him in times of urgent need. This remarkable woman was blessed with four daughters, all of whom dedicated themselves to Salvation Army work.

The King's Daughters of Meridian, Miss., are taking steps to procure a home for business young women who have no family ties in the city. Such a home has existed in Jackson, Miss., for several years.

A bill has been introduced in the Louisiana Legislature requiring the consent of the wife before the husband can legally sell the family homestead. The law has long required her consent before such property could be mortgaged, but this restriction has not extended to its sale.

The women of New Orleans secured last week 5,000 names to a petition against the Reinhardt Race-track Bill now pending before the State Legislature. They deserve much credit for their work to defeat this iniquitous measure.

It is stated that Miss Margaret Willson, daughter of the President, will edit a publication known as The Social Center Magazine. This periodical will be issued in Madison, Wisconsin, and devoted chiefly to promoting the use of public school buildings for public purposes.

From the St. Louis Christian Advocate, we take the following: "Lillian Nordica was the granddaughter of that old Methodist preacher, John Allen, whose voice reverberated through the trees during the old-time camp meetings. She came naturally by her wonderful voice. She once said: 'Nothing comes to me but through work and perseverance. I work when I do not want to. It takes work and patience to become an artist. It cannot be brought about in a day. To me, I will say frankly all things come slowly and through toll. Ambition is a fearful master and tyrant, but I would not exchange it for another.'"

At the recent Convention of State Librarians, held in Washington, D. C., a male delegate from New York declared that "in the South they hold beauty contests when electing librarians." This brought to the fore Miss Mattie Plunkett, the State Librarian of Mississippi, who made a vigorous and effective reply, of which the Jackson Daily News gives the following account: "She said she resented the implication that Southern women were chosen for positions because of their beauty, and not their fitness for the jobs, saying, 'Look at me, everybody. I am a living refutation of the charge made by Mr. Wver. I was elected by the Legislature over nearly half a dozen applicants, all of whom were better looking than I am, and some of them were really beautiful. Not only that, but I have served my State as Librarian for sixteen years. Then there is Miss Cobb, State Librarian of Georgia, who has held that position in that State for fifteen years, and the lady who is State Librarian of Tennessee has been in office sixteen years, and I am told the State Librarian of Louisiana, a lady, has seen nearly twenty-five years' service in that position. No, sir, the gentleman is mistaken.'"

PASSED BY.

The Master had a word of His comfort.
Thinking to send a word to sorrow stricken,
Perhaps you were the one He called to that in Only you could say, "I was a 'troubled'—
And so He passed you by.

The Master had a heart for the distressed.
Then I could have said to His master crying,
Perhaps you might have said that blessed story—
Only you were called to that in Him—
And so He passed you by.

The Master had a word of His word's comfort.
Wherever it comes the heart of one in fear,
Perhaps He meant that you should lift the burden,
But you had plans for said that you were free—
And so He passed you by.

The Master still is found in every place.
Heaven beyond the horizon where He lives,
Perhaps you said to see Him in His beauty,
For you had said to see Him in His life—
And so He passed you by.

GIVING A MEANS OF GRACE.

My grandfather was a steward in the Methodist Church for a half century. My father has been a steward in the Methodist Church for almost that long a time, and the writer was elevated to that position when he was 16 years of age. All my life I have heard the financial problems of the Church discussed. I am not sure that present day methods cause any leader putting the Church on a more financial basis than the methods of former days. In fact, the same spirit underlies both methods. A machine may be a perfect one, but when the power that runs it gives out you have nothing but a dead weight.

I remember when the question at the first quarterly conference was not "How much can we pay," but "How much will it take to keep the preacher up?" Keeping the preacher alive and with clothes on was the only object the stewards had. They used to go into the parsonage and inspect the flour barrel and fill it when found empty. They bought the preacher a new suit of clothes when his old ones "frazzled" out. The preacher lived.

Now the Church is becoming more of a machine with its hired operators. Boards meet and estimate how much money is needed and proceed to levy assessments. Stewards estimate a fixed salary for the preacher and then budget the expenses of the church. The congregation is told that it will be expected to raise $2000 in order to make a "full" report at Conference. The collections are managed all during the year with a view to pay out. Thus supporting the institutions of the Church is a matter of the estimated needs of the Church. I am not sure that I like the latter method any better than the former one. I am not sure but that both are contrary to the principles of Christianity.

Let us examine the Bible on the subject briefly: In 1st Cor. 16:2 a commandment is issued that on the first day of each week every Christian should lay by in store as God has prospered him. Giving to the Church is a duty that must be performed—an obligation, if you please. The amount one gives is not to be measured by local needs, for that may be entirely too small. I know of a community that has in it 100 church members who are wage earners in a greater or lesser degree. The financial obligations of that church amount to about $1200 per year. One dollar per month per wage earner would settle the bill and enable the pastor to report "in full." But there are two members of that church whose annual incomes are about $10,000 each, and neither of them has more than five in his family. If these men "lay by in store as God prospered them" each of them would give not less than $50 a month, and that would pay the whole bill and leave the other 98 out. But of the other 98 there are at least ten men who receive more than $100 per month, and many others receive comfortable wages. If that community, independent of its needs, was composed of Christians who gave what God as God has prospered them, every man in the local church would be asked for and there would be plenty with which to meet any emergency that might arise. But the fact is that that church has a hard time to pay its bills and is continually borrowing money for the Master.

I believe it is the preacher's business to teach his congregation the doctrine of Christianity. I believe that the method of liberating a man of the most honest and a Christian man is to present the doctrine of giving as a virtue that is large as any other in the Bible. From the very beginning of the end of the world has been supported by his followers. If the preacher teaches on Sabbath observance, why not teach giving? It is to instruct the people in the best method to build up a Sunday school, why not in the best method of financing the work of the Church? It is the steward's business to collect the salary and other money for the church, but the pastor who does not care for the business life of his congregation has learned that cooperation of what is needed approximately in the life of giving.

Why can not the preacher do these things? One obstacle often in the way is that at the time of the year when stewards are making their estimates, the preacher is new in the field. He does not know his people, their habits of giving, nor their ability to give. He keeps at it and the result is that his hands are tied for a whole year to the standard to which the Church was brought by his predecessor. What I am about to say may not meet the approval of all of my brethren—some may say it is contrary to the discipline, but the experiment is going to be tried just the same.

The congregation that I serve will close what is chosen to call its fiscal year on June 30. At that time its members and friends will make pledges for one year. These pledges will be made, not with any regard to assessments, but after the pastor and church treasurer have discussed with them each the individual member's ability to serve God with his money. I will have six months during which to thoroughly establish the plan, and my successor, or myself, should I be reappointed, will have six months to estimate the ability of his people and the points in the doctrine of giving that need to be stressed before it is necessary for him to touch the subject. This plan does not put the preacher to the task of collecting his own salary—far from it. It simply gives him the opportunity of teaching his people the lesson of giving. We will use the Duplex Envelope system in making the collections.

THE KAISER GIVES RUM A ROYAL SNUB.

Berlin, May 15.—The Kaiser has become a "teetotaler." This action by the ruler of a country famous for the finest beer and choice wines comes as a distinct shock to the two biggest industries in Germany. These fear the Kaiser will become an ardent worker for the growing temperance movement in the Fatherland.

The Kaiser, according to persons in close contact with him, has shown a decided antipathy to all alcoholic drinks, and he virtually never touches liquors. He has not drunk beer in several years, and now also has barred wine.

This is no sudden touch of the Kaiser, nor is he seeking to emulate the example of Secretary Bryan. It is said to be a gradual development from moderate drinking to abstinence covering a period of several years and resulting from personal conviction that alcohol is injurious to the individual and an obstructive factor in the development of the nation.

Not so many years ago the Kaiser, in a speech, showed his appreciation of a drop, and praised the noble wine from the terraced vine-clad hills of the Rhine.

"A German must always have his little allowance of alcohol," he remarked.

Never more than a moderate drinker, Wilhelm one day surprised his suit by the remark that beer was not good for him and has not been seen drinking beer since. About the same time a mineral water appeared on the market labeled "His Majesty's Table Drink," followed by statistics of the harm caused in Germany by the immoderate use of alcohol.

A deep impression was made on the Kaiser by these statistics. It is said, as Germany is known as a nation of moderate drinkers, rather than of national drunkenness. Yet it was shown that drink causes annually 1,000 suicides, 100,000 accidents, 50,000 cases of delirium tremens, and insanity and 10,000 crimes. More than sixty per cent of the insane, fifty-two per cent of the epileptics and forty-six per cent of the criminals, it was found, were of drunken parents. A study of these conditions is said to have caused the Kaiser to arrive at the firm conviction that alcohol instead of increasing one's capacity for work and resulted in his new decision to cut out even the little wine he drank occasionally. According to reports, Wilhelm not only is a teetotaler, but is using his persuasive powers to convert those immediately about him.

The Kaiser's favorite drink now is lemonade, with a dash of orange juice, made with mineral water, after a recipe originated by the Empress.

To those who have had their gibes at the expense of Secretary Bryan it may come as a surprise to learn that the Kaiser on several occasions drank toasts in water. Unlike Mr. Bryan, however, the Kaiser does not insist that others also drink water, as wine is on the table for all who want it.

The Kaiser, it is said, laughed heartily when he heard of Mr. Bryan's lemonade banquet for the foreign corps at Washington and remarked: "A little water will not do the diplomats any harm."

When the Kaiser sits at the table a hedge of flowers, cleverly arranged, invariably screens his plate from the majority of guests. Surrounded as he is by wine glasses, some of them colored, it is practically impossible to tell when his majesty drinks water instead of wine in toasting guests. While swearing in naval recruits at Wilhelmshaven this spring he openly drank a toast in water. When recently asked whether the officers of the army might drink toasts to him in plain grape-juice he replied that he had not the slightest objection to the health being given in water.

It cannot be said there is much fuss made in the press or by the public over this new phase of the Kaiser's character, while the temperance movements are making steady gains in Germany. His total abstinence acts have made the Kaiser decidedly unpopular in many influential quarters. Only a few months ago the Minister of Education in one of the South German States refused to permit the establishment of a Good Templar's lodge on the ground that it threatened one of the most important industries in Germany.—Tribune.

MAKING PROGRESS.

Dear Advocate: Since my last report and appeal for subscriptions to the fund for purchasing the old Methodist church property in Mansfield I have received the following subscriptions:

Mrs. J. F. Kidd, $10; C. B. Hicks, $10; Rev. Wm. H. Coleman, $10; Rev. F. R. Power, $10. Total $40. Previously reported, $572. Grand total, $612. Sale of old house, $175; total from all sources, $787. Balance needed, $213.

President Bobbitt did not want the old house, and this disposition is most satisfactory to him.

As we now lack but $213 of having the required amount, I sincerely hope that the friends of the institution will immediately provide this amount and let us make the deed and forever secure the property to the College. Remember, the local church is giving at least $1500 to this cause, and I feel sure the Methodists of the State will not expect more from them. Send in your subscriptions, and at once. Very truly,

A PRAYER.

By Helen Elizabeth Coolidge.

O Jesus, with my eyes shut tight,
I kneel at mother's knee,
And like a lovely, lovely dream,
Thy face I seem to see.

Dear Jesus, naughty words I've said,
And naughty things I've done,
But I am sorry now, so please
Forgive me—every one.

O love me—hold me in Thine arms,
All through the long, long night,
And, when the sunshine comes again,
Help me to do what's right.—Amen.

EVELYN AND A FORTUNE.

Tony had big eyes and was always looking for the marvelous. He was continually picking up some wonderful tale from the newspapers and telling it very impressively for a ten-year-old. He looked up from his bread and butter and peach sauce now to say:

"There was a man died the other day who had thrown away five million dollars."

"Why, how had he done that?"

Even father was interested.

"It was in Australia, and he owned a mining lease, whatever that is, on a big mine. Only it wasn't working yet. And the man got discouraged and thought nothing would come of it, so he sold it for a hundred and fifty dollars. But the other people who bought it worked it, and they found out that it was most the richest mine in the country. They got five million dollars out of it, and if he had hung on to it the five million would have been his."

"Oh, I wish I had a such chance," said Evelyn, her eyes shining.

She didn't know, nor did anybody else, that she was to have a chance that very evening of losing or holding on to something so very valuable that it was priceless. She doesn't know yet that it was anything but an ordinary occasion. It happened in this way:

Just after she had opened her arithmetic and began to figure, a rattle and a clatter was heard outside and gay voices began to call to her.

"Evelyn!"

"Evie!"

"Evie, Evie! Ev! Come out!"

Evelyn knew what it meant. The girls had come for her to go roller-skating. And it was such a beautiful night to skate. The moon was so bright, that even looking out of a lighted room, Evelyn could see the trees and walks and houses all silvery. She stepped to the window and threw it up.

"I can't go, girls, I haven't worked my examples."

"Oh, do them in the morning!"

"I can't. I have to help about the work. Mother is gone, you know."

"I should think that when your mother is gone would be just the time when you could do as you want to."

"Oh, come out for just a little while, Ev. You can study when you get in."

It was hard to resist. Only one who has been through a like temptation can understand how hard. For it was the voice of her dearest friend, Dora Hallock, that was coaxing, and to go anywhere with Dora was a delight. But Evelyn answered bravely:

"No; I know I wouldn't do them when I come in. I must work these examples before I do anything else."

The joyous crowd rattled away a little more slowly and less noisily.

"Ev's good," said Dora. "I haven't worked my examples either. I believe I'll go in and study, too, girls."

"Let's all go in," said Hattie Kelly. "Miss Taylor is getting so fierce I don't know what will happen if we miss any more. We can skate to-morrow night, when there isn't any school to go to the next day."

And so every one of them went in. Miss Taylor was astonished and delighted at the good arithmetic lesson the next day, and decided that, after all, she would not put back the class, as she had thought of doing.

Some way, there was a new spirit in it. There is apt to be after a tussle and victory. Evelyn didn't know that she deserved any of the credit for it. But the recording angel who puts down earthly struggles and victories and defeats knew. I think that very great good was accomplished by that seemingly small act of Evelyn's. Knowledge is more valuable than a gold mine, and to throw away the chance of getting it is more foolish than to sell a five-million-dollar gold mine for one hundred and fifty dollars.—Journal and Messenger.

THOSE PUNCTUATION MARKS.

"O dear!" sighed Warren, as he came in from school one day, "I wish we didn't have to learn so much about periods and commas and semicolons and such things. I hate them!"

Mamma laid down her sewing and said, "Why do you hate them, Warren?"

"Why, it's so hard to remember when to use them, and besides I don't think they are of much use. I don't see why we couldn't write sentences without putting in any punctuation marks."

Mamma smiled, and then rising from her chair, she went over to the desk and got out a piece of paper and a pencil. Then she wrote: "The little turkey strutted about the yard and ate corn half an hour after his head was cut off."

"Why, Mummie, how funny!" exclaimed Warren when he had read it. "How could a turkey walk around eating corn without any head?"

"He couldn't," replied mamma, "and yet I have written just what I intended to write. I have however, left out all punctuation marks."

Then she bent down and punctuated the sentence. It then read: "The little turkey strutted about the yard and ate corn; half an hour after, his head was cut off."

"O, I see," cried Warren, and then and there he resolved to learn all that he could about punctuation marks.

THE ABERDEEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

A distinguished educator once said in my presence that he was confident that the seat of the Garden of Eden was in the prairie section of East Mississippi. His theory may have been too largely colored by loyalty to his native section, but even if he was wrong in the contention he did not speak altogether without foundation for his words. If there is a prettier landscape anywhere than is afforded by those gentle undulations, rapidly becoming largely carpeted with emerald alfalfa, not less fertile than beautiful, it must be far to seek. And in the midst of this smiling plenty, sits Prairie, loveliest village of the plain. Here has just been held the forty-fifth session of the Aberdeen District Conference.

It had been planned that Bishop Murrah should preside; but he did not arrive until after the business sessions were over, although the excellence of his Sunday ministrations atoned for his earlier absence. Rev. J. W. Bell, the presiding elder, filled the chair with dignity and guided the affairs of the Conference with diligence and discretion. The attendance was large, nineteen out of twenty-one of the preachers being present, together with a generous lay representation. Splendid macadamized roads radiate from the town, and the number of delegates and visitors who came in automobiles was very noticeable. The hospitality was of that lavish and yet refined type which seems to reach its perfect flower in this favored locality, among these cultured people.

A dearth of connectional men was one of the few unwelcome features. The writer does not recall ever seeing so few at any previous District Conference, especially did we sadly miss that beloved patriarch, Brother Bachman, whose infirmity precluded his coming. By resolution the body extended him loving sympathy and prayerful good wishes. Rev. H. M. Ellis and Rev. V. C. Curtis were each present for one-half day, and ably represented their respective causes;

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb appeared for the Board of Education in a vigorous speech; Rev. J. R. Countiss presented the claims of Grenada College and also briefly but informingly spoke of the General Conference; Miss Ethel Golding captivated all hearts as she most worthily represented the Orphanage, Brother Williams not having been able to come; besides these no other great ones looked in upon us except for a momentary glimpse bestowed by Brother Woollard.

Four fine, promising young men were licensed to preach with a view to their making preparation to enter the itinerancy—Brothers Lord, Nabors, Gore and Adams. The examiners found them worthy and well qualified, and those acquainted with the youths did not hesitate to predict useful careers for them. The town of Houka was selected as the seat of the next Conference. Messrs. Green, Lenoir, Campbell and Sumner were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, with Messrs. Shell and Leftwich alternates. The preaching of the Gospel was magnified, there being two sermons each day. Brothers Martin, Williams, Park, Gault, Young, Neblett, and the writer preached, besides the Bishop. Great credit is due the pastor and host, Rev. R. M. Evans, whose untiring efforts to make the Conference a success left nothing undone.

Editorial

A MAJESTIC MINISTER AND A GREAT CAREER.

The superannuation of Bishop A. W. Wilson by the late General Conference ends the active career of one of the most remarkable men that American Methodism has produced. He was a son of the Rev. Norval Wilson, a Methodist minister of note, and was born in 1834. He studied both medicine and law in his early years, but his pursuit of such studies deflected him very little from the great life work to which God had called him. His health in his young manhood was delicate, but notwithstanding that handicap, he soon showed himself to be a preacher of gifts and graces, and his influence in his section of the Church continually widened. In 1873 he was elected General Missionary Secretary, and championed that cause throughout the connection with an ability and eloquence never surpassed, if indeed it has ever been equaled. It is universally conceded that this important department of our church work was given its first forward impulse under his wise and efficient leadership and that it owes more to him than to any other one man. In 1882 Dr. Wilson was elected a Bishop, and for the past thirty-two years he has filled that office in a manner that has steadily increased his hold upon the Church and given him a prestige and power in its affairs scarcely paralleled since the days of Soule and McKendree.

This is not the time to undertake to point out the various elements of strength possessed by this great minister and religious leader, who is yet with us and who, we hope, will be spared to us for many more years; and we have no thought of essaying such a task. But there are two outstanding things about Bishop Wilson which have profoundly impressed all who know him and which we desire very briefly to mention. The first is his deep and thorough consecration. He has been pre-eminently an unworldly man, with an unwavering faith in God and utterly free from any trace of self-seeking. The favor and applause of men have weighed little with him; to do his duty in a way to command the approval of the Master has been his consuming purpose. In his entire record can be found nothing of the spectacular—no parading of his own achievements. When he has spoken it has ever been to magnify Christ and lift him up in his glory before the world. The value of such a life, when lived by one so gifted and honored, as an example and inspiration has been very great. Its far-reaching influence upon the Church none can measure.

The second outstanding thing about Bishop Wilson has been his commanding preaching ability. The pulpit has been his throne of power. A great student, he has mastered the Word as but few have done and his profound and accurate knowledge of it enables him to interpret and expound it most luminously and impressively. It is doubtful whether in this respect he has ever had a peer in the history of Southern Methodism. His mental faculties are thoroughly trained and disciplined and his sermons are never written. They come gushing from his great brain and heart with a freshness and power that the stereotyped discourse never possesses. An illustration of Bishop Wilson's extraordinary gifts as an extemporaneous speaker is furnished by his thrilling and inspiring address at the close of the late General Conference, which we are publishing in this issue of the Advocate. That wonderful utterance was made on the spur of the moment, and though the Bishop is now said to be a superannuate, we do not believe there is another man in the Church who, with so little notice, could have so splendidly measured up to the demands of that impressive occasion.

We did not vote to re-choose Bishop Wilson, but after all it may be best that he should have put off the battery before his remarkable life should have been apparently ended and with Southern Methodism, the loss of a man whose life has well earned a rest and we pray that his eyeside may be free of increasing years and that the future may bring him all good things. The Church will not forget him in his retirement or cease to keep in grateful remembrance the noble service that he has rendered. We will continue to regard him as our "Grand Old Man"—one who in the language of Dr. Wm. S. Hughes in his famous sermon at Oklahoma City has done his career had the life of Peter, the savior of Rome and the heart of Italy.

AN UNWHOLESOME INDICATION.

This is a time of bewilderment both in State and Church. Many are apparently infatuated with the idea that the world is to be saved by a genius for organization, and hence they wait to exercise their powers in doing everything under the rule of definite laws. This point seems now to be well-nigh universal. For instance, we were told most emphatically when it first started that the Laymen's Movement was to be a MOVEMENT, and not a new ORGANIZATION. But it has now emerged from its original condition into a typical "organization" with boards and committees and executive positions saluted. Indeed, up to the present time about the most outstanding achievement of this "Movement" seems to have been the creation of additional official places in the Church which laymen may occupy. The great body of the laity remain untouched, uninterested, and unused as they were before.

What the Church needs is not more machinery, but more life and energy to operate the machinery that she already has. A certain system of regulations is still in our opinion calculated to help the cause of Christianity. It is, we think, rather indicative of an increasing belief of formalism in our religious life, which has led its perfect flowering in the pulpit of our Lord's time. The value of individual initiative in any kind of work can scarcely be appraised too highly. When it is stifled, there are apt to move in a rut and true progress is likely to be retarded. Well may we meditate upon the words of St. Paul: "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

As bearing somewhat suggestively on this question, we quote the following extract from a recent article in the Methodist Times (London), from the pen of Mr. W. B. Brashear:

"The Acts of the Apostles is not a manual of rules; it is the story of the surprising savings and acts of a brave band of pioneers. While reading the stories of the Gospels, we never know what Jesus will say or do next; the only thing we can prophesy of Him is that He will ever wear the garb of love and ever be a citizen of that country. His life is the great surprise. A few words will tell us this—Son of God, born of a peasant woman; Savior of the world, no room for Him in the inn; Exalted Lord, a condemned malefactor on a cross. It is all inexplicable, and defies the limits of our yard-measures; but it leads us to say:

Such ever was Love's way:
To rise, it stoops.

"Some one said, a short time ago, 'What Methodism needs today is the touch of surprise.' It was a searching statement. We need to know that truth which Wesley learned—more is done by irregular than by regular methods. It is so easy for us to become dull and dreary, mere 'prophets of the obvious,' talking-parrots with meaningless refrains. The peril is so subtle, for the progressive of yesterday is the reactionary of to-day. Many a man of delightfully irregular methods all unconsciously becomes like that clerk of whom Charles Lamb speaks: 'His life was ruled by a ruler.'"

Perhaps the reason why so many of the early preachers of American Methodism were men of such extraordinary personality was because they were allowed to develop along natural lines and that little effort was made to cast them all in the same mold and make them do things in the same manner.

WANT A UNIVERSITY.

The Georgians, and particularly the citizens of Atlanta, are beginning to manifest a desire to secure the first of the two universities which southern Methodists are expected to establish in the near future. Referring to this matter editorially in the Jackson (Ga.) Argus, Mr. H. M. Shaver in part says:

"There are three institutions that are aspiring to take Vanderbilt's place. They are: Emory College, established 1826, Oxford, Ga.; Trinity College, established 1831, Durham, N. C., and Southwestern University, established 1872, Georgetown, Texas. The latter is building and moving to Dallas, Texas, and enlarging in every way.

"Georgia is the central State of the South, the Empire State of the South, the richest, most populous, largest and foremost in agriculture and commerce. Southern Methodism has its greatest support among Georgians. The new college or university should be placed in Georgia. Atlanta is the financial center of the South—industrially the center. Reasons that Emory should be chosen can easily be given, and why Georgetown and Trinity should not can likewise be pointed out.

"Southwestern university is at the extreme western part of Southern Methodism's territory; in Texas, a half-Western and half-Southern State. Trinity is in North Carolina, part to the Virginia line, the furthestmost eastern and northern of the Southern States. Why go to either boundary to build your citadel of educational strength? Emory already has Georgia, Florida, Alabama, South Carolina and Tennessee as territory, the largest territory of Southern Methodism in a central location."

Commenting upon the discussion contained in The Argus, a considerable portion of which it reproduced, The Atlanta Constitution, which is one of the South's leading dailies and which exercises a great influence in Georgia, among other things, says:

"Mr. Shaver canvasses the respective and relative advantages of the propositions under consideration, and reaches the conclusion that Emory outbids them all. It is situated in the geographical center of Southern Methodism, is already richly endowed, and is susceptible to indefinite extension. Its traditions are among the most exalted and its alumni are among the most distinguished men in the Nation. The question is an important one, has a vital bearing on the future of this great denomination, and essentially is one for it to decide. But The Constitution recognizes the cogency of the arguments of Editor Shaver, and if the new university is to be located in this section of the South Atlanta offers the logical site. There is no question whatever that Atlantians and Georgians generally, of all denominations, would rally spontaneously to the financial support of the enterprise. Given Celestine and Arnes Scott and the Georgia Tech, the addition of the Methodist University would emphasize Atlanta's position as the strategic educational center of the South."

WILL HONOR FRANCIS ASBURY.

The following resolution was presented by Dr. Frank M. Thomas, of Kentucky, at the recent General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, March 31, 1918, will mark the hundredth anniversary of the death of Bishop Francis Asbury; be it

"Resolved, That the College of Bishops are requested to suggest a suitable program for the commemoration of the same. We approve the suggestion that the Epworth Leagues of America erect a suitable monument to Bishop Asbury in the city of Washington."

This action was quite timely and the celebration which it proposes is most fitting. It was the great common sense and splendid leadership of Asbury that saved Methodism in America when John Wesley made the serious mistake of undertaking to interfere in the troubles between the oppressed Colonies and Great Britain, as a partizan of the latter. No man in the history of the Methodist Church in this country has wrought more heroically than did this consecrated Americanized Englishman, and certainly none has accomplished more. By all means, let the centenary of his death be commemorated by the Methodists of both the North and South, who are his everlasting debtors, and let such a monument to him be set up at the National Capital as will testify to future generations our estimate of his work and worth.

A HINT TO WISE LAYMEN.

Would you like to do your church and pastor a service? Just put a purse in the hands of your pastor containing funds sufficient to meet all the expenses of the trip to the Divinity School, June 23 to July 2, and tell him to go and make the most of the opportunity. He will return to you a greater man, ready for a greater service. It will be easy for a few of his friends to do this without missing the amount contributed. Try it.

H. M. E.

Recently, when a Presbyterian Assembly adopted a declaration to the effect that all persons dying in infancy are saved, a brother is said to have moved that this provision be made retroactive. Manifestly, that delegate was not lacking in a sense of humor.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

A union revival meeting will commence at Kosciusko, Miss., next Sunday. The preaching will be done by Rev. Walt Holcomb of Nashville, Tenn.

It is stated that the Educational Commission of the M. E. Church, South, created by the late General Conference, will meet in Birmingham, Ala., on June 17.

Rev. H. R. Singleton, formerly of New Orleans but now of St. Louis, has lately assisted his brother in a meeting at Fort Worth, Texas, in which there were more than 200 accessions to the Church.

Prof. B. D. Battle, who taught in Centenary College during the past session, will soon leave for Heidelberg, Germany, where he will take a postgraduate course of study. He is a very promising young educator.

One of the A. B. graduates of Millsaps College this year is Miss Stella Galloway McGehee, a granddaughter of the late Bishop Charles B. Galloway, under whose inspiring leadership that institution was established.

Prof. J. N. Powers, who has lately been elected to the Chancellorship of the University of Mississippi, has had the degree of LL.D. conferred upon him by Mississippi College, at Clinton. This distinction was well merited.

Mrs. Kate Howard, of Winona, Miss., in renewing her subscription, writes a few words commendatory of the Advocate. We appreciate her kindly expressions and are pleased to have her continue as one of our readers.

The Commencement sermon of Emory and Henry College was preached by Bishop R. G. Waterhouse last Sunday, and on Tuesday, June 9, the Annual Address was delivered by Dr. S. A. Steel, the silver-tongued orator of Southern Methodism.

Rev. W. N. Duncan, the pastor, has recently held an interesting meeting in the Methodist Church at Holly Springs, Miss., in which he was assisted by Dr. J. L. Weber, of Memphis. The singing was under the direction of Prof. I. N. Price, of Chattanooga.

Rev. J. D. Simpson recently conducted at Goodman, Miss., a meeting which lasted a week, and in which he had the able assistance of Dr. H. G. Henderson of Lexington. As a result of these services, the Church was greatly blessed and there were 11 additions to its membership.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. J. W. Thompson, Meadville, Miss., 3; Rev. R. T. Pickett, Pelahatchie, Miss., 3; Rev. J. M. Carpenter, Victoria, Miss., 5.

The Annual Address of the Cumberland University, at Lebanon, Tenn., was delivered last week by ex-United States Senator J. W. Bailey, who was graduated in law from that institution thirty-one years ago. As a lawyer and public speaker, Mr. Bailey scarcely has a superior in the Nation.

Dr. J. B. Hutton, who has been pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Jackson, Miss., for the past sixteen years, has been tendered the Presidency of the Southwestern Presbyterian University at Clarksville, Tenn. Whether he will accept the position, is not known to the public at this writing.

Rev. J. T. Lewis, of Greenville, Miss., favored us with a nice club of subscriptions a few days since. He continues to carry his work forward in the Queen City of the Delta, and also manages to find time to lend some of the brethren a helping hand in their meetings. Brother Lewis is one of the most active and useful ministers in his Conference.

Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Gerdine (who was Miss Daisy Dye of North Mississippi) will sail from San Francisco on their way to Korea, their field of work, on July 21. Brother Gerdine came to the United States several months ago, being forced to do so by the state of Mrs. Gerdine's health. He was a delegate to the late General Conference, at Oklahoma City.

In a note, written on June 3, Rev. W. M. Young, our capable and diligent pastor at Amory, Miss., says: "We are now laying concrete for the basement of our new church and the work will go steadily forward from this time." The erection of this handsome new house of worship will give Amory a high rank among the appointments of the North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Fernwood, Miss., says: "Bishop Murrell will dedicate our Kokomo Church on the first Sunday in July, and Rev. C. W. Crisler, of Hattiesburg, will join me on the following Monday and we will conduct in it a series of revival services." Brother Saunders also states that he expects to attend the approaching session of the Seashore Divinity School.

The Baccalaureate Address of the Panola High School, at Sardis, Miss., was delivered a few days since by Rev. L. M. Lipscomb. The Southern Reporter states that Brother Lipscomb's utterance "was a masterpiece, such as was expected from him by those who were present to hear it."

A Brooksville (Miss.) dispatch to the Jackson Daily News, bearing date of June 3, reads as follows: "The revival in the Methodist Church at this place closed last night. The pastor, Mr. Baird, was assisted by Rev. L. P. Wasson, of Shaw, Miss. Their faithful work was well rewarded. Mr. Wasson will hold a place in the hearts of the people of this community for many years to come."

We acknowledge the reception of the following invitation: "Mr. and Mrs. William Benjamin Stubbs request your presence at the marriage of their daughter, Roberta Neal, to Rev. Paul Foster Daniel, on Monday evening, June 22, 1914, at seven o'clock, in the Wesley Monumental Church, Savannah, Georgia." We extend in advance of the happy occasion our congratulations and best wishes.

A Law and Order League was organized in New Orleans last week. It is stated that the chief purpose of this organization will be to secure a better enforcement of the Sabbath laws and of the Gay-Shattuck law regulating the liquor traffic. Drs. Werlein and Hill, the pastors of the First and Ravne Memorial Methodist Churches, have been notably active in launching this movement.

We have before us the Year Book of the Seashore Divinity School for 1914. Like its predecessors, it is a most informing and attractive pamphlet. It was edited by Rev. H. M. Ellis, of Memphis, Tenn., who has the good habit of doing well whatever he undertakes. A statement from Brother Ellis concerning the approaching session of this school appears elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate.

Through the courtesy of Mrs. Vic T. Hoyle, the accomplished Conference President, we have in hand a copy of the program of the Second Annual Meeting of the United Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi, which was due to convene in Aberdeen this morning and which will continue through next Sunday. It is neatly printed and promises a feast of good things. The Annual sermon will be preached by Bishop W. B. Murrell.

Rev. J. T. Abney, of Morton, Miss., in a business letter to our office, makes the following reference to his charge: "Our work is progressing favorably. Our new church at Pelahatchie is almost completed. If we are not able to worship in it Sunday, June 7, we will be by June 21, my next regular appointment at that place." Brother Abney has recently been looking after the claims of the Advocate among his parishioners with gratifying success.

Rev. W. F. McCrory, of Marksylvie, La., writes: "The cause continues to prosper in this field. We expect to start work on our new church at Oak Grove about July 1, and to finish it in time for the customary summer revival that we expect to hold at that point." Brother McCrory is feeling somewhat akin to a bachelor these days, since Mrs. McCrory left on June 3 for Newton, Miss., where she will visit friends and relatives for several weeks.

Because of the earnest insistence of the friends of Stanton College and the people of Natchez generally, Prof. H. P. Todd has recalled his acceptance of the Vice-Presidency of Whitworth College and will remain at the head of the school which he has so successfully managed for several years. With characteristic generosity, Dr. I. W. Cooper released Mr. Todd from the contract which he had made with him. Stanton College is fortunate to retain the services of this gifted young educator.

A note from Mr. J. D. Barbee, of Greenville, Miss., states that Sister Spragins, the wife of Rev. H. S. Spragins, was operated on for appendicitis in that city last Sunday morning. She was reported as having stood the trying ordeal well and to be doing nicely in every respect. We deeply sympathize with Brother Spragins and his family in this time of keen anxiety, and we earnestly pray that the Heavenly Father may have the stricken one in his gracious care and speedily restore her to perfect health.

Rev. J. L. Neill, of Laurel, Miss., writes as follows: "The work of our Church (First Church) continues to prosper. Its largest growth of late has been in the Sunday school, which is flourishing, notwithstanding the fact that the hot season is now at hand. However, we have had at the regular services within the past three months about 25 additions on profession of faith." We are pleased to note from his stationery the fact (which doubtless we ought to have known long ago) that Brother Neill is President of the Mississippi Sociological Congress.

Writing from Shreveport, La., last Monday, where he had gone to attend the Commencement exercises of Centenary College, Rev. W. W. Drake says: "Bishop Mouzon gave us two great sermons yesterday."

Rev. L. E. Alford writes that our attractive new church at Sumrall, Miss., will be dedicated next Sunday (June 14). He and his worthy flock deserve much credit for bringing to completion this fine enterprise.

The Shreveport District Conference met in the Queensboro Church, Shreveport, yesterday, beginning with a laymen's banquet from 6 to 8 o'clock p. m., which was followed by a sermon at the latter hour by Rev. T. H. Morris, of Mansfield.

Rev. B. W. Lewis, our pastor at Summit and East McComb, has brought us under obligations to him for a club of subscriptions, forwarded on the 8th inst. In his letter, Brother Lewis says: "We have just closed a great meeting at Summit. My three brothers assisted me, and we were honored by the presence of our father. The work is progressing favorably in my charge."

Rev. T. B. Clifford, of McComb, Miss., was in New Orleans last Tuesday, and paid the Advocate office an appreciated visit. Brother Clifford was en route home from Columbia, Miss., whither he had gone to officiate at a wedding. He spoke encouragingly of his work at McComb, where the church is active and he is having a pleasant pastorate. This congregation recently had the old parsonage sold and purchased a new one, which is one of the best in the Mississippi Conference.

On Wednesday evening, June 3, Rev. W. H. Coleman, the presiding elder, held in the First Methodist Church of Shreveport a joint quarterly conference for all our churches in that city. There was a large attendance of officials and members and the various reports submitted showed that gratifying progress is being made by all the congregations. A new church is being built at Cedar Grove; the finances are well up; there is a growing interest in the Epworth League work; the Sunday schools are prosperous, and about 250 members have been received into the several churches since the Annual Conference.

Rev. John B. Andrews, of Siloam Springs, Ark., and his singer, Prof. Thomas, passed through New Orleans last Thursday en route to Moss Point, Miss., where they are now engaged in a meeting. While in the city they found their way to the Advocate office, but the Editor was out and, much to his regret, missed seeing them. We have known Brother Andrews for several years and have a very high opinion of his work as an evangelist. We are always pleased to bear of his being employed in our patronizing territory, for the reason that we believe his efforts will make for the upbuilding of the Kingdom.

A card from Mrs. Purcell, of Montrose, Miss., bearing date of June 4, stated that her husband, Rev. James S. Purcell, Jr., had been called to the bedside of his mother, Mrs. J. S. Purcell, who was reported to be critically sick at her home at Plain Dealing, La. We regret very much indeed to be apprised of the serious illness of this good woman, whom we have known from boyhood, and we hope that ere this her condition is much improved. Sister Purcell is also the mother of Rev. G. D. Purcell of the Louisiana Conference. Let the readers of the Advocate remember her and the anxious loved ones at the throne of grace.

Rev. J. W. Faulk, of Sibley, La., has our hearty thanks for a nice list of subscriptions forwarded on June 2. In his communication he makes the following interesting reference to his work: "My charge is doing well. The attendance upon our Sunday schools has nearly doubled since Conference. It has been my pleasure to assist in the organization of one new school. I have seven appointments, and I hope to have two new organizations before the end of the year. One new appointment that I have taken on is very promising. I rarely ever preach to less than 150 people, and last Sunday the congregation numbered about 175."

Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, of West Monroe, La., writes: "On the evening of June 3, Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Benson, members of Miss May Faulk's Excelsior Bible Class, entertained at a barbecue dinner at their country place. The fatted calf, the fatted goat, ten fatted hens, and a good supply of other things made up the menu. Three large wagons (a hay ride) bore a party of sixty out to the scene. Torch-light tables and rustic seats made things comfortable and beautiful. (Oh, how ye city editor would enlarge on such an occasion!) So many good things occur in connection with our church here that it is a genuine delight to serve it." We are quite willing to have Brother Ledbetter feast and frolic and enjoy himself, but we must protest against his disposition to tantalize us as we sit and swelter at our desk these hot days.

Last Week's Corns

Made these shoes impossible. But Inez told me of Blue-jay.

I applied it and the pain stopped in a moment. In 48 hours all three corns came out.

No soreness whatever. I never thought of the corns from the moment I used Blue-jay. And now they are gone, to never return, unless tight shoes cause new ones.

This is the story of millions of corns which have been ended by Blue-jay. It will be the story of your corns when you use this one right method.

Don't pare them. Paring never ends a corn. Use the modern method.

A famous chemist, by inventing Blue-jay, has made corn troubles needless. Blue-jay takes corns out, without any trouble, without any annoyance. Apply it in a jiffy, then forget the corn.

It is taking out about one million corns a month. It is the method now used and endorsed by physicians. You owe to yourself a test.

The death angel entered the home of Brother H. C. Barber, on May 2, 1914, and claimed his precious wife, Sister Barber was born on March 11, 1856. She professed religion when but a girl when she joined the M. E. Church, South, and lived a faithful Christian life up to the time of her death. She sweetly fell on sleep and has gone home to be with her Lord forever. She leaves a husband and children to mourn their loss, but they weep not as those who have no hope, for we know she is safe in the home above. May God help us all to be ready when the summons comes to us. Her pastor.

R. C. KENNEDY.

At Belle Alliance, La., Friday, May 22, 1914, Mrs. MARIA LOUISE BARNETT GUSTINE, widow of the late Dr. Stephen Duncan Gustine, passed to her reward. Mrs. Gustine had been a member of the Methodist Church since girlhood, and was a devoted adherent to its teachings. Owing to the distance of her home from the Church she was deprived of the pleasure of regular attendance at religious services, but her home was a sanctuary in which she communed with God. For months before her translation she was a sufferer, but with Christian resignation she committed herself into the hands of God. She died in the assurance that her Redeemer liveth. A Christian mother, she sought to implant the principles of the Gospel in the lives of her children and others with whom she associated, and now that she has passed on they arise and call her blessed.

S. H. WERLEIN.

Mrs. Z. A. FARRELL (nee Crossley) was born near Summit, Miss., on June 15, 1862, and departed this life on March 27, 1914, at McComb City, Miss. She united with the Methodist Church early in life, and until her continued sickness prevented, was active in the performance of all her church duties. She was a good woman, modest, unassuming and helpful to all with whom she came in contact. Her last illness was long and painful, but she bore it without a murmur and when at last her tired body could bear the strain no longer, quietly surrendered, realizing that she had fought a good fight, had finished her course and had kept the faith, and that henceforth there was laid up for her a crown of righteousness. Her name is written in heaven and some sweet day we expect to meet her "beyond the sunset's radiant glow." THOMAS B. CLIFFORD.

Mrs. MARY ALONA LOTT was born at Varnado, La., May 8, 1884. She was a patient sufferer with paralysis for more than a month at her home in Foxworth, Miss., which affected her brain. She was finally conveyed to the Charity Hospital at Jackson, Miss., in the hope of recovery, but gradually grew worse and died there April 21, 1914, her remains being returned to Foxworth, where interment was made in the Fortenberry Cemetery, after funeral services were conducted by the writer at the Methodist Church, of which she had been a member since November, 1913. She was married to Mr. O. C. Lott about eight years ago, who, with three small children, Margie, Frank and the six months old baby, Albert, survives her. A devoted wife and mother she was, and her loss is keenly felt. While I was visiting her as her pastor, she gave utterance to her acceptance of Christ and that all was well with her soul. Three of her brothers, the Messrs. Glover, of Varnado and Bogalusa, La., attended the funeral with a host of sorrowing friends. May the Holy Spirit comfort and strengthen those who are bereft and may they prepare to meet her again in the sweet bye and bye! CHAS. E. DOWNER.

JOHN HUNT VEAZEY, the son of F. F. and Mollie E. Veazey, was born on April 29, 1867, at Coldwater, Miss., and died on January 27, 1914, in Memphis, Tenn. His whole life was spent at Coldwater, where he entered upon a business career before he had reached his majority. He was a success from the first and was recognized by all as one of our best merchants and citizens. He married Miss Emma Dulaney, of Guntown, Miss., Nov. 26, 1894. They had a beautiful home, and together with their two children they lived a happy life.

Brother Veazey joined the Methodist Church in March, 1895. He lived a clean life. He loved the Church and was always loyal in its support. He was a reverent and obedient son, a generous and sympathetic brother, a loving and tender husband, a kind and gentle father, and was faithful in all the relationships of life. He was distinguished for his uniform courtesy and his bright and optimistic spirit.

After he was operated on for appendicitis, it seemed for a time that he would be successful in his fight for his life, but suddenly a blood clot formed on his brain and he died. For one so young and with a life so full of promise to go suddenly from us, could not but shock his friends. Those who suffer most are his mother, his three brothers, his sister, and his wife and his children. We buried him at Coldwater on Jan. 30. Many were the tears that were shed and many were the hearts that ached, but we do not think of him as dead, but as living the life eternal.

W. H. MOUNGER, Pastor.

It was with deep regret that we were called upon to give up our beloved friend, Mrs. FRANCES HOSS. We knew her for years, and she was always faithful in filling her place at home and in the Church. Her very presence was an inspiration, and it was a privilege to kneel with her in prayer while she asked God's blessings upon everyone, especially the younger generation, with whom she mingled as a saintly mother in Israel. Mrs. Hoss was quiet and gentle in manner, and was never ruffled by the little annoyances that disturb most everyone at times—never a ripple seemed to disturb the calm of her soul. Her life suggested victory; her face revealed strength of character, firmness and determination. She came from Alabama, when but a child, living until recent years at her beautiful country home, five miles from Greenwood, La., where peace and plenty and the love of God made her life complete. Many were the kind deeds she did to brighten the lives of others. Her last day on earth, March 20, 1914, was her 53rd birthday, and she had planned to have her friends with her at a shower-party for the benefit of the Orphanage on that day. On several occasions she sewed, preparing with her own hands things to help fill a box for those motherless little ones at Ruston. She was not strong of late years, being a shut-in at home, yet her hands were busy while she peacefully awaited her Master's call. She was a member of the M. E. Church, South, for many years and a member of our Missionary Society. She will be greatly missed in both. If blossoms were thoughts, we would bring for memory's wreath clusters rife with beauty and fragrance and entwine with them this comforting one, "She did what she could," loving and serving her Lord until called to her heavenly reward.

Tidings From the Field

Sartinsville, Miss.

Dear Advocate: I want to say a few words relative to the best Children's Day I ever attended—the one held at Sartinsville, Miss., (Topisaw charge), on May 31, 1914. The Superintendent spent most of the night before in thought, meditation and prayer. The exercises consisted of recitations by several of the Sunday school scholars—some young children and some almost grown young people—with songs interspersed. The exercises concluded with a talk by the pastor to the children and a liberal contribution by the congregation. A basket dinner had been provided for those who wanted to remain for an afternoon preaching service, and as far as I could tell all of the large congregation remained. At least seventy-five people, old and young, came forward for prayer after the sermon, many of them under deep conviction and some weeping tears of repentance, while the whole congregation seemed moved by a mighty unseen power. These good people sent their preacher home with meat and molasses in his buggy and more money in his purse than he ever received in one day on any pastoral charge. As he went on his way the following came to him: "The gospel is still the power of God unto salvation;" and he determined to be more faithful in preaching and to continue to travel on the highway of holiness, turning neither to the right-hand nor to the left, but keeping in the middle of the road. Reader, pray for me, that I may carry out this resolution.—J. A. Wells.

Henry, La.

Dear Brother Meek: About four months ago I left Montrose, Miss., where my parents reside, for Henry, La., to take charge of the Henry Circuit, of which I had been appointed pastor by the presiding elder of the Lafayette District, Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir. I found the people in need of and eager to hear "the old, old story of Jesus and his love." We have on the charge three nice church buildings and some well-organized congregations. We have one church on Pecan Island which I reach by water. On this island the people are seemingly more ready to hear the gospel than elsewhere. We have not held our revival meetings yet, but we are planning to begin them. Pray for us, that we may have a great revival of religion in this part of the Lord's vineyard. I find that the one great drawback to religion in South Louisiana is Roman Catholicism. Those under its influence know nothing of the spiritual life given to us through Christ. Many of them, like Nicodemus, are in the dark as to the new birth. We need more men and more missionary money for South Louisiana, that the sins of this people may not be put to our account. I would say to the boys preparing for the ministry, "Try by all means to learn to speak the French language." Our members read the Advocate (most of them), and I think that if it could be published in French, I could secure a number of subscribers.—Wm. McPhearson, P. C.

Baton Rouge District.

The work of the District is advancing, and each man is planning for the revival campaign, which will now begin in earnest. The District Conference at Ponchatoula, which has just closed, was a spiritual meeting, and all feel better prepared for the evangelistic work that is ahead.

That true, tried, and faithful pastor, Rev. J. D. Harper, was a blessing, benediction, and constant help to the new and inexperienced elder while the late Conference was in session, while Brother Foster at the secretary's table was ever alert, and helped greatly when entanglements in the proceedings seemed inevitable. Brother Williams, the host of the Conference, has his work well in hand, and with the able assistance he has in his official board, is bringing things to pass. Brother Harper has plans in hand for the rebuilding of his church at Zachary, and when finished it will be one of the neatest and most convenient churches, for a small place, in this section.

Brother McCormack has in process of construction the best parsonage in the district, and his whole work prospers. Brother Lowrey, at Kentwood, is the master of that difficult situation, and the present prospects are promising. He has a hard field, but he never flinches. His recent meeting was a gracious blessing to his church, and to the town. As a part of the fruits, last night 25 joined our church, and there are others to follow.—H. W. Bowman.

TETTERINE WHEN OTHERS FAIL

That's the great thing about Tetterine skin remedy. It does insist upon relieving the severest cases of Tetter, Ringworm, Eczema, Itch, Acne, Pimples, etc., when others fall down. Mrs. S. E. Hart, Cross Trails, Ala., says: "I used Tetterine for tetter which has been running for 5 years. Nothing gave relief until I used your remedy and one box made a final cure." 50c at drugists or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

A PROPOSED MEMORIAL

(Published by request of Mrs. Adkisson, whose address is 125 S. Bois Darc Street, Tyler, Texas.)

To the Pupils and Friends of Dr. J. W. Adkisson.

Dear Friends:

I am raising funds for a superannuate home in Tyler, Texas, to be called Adkisson Memorial, by asking each pupil and friend of his, who feel like doing so, to give any amount he or she can, but at least one dollar, to this memorial fund and good cause.

My means are very limited, but I start the list with $50 for the present. Any one who desires to help in this, please send offering as soon as possible to me or to our presiding elder at this place.

MRS. J. W. ADKISSON.

Sister Adkisson is the widow of Rev. J. W. Adkisson, preacher and educator in Mississippi, and later of the North Texas and Northwest Texas Conferences, and her plan as set forth above to build a superannuate home meets our entire approbation and commendation.

J. T. SMITH.

Presiding Elder.

TO MEET NEXT WEEK.

The Monroe District Conference will convene on Tuesday, June 16, at 10 a.m., at Winnsboro, La. The following committees have been appointed: License to Preach and Admission on Trial—J. W. Lee, L. C. Wilson, and G. D. Purcell.

Deacon's and Elder's Orders—V. D. Skipper, A. I. Townsley, and E. C. Guice.

Special attention will be given to Missions on Wednesday, June 17. The Laymen's Missionary Movement will be among the things specially discussed. Let us do our best to make the Conference an occasion of spiritual uplift. WM. SCHUHLE, P. E. Monroe, La.

CALLED TO HIS REWARD.

About three years ago it was my privilege as a pastor to officiate at the funeral of a good lady who died at the ripe old age of 91. Two weeks ago it was my duty to officiate at the funeral of a brother who passed away at the advanced age of 94.

Brother John G. Stuckey was born in Lawrence County, near Silver Creek or White Sand. I do not recall which. He lived there until 25 years of age. He then came to Simpson County and settled at Harrisville. He joined the Church (Methodist) over 50 years ago, having been first a Baptist in belief. He was married twice, both of his wives being good Christian women. He was a good neighbor and citizen and a friend to the needy. He will be missed not only by his companions and one child, but by all who had known him. "Gone but not forgotten." He was laid to rest on May 22.

FROM LULA, MISS.

Dear Brother Meek: We have just closed a very successful meeting at Dubbs, an appointment on this charge. Brother E. H. Cunningham, of Myrtle, Miss., did the preaching. He is a strong preacher, and one of our best young men. He is fine help in a meeting. The people at Dubbs were very much revived and encouraged.

We have begun our meeting at Lula, with Brother W. S. Lagrone to do the preaching and Prof. W. K. Hasty of Tennessee to do the singing. We are having a good meeting. I will give you fuller reports after it closes.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons result and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To cure Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and drives out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, gall stones, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a thousand, on the average, report no benefit.

Box 17M, Shelton, S. C.

Shivar Spring,
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Mr. R. A. Madonn.

The Sunday school and church at Pelahatchie are using the right thing—building a new, handsome Church with up-to-date Sunday school rooms. Rev. J. T. Aubrey is the pastor and Brother F. M. Edwards the superintendent there.

I note that a good many churches in the Jackson and Hattiesburg Districts have not ordered Children's Day programs. Of course they all mean to observe the Day some time soon, but have just neglected to begin to get ready on account of other duties. If anything prevents you from having the complete program rendered, be sure to take the collection "for the work's sake."

The following are some features of the Sunday school program arranged for the Jackson District Conference at Brakton: The Pastor and Teacher Training, by Rev. O. S. Lewis; What Can the Pastor do for the Sunday School, Especially the Home Department, Rev. Fred Long; The Superintendent's Program for the Sunday School, Mr. J. C. Caven; The Country Sunday School—its Opportunities and Worth, Rev. R. P. Fikes; Week Sunday Schools, Finances, Literature, Helpful Plans, Rev. J. M. Morris; Getting Lesson Study, Duty of Teacher in this Respect, Prof. F. M. Ball; Round Table Discussion (Let all Ask Questions).

The presiding elder, Brother Hardin, states that this program will very likely be taken up on Wednesday afternoon of the District Conference.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Delightful bits of Sunday school printing find their way to my desk and one of special value and real interest to Philatheas is from the pen of Miss L. Dobbs, of Reanoke, Alabama. She takes each letter of that class name and around it builds a beautiful creed which many such classes already live daily. We give just an outline: Purpose, Happiness, Inspiration, Love, Activity, Truth, Helpfulness, Enthusiasm, Adoration.—Philatheas.

An ideal Sunday school should have a definite objective to which to work. Here are several heads that a superintendent's and workers' council should put on their calendar for future work: 1. Visitation. 2. Grading. 3. Education, that is teacher-training. 4. Records. 5. Finance and Benevolence. 6. Evangelization. 7. Missions. 8. Temperance. 9. Social life. 10. Bible Reading daily. 11. Publicity. 12. Sunday School Cabinet. 13. Definite Goals.

The high school credit for Bible study in public schools is the most remarkable stride along Bible study lines we have made in a long time. North Dakota and Colorado have had great success along the line of winning boys and girls to the study of the Bible. We would that every high school superintendent could be induced to study the question fully and prayerfully, and put the tried-out and successful system in his department. "It is necessary for the world to have the Bible in order to know how to do right and how to stop doing wrong."

There is nothing so indicative of the stability of these classes as the fine and helpful literature flowing from pens inspired by Wesley Class activities. Mention has been made before of Miss Slattery's book, "The Girl and Her Religion," and another review of this attractively bound and deeply helpful volume makes one insist that it should be in the hands of every teacher of girls, and better, should be placed in the hands of the girls themselves. One copy recently purchased and lent to a dozen people has produced unusual results and given new impetus to the solution of the girl problem.

REVIVAL AT ACKERMAN, MISS.

Dear Brother Meek: We closed a good meeting here to-day. I began last Sunday week and on Monday afternoon Brother J. J. Smylie of Louisville, Miss., came and did the preaching from that time to the end. The gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ was presented by him with great force and with an excellent spirit. It did our people good—stirred their consciences and left them with a truer vision of the Christian life. We had five accessions to our Church. Brother Smylie is splendid help in a revival.

Cordially,
J. W. WYATT.

MARRIED.

On June 3, 1914, at the home of her Aunt, Miss Cora Regan, at Cheraw, Miss., by Rev. Chas. E. Downer, Mr. LEE GREEN and Miss INA REGAN.

THE DURANT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The place for holding the Durant District Conference is Goodman, Miss., and the time when it will begin is July 7. The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. E. Nash Broyles on Tuesday night. The two delegates elected from each pastoral charge, all Sunday school superintendents, exhorters, local preachers, and recording stewards are members. It is earnestly hoped that all the brethren will be on hand for the opening sermon and for the roll call on Wednesday, July 8, at 9 o'clock a. m. Goodman is expecting you; do not disappoint that splendid people. The Church needs you. We can not transact its business as it ought to be done unless you come. The Lord expects YOU (not the angels) to do his work here, and duty loudly calls you. Come and give us your assistance.

THE EDITH HIGGINBOTHAM MEMORIAL HOME.

This attractive home was recently donated to the Methodist Orphanage at Ruston, La., by Mr. and Mrs. Lawson Higginbotham, of Mer Rouge, La., to be used as a residence for the Superintendent of that institution. This splendid gift was made as a memorial to their lamented daughter, Edith, whose name the structure bears. It was formally consecrated by Bishop Murrah some weeks ago.

Woman's Missionary Work

Editorial by Mrs. E. P. Barrett, Danville, Miss.

Conference Publicity Department:

President: Mrs. A. C. McElmer, Boston, Mass.
 Vice-President: Mrs. J. L. Nell, Little Rock, Ark.
 Secretary: Mrs. Walter Campbell, Winona, Minn.

All communications for this department should be sent to the Editor at the address given above.

The work of foreign missions is not in the field but in the home last. In all fields it would be quite possible to double the work and quadruple the efficiency if the church at home were aroused. The Christian women in America who will take in their field the awakening and energizing of the churches are doing missionary work of the greatest value.—Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery.

MRS. MCKINNEY'S TOAST.

Some months ago Mrs. McKinney, our Louisiana Publicity Superintendent, presented a toast to the women of our State. She gave it in them at the annual meeting and it provoked much applause, but whether there were any good results therefrom we have not heard. Judging from the number of communications from Louisiana since that meeting we deem it advisable to "fix" their memories for they have surely forgotten that they have a third interest in this department.

We who are in the publicity work are frequently receiving letters from our constituency expressing their sorrow for their time of omission. Having received so many of these, Mrs. McKinney prepared her toast on this wise:

"We're sorry we remember, and sorry we forget.
 Just judging by our letters we are a sorry set.
 We mean to start reforming in the life and bye.
 Better use the now and now, don't you think? Let's try."

Isn't for one moment think that this applies only to the women of Louisiana. It is for every one whom the stars look in.

CO-OPERATIVE HOME LAUNCHED FOR GIRLS AT CORINTH, MISS.

The house has been rented and work begun in cleaning and furnishing it for the Girls Co-operative Home in Corinth. It is suitably located and well adapted to this cause. While this home is located in Corinth and managed by a band of Corinth people and our Conference Deaconess, it is under the management of the North Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society, and the North Mississippi women feel a special interest and pride in it. A call is made to those auxiliaries who feel they can, to furnish table and bed linen, quilts, spreads, etc., and Miss Daniel asks that each piece be marked "Co-operative Home." All such donations should be sent to Mrs. E. T. McCullar, Corinth, Miss., Chairman Linen Committee. Any information desired may be obtained from either Mrs. McCullar or Miss Mary Daniel, Corinth, Miss.

BUDDHIST EFFORTS TO ESTABLISH THEIR SYSTEM OF ETHICS.

Rev. Wm. Acton, superintendent of our work on the Pacific Coast, has written a very able leaflet entitled "Orientals in the United States." It contains much that is intensely interesting, as well as some very startling facts about the doctrines which these Orientals are promulgating, and the strenuous efforts put forth by them to establish their system of ethics. In speaking of the Japanese he says: "Every Japanese is supposed to be a Buddhist, and the Buddhists are putting forth strenuous efforts to establish and perpetuate their system of ethics. One of the most beautiful temples is found in Seattle.

A $7,000 temple has recently been erected in Los Angeles and a $10,000 building is being planned to be built in 1915 in San Francisco. They use our evangelistic methods, provide formalized and regular schools and Sunday services. A Young Men's Buddhist Association and a Young Women's Buddhist Association are among the most recent innovations. The census reports seven Japanese Buddhist temples with numerous "Sunday schools" and 300 pupils.

A MESSAGE FROM QUEEN WILHELMINA.

The Continental Committee of the Edinburgh Conference on Missions met at The Hague. At the first session Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands sent a personal message of welcome to the committee. The following are the closing paragraphs of the message:

"It is my earnest desire that the unity of all Christ's followers, members of his invisible fellowship, may be ever more and more deeply felt, and that our Savior may win our hearts to more and more fervent united prayer."

"May our zeal be renewed and renewed and may all the laborers in God's vineyard be fitted for the task to which they are personally called. May the truth which is in Christ enlighten the darkness of human misery, and may the unsearchable riches of his divine love awaken joy and gladness in the hearts of all God's creatures."

WITH OUR MISSIONARIES.

Miss Mary Cullen White, of Szechow, China, reached home April 30. Her health is such that the Chairman of our Medical Board advises complete rest for six months. We know this will prove a real cross to this consecrated worker, for China's needs are so near to her heart that she will want to present them to her friends and the public right away. She is with her aunt, Mrs. J. B. Cobb, at her summer home in Monticello, Tenn.

Miss Kate Cooper, who has been at home on her first furlough, will sail from San Francisco on July 21, in company with Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Gerdine. Miss Cooper has done a beautiful work in Korea as Principal of the Alice Cobb Bible School at Wonsan. Those who had the pleasure of meeting her, during this period of rest, were deeply impressed with her wonderful spirituality.

The missionaries in Korea have been in rather a depleted condition during the past few months. Misses Oliver and Graham have both been operated on for appendicitis, and Miss Hortense Tinsley, of Songdo, is now recovering from a six months' attack of typhoid fever.

WESLEYAN DEACONESSSES.

Dr. William Bradfield, the fraternal delegate from the Wesleyan Methodist Church to the General Conference of our own Church, is the warden of the Wesley Deaconess Institute at Ikley. The deaconess order came into the Wesleyan Church in 1890, when their first training school was inaugurated. Two years of probationary service are required after their deaconess candidates have had training before they are consecrated. The deaconess uniform is dark blue, and the probationer's uniform is gray. There are 253 deaconesses in the Wesleyan Church of England.

"THE OLD RED MILL" TURNS CANE JUICE INTO DOLLARS

Not any cane mill will turn the cane into the mill you want is the one that will grind out the most DOLLARS while it processes the juice.

You want a cane mill that is strong, long-lasting, fully finished and economical in operation. You want a mill made by the Chattanooga Plov Co., a mill that is famous for its economy and its strength.

THE OLD RED MILL is a mill which years of use has proved the best under all conditions and for all varieties of sugar cane and sorghum—the planter's standby.

Has steel shafts, almost no friction, steel set screws which regulate pressure on rolls, preventing mashing at ends; patent bottoms preventing juice from wasting or getting in oil box; working parts enclosed; strongest, easy and economical to operate; most reasonable in price and so simple a child can run it.

Thousands in use—each one an actual proof of the superiority of "THE OLD RED MILL" over any mill made.

The Old Red Mill is always ready—always reliable—ranges in size from light one-horse to four-horse—and is customarily proportioned by proved principles.

Before you think of buying a cane mill write for our free catalogue describing the unequalled Chattanooga line. Write now and it will be sent you immediately, without one penny of cost to you. It contains clear and accurate illustrations and descriptions of our mills and tells just what to seek and what to avoid when buying cane mills of any make. Write to-day.

AT SHANNON.

Dear Dr. Meek: From two to ten workmen with managing committee and numerous contributors have "kept busy" for the latest several weeks at Shannon, North Mississippi Conference, and as a consequence the Methodist parsonage at this place has undergone a metamorphosis, and has been "recast" and finished within and without. This property occupies nearly half a block, two residences from the Methodist Church, and the lot contains ample room for premises and also garden, barn, and grass patch. Previously this minister's home has been valued at $1000, but since the very excellent twentieth century changes and finishing it is now easily worth $2000 even at the modest valuation of real estate in the well located and delightfully surrounded town of Shannon. The Committee Managers were most helpfully attentive. The Home Mission Society of this church paid $80 and numerous enthusiastic contributors cheered the movement as the work went forward.

The salary of the Shannon charge incumbent was placed above previous figures by the representing stewards, and our presiding elder of Aberdeen, Rev. J. W. Bell, was kind enough to express himself as "delighted" at his last call to the quarterly meeting. He ought to have been delighted if fine lodging at a nice Methodist Hotel and a fine dinner at the Brewer Church could help a presiding elder to enjoy himself. But he had reference chiefly, of course, to the look of things in this pastoral charge. But the nice treatment went far, no doubt, toward giving him a pleasant and delightful feeling. That "Jake" horse, too, drove immensely well and the big fine plantations hereabout looked encouraging. Anyway, he was "delighted," and we felt a sense of encouragement to hear him say it, since it is known to him that parsonage gains and other sorts of gains in any way desirable do not come about by chance.

Dr. W. E. Vaughan, of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, has lately visited at Shannon and occupied my pulpit much to the gratification of this congregation. He was reared in this important vicinity and has brothers and sisters here who are prominent in Church and community interests.

Rev. V. C. Curtis, Sunday School Field Secretary, also recently spent two days here and discussed numerous phases of the Sunday school work and was heard with satisfaction by a fair per cent of the Shannon population. The days, however, were inclement and not so many were present as otherwise could have been.

A committee was lately appointed by the quarterly conference here to take under advisement the propriety of enlarging the church at this place, adding at least something in fine and needed improvements so as to bring the house of worship more into harmony with the many costly homes and substantial ability of the Methodist congregation.

Pleasure is expressed here at the great and good work done by the General Conference delegation at Oklahoma City, and by all signs the majority report as adopted on the Vanderbilt University question will give satisfaction. Some new Bishops were anticipated, but the worthy and distinguished men of the present College of Chief Superintendents may meet the reasonable demands.

THE FERNWOOD (MISS.) MEETING.

Dear Brother Meek: Our union tabernacle meeting came to a close here on Tuesday evening, June 2. The meeting did much for the cause of Christianity in the community. The church membership was very much strengthened and revived, and there were 160 reclamations and conversions. The preaching of Brother J. B. Andrews, of Siloam Springs, Ark., was strong, plain, practical, Scriptural and moving. He hit sin many hard blows and put the question of a Christian life before the people in the light of the teachings of Jesus.

When he hits hard it is backed up by earnestness and tenderness, and the sting of such strokes produces conviction and brings results.

Brother Andrews believes in a working church membership and puts the matter of saving the lost before the Church as the one thing for which the Church was founded by the Master, and the one thing for which the Church is continued on earth to-day. A saved Church will strive to save the lost.

Much of the success of the meeting was due to the singing of Brother John E. Thomas and the playing of Mrs. Thomas. Brother Thomas and his wife are both earnest, consecrated Christian workers. He has a well-trained voice, is a good organizer, and is a splendid leader of the choir, and Mrs. Thomas is a pianist of exceptional ability, and has a well-trained, sweet voice. I can heartily recommend these three earnest Christian workers to any and every one needing evangelistic assistance. To the people of Fernwood is due much credit for the very splendid preparations made for their meeting. One of the best tabernacles ever put up for Brother Andrews anywhere was built and furnished with good lights and comfortable seats. This tabernacle will be allowed to remain for use in the future, and will be used some by the churches of the town on hot summer nights. W. H. SAUNDERS.

LELAND AND HOLLANDALE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: My revival meetings for the year have been held. Rev. D. E. Kelly, one of the Mississippi Conference evangelists, led in the fight at Leland. It was a hard-fought battle, but a big victory was scored. Some 15 or twenty heads of families pledged themselves to erect family altars, and the membership generally was greatly revived. Twenty-one new members were received during the meeting. Brother Kelly is a strong, forceful and fearless gospel preacher. He has no "set" methods, and uses no "clap-trap" schemes. He prays for and endeavors to follow the leadership of the Holy Spirit. Indeed, the Church was wise in creating the office of evangelist, and the Mississippi Conference made no mistake in sending out Dan Kelly. His brother, John, is a noble Christian character and a fine cornetist. They both won the hearts of this people, as was shown in a substantial way, and by the presence of a large crowd at the depot at 10 p.m., to say good by, and reassure them of their prayers and good wishes. I was assisted at Hollandale by Rev. J. T. Lewis, our popular pastor at Greenville. The meeting resulted in a splendid revival, and the preaching was pleasing and acceptable to all denominations. Brother Lewis is one of the leading pastors of the North Mississippi Conference and a good helper in meetings. My charge is in fine shape and the outlook most favorable for the best annual report yet made. The pressure of work at home has caused me to cancel one engagement and refuse to make others with my brethren to assist in meetings. But I am to enter the campaign within a few days at Durant, and will be busy in revivals for a long season. Being a pastor, it is impossible to go to all the brethren who call for help. I wish I could. With the present arrangements, there are only about two dates I could crowd in for meetings between this and the second week in September. L. WESLEY CAIN.

THE MISSIONARY VOICE.

By F. W. Pinner, D.D.

The Missionary Voice will be continued. The Board after thorough discussion say that question at rest. Therefore let all minds be easy. The suggestion for a change in the Board's publicity methods did not grow out of the failure of The Voice, either financially or otherwise. A few facts will show this:

1. Though less than four years old, it has a far larger circulation than any other missionary periodical ever had in our Church. It has a larger circulation than any other periodical in the Church outside the Sunday school literature.

2. The circulation is growing. It is now 44,000. The increase was 2521 paid subscriptions last year. It has increased at the rate of 20% per month since the first of January.

3. The total cost of printing and circulating The Voice last year was only $2304 more than the income from subscriptions. The deficit on Go Forward the last year it was printed was $22.22. Go Forward was a paper less than half the size and with less than half the circulation of The Voice.

4. It is reaching a larger circle of readers, with a greater quantity of matter, at smaller cost to the Church than any other periodical ever published in the Church.

The Editorial Secretaries did not confine their labors to The Voice. The supposition that they did is unjust to them and unfair to the board. Indeed this was not the larger part of their duties. The decision of the General Conference to repeal the provision for Editorial Secretaries is no discount on the work they have done, nor does it mean that this work is not to be continued. It simply means that in the judgment of the General Conference the editorial work of the Board can be provided for otherwise at less expense and perhaps with equal efficiency. This remains to be tested. We have had skilled and proven editorial service for three years. The Editorial Secretaries have given diligent and painstaking attention to the task of making a worthy and strong periodical. It will not be easy to fill their places and supply the lack of their skill and experience. This much we promise, however: We will keep The Voice going; we will not neglect to provide for its careful and competent editing; we will attempt to maintain its high standard and study to improve it and to increase its effectiveness. It will be continued at the same low price of 50 cents.

We should have 100,000 subscribers to The Voice. They can be had. Let us resolve to get them, and go after them.

SCIENCE EXPLAINS POPULARITY OF COCA-COLA.

What is it that makes Coca-Cola so popular? Is it the delicious, refreshing, satisfying flavor, imparted by a rare combination of perfumes of choice fruits, or is there something else that at least contributes to the wonderful success of this most remarkable beverage?

Advertising? Yes, but even the best advertising can do no more than induce the public to try an article once.

Now is the Best Time to Join the New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club

School will soon be out! Why not order your piano now and let the girls and boys take music lessons during the long summer vacation? A musical education fits young men and young women for the BEST there is in life. It develops them socially, intellectually and morally.

The best piano at the LOWEST price on the most convenient terms of payment—that is what is claimed for the New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club and the claim is substantiated by more than a thousand Club members who have placed their orders through the Club and have experienced the benefits of the greatest money-saving opportunity ever offered to piano buyers.

Self-Player Pianos for the Old Folks.

If your musical education was neglected so that you have been deprived of the pleasures of music do not inflict your children with a similar handicap for life. Let them learn music while they are young, while they have plenty of time and while their minds are receptive. Encourage them by providing a splendid piano, or better still, a combination piano and self-player which every member of the family can use and enjoy. The Ludden & Bates self-player gives you the two instruments in one, and the saving effected by the Club makes it cost you no more than you would ordinarily pay for a plain piano.

You Are Invited to Join

By uniting our orders in a Club of one hundred buyers we get the benefits of a big wholesale transaction. Thus each Club member helps every other Club member in helping himself. You are responsible only for your own purchase, and as the Management secures the other ninety-nine members, you have nothing to do but place your own order. Every feature of the Club is guaranteed so that there is absolutely no possibility of dissatisfaction.

Special Bargains in Used Pianos

If you feel that you cannot afford a new piano at this time write for bargain list of used instruments which we have received from Club members in exchange for new pianos and player-pianos. The lot includes a great many of the leading makes, some of which are practically new. All have been thoroughly renovated in our Atlanta shop and are in first-class condition.

We offer these rebuilt pianos at unusually attractive prices, guarantee satisfaction and the privilege of exchanging for a new instrument at any time, allowing you full credit for the price paid. Send for descriptive list or write us how much you wish to pay, and we will select the best value then in stock and ship subject to your approval.

and if it proves disappointing they will never buy it again.

Why does a glass of Coca-Cola quench the thirst and relieve fatigue so much more perfectly than a glass of sweetened water or of lemonade? In the answer to this question you will find the explanation of the nationwide popularity of Coca-Cola, for scientists tell us that Coca-Cola owes its refreshing and fatigue-relieving quality to the presence of caffeine, a vegetable substance found in tea, coffee, cocoa, chocolate and mate.

Although caffeine is not a natural ingredient of the human body and in fact is found only in plants it nevertheless belongs to the same family, chemically speaking, as xanthin (pronounced xan-thin) which is a constant ingredient of all fresh meats. Xanthin is always present in the human body and is particularly abundant in meat extracts, such as beef tea whose effect in relieving fatigue is similar to that of Coca-Cola. Caffein is trimethyl-xanthin and when taken into the human body is converted, by its own combustion, into xanthin which is the refreshing principle found in fresh meats, and dimethyl-xanthin, the refreshing substance found in chocolate. So close is the resemblance between the xanthin of meats and the caffeine of plants that we may regard caffeine as the nearest approach to xanthin, to be found in the vegetable kingdom.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the bodies of young people contain a larger proportion of xanthin than do those of elderly people. As youth is notable for its vivacity, alertness and enthusiasm, and old age is characterized by conservatism and sedateness, it seems probable that the xanthin of the human body has the same refreshing and enlivening effect as does the caffeine of Coca-Cola, tea and coffee.

If you would like to understand more fully what makes Coca-Cola the ideal temperance drink write for free booklet containing the analyses and expert opinions by the leading scientists of America and Europe. Address the Advertising Managers of this paper, Messrs. Jacobs & Company, Clinton, S. C.

Editorial

"The King of love my Shepherd is,
His goodness faileth never;
I nothing lack if I am his,
And he is mine forever."

We have had Children's Day in the Church for several years and it is also gradually coming in the State. And when it does, childhood will be safeguarded from blighting diseases, will be protected from overwork in unwholesome places, and will have the door of opportunity set wide open before it. The nation that cares most efficiently for its youth will have the largest and noblest future.

Count Zeppelin, of Germany, is quoted as saying that he sees no reason why regular passenger air ship lines should not be maintained between London, Berlin, Stockholm and other European cities. There is no difficulty about the lines, but the question is, Can the air crafts be guaranteed to travel them? If our memory serves us right, those hitherto constructed by Count Zeppelin have shown rather a roaming and tumbling disposition.

In majestic men there is always a rock-like quality. They are capable of withstanding both the seductive appeal of flattery and the shock of opposition. Lobbyists soon discover that it is useless to waste their efforts upon them. They think for themselves and are not afraid to stand alone in defeat, if necessary. Such characters are far too rare. The majority of the genus homo are of the jelly-fish variety; they can be molded almost at will by persons of stronger mind and purpose. They are prone to flop when pressure is brought to bear upon them; hence one never knows to-day where they will be found to-morrow. It is a pity that such weaklings should ever find their way into places of responsibility and be made the custodians of sacred trusts. But too often it is the case that their lack of convictions is the very thing that gives them popularity.

After a patriotic and futile effort to do something to improve the labor situation in Colorado, Judge Ben Lindsey is quoted as having declared, a few days since, that the courts of that State are "owned by the corporations, like office boys." If the Judge doesn't mind, he will have some indignant lawyer, or preacher, or church editor, to rise up and read him a lecture on the outrageous evil of reflecting upon the immaculate courts of the land. Some of these gentlemen even go to the extent of insisting that judges, regardless of what their religious character may be, are entirely competent to determine all questions of moral obligation for Christian people. This is a great age when the secular courts are so pure that their decisions are infallible compasses for the guidance of the consciences of men who belong to the Church of God. Surely, the Millennium must be near at hand!

OUT INTO LIFE'S ARENA.

Our institutions of learning have, as they do every year, lately been turning out large numbers of young men and young women who are now standing upon the threshold of active life. With eager hopes, and yet with not a little anxiety, they will soon be finding their way into the various vocations of human society and mixing and mingling with the stirring and busy world. They are needed, and we heartily welcome them to places among earth's many toilers. It will perhaps seem to them at first that practically every position is filled and that there is no demand for their services, but such a view is a wholly mistaken one. They will need but to exercise a little patience and the doors of opportunity will begin to swing open. There is always room for competent workers; no calling is so crowded that persons who are proficient may not hope to achieve success in it. One thing that beginners need specially to guard against is becoming discouraged. Too often when their first efforts yield meager results they become depressed and are disposed to give up their chosen profession and try something else. Such variableness is nearly always unwise and harmful. It is the persistent who triumph in any undertaking.

But while it gives us pleasure to speak this word of cheer to the recruits that our schools are giving us, we would not for anything mislead them. The world which they are entering is an exacting one. Diplomas and degrees count for little in its affairs. It does not care much for what one has done—it wants to know what one can do now. It will not long recognize any claim but that of efficiency. The man who can do best the work that society wants done is the one who will soon have the right of way and be honored and rewarded. The field of service is a great democracy in which all meet upon a common level, and the most skillful wins, whether he be a university man or one who has scarcely gone to school at all. Scholastic training counts only as it enables one to show himself strong and superior in the real arena of life.

There are two or three additional things that we desire to say in this brief homily. First, we wish to urge those who are about to begin their life work not to set too high an estimate upon what the world adjudges to be success. To be sure, it is right for one to strive for the highest proficiency in his calling, whatever it may be, and to make his powers and opportunities count for the utmost possible, and to amass a fortune or to become a man of distinction are achievements that are not to be belittled. But the heart should not be so set upon such ends that one would be willing to stoop to unworthy methods to attain them. It is far better and nobler to live in poverty and obscurity with high ideals and the character unsoiled than to have a shining career procured by questionable expedients that have lowered the tone of one's conscience and made him less loyal to his intuitive conceptions of right. As men are greater than things, the sacrifice of manhood is too large a price to pay for any prize, no matter how glittering. The worthiest of all ambitions is to be useful to one's fellow-beings, and he who is most so approaches most nearly the highest standard in life. Not what we get out of the world for self, but what we put into it for others, is the true measure of the extent to which we succeed in this earthly sphere of existence.

Though we know that to do so will be to repeat a platitude, we would, furthermore, exhort the beginners in the race of life to grasp fully the important truth that they have not finished but have really only begun their education. The most valuable thing that one gets out of a college course is not what he secures in the way of information, but the mental muscle that he takes on, the capacity that he develops for the further acquisition of knowledge. Too often it is the case that when the young teacher, or lawyer, or physician, or agriculturist leaves college, after having been graduated, he ceases to study. Soon he becomes rusty, an arrested mental development follows, he gets behind in his profession, and, worst of all, he forms habits of intellectual indolence which are exceedingly difficult to overcome. Here, in our opinion, is the explanation of a large number of the failures made in life by educated young men and young women. Those who continue to apply themselves continue to grow with the passing years and to attain to larger things; but those who do not do so are soon in the rear of the procession and are daily left further behind. Truth is ever forging forward, and they who would keep abreast of her must not lose the step of progress.

One thing more: If the young people who are passing from the shelter of home and school out into the world are wise they will give religion its proper place in their lives. Because of its restraining influence and the notion that it might abridge their pleasures, many apparently are indisposed to do this; but if they yield to this disinclination they make a serious mistake and take risks that are very grave indeed. There is no worthy element of manhood that is not re-enforced and strengthened by Christianity, and from it come the loftiest aspirations and the most uplifting incentives that can stir and sway the human soul. It only can furnish a horizon that is wide enough to enable a life to rise to majestic proportions. And it should be remembered that the Church is the visible expression of the invisible Kingdom of God and the chief agency through which its regenerating and transforming forces operate. With all its weaknesses and imperfections, the Church is the world's mightiest moral power, and he who remains aloof from it and denies himself its benefits and blessings, imposes upon himself the necessity of living and laboring at a great disadvantage. The men who have accomplished most for the human race and who have left behind the most enduring monuments of their service have been churchmen. A roll call of the world's foremost citizens to-day would show, with few exceptions, that they are connected with our various religious denominations. Therefore, we urge the young men and young women who are on the eve of taking up life's tasks and burdens not to neglect the ordinances and activities of the Church which are so calculated to steady and strengthen them and to develop the best that is in them.

These words at the Washington meeting have been very carefully read by our Lord and it is believed by those of whom there has been religious training in the transforming power of the Spirit of God and the new creation and abundant life which He sends. There is a long list of names listed in your magazine. It is the desire of the Church with its leaders of about twenty have not had your reports of missions and other work reports of missionaries and workers. We hear from you both now in strong numbers and would be surprised your contributions when the next meeting before, but it was extremely warm and abundant. Your testimony given was the whole thing too suffered with you. Amen.

I. Dr. Hager has told us how he came to even a state where he was pastor of a church in an interior town in England having what might be called "imaginary" and yet "real" as if the thing of the life were just rolling in the trough of the wave. One of the ablest young men of "our order" having left even missionary service in China, went in to Dr. Hager's parish in the full and freedom of complete abandonment to the divine good pleasure. His work, circulating with "Prophetic Bulletin" of the same name as Dr.
 Hager's volume of his "miscellaneous" (later a volume proper) is deemed to be affecting in China the one with its eye in the chambers of the life but he was wearing his little bag in a moment by the temptations of his nature imbi-ning a moral indifference which he presumed to think was a matter of indifference. Then came the convincing sense that Christ was gone away saying: "Ye put in for Christ me with all, soul to me, soul to all." Hager is the very symbol of his state held out the little bag in his hand, saying: "Take it to me seem to have the strength to give it me if you will come back and take it to a power." Christ came and took it and in was not a moment before the little dismissed and its contents were forever cleared away, and Dr. Hager was forth in the many years of world-reaching service and power.

There were several remarkable points of view in the development of the spiritual life and individual energy of Mr. Moody. One was of

But the effectiveness of any proposed public health measures are not the in hands of management in the community. Managers are required to make many tough choices for their patients and to provide education and advice regarding their choices and in managing the needs of patients. In making the decision to accept more work and more financial risks in their organizations and then when they are to be charged they are liable to more than in the past. In fact in 1995, the annual expenditure on health care in the United States is expected to reach $1.2 trillion, up from $1.0 trillion in 1994. The total health care in the United States is expected to reach $1.5 trillion in 1995.

For a young minister to graduate from college in utter ignorance of Greek inflections and conjugations, in utter ignorance of Algebraic formulas and geometrical axioms, may seem unpardonable; but for a young minister to graduate from college in total ignorance of the intolerable conditions under which many men and women work and live; the great needs of their impoverished lives and the burdens which freight their souls, is a positive and criminal disgrace. "That men are to be trained, not by pouring knowledge into them, but by inducing them to act on the truth they know, is now an axiom of modern education" upon which it would be well for theological colleges to act, and act promptly.

NEW PUBLICITY POLICY ADOPTED AT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE AT OKLA- HOMA CITY.

Committee on Publishing Interests.

REPORT No. 1.

There was referred to your committee for consideration the section of the Episcopal Address relating to Publishing Interests, and a memorial from the Southern Methodist Press Association concerning the need of a better publicity service in the Church, and a resolution signed by W. P. Whaley, R. B. E. Key, and J. O. A. Bush, setting forth the need of a Church paper and recommending that the General Conference and Conference organs be so coordinated and combined as to give our Church news a more general circulation and our papers a more dependable support.

We incorporate here one significant paragraph from the Episcopal Address:

"Besides these publications which issue from our Publishing House at Nashville, Tenn., we have papers published to serve a single Annual Conference, or a group of Annual Conferences, and which are commonly called 'Conference organs.' These periodicals render most valuable service, and they constitute an important interest of the Church, which should receive careful attention. None of them receives the support which it deserves, and the circulation of all of them falls below what the highest success of the Church requires. The matter is commended to your consideration with the expression of the hope that some effectual means may be devised to promote the advancement of this increasingly important interest. These Conference organs ought not to be treated as personal enterprises and private concerns and left to languish through indifference and neglect upon the part of our people."

Realizing the unusual importance of the matter before us, and recognizing the need of a more vigorous publicity policy for the whole Church, we gave the question long and painstaking consideration, and beg leave to make the following recommendations:

1. Your committee would recommend that the General Conference determine and declare its purpose to have an authorized Conference organ, or the general organ in every home connected with the Church; and that the Church itself own and control all its authorized Church papers, as soon as that may be made possible, either through the Annual Conference control or General Conference control; and that merely local or independent Church papers beyond a congregational bulletin where that may be desired, should not be encouraged, but that the regular authorized papers be supported; and that the General Boards and Conference Boards of the Church should co-operate in the matter of publicity.

2. Your committee would recommend also that a central publicity bureau be established by the Book Committee, somewhat after the plan of the Associated Press in a modified form, to furnish promptly all matters of general news and interest to all authorized papers throughout the connection, and that this bureau be under the direction of the Publishing Agents and be maintained by the Publishing House as one of the legitimate expenses of general Church publicity.

Your committee would recommend, further, that, in order to effectively carry out the publicity policy thus previously indicated, the Book Committee be charged with the duty of dividing the whole Church territory into several districts and of seeking to combine papers where there are now more than are needed in any given area. And also that each Annual Conference select at its next session auxiliary advisory commissions consisting of three members whose duty it shall be to effect a change from private to Conference ownership and control wherever practical and to otherwise co-operate with the General Committee in carrying out the publicity policy of the Church.

4. Your committee would recommend also that a change be made in Chapter 2, Section 4, Paragraph 90, Question 19, of the Discipline of 1910; as follows: Strike out Question 19 as it now is, and insert the following in its stead: "Is there a copy of the general organ or Conference organ in every family of the charge, and if not, has a diligent effort been made to secure the same?" so that the paragraph when changed will read as follows: Chapter 2, Section 4, Paragraph 90, Question 19: "Is there a copy of the general organ or Conference organ in every family of this charge, and has diligent effort been made to secure the same?"

5. Your committee would recommend also that a new question be inserted in the Discipline, Chapter 2, Section 2, Paragraph 52, Discipline of 1910, asking for a report from the preachers in the Annual Conference on the number of copies of the general organ and Conference organ in the pastoral charge, so that the question when inserted shall read as follows: Chapter 2, Section 2, No. 47. "How many copies of the general organ and the Conference organ are taken? Answer, General.....Conference..... and that number now appearing as 47, 48, and 49, in Chapter 2, Section 2, Paragraph 52, be changed to 48, 49, and 50, respectively.

Respectfully submitted,

E. G. B. MANN, Chairman.
J. W. PERRY, Secretary.

A DESIDERATUM.

A late Lutheran writer says, "A republic cannot long exist as a republic without popular education." I would add, that such an education must be a proper one, in order to insure the perpetuity and prosperity of the republic. Since "Righteousness exalteth a nation," a system of public pedagogics should be a righteous one. Such a system involves the inculcation of Christian morals and ethics, coupled with a consistent discipline. To effectually operate this feature of public instruction, exemplary Christian teachers who are not bigoted sectarians are indispensable. Because of their authority and opportunities, teachers of day schools are more responsible for the disposition and character of their pupils than mere Sabbath school teachers are. If thoroughly alive to this, they will not limit their efforts and influence to chapel service, but will supplement such exercises, either in person or by proxy, with a diligent surveillance over the conduct of their pupils, both in and out of school—holding them accountable for their conduct from the time they leave their homes to go to school until their return home.

Such teachers too, will, when convenient, participate in the games and plays on the school premises in order to encourage practical conformity to their righteous teachings. Exemplary Christian teachers of day schools are both efficient auxiliaries to proper home training and influence, and potent counteractants to improper home training and influence. Such indeed are great blessings to "this land of the free and home of the brave."

The writer was a teacher of day schools, both public and private, for more than thirty years, and therefore is a competent witness to the feasibility and efficacy of the foregoing features of a system of education. He invariably and impartially observed it, and rarely ever had to inflict corporal punishment, or expulsion from school for bad conduct. It has been twenty years since he resigned the profession of teaching, and now in his old age—being past eighty-three years—he rejoices to witness much of the good ripe fruits of his early sowing in the public schools.

To entirely relegate Bible instruction to the Churches and denominational schools, is a great error upon the part of teachers of public schools. They occupy a position in which, by ignoring denominational differences, they can the more easily and effectually propagate a liberal Protestantism, which will result in bringing the different Christian sects into closer fraternal fellowship and co-operation, and thereby make impregnable one of the main pillars of our republic, which is the public school.

In conclusion, let me emphasize the fact that the signs of the times indicate more clearly than ever, that one of the most potent things to secure the perpetuity of our free institutions is a proper education in the public schools.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE GOSPEL.

(A paragraph from Rev. T. W. Lewis' sermon at the recent Commencement of the A. & M. College, at Starkville, Miss., the theme of which was "The Power of the Gospel.")

Think a moment what this Gospel has done for the world. Tonight it enters a home where sin revels, takes hate out of the heart, robs the husband of his love of drink, put fresh roses in the faded cheeks of the wife, and fills the hearts of the children with songs of joy. It builds asylums for the old, homes for the orphans, hospitals for the sick and a place of refuge for the fallen. It is transforming society, politics and the world. It pours its rich effulgence of heavenly light upon the barbarous races of the earth and makes the capable of self-government. It fosters the sweetest charity and encourages the sublimest philanthropy. It blesses life's morning with budding hope and crowns its evening with hallowed joy. It will conquer the world.

It is gratifying to note that the James Observatory, which has been out of commission for some time, has recently been thoroughly renovated and put in first-class condition through the untiring efforts of Prof. G. L. Harrell. The deportment of the students has been excellent throughout the session, and close and diligent attention to duty has characterized both students and faculty. Not only is the College positively religious in tone and atmosphere, but it is worthy of note that the student who works his way through (and Millsaps has had many such), stands as high in the esteem of the students and faculty as the aristocratic youth who comes from a home of wealth. Millsaps College has already made a splendid record, and under the safe and wise administration of her distinguished President, Rev. A. F. Watkins, the future is luminous with the prospect of still greater prosperity.

While at Commencement the writer shared the gracious hospitality of Dr. J. M. Sullivan and his charming family, to whom he is indebted for many courtesies.

A GREAT REVIVAL AT TYLERTOWN, MISS.

Dear Doctor Meek: Just a few lines for the Advocate, to say we are having the best meeting Tylertown has ever experienced. Every service, from the very beginning, has been full of interest and the tide is still rising. The interest was so great that we were unable, according to our plan, to close out last night, so the meeting will continue indefinitely.

The seating capacity of the large tabernacle in which the services are being conducted, was taxed to its utmost capacity last night and a most enthusiastic and successful service was had. Brother Norsworthy, who is conducting the meeting, is certainly a strong preacher and a great success as an evangelist. Any pastor who really desires a great revival and wishes the pastor's friend to conduct it, will make no mistake in employing Brother Norsworthy. He certainly has a strong hold on our people here and is accomplishing a great work. To date quite a large number have been converted or reclaimed, and about eighty persons have applied for membership in the churches.

One good feature of the work here is the attention which has been given to the circulation of the Conference organ, seventeen new subscribers having been secured for it yesterday at the eleven o'clock service. The Evangelist insists that every Methodist should be a subscriber for and reader of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Other subscriptions will follow at once.

When the meeting has been concluded I shall give you some further lines. Please pray that the good work may continue and a great victory for God and his Church may be realized here.

Our Second Quarterly Conference, for the current year, will convene at China Grove next Saturday and Sunday, and we expect to present to that body an encouraging report.

Yours fraternally,
THOS. B. COTTRELL, Pastor.

SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

The Sixth session of the Seashore Divinity School will begin on the evening of June 23, when Bishop Francis J. McConnell will deliver his first address. He will be with us until Saturday, June 27. Bishop McConnell has the reputation of being one of the greatest pulpit and platform men of this country. He will lecture twice each day while he is with us, and no man can afford to miss this series.

Doctor John A. Rice, who did such excellent work last year in Old Testament, will study the book of Job with us this year. It is not necessary for me to attempt any words of commendation of Doctor Rice since he is so well known and highly appreciated among the men of the patronizing territory. Great is Doctor Rice in heart and brain.

Bishop Candler will begin his work of preaching on Sunday morning, June 28. No man in this country is more highly appreciated than Bishop Candler, who is big enough in his heart to take in every preacher in Southern Methodism. This is especially true of the preachers of the patronizing territory of the Divinity School.

It is very much to be desired that the presiding elders of the four Conferences be present this session. If they will come down for one time, they will try to bring all their men another time. Let them all come.

Hoping to see a greater attendance this summer than ever before, and praying God's blessing upon us all, I am, very sincerely,

ROBT. SELBY,
President.

UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI AND METHODISM.

The recent Commencement of the State University, at Oxford, Miss., was a notable occasion. It set me to thinking, and one of my thoughts was, surely there must be a great many people throughout Mississippi who would like to know just what the situation is up here, especially from a religious standpoint. I was greatly impressed with the emphasis placed upon religion and the obligation it imposes. The Rev. Dr. Moore, an eminent Presbyterian preacher from Richmond, Va., was the Commencement preacher. He gave us a well-prepared sermon at the morning hour and made an appeal for medical missionaries and for the Christian ministry. Whoever heard of a commencement preacher at a State University urging the young men to consider the claims of the Christian ministry? It was something new under the sun, but who would dare suggest that it was inappropriate?

The Commencement orator was a Methodist preacher from Vermont, being at present the Chancellor of the University of that State. His address was a charming piece of work. His theme was "Man Seven Stories High." It was based on the Christian graces suggested by Peter. It was spoken without a single glance at a manuscript and was the work of a polished, cultured mind. The only regret connected with it was the fact that very few of the boys except the seniors heard it. Most of them had gone home.

Our Methodist boys are doing well up here. Of the three young men chosen to speak on Commencement day, two of them were Methodists. Of the three who received the degree of Master of Arts, two were Methodists. One-third of the student body during the past session were from Methodist homes. I may say to the parents whose sons or daughters are here that there are many very excellent gentlemen connected with the faculty, leaders in their respective churches. We have three of our stewards and the Sunday school superintendent from the University faculty. We also have several others in the faculty who are staunch supporters of the Church. The new Chancellor is the son of a Methodist preacher, and two of our Methodist men in the faculty came out of parsonage homes. The Y. M. C. A. Secretary is a member of our church and is doing a fine work among the young men.

Steps are being taken now to reduce the expenses at the University, thus enabling poor boys to come here as well as those in a better financial condition. By the new co-operative system of boarding, the cutting out of some fees and the reduction of others it is claimed that a young man may be able to get through on $150 a session.

Let me say to the Methodist people who contemplate sending their sons or daughters up here next session, that the people of the town are in perfect sympathy with the University and stand ready to render any service possible. Two small percentages of the student body attend the services of the churches, but attendance is optional and many of them do not attend. The pastors here hope by a united effort to secure larger attendance hereafter.

E. S. LEWIS.

THE HATTIESBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

On June 10, at 8:30 a. m., the sixth session of the Hattiesburg District Conference was called to order by the presiding elder in the Methodist Church at Mize, Miss.

Only two sessions in the history of the district showed a larger attendance; they were the ones at Sumrall and at Mt. Olive. The session was one of harmony and good will and the business of the Conference was dispatched with rapidity.

Only a few of our visiting brethren were with us, but we greatly appreciated those who could come and enjoy the session. We had Rev. T. J. O'Neill, president of Port Gibson Female College, Rev. J. S. Purcell, president of Montrose Training School and Dr. J. M. Sullivan of Millsaps. These brethren presented their work most forcefully. R. A. Maddox, Field Secretary of the Mississippi Conference Sunday School Board, was with us and made a fine impression.

One feature of the Conference which was out of the usual order was the emphasis placed upon the laymen in giving them the committee work to do to a large degree. Several of the best reports presented to the Conference were from these lay committees.

H. V. Waites, of Sumrall, Jno. A. McLeod, of Hattiesburg, F. M. Lane, of Taylorsville, and S. T. Garraway, of Richton, were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. D. R. Campbell, of Sumrall, was elected District Lay Leader for the ensuing year.

The Conference went on record as endorsing the action of the General Conference in regard to the Vanderbilt matter, and asked that a member of its body present a resolution at the coming session of the Annual Conference looking to the establishment of a Southern Methodist university.

The preaching at this session of the Conference was of an unusually high order, by H. L. Norton, P. H. Howse, J. L. Greenway, T. J. O'Neill, Geo. P. McKowen, Chas. W. Crisler and H. E. Carter. It is doubtful if any of these brethren ever preached any better at any time than they did for us. We feel that a deep and lasting impression was made upon all who were privileged to hear them.

The little City of Mize was most cordial and kind in her treatment of us and made us all feel at home. Their Agricultural High School looked like a city set upon a hill, and impressed every delegate with the progressive citizenship of this town and community. We were glad to be with these kind folks.

The Conference selected Sumrall as the next place of meeting.

The pastors of the district assumed the obligation of getting up the Bishop's collection, and asked the presiding elder to raise the indebtedness on the district parsonage. Brother Thompson was most kind and brotherly as a presiding officer.

Taking it altogether, it was a most blessed season of fellowship.

It is stated that the Japanese are already taking much interest in the World's Sunday School Convention which is to be held in Tokyo in 1912. Among those who are assisting in the work of preparation are Count Okuma, the newly elected premier of the empire; Baron Hattori, Japan's great champion of industry; and Baron Sakurai, Mayor of Tokyo.

According to Rev. J. A. Batcher, of Berkeley, Calif., only about 1 per cent of the people on the Pacific slope belong to any Church; and only about 10 per cent of the population of San Francisco is Protestant. Evidently there is work enough in the Far West to enlist the energies of all the Protestant Evangelical Churches.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Christian Advocate of June 3 says: "Among the laymen in the recent General Conference, in my opinion, Judge D. H. THE SUNDAY SCHOOL FIFTY YEARS AGO.

The following are the names of the members of the Sunday School who were present at the first session of the school.

Mr. Carter, I want you to be in the Sunday School. I want you to be in the Sunday School. I want you to be in the Sunday School.

Sometimes I have to turn on the electric current to my brain and make it work. I have to turn on the electric current to my brain and make it work. I have to turn on the electric current to my brain and make it work.

You will pardon me if I relate a bit of personal experience to illustrate the point I am trying to make. In the ante-bellum times, over a half century ago, I lived 15 miles from Nashville, Tennessee.

You will pardon me if I relate a bit of personal experience to illustrate the point I am trying to make. In the ante-bellum times, over a half century ago, I lived 15 miles from Nashville, Tennessee. I was a light haired, freckled-nosed, blue-eyed boy that plowed old Beck in the high corn field Saturday at noon, and then repaired to the creek nearly washed the accumulated dust off of my body, went to the country store and bought a package of chewing gum for my best girl, and was ready for Sunday school in the morning. When the Sabbath dawned all beautiful and bright, everything and everybody seemed to be in a good humor. The roosters crowed, the hens cackled, the pigs squealed, the cows lowed and the sun shone brighter, and the birds sang sweeter, it seemed to me than any other period of my life. Oh! time turn backward, turn backward in thy flight and make me a freckled nosed, light haired boy

BACK TO THE PASTORATE.

The following church-provoking resolutions were adopted by the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church in its recent session at Kansas City, Mo.

"Whereas there is a great need of ministers to supply our many churches and to do the mission work at home and abroad; and

"Whereas there are already many fields vacant and the number of candidates will not be sufficient to supply the need; and

"Whereas we have a large number of ministers who are engaged in teaching and other lines of service than the pastoral office.

"Therefore, be it resolved by this Assembly—
1. That we urge as many of our ministers as possible to return to the pastorate as their life work by ordination.

"2. That in the selection of men to act as secretaries for the work of the Assembly or Synod or Presbytery, and also for the heads of schools, our executive committees and boards of trustees be urged to choose laymen instead of preachers."

SOME PUZZLING THINGS.

Annie Balcomb Wheeler.

I wonder why I always catch
Such measly little fish,
When all the big fat bouncers
Drop off my hook "ker-swish!"

And why I have to hunt around
To fill my pail with berries,
When going home I see such loads
As big as our black-heart cherries!

I wonder when I'm practicing
Why the clock ticks round so slow!
Now when I'm reading story books,
You ought to see it go!

And when I've gone and "bust the bag," Togged out in my comp'ny duds,
I wonder why ma wanted eggs
Instead of soap or spuds!

And most of all I wonder why—
I'd give a lot to know—
Why cake and candy's bad for me,
And oatmeal makes me grow!

CYNTHIA'S EYES.

"Marthy, I'm worried about Cynthia's eyes."

Cynthia, outside the door, with her hand already on the knob, stood still in bewilderment. Her eyes? Why, she never had a moment's trouble with her eyes, in all her healthy young life. What in the world did Uncle Reuben mean?

Evidently Aunt Martha was puzzled, too. From the tone of her voice Cynthia knew just how she had dropped her knitting, and was peering over her glasses.

"What in creation are you talking about, Reuben? Cynthia's eyes are as sharp as a hawk's, and as pretty as they make 'em."

"I ain't saying anything about their looks," Uncle Reuben declared. "I'm talking about what she sees with them. She's near-sighted. She can't see anything but little, unimportant trifles that stick up under her nose; the real things that make the bulk of living she doesn't seem to see at all. She was so fretted at the way Mr. Vincent rises on his toes that she didn't hear the good straight message he preached to young folks. And she said Mrs. Vincent's talk was flavored with wintergreen and camphor, and never got so nunch as a glimpse of the ministering angel soul behind it."

"When Betty Arnold blew in the other day through the rain, all pink and fresh like a June rose, and full of all sorts of happy news, Cynthia said it was a pity she wasn't more careful about her pronunciation; she actually said 'p'raps' for 'perhaps.'" Uncle Reuben's voice rose in absurd mimicry, and then dropped to gruff displeasure.

"If that's what colleges teaches," he declared, "I think the sooner all the colleges are closed the better, that's all."

Aunt Martha's voice, soothing and sympathetic, sounded as if she were pacifying an unreasonable child.

"There, there, Reuben, don't you fret. Cynthia'll come out all right. It ain't college—it's just youth—that's all. She'll see things clearer when she's lived a little longer. She's just a pretty, spoiled child, playing with the outside of life. When she gets into real living—"

But Cynthia, college senior, was going slowly upstairs: she had something to think out.—Youth's Companion.

THE BUTTERFLY.

"Look here, auntie!" called out Bertha and Ray, holding up a leaf, from which was suspended a bright green object with gold spots and bands. It was about the size of a small peanut shell.

"What is it, auntie?"

"That is a chrysalis, my dears," said auntie, looking up from her sewing. "Put it away, and it will turn into a pretty butterfly."

So the leaf and chrysalis were put in a pickle bottle, a piece of net tied over the top, and the treasure set on the bookcase for safe-keeping.

Every day they would look at it, and as it still looked the same, they lost interest in it for a week or more. But one day auntie was dusting the bookcase and she saw something which caused her to exclaim, "Children, your chrysalis has turned black!" They both ran quickly to see it. Yes, it had turned dark, the gold bands and spots were now silver, and they could catch a glimpse of bright folded wings through the skin.

Soon a crack was seen near the top, then another on its back. These widened slowly, and at last the chrysalis broke open. But the rolling, flapping thing that came out did not look much like a butterfly. It had a fat, fuzzy, black body, and around its head were closely folded brilliant orange wings.

The creature struggled and crawled, each moment opening its wings wider, and its body growing less.

Auntie put a long pencil into the bottle, and the insect crawled upon it. It wanted something to perch on while its wings were stretching and drying.

In perhaps another half an hour the beautiful young butterfly was perfect in every way.

Its ugly body had shrunk and was hidden by the gorgeous wings, which were orange red with a black border, on which were closely sprinkled white spots.

The children were so delighted with their beautiful prisoner that they did not want to part with it, but after a while auntie said, "Now I'd let it go out into the sunshine where it belongs."

So they set the bottle in the open window, and taking off the net, said:

"There, now fly away into the garden and get some nice honey from the flowers!"—The Child's Hour.

A REMARKABLE BIRD.

Colonel Roosevelt and his party, who returned recently from Brazil, brought with them 2,100 specimens of birds and 500 specimens of animals. The rarest specimen brought back is a Hoatzin, a peculiar bird about the size of the ordinary turkey, which inhabits the banks of the River Solimoes. It has claws like a lizard, on its wings, which enables the bird to climb trees when pursued. If not seized at once, it is said the bird will dive into the water, and be lost to sight under a mass of aquatic growth on the surface of the river. It has feet like the diver bird. "I managed to get close to its haunts, at twilight, in my canoe," said one of Mr. Roosevelt's party, "and at night I succeeded in getting a nest with young birds in it."—The Presbyterian.

HOW MARK TWAIN PROVED IT.

When Mark Twain was living in Hartford, Connecticut, where Doctor Doane, now Bishop of Albany, was rector of an Episcopal church, he went to hear one of the clergyman's best sermons. After it was over Mark approached the Doctor and said politely: "I have enjoyed your sermon this morning. I welcomed it as I would an old friend. I have a book at home in my library that contains every word of it."

"Why, that can't be, Mr. Clemens," replied the rector.

"All the same, it is so," said Twain.

"Well, I certainly should like to see that book," rejoined the rector with dignity.

"All right," replied Mark: "you shall have it;" and the next morning Doctor Doane received with Mark Twain's compliments—a dictionary!—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

RESOLUTIONS ON THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

(Adopted by the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, while lately in session at Oklahoma City.)

Whereas, in every section of our country, the Church of God in its efforts to bring in the Kingdom of righteousness and peace, is faced by the organized liquor traffic, which is the most powerful and destructive of all enemies of the Church, and whereas this organized army, inspired by covetousness and appetite, cannot be successfully opposed except by the organized efforts of God's people.

Resolved 1. That we condemn the liquor traffic as the greatest menace of our day to the welfare of business, society, and the Church; that we regard it as a public nuisance which must be abated if our civilization is to be saved; that we demand that the rights of sober, peaceful, law-abiding citizens be respected, and that they be protected from the dangers to property, family, happiness and life, which always accompany the open saloon; that we insist that men have no right in the exercise of so-called "personal liberty" to continue a traffic which infringes so ruthlessly, persistently and destructively upon the rights of others, that we declare that the time has come when the protection of the law of the land must be taken from this horrible traffic in the bodies and souls of our children, and the man who insists upon gratifying his greed by the destruction of his neighbors, shall be branded as a criminal, to be dealt with as all other offenders against the peace and order and uplift of society.

Resolved 2. That we rejoice in every effort which is made to destroy this traffic, and that we pray the blessing of God on the efforts of his people in the various States to secure the passage of state-wide prohibitory laws, and to enforce the laws against the slaves of covetousness and appetite, who in their efforts to gratify their unlawful lust for gold and sensual pleasure do not hesitate to oppose in every possible way the will of the people.

We reiterate our request that the Congress of the United States adopt a resolution giving to the people of the various States the right to vote upon the question of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States forbidding the manufacture for sale and the sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes.

Resolved 3. That we endorse the great work which has been done and is being done to-day by the Anti-Saloon League in its National and State organizations, and we pledge it our support in the accomplishment of this giant task. We urge our people to remember that the liquor traffic hates the Anti-Saloon League because of its effective work, and endeavors to destroy its effectiveness by exciting suspicions against its leaders. We pledge to these leaders our loyalty and assure them we will not desert them in the hour of battle because of the slanders of the enemy, but that we will rally even more earnestly to their standards and give them our undivided support.

Resolved 4. That we also rejoice in the great work which is being done by the other organizations, notably the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for the salvation of society and the uplift of the race.

THE INFLUENCE OF THOSE DEPARTING.

The golden rule of life never breaks upon man, and a positive assurance has been given upon death. And without the lifting of allowing man to stay upon earth in a perfect physical state after the soul had been united with God. There are Adam and Eve were driven from the Garden of Eden, they were made subjects of unremitting toil, and they were promised that their welcome life should end in death. Without this punishment they would have become still further alienated from the perfection of their primal existence, being independent of any immediate witness to their sinfulness. The nature they shared they were raised with affliction and death, and in this was their education. What a picture a physically perfect humanity would present without the signs of suffering to indicate the condition of the soul. People would become further alienated from the true course since in Adam we had entered into the human race. Physical pain serves as the great protection for the body. Without it one might run away upon his feet without warning, especially in moments of nobility and determination. Self-destruction would doubtless become more common. So physical pain, with all its woes, is the source of our greatest happiness, and the afflictions and death in human destiny, though in themselves terrible calamities in individual cases, are part of the divine discipline upon the race.

The heat of the summer is in full blast. Last week our Southern country was a veritable furnace under the penetrating rays of the orb of day. And with the coming of the scorching heat of the middle year the angel of death seems to have reaped the harvest of the physically weak. Many little babies, young mothers and wives, and good husbands and fathers have been claimed for the other world in the last few days. With sorrow we have seen a mother weep for her young and helpless child as though her heart would break, and when the little body was lowered into the grave the mothered "Gone forever." It would be impossible to express the restlessness of parents whose words indicated. We have seen a wife and mother taken from her good husband and children, and as the lay in the casket until death's office and flowers, her calm face appearing like the flame on a medallion with the wind blowing through the open casements and rustling the leaves and branches, with the measured voices of friends, comforting the stricken heart, the joy of children, we who stood beside the bier and sat near upon the couches wondered why in the very midst of life such a beautiful soul should be taken away. Perhaps, though, we realized more than ever the presence of God, and we saw more distinctly his hand in the destinies of men. There was certainly a stronger influence upon us to do what was right. Christ was in the midst of that scene; one could picture him there in the midst of us, perhaps as he descended to the disciples as he rose from the dead with the nail prints and the spear wound, and with the beatitudes of affection of which he was so characteristic. We firmly believe we were all made better for that time, and consciously or unconsciously, its influence will go with us forever. Some may do evil things, but they will not be quite so evil as they might have been, or they may do better things, and they will be better still for that occasion.

Now is this all. The greatest influence is from the lives that were lived and which we know were great in righteousness and Christian integrity. After they have been united through death, their deeds are glorified. The tendency of the good man is to emulate the example of his righteous father; it is easier to walk in his footsteps because the way of faith has been blazed. One of the strongest influences for Christ is to have a Christian father. One knows no mother was a Christian and good woman, she believed in Christ, he was true to her, and certainly he shall be his Savior too. The influence of a good man in the community has the same effect. Every one knows he is honest and upright, that is he would be the best thing his life would ever mean. He says that Christ is his Savior and is true to him, and thus his life will lead others to our Lord. This confession and experience are shed abroad through the community, more especially when the good man dies.

The world needs more fathers and mothers in the face of immortality. When the kind preacher says at the end of our lives that he is not going from us forever, the consolation of the family comes the suffering soul. Therefore believe that his beloved Father was not forever dead, for he said:

"The world is in the falling air,
I hear that where the weaver fall,
That shadows in the falling air,
And in the falling air, I see."

"Far off thou art, but ever near,
I have thee still, and I rejoice,
I prosper, prosper with my voice,
I shall not lose thee, thou I see."

THE LATEST MORTALITY RATE FIGURES.

The Census Bureau has lately issued a Bulletin giving the death rate in the United States for the year 1913 as 14.1 per thousand of estimated population. In 1912 it was 14.1; in 1911 14.1. The average rate for the years from 1901 to 1913 was 14.1 and from 1904 to 1913 it was 14.1. The average rate for the three years of 1911, 1912 and 1913 was 14.1, so the decrease in the death percentage is continuing. The decline in the rate from 1901 to 1913 amounts to a reduction of one death in every eight, and this applied to the whole country means that there were 14,100 fewer deaths in 1913 than there would have been if the average rate from 1901 to 1913 had continued.

Of all the States in the Union Washington has the smallest death rate, 11.1 per thousand of population, with the States nearest to it coming in the following order: Minnesota, 11.4; Utah, 11.4; and Wisconsin and Colorado, 11.4. The following are the States in which the death rate is the highest: New Hampshire, 19.1; North Carolina, 18.1; Maryland, 18.1; Vermont, 18.1; Maine, 18.1; and Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York, and Rhode Island, 18.1. As a rule, the States with a large colored population have a higher rate of mortality than white States with approximately the same number of inhabitants.

From the Journal of the American Medical Association, we take the following compilation of figures bearing on this subject:

Among cities of over 100,000 population, Seattle and Spokane lead by far with death rates of only 11.4 and 11.1, respectively. Portland, Ore., follows with a rate of 11.4, so that this particular corner of the United States by comparison would seem to be more than holding its own. It seems almost obvious that location, climate and character of population are responsible for this low rate. Minneapolis and St. Paul as usual contest for next place with 11.8 and 11.1. Oakland and Milwaukee following with 12.5 and 12.7. The highest rates occur in Memphis, Tenn., 20.4; Richmond, Va., 19.4; New Orleans, 19.1; Albany, N. Y., 18.1; Baltimore, 18.1; Nashville, Tenn., 17.8; Birmingham, Ala., 17.4; Atlanta, Ga., 17.4, and Washington, D. C., 17.2.

The cause of this high rate in Southern cities has probably often been mentioned and often explained, but we cannot too often point the way to betterment. In the accompanying table the significant figures need no explanation:

	Death Rate per 1,000 Population
	Total	White	Colored
Memphis	20.4	15.9	21.2
Richmond	19.4	16.7	20.8
New Orleans	19.1	15.6	21.6
Baltimore	18.1	16.2	21.0
Nashville	17.8	14.7	24.0
Birmingham	17.4	12.3	25.2
Atlanta	17.4	13.5	25.2
Washington	17.2	14.4	24.4

Average 19.68 14.9 27.08

At the first glance these figures present rather a gloomy outlook for the Southern cities, but when compared with former years there is no reason for discouragement. In only two instances was there an increase in the death rate among colored people, and public attention is being increasingly turned toward the improvement of the conditions under which they live. The Louisiana State Board of Health was recently instrumental in getting a Conference called to consider this question and the States and the District of Columbia were delegates. Doubtless there is a widespread fight for public health, in which much should be accomplished within the next few years.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

From Spring Hill, Brother R. M. Evans writes that they have good crops there and a good outlook in every way.

Rev. E. G. Wood and wife and five children of Port Hope, La., are all convalescing from recent illness. They have been blessed by members.

Rev. A. J. Scarborough wrote the article in last week's paper entitled "Selling a House of Prayer." We sincerely hope the work was blessed.

In a business letter in the office which mentioned a subscription to the Advocate, Rev. C. P. Arthur says everything is moving nicely in Kansas, Miss.

Rev. J. Liberty Lewis of Greenville, Miss., has been baptizing Brother Bell of Port Allen, Miss., in a number of services. We trust that much good resulted from this special effort.

In sending a list of subscriptions to the office, Rev. H. M. McWhorter of Camden, Miss., writes that his work is increasing rapidly, and that they are beginning to look very carefully after the spiritual condition in that place.

Rev. R. E. Sheppard of Oakdale, La., has just sent in a number of contributions of his new church building at that place. It promises a most attractive appearance, to be large and comfortable and well equipped in every way.

The new church building at Summit, Miss., was dedicated last Sunday, June 14. The worshippers Rev. L. B. Adams, the good pastor, and the local people. Brother Adams believes he has the best church building in his Conference for the money.

Mr. G. L. Carter, from Grifton, Miss., a brother of Rev. H. L. Carter of Greenville College, Shreveport, La., and a son of Rev. Lyman Carter of Elmira, Miss., visited in the Advocate office last week. We appreciated and enjoyed his visit.

The Editor of the Advocate has been writing well for several days and is now able to be in his office at the home of his wife and to meet. This will explain why this issue does not contain the usual amount of editorial matter from his pen.

Dr. J. T. Sawyer, minister of the First Baptist Church, New Orleans, has Sunday at 11 a.m., the pastor of the Church, Dr. Sawyer, says a fine congregation present, and that he greatly enjoyed being with the Christian Presbyterians.

The Lafayette Medical Society had with an enthusiastic meeting at New Orleans last week. The attendance was good and the exercises of the Conference were interesting and helpful throughout. The Sunday preaching services were under the direction of Rev. A. S. Low and Rev. J. I. Hoffman.

Prof. A. W. Biers, who is one of the foremost lawyers of Tennessee and one of the leading attorneys for the Church in the recent Nashville Convention, is reported to be suffering with appendicitis at St. Joseph's Hospital in Memphis, and his recovery at this writing is considered quite doubtful.

Rev. W. W. Drake of Baton Rouge, La., one of the leading ministers of the Louisiana Conference, made the address to the students at the recent Commencement exercises of Centenary College, Shreveport. His address was "Come West, take and Home," and his address is reported to have been very fine.

Rev. Thomas R. Correll of Tolson, Miss., has recently sent the Advocate a very nice subscription. Brother Correll is doing a fine work on his charge; he is actively engaged in revivalistic work and other labors for the advancement of the Kingdom. He has the thanks and best wishes of the Advocate.

Rev. Robert Selby, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District of the Mississippi Conference, in sending his third round to us, writes that his district is in better shape at present than it was this time last year, that the members are better, and that their labors are being rewarded by better congregations and interest.

Rev. S. A. Brown of Boonville, Miss., has just closed a successful revival meeting with forty-five additions to the Church by profession of faith. Brother Brown did the preaching and we all may know that it was of the right sort. God works like this makes our heart glad indeed. Brother Brown is a consecrated and successful pastor.

The following friends have the thanks of the Advocate for new and renewal subscriptions not heretofore acknowledged: Miss Miss Dator, Hockley, Miss.; Rev. Robert Randle, Eros, La.; Chas. E. Drowner, Forwood, Miss.; A. S.

Secular News and Comment

Raper, Courtland, Miss., 5; W. D. Dominick, New Augusta, Miss., 15.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, of Carrollton Avenue, New Orleans, is assisting Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, of Houma, La., in a meeting. Brother Snelling's pulpit was filled last Sunday morning by Dr. J. M. Henry, the presiding elder of the New Orleans district, and last Sunday evening by Rev. Felix R. Hill, Jr., pastor of Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans.

Rev. H. G. Roberts, of Crenshaw, Miss., writes: "Bishop Murrah will dedicate our Crenshaw Church the fourth Sunday in this month. All former pastors are cordially invited. Brother J. D. Wroten, of Tunica, Miss., did us good service in a meeting at Sledge last week. There were five additions to the Church, and a new church building enterprise was launched."

Rev. J. T. McVey, of Fannin, Miss., in a business letter to the Advocate, writes: "There have been improvements on our parsonage during the year. Quite a sum has been spent on completing one church and for painting another. The assessment for the pastor has been raised twenty-five per cent. The Sunday school is flourishing, and the attendance at preaching services is very good. The Lord is blessing us indeed."

Rev. Jno. B. Andrews, the evangelist, in an appreciated note, says: "Kindly announce through the Advocate that Prof. and Mrs. Jno. E. Thomas would like to assist pastors in meetings during the month of July. They are very efficient help in every way, not only in singing and playing, but in revivistic work." Brother Andrews will take a vacation during July, but his efficient assistants would like to continue their labors on through the summer.

The Epworth Leaguers of North Mississippi held their annual meeting at Columbus the latter part of last week. A large number of leagues were represented and the work was shown to be in a healthful condition. Many informing and helpful addresses were made and the conference was pronounced a marked success. Rev. John R. Countiss, President of Grenada College, preached last Sunday at 11 a. m., and Rev. Paul B. Kern of Murfreesboro, Tenn., at the evening hour.

Rev. Cawthon A. Bowen, the pastor of the Methodist Church at Dadeville, Ala., has been elected to the Chair of Philosophy and Bible in the Alabama Woman's College at Montgomery, and has signified his acceptance of the position. This gifted young minister is a son of Rev. J. A. Rowen, now of Birmingham, and was reared in North Mississippi. He is scholarly, studious, and spiritual, and is finely equipped for the new and important work to which he has been called.

Rev. John Henderson is a Baptist missionary from Ruatan, Spanish Honduras, and was sent out from the Baptist organization of England. He has been in New Orleans about seven weeks, having come to this city on account of his health. Unfortunately, while on Canal Street the other day, he lost his purse which contained $58, this being all the money he had. Rev. Mr. Henderson asks us to state his case to our readers, and if there are any who desire to assist him in this unhappy plight they may forward the funds to this office, and they will be turned over to him.

On Wednesday evening, June 3d, in the First Church, Shreveport, the presiding elder, Rev. W. H. Coleman, held a joint quarterly conference for all our churches in that city. There was a large attendance of officers and members and the reports from the various pastors and officials showed that gratifying progress is being made. A new church is being built in Cedar Grove; finances are well up; there is a growing interest in the Epworth Leagues; the Sunday school work is in a prosperous condition; and about two hundred and fifty members have been received into the Church since the Annual Conference.

Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, of Greenville, Miss., writes us the following: "On last Sunday morning at 9:30 o'clock Sister H. S. Spragins was operated upon for appendicitis. The operation was successful and Sister Spragins is doing as well as could be expected. Much anxiety was felt for her, and our hearts went out to Brother Spragins and his family; we are all relieved to know that Sister Spragins is convalescing." The Editor has since received a letter from Brother Spragins in which he stated that his wife was on the road to a speedy recovery. We are delighted to know that Sister Spragins came through the ordeal so happily.

Rev. Thos. J. Norsworthy has recently assisted Rev. T. B. Cottrell, of Tylertown, Miss., in an evangelistic campaign. Brother Norsworthy writes us thus: "It affords me much pleasure to report a really great meeting at Tylertown. We are glad to say that we have received about ninety applications for church membership to date. At one service we received thirty-seven persons on profession of faith, and there are many more yet to be taken into the Church. At the eleven o'clock service Sunday I took occasion to present the claims of the New Orleans Advocate and received seventeen subscriptions which were handled by Brother Cottrell. I shall continue to represent the paper wherever I may labor in your territory." The Advocate is glad to hear of such evangelistic success, and it appreciates the efforts made in its behalf.

The Methodist Training School, of which Rev. W. F. Quillian is President, closed the latter part of May a very prosperous session. The Commencement sermon was preached by Dr. Richard Wilkinson, of Louisville, Ky., and Rev. Paul B. Kern, Dr. John D. Trawick, and Dr. O. E. Brown also took part in the closing exercises. The graduates numbered 22, among whom we note the names of Miss Willie Lee Rowan, of Louisiana, and Misses Julia Carter and Maude Wiggs of Mississippi. In referring to the work of his school, Brother Quillian says: "It is altogether probable that one of our teachers, Miss Kate Hackney of North Carolina, who for several years has been the faithful director of the Kindergarten Department, and Miss Anita Gist, one of our students from Florida, will go to Africa this fall to assist in the mission work which has been established there by Bishop Lambuth."

We clip from the Times-Picayune the following dispatch sent from Aberdeen, Miss., on the 15th inst.: "The closing service of the North Mississippi Woman's Missionary Society consisted of the report of the committee and planning for the advance of the work. The election of officers resulted as follows: Mrs. Vic. Thompson Hoyle, president; Mrs. S. M. Thame, first vice-president; Mrs. Tulle Hartwell, second vice-president; Mrs. T. M. Clark, recording secretary; Miss Louise Diglan, corresponding secretary; Mrs. W. W. Wilburn, treasurer; Mrs. G. C. Jones, auditor; Mrs. J. W. Conger, superintendent Christian stewardship and missions; Mrs. Walter Trotter, superintendent social service; Mrs. Walter Campbell, superintendent of publicity; Mrs. Susie Thomas, superintendent of supplies. The district secretaries appointed are: Miss Corinne Roger, Corinth; Mrs. T. T. O'Brien, Sardis; Mrs. J. H. Houghton, Aberdeen; Mrs. T. W. Woodward, Columbus; Mrs. G. H. McDonough, Durant; Mrs. H. M. Bryan, Winona; Mrs. T. J. Binford, Holly Springs; Mrs. Elizabeth Clark, Greenville. The conference came to a close after the election of Itta Bena as the next place of meeting."

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY MEETING AT ABERDEEN.

The second annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference convened in the Methodist Church at Aberdeen on June 11, 1914, at 3:30 o'clock, the opening session being a workers' conference conducted by Mrs. W. W. Scales, Jr., of Starkville. The Bible lesson by Mrs. Scales was helpful and inspirational. She then introduced the officers in the regular order and each officer presented her own department of work to the body.

The evening session was presided over by Mrs. Walter Trotter, of Winona, who is the 4th vice president. The praise and testimony service led by Mrs. I. D. Borders, was a love feast indeed. Mrs. Dunstan, corresponding secretary of the Home Department, brought a report of the business proceedings of the Council Meeting recently held at Fort Worth, Texas. This report was most encouraging, as figures relating to the workers mounted up into the thousands and hundreds of thousands, while those relating to funds went into the million mark. After this, Mrs. Hoyle, the conference president, gave an inspirational report of the Council meeting, which moved the audience too deeply for expression and made all feel a desire to have a part in this great work. This service was interspersed with choice and inspiring music by the choir.

Aberdeen has been most cordial in the reception accorded the delegates. In fact, the welcome given has been as warm as the weather.

Miss Lillie Hartwell, the second vice president, will have charge of Friday evening's session, which will be devoted to the Young People's work. The speakers will be Miss Julia Wasson, of China; Miss Mary Daniel, deaconess, Corinth, Miss.; Miss Kate Strickland, a student volunteer; Mrs. Bessie Lipscomb, a member of the Woman's Missionary Council, and others. At this meeting the banner will be presented to the Brooksville Young People's Society, that being the auxiliary in the Conference which has attained to the highest standard of excellence.

The Conference is anticipating a great spiritual feast Sunday, when our own Bishop Murrah will preach the annual sermon.

This hurried message is given out to those workers and friends who could not attend this great meeting.

MRS. W. W. WOODWARD.
Aberdeen, Miss., June 12, 1914.

President Wilson on June 12 named Congressman W. G. Sharp, of Ohio, as ambassador to France, to succeed the Hon. Myron T. Herrick.

The total income of the University of Virginia is stated to be now twice what it was when President E. A. Alderman became its official head ten years ago.

New proof that the Mississippi Delta is the Negro's paradise was furnished a few days since when Dr. J. C. Brooks, of Bolivar County, placed an order for fifteen Ford automobiles for colored tenants on his plantation.

The seventeen-year locusts have made their appearance in large numbers in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia. There are two varieties of this insect, one of which returns every seventeen years, and the other every thirteen years.

The official lists show that when the "Empress of Ireland" was rammed by the Norwegian collier "Storstad," and went down in the St. Lawrence River, 1024 persons were drowned. The number of the saved was 452. Among modern marine disasters this ranks next to the sinking of the "Titanic" in the number of lives lost.

At the recent Reunion of Confederate Veterans at Jacksonville, Fla., a resolution was adopted looking to the erection in the capitol city of each of the eleven seceding States of a monument to the faithful Negro slaves who remained true and loyal to their masters during the stormy days of the Civil War. The construction of these memorials would, we think, do honor to both the blacks and whites of the Old South, and challenge the admiration of the world.

Governor McCreary of Kentucky has announced that he will appoint Mr. J. N. Camden, a millionaire, turfman, farmer, and politician of Woodford County, to succeed the late Senator W. O. Bradley in the United States Senate. Mr. Bradley's term would have expired the 4th of next March, but Mr. Camden's appointment will hold good only until the August primaries, when a Senator will have to be chosen for the few remaining months. It is understood that he will at that time aspire to be elected for the remainder of his predecessor's term. Mr. Camden is a son of the late United States Senator Johnson M. Camden, of West Virginia, and a Democrat. Mr. Bradley was an ardent Republican.

During the past scholastic year 4422 students studied in 275 colleges and universities in the United States. Of these, Canada furnished 653, China 594, and Japan 336. The others were distributed as follows: Great Britain and Ireland 212, Germany 122, Russia 124, France 45, Sweden 41, Italy 38, Austria-Hungary 34, Switzerland 29, Norway 26, Greece 22, Spain 20, Netherlands 19, Bulgaria 15, Roumania 6, Belgium 4, Portugal 3, and Montenegro 1. New Zealand was represented by 56 students, Egypt by 15, Liberia by 2, and South Africa by 44. From the American possessions Hawaii sent 108, Porto Rico 215, and the Philippines 111. India had 62 students, Turkey 143, Korea 13, Persia 21, and Siam 13. Of the Latin-American countries, Mexico, with 223 students, heads the list. Cuba sent 209, Costa Rica 29, Guatemala 15, Honduras 12, Nicaragua 18, Panama 28, and Salvador 19. From South America, Argentine sent 43, Brazil 113, Bolivia 3, Chile 12, Columbia 37, Ecuador 16, Paraguay 2, Peru 25, Uruguay 2, and Venezuela 7.

The Congressional House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has reported favorably a bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at New Orleans. The measure provides that the work shall begin within two years after its passage and be completed within three years after it is started. It recognizes the fact that the consent of the State of Louisiana must also be obtained before the enterprise can be undertaken. The construction of a bridge across the Mississippi here will be vastly more difficult than it would be where the banks and approaches to the river are high. It will be necessary to have the bridge at a certain elevation above the water to avoid obstructing navigation, and with the land on each side of it on a level or lower than the river bed, it will require some fine engineering and a vast amount of work to provide satisfactory approaches to the bridge for heavy trains. Of course the feat can be accomplished, but it will necessitate a large outlay of money.

Tidings From the Field

Anacoco, La.

We are making reasonable progress on this charge. We have had two visits from our beloved presiding elder whose presence and inspiring sermons caused our people to seek greater things of our Lord. Brother Morris, of Mansfield has been with us twice, lecturing at two points in behalf of Mansfield and Centenary colleges. We appreciated the lectures given by him and expect to have him with us again.

We have had no revivals yet. We have three Sunday schools, and one union school, making four on the charge. We have a Bible class Wednesday evenings, which is attended with great interest. Boys and girls are studying and praying to know more of the divine will of God. As a result we have had two accessions to the Church here and one at another point, making three accessions in all on profession of faith.

As this is my first public report, let me, as the youngest pastor in the Louisiana Conference, thank the brethren for their advice and help. I thank God for their noble, godly lives. They are a real source of inspiration to me. God bless you, brethren. Nothing has been more inspiring to me than to meet the brethren and have them place their hands on my head or shoulder and say: "God bless you, old boy, be faithful and expect better things."

Brethren, be careful to seek diligently for opportunities to speak encouraging words to the young and inexperienced pastors. We appreciate the noble lives that you have lived and your acceptable advice. As the revival season is nearing, we are expecting and praying for great meetings. So when on your knees offering up your devotions to the one true and ever living God, remember Anacoco charge and her young pastor.—J. E. Napper.

Pollock, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: As I see so few letters from the Alexandria District, I will ask for space in your good paper for a meager report from the Pollock charge. I was sent to the Pollock charge last fall as supply. We moved into the parsonage on January 1st. We met with a fine people who treated us so kindly we felt as though we were at home from the beginning. The Pollock charge is composed of Pollock, Liberty Chapel, and Eden. I do not believe that there is a work in the Louisiana Conference that is composed of better people. The Rev. C. B. Powell was pastor of this work the last two years, and left it in good condition, so I found the revival fire burning when I arrived and it has been burning all the year. We have only held one meeting on the work to date. This was at Eden, and we had many things against us there, and received only one member into the fellowship of the Church. Since the first of January, we have received into the Church 35 members on the charge. We will begin a revival meeting at Pollock, July 5, with Rev. Q. L. Bennett to do the preaching. I will have time for two or three meetings this summer and fall; and if any of the brethren are in need of help I would like to correspond with them. I spent several years in Missionary Evangelistic work for the M. E. Church. You may write Rev. H. W. May, P. E., of Alexandria, La., as to my ability, or you may write Rev. C. B. Powell, at Melville, La., in regard to my revival work. I helped Brother Powell in two meetings last year, and am slated with him for one this year. I preach a full gospel, a full surrender, and a full consecration. Brethren, let's strike the iron, while it is hot. Now is our opportunity in Louisiana for God and the M. E. Church, South.—E. G. Wood.

MISSIONARY BRIEFS.

During the quarter ending March there were 37 confessions of faith in Ivey Hospital (Korea) — 17 in the wards, 16 in the dispensary, and 4 among visitors.

Special services were held in the Cuban Congregation of Havana, from March 29 to April 5. The chapel was filled to overflowing at several of these services and they were indeed a benediction. Twenty-four people testified their purpose to lead a Christian life, and six members were received by baptism. A great service was that of Easter night when ten candidates were enrolled. The supreme need of the Cuba mission is an adequate building, or buildings in the city and suburbs of Havana.

The winning of a convert is a small work compared with that of preparing the conditions that make the winning of that convert possible. Early missionaries in China worked thirty-five years, and at the end of that time could count only six converts; but they had created conditions that made it possible to win thirteen thousand converts in the next thirty-five years, forty thousand in the next thirteen years, one hundred thousand in the next ten years, and two hundred and fifty thousand in the following decade.

Eighty per cent of the population of Japan is yet unevangelized, which means that forty millions have not yet heard the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The report of Soochow Hospital for the quarter ending March 31, is another record-breaker on in-patients, the total number being 439. The first nine days of China New Year I had eleven major operations; a part of the time since then I have had as many as twenty major operations a week.—John A. Snell, Soochow, China.

Kwansai Gakuin, our College at Kobe, Japan, has an enrollment of 715 students—540 in the middle school, 125 in the College, and 50 in the Theological Department, a total gain over last year of 135.

HOME COMING WEEK AT OLD CAMP GROUND, AUG. 16, 1914.

We are planning to make the week following the third Sunday in August the greatest week in the history of Old Camp Ground.

We want it to be a "Home Coming Week," both physically and spiritually.

We want all, who were raised around Camp Ground and have moved away to make their arrangements to come, bring their families, and spend the week with us.

Then we want every one who is unsaved to give their hearts to God, and let it be home coming in that way.

The preaching will be done, by the sons of Old Camp Ground, Brothers J. D. Simpson, Olin Ray, Luther and Frank Wilson.

We are expecting a great time both spiritually, and socially.

Come and be with us, "and we will do thee good."

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By R. A. Madison.

Down at Silver Creek, under the patronage of Brother Greenway, we find new Sunday school rooms. You will always find Brother Greenway busy about his duties.

A very fine book for your workers is "The Training of Sunday School Teachers and Officers" by Franklin McElfresh. If you have not read it you can get it from the Publishing House for 75 cents.

Harrah for the Brethren District. Every church except one has ordered the Children's Day program. There are six other districts in the Mississippi Conference. Will you let Brown have the lead in this important work? May God bless the workers and pastors in that district.

The Sunday school at Mine, Miss., has grown gradually but permanently and is now taking on new life. They are raising money to build Sunday school rooms; the children are helping by selling eggs and chickens. This is the way to do things. Get the people interested; give the young people something to do.

We are glad indeed to announce that the Field Secretary will remain in the work. And now let us work together for the great cause. Our plan and work for the next year will be to train teachers; organize Bible classes; organize and equip the schools. Dear Superintendent, if you have not organized the above in your school do it at once. If you need help I am glad to come and help you.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Over two million men are in Sunday school to-day, and it seems as if they could and would win two million more in the next quadrennium.

Mr. George Busby has been appointed superintendent at Eata. His initial step was to write for Children's Day literature and a list of Sunday school books helpful for a superintendent. Such early forethought is a sure indication of future success.

The Bethel Sunday school near Reeves, will hold its first Children's Day anniversary for some years on June 21. They have prepared a morning program for the children, dinner on the grounds and an afternoon of inspirational speeches and good singing.

One officer, teacher, or member of every school should make an effort to attend some Institute, Summer School or Sunday School Convention. Within the year, at least, every teacher in their various communities, districts and institutions, a more book is indispensable at such places and almost all the time.

Walter Wilson says, "The Sunday school season of 1914 is the most of morale of the nation. The much attention can not be paid to the work which the Sunday school is doing." Marion Leverage says, "As a full day is worth more than an hour before sunset, so the life of a boy worth more than that of a man. Let's save the boys." The summer season is when the Sunday school needs to be most awake to hold against and interest these hundreds of boys and girls out of school and from under all restraint.

Some clever Sunday school officers with a keen desire to hold the Teachers' Meeting all summer have arranged to have it held in different homes, with light and cooling refreshments and a phone reminder from the superintendent and business that every teacher is expected to be present. If you want results you are going to have to work and just skillfully to get them. Warnings, promises and threats have to be dropped in the Christian's vocabulary as in the world. The teachers are worth while the meeting is held, the health and success of the Sunday school is dependent upon it and we must seek to keep it intact all summer long.

CHILDREN'S DAY AT COLD SPRINGS, MISS.

Sunday, May 31, 1914, was a memorable day for Cold Springs—a Children's Day. The church was beautifully and artistically decorated with evergreens and flowers. After the congregation had assembled the choir sang "Open the Doors for the Children." The program came up each hour and by 5:30 of the music and song. Love songs and other songs were sung. The entire Sunday school sang "Summer Sunshine." The speakers were well trained. One of the most interesting features of the program was the singing of "August Communion" only four years old when he had received "The Lord's Supper."

The offering was taken by five boys in song while dressed with a band of gold and amounted to $1. As the offering amounted to $1.00 we have more than $1.00 in the Sunday School fund. The offering was taken by five boys in song while dressed with a band of gold and amounted to $1.00. FROM BROTHER HOWARD

I was in New Orleans in 1898, the morning of the Battle of Liberty. The morning and evening I spent with you. The morning after the battle in the light of all present it was a spiritual feast to be there and I feel that your soul was strengthened. We gathered children's day at 8 o'clock under the fifth Sunday in May. The program was very good and well received. The interest in the battle was a great one. It was a very fine day in the last year of the war. The battle which marked a turning point in the war was over the battle of Liberty. We are expecting a new children's day at 8 o'clock the first Sunday in July.

Yours in love,

E. J. EDWARDS

Dear Sir,

TO THE PASTORS AND SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

Brothers: It is with great pleasure I am able to announce to you that one of our greatest leaders, Brother P. E. Edwards of Tennessee, has come to the assistance of the Sunday School Board, and offers to render all the aid we may need to continue our Field Secretary's work for another year. This fact has been communicated to Brother Madison, who is the member of the Board. The Board approves the action of the Chairman in extending Brother Madison's contract, and also desires sincere thanks to our Brother who has made this move possible.

Brother Madison's address will continue at Jackson, and we earnestly urge all our pastors and Sunday School superintendents to cooperate with us in the work. Let us have your children's day collection as usual on your church day, and let us have the largest collection.

Thanking you for all you have done in the past, and trusting we shall have your fullest cooperation in the future,

Yours,

E. F. LEWIS,

Chairman E. F. Board, Miss. Conf. Central Springs, Miss.

THE CHURCH HABIT.

"No," said Mrs. Jenkins, "the children do not go to church very often. They go to their Sunday school, and I think that's enough."

Doctor Brown did not seem to be convinced, so he continued: "Of course, I should like them all to come with me to the Church service, but they are not much interested, and I do not know."

"You insist on their going to day school, whether or not they are interested. I suppose," the minister said.

"Why, certainly," Mrs. Jenkins answered, with some indignation.

"But why should you leave this other matter, which seems to me of at least equal importance to their caprice?"

"It isn't wholly a matter of caprice," Mrs. Jenkins returned, with some spirit. "I think it is too much to ask little children to sit through that long morning service."

"That long morning service" ever-ages about an hour and half" answered the clergyman. "The children sit through two sessions at school every day, each session longer than that. You and I, in our youth, sat through much longer services every Sunday, and our nervous systems compare rather well with those of the children of today."

"Do you really think it is very important for the children to attend Church?"

"I certainly do," replied Doctor Brown. "The tendency of the day is for children and parents to have less and less in common. In my youth parents and children played together, and studied together, and stayed at home together, and went to Church together. We see as little of our children as possible nowadays to the great loss of us all. But at least we can go to God's house together on the Lord's day! The children would soon enjoy going if it were a family custom, and if they didn't enjoy it it would be a wholesome thing for them to discover that there are lots of things in this world to be done whether we enjoy doing them or not. That is the kind of lesson the family generation particularly needs."

"But going to Church has above all a religious value. And let me tell you, if you were setting deliberately about abolishing the Church altogether at the end of another generation the worst way of doing so would be to let that generation grow up without the habit of church attendance. Whether or not you help them to form that habit certainly seems to be important."

Mrs. Jenkins no longer smiled. "And so it seems to me," she said. — Town's Companion.

Physicians tell us that a reduction of the power of resistance to disease is the most common predisposing cause of disease, and that the way to prevent it is to keep the blood in good condition.

"THE PRINCE OF PEACE."

Such was one of the titles given to Christ by the Prophet Isaiah, as he foresaw his coming far down the centuries and broke into rapturous strains concerning the glories of his personality and kingdom. What a wealth of meaning there is in this beautiful appellation! We are persuaded that the view of most persons as to its significance is far too restricted. They seem disposed to limit the work of Christ as it relates to this designation to his influence as a peacemaker among the nations of the World. That is indeed a noble service to perform, and it will certainly be a glorious time on earth when grim-visaged war has been forever banished, and the sword has been beaten into the plowshare, the spear turned into the pruninghook, and one country shall rise up against another no more.

But splendid as will be this achievement, it is by no means the whole, nor even the chief part, of Christ's work as the Prince of Peace. He came as a mediator between God and man—came for the purpose of effecting a reconciliation between the infinite King upon his eternal throne and the rebellious and revolted human race. Without his incarnation and career upon earth, such a pacification would not have been possible. Not because the Heavenly Father was offended and that his anger had to be placated—that is an erroneous and dishonoring view of our loving Creator—but because there were governmental obstructions in the way that had to be removed and that such a revelation of God was necessary as would show to man his sinfulness and break and win his hard and wicked heart. It was not the attitude of the great Divine Sovereign, but of the estranged and hostile subject, that needed to be changed. To accomplish this restoration was the constant end that our Lord had in view in his assumption of human nature and in his ministry, sufferings, and death. So, his final and crowning triumph will be, not the establishment of a world-wide kingdom throughout which peace shall prevail, but in having brought back into accord with the Father and transplanted to their eternal home that vast company which no man can number and set them to chanting hymns of peace around the great white throne. It is when he shall look upon that magnificent scene that he shall see the richest return from the travail of his soul and be most completely satisfied.

And Christ's method of ushering in the reign of universal peace is unique. He deals with the individual human heart, and does not seek to promote it by superficial social reforms. We find him in the Scriptures, not performing the role of a peacemaker, but of a peace-giver. Never does he use concerning himself the former designation, but such expressions as, "My peace I give unto you," "My peace I leave with you," fell from his divine lips. What turbulence, what an uproar, there is in the unregenerate human soul! The inspired writer did not overdraw the picture when he wrote, "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." When the Master finds entrance into such a soul he speaks to these wild waves, as he did to the storm on the Galilean lake, and bids them to be still, and there follows a blessed and beautiful calm. It is by thus giving peace that the Prince of Peace will at last banish all discord not only from the earth, but from all the universe, except the dark and dreary abode of those who by their stubborn impenitence have become hopelessly lost. The philosophy of it all is that environment does not make men, but that the characters of men determine their environment.

"If peace be in the heart,
The wildest winter storm is full of beauty;
The midnight lightning flash but shows the path of duty;
Each living creature tells some new and joyous story.
The very trees and stones all cast a ray of glory,
If peace be in the heart."

MEETING OF THE EDUCATIONAL COMMISSION.

The Educational Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which was created by the late General Conference, met at the Tutwiler Hotel in Birmingham, Ala., on Wednesday, June 17. The session was quite an extended one and the general educational situation as it relates to the work committed to the Commission was carefully inquired into, but the proceedings were under executive rule and were not reported in detail for the public. The Methodists of Birmingham showed the commissioners much attention and manifested a keen desire to secure one of the two higher institutions of learning that the Southern Methodist Church is expected to establish to supply the loss resulting from the alienation of Vanderbilt University. The general impression is that satisfactory arrangements for the theological instruction of young ministers will be perfected before the opening of the school term this fall, and that this work will be done on a scale of great thoroughness and efficiency. It is reported that the American University, at Washington, D. C., has kindly offered to perform this important service, but the Church will doubtless prefer to have it done in connection with one of her own educational institutions.

After the adjournment of the meeting of the Commission, Bishop W. A. Candler, its distinguished president, by authority of his associate commissioners, gave out to the press the following statement, which will, no doubt, be perused with much interest by the readers of the Advocate:

"Among the main duties with which the General Conference charged the Commission was that it provide at the earliest possible time for the establishment of a school of theology, where young men may be prepared for the ministry of the Church.

"The action of the General Conference authorizes the Commission to establish this school of theology separate from any other institution of learning, or in connection with some institution under the control and management of the Church.

"The Commission was also instructed to consider the advisability of establishing an institution or institutions of higher education of the grade of a university, and it was empowered to receive and act on proposals for the establishment and location of such an institution or institutions. The General Conference took also the following action: 'We express the belief that there should be east of the Mississippi River one such institution and one west of the Mississippi River.'

"In this meeting at Birmingham the Commission carefully considered in every detail the instructions given to it by the General Conference and took the preliminary steps required to obey in full the orders given to it.

"The Southern Methodist University, located at Dallas, Tex., will be the institution west of the Mississippi, when all the details of the plan are fully and finally adjusted.

"For the location of the school of theology and the university east of the Mississippi River, several places are under consideration, and the Commission appointed a committee to consider these and any other places that may offer, and report its findings and recommendations to an adjourned meeting of the Commission within the next few weeks, when final action will be taken.

"The location of such an institution in the place which may secure it will mean much to the community. It will bring a body of learned and consecrated men into its faculty and a large body of students from every part of the South. The chairman of the committee to receive and consider proposals from the various places which desire to secure it is Bishop W. A. Candler, who is also the chairman of the Commission.

"This movement promises great results for the Methodist Church and the general course of Christian education in the South."

SEEMS TO BE WIDELY KNOWN.

There is a big difference in points of view: A learned Bishop was once taken to task by some of his denominational brethren on the charge of exhibiting conceit at variance with the spirit of humility. "It is not conceit," replied the Bishop, with that ponderous bearing that silenced opposition. "It is not conceit, brethren. It is the consciousness of superiority."—The Outlook (New York).

We were not aware that he was seen from that point of view in those parallels.

SUGGESTIVE OBSERVATIONS.

Small service is true service while it lasts. Of humblest friends, bright creature, scorn not one. The daisy by the shadow that it casts protects the lingering dewdrop from the sun.—Wordsworth.

In addition to adopting this resolution the Board of Trust named Dr. Herbert Cushings Tolman as Dean of the Academic Department to take the place of the late Dr. Frederick W. Moore, for many years head of the department. The place had been temporarily taken by Dr. Shurman, Dean of the Engineering Department, who now goes back as dean of that department.

Dr. Tolman is one of the most popular members of the faculty and has a reputation all over the world as a Greek, Sanskrit, and Persian scholar. He is the author of many books on ancient tongues and customs and has been made a member of several scholarly societies. He is the head of the Department of Greek at the university.

The resolution follows:

The Resolution.

"Whereas on the 25th day of October, 1910, in obedience to the directions of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the College of Bishops exhibited a bill in the name of the State of Tennessee, upon their relation, in the Chancery Court of Davidson County, Tennessee, against Vanderbilt University and the members of this Board, as defendants, to obtain the relief in the bill prayed for, which litigation involved the life and integrity of the university; and

"Whereas, for that reason the Board of Trustees (or a majority thereof) and the university resisted the cause which was to be heard and was finally determined in and by the Supreme Court of Tennessee, sitting at Nashville, on the 21st day of March, 1914; and

"Whereas, it was therein and thereby determined and adjudged (among other things not now necessary to be recited) that, under the laws of Tennessee and the charter of the university, this Board is self-perpetuating and is vested and clothed with the sole power of filling vacancies in its body, but that, by agreement entered into between Vanderbilt University and the General Conference of the Church, held at Baltimore, Md., in 1898, it had been determined that new members elected by this Board to fill vacancies therein should be confirmed by the General Conference, acting through its General Board of Education; and

"Whereas, it was also held and declared and decreed in said cause that the above mentioned conventional right of confirmation would cease and terminate if and in the event that the said General Conference should at any time surrender, or at any time renounce, that right or the relations decreed to be existing, or if it should at any time cease to co-operate with the university, or if it should at any time contumaciously refuse to confirm members elected by this Board, that such right of confirmation would cease and terminate as a consequence of any such action or non-co-operation, and that in that event this Board might proceed independently of the General Conference or its agencies to elect members to vacancies in the Board; and

The General Conference.

"Whereas, a General Conference of the Church was held in May, 1914, at Oklahoma City, Okla., and the opinion and decision of the court in said case, and the relations of the Church and of the General Conference to the university, as declared and determined by that decision, were then and therein made the subject of special and extended consideration; and,

"Whereas, the College of Bishops, in their stated or official address to the said General Conference, reported the result of the litigation, and announced and declared that thereby the university 'had been taken from the ownership and control of the Church,' and that in their opinion the Church would not be justified in longer assuming responsibility for the university; and

"Whereas, the said General Conference adopted the majority report of a certain special committee on Vanderbilt University, which report declared that certain statements made in the opinion of the Supreme Court were a 'gratuitous reflection' on the Church, and declared, "That the decision, however, was final, determinative and conclusive 'as to the parties litigant;' and also declared

"That under the decision the power of the General Conference to control the university 'is so small and remote as to be negligible'; and further declared "That the differences which have arisen by reason of that decision between the Board and the General Conference are 'irreconcilable'; and,

"Whereas, the action of the General Conference in adopting that report was subsequently reconsidered and another and amended report adopted in its place and stead; and,

The Amended Report.

"Whereas, this amended report again resolved and declared that the said statement in the opinion of the Supreme Court of Tennessee was a 'gratuitous reflection'; and declared "That under the said decision the control of this university by the General Conference 'is so small and remote as to be difficult of enforcement'; and declared "That, in accepting the donation of one million dollars made by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, this Board had committed an act 'dishonoring' to the Church; and declared "That this Board of Trust has failed to execute the trust in such manner as to conserve the interests of the 'original patronizing Conferences' or the Church; and enacted

"That the General Conference should return to the patronizing Conferences all rights received from them in and to the university; and

"Whereas, the said General Conference, in and by their formal resolution, providing for the creation of an educational commission, and enacted and declared that this commission, when appointed, should transfer and convey to eight named Annual Conferences of the Church all the right, title, interest, authority, control and right of confirmation which the General Conference has or may have in, to and over this university; and

"That these eight Annual Conferences are therein and thereby urged and incited to institute legal proceedings to assert and establish the ownership and control of and over this university, 'guaranteed to them by the charter of said university'; and

"That, as an inducement to do this, the General Conference would bear for said Annual Conferences all the expenses that might be incurred in the litigation so 'recommended'; and, also,

New Biblical School.

"That the commission so created should provide, as soon as possible, for the establishment and maintenance of a Biblical school or department of theology where young men may be taught and trained for the ministry of the Church, and should even arrange for the temporary establishment of such a school or department; and

"That the commission should also establish a university for the Church, and should have all of the powers of the General Conference to provide for the location, maintenance and endowment thereof, and to solicit and to receive subscriptions therefore; and

"Whereas, in and by this same resolution, it was also provided and declared that, until such time as the transfers to the said Annual Conferences are complete, the responsible work of confirming the newly-elected trustees of this university is committed to the General Board of Education of the Church, and that this right to reject and to refuse to confirm extend to any person that the General Board may be satisfied will not fairly represent the interests of the Church in the university; and

"That the Board should confirm only such persons as will endeavor to carry out heartily the aims and purposes of those who founded the university; and

"Whereas, in and by said resolution, the General Conference declared and asserted that, as a matter of truth and fact, the Church owns, and has the right and power to control the university, and that the university was founded by said Annual Conferences instead of by Cornelius Vanderbilt, the decision of the court to the contrary notwithstanding, thereby indicating what was meant when the Board of Education was instructed to confirm no person unless satisfied that he would fairly represent the interests of the Church in the university; and

"Whereas, the General Board of Education is in effect commanded and directed by said resolution of the General Conference to confirm no trustee elected by this Board who does not hold and maintain that the university was founded by the Annual Conferences and not by Mr. Vanderbilt, and who does not hold and maintain that the Church, rather than its Board of Trust, owns and should control the university; and

"Whereas, by a further formal resolution, the said General Conference rescinded the action of the General Conference of 1910, appropriating to the Biblical department of the university the proceeds of an assessment of $20,000 annually, which assessment yielded a sum of about $12,000 per annum, and even directed that the contributions of the current year, now in process of collection and already heretofore appropriated to Vanderbilt University, should not be paid to the university, but should be paid to the said educational commission for use in the support of such theological schools as it may favor; and

"Whereas, the Board of Education was, by a further formal resolution of said General Conference, instructed 'to pay over to the educational commission all funds now in hand to the credit of the Biblical department of Vanderbilt University, after all just obligations to this department shall have been met,' despite the fact that all funds now in the hands of the Board of Education to the credit of the Biblical department of Vanderbilt University were heretofore due and payable in their entirety to the university under the orders of the General Conference of 1910; and

"Whereas, by a further formal resolution of the General Conference, all officers and Boards of the Conference were directed 'not to turn over to Vanderbilt University or any department thereof any moneys until such time as the educational commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, created or provided for in report No. 2 of the Vanderbilt committee, authorize and direct them so to do,' thus preventing the use of the Biblical department of Vanderbilt University of the income from an endowment of $50,000, which is now in the hands of the Treasurer of the Sunday School Department of the Church, and which was raised during the past eight years specifically for the benefit of the said Biblical department, and for no other purpose; and Resolution Defeated.

"Whereas, a resolution expressing, among other things, a desire for the establishment of a 'harmonious understanding with the Board of Trustees of Vanderbilt University' was voted down and defeated by the said General Conference; and

"Whereas, since this action of the General Conference at Oklahoma City, and since it adjourned, the Christian Advocate, the general organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, published at Nashville, has editorially declared that by its action at Oklahoma City, the General Conference orders the practical severance of all relations with Vanderbilt University so far as the general Church is concerned; that the rights left to the Church by the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee are 'truly negligible'; that the differences are 'irreconcilable,' the conditions 'intolerable,' and Church control 'impossible'; that this action calls for an immediate transfer of all the rights and interests of the Church to the 'original patronizing Conferences'; that the federal courts are 'the only tribunal to which the Church can reasonably appeal,' and that in the disposition which the General Conference made of the Vanderbilt case it had ushered in a 'new era for the educational life of Southern Methodism; and

"Whereas, by the above recited action the General Conference has put itself in a position of hostility to the university and rendered impossible the co-operation contemplated by the original agreement of 1898 and the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee; and,

"Whereas, the attempted reservation by the General Conference, through the Board of Education, of the temporary right of confirmation or rejection was obviously not for the purpose of co-operation but in aid of further litigation both contemplated and recommended by said Conference;

Board to Fill Vacancies.

"Therefore, it is hereby resolved by the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University—

"1. That the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held at Oklahoma City in May last, voluntarily renounced and terminated its relations with Vanderbilt University, and voluntarily surrendered and renounced any and all rights it had, or may have had, directly or through any of its agencies, to confirm the election of members elected by this Board to fill vacancies therein; and,

"2. That the General Conference of said Church has ceased and refused to co-operate with the university or with this board as the said decree of court contemplated and provided should be done if the relation was to be continued, and has thereby terminated any and all right of confirmation it had under the said decree or otherwise; and

"3. That it is now the right of this board to fill vacancies in its body without requesting or receiving the confirmation of the General Conference or any of its agencies, and that this right it has become the duty of the board to so exercise; and

"4. That this board is not responsible for the present situation, for that prior to the institution of said suit it never refused to submit for confirmation the names of new members elected by it; it never submitted a name that was not worthy of confirmation or that was rejected; it did not begin the litigation, but contended only when compelled to do so as defendant; and for that its contentions in the regrettable litigation which the General Conference directed against the university and this board were sustained and approved by the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of the State; and

"5. That the direction given by the General Conference to the General Board of Education to exercise the right of confirmation until the transfer and conveyance ordered to be made to certain Annual Conferences shall have been perfected and executed does not prevent the action of the General Conference hereinbefore recited from operating to terminate the relations between the General Conference and the university existing prior to such action; and

"6. That all relations between the university and the General Conference were voluntarily terminated by the action of the General Conference, and, because of such action, have ceased and ended, as the said decree of court declared should result from such voluntary action or from failure of co-operation on the part of the General Conference."

According to the estimate of the Federal Census experts, the present population of New Orleans is 361,221, as against 329,075 in 1910.

A statue of Thomas Jefferson, the gift of the late Joseph Pulitzer to New York City, was recently unveiled in the quadrangle of Columbia University, fronting the School of Journalism established by the noted editor. Not far away, in the same quadrangle, is a statue of Alexander Hamilton, Jefferson's distinguished opponent.

The largest steamship afloat is the Hamburg-American liner, the Vaterland, which arrived in New York on her first trip on May 21. She is 950 feet long, has a tonnage of 54,500, and can carry 5000 persons. The next largest ship in use is the Imperator, also a German vessel. Great Britain's largest steamer is the Aquitania, which can carry 3250 passengers and a crew of 1000.

The celebration of the centenary of peace between the United States and Great Britain will be observed in New Orleans with elaborate exercises on January 8, 1915, the anniversary of the famous battle in which the troops of the two countries last met in strife. The arrangement of the program for the occasion has been committed to the Louisiana Historical Society and Governor Hall.

The Court of appeals of New York has held that the impeachment of William Sulzer, the former governor of that State, was valid, and Mr. Sulzer was taxed with the cost incurred in bringing the case before that tribunal. All the judges of the Court of Appeals were members of the Court of Impeachment which found first Mr. Sulzer guilty and deposed him from office. It is stated that an appeal will now be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Chicago Tribune says: "We have in this country an average of 9000 homicides annually, and in only one out of every hundred cases is the proper penalty visited upon the slayer. Most of the remaining ninety-nine slayers are never caught. The few that are caught usually wriggle out of the hands of the law." If these figures are even half correct, the showing ought to startle and alarm us. Few things are worse needed in the United States than a more certain punishment of criminals.

Secretary of State W. J. Bryan is still comparatively a poor man. The valuation of his personal property as reported to the assessor in Lancaster County, Nebraska—his home county—is $10,325. Besides this, Mr. Bryan owns some real estate in Nebraska, a home in Florida, and a farm near Mission, Texas, which is now being offered for sale. The value of The Commoner, which within the past twelve months has been changed from a weekly to a monthly, is set down at $6,166, a decrease from its value in the preceding year.

Two important matters were settled by the Louisiana Legislature on the same day week before last. By a vote of 60 to 45, the bill proposing to submit to the people of the State a constitutional amendment providing for the removal of the Capital from Baton Rouge to Alexandria was defeated, and a quietus was put on the Reinhardt race-track bill by a vote of 55 to 50. The shelving of the latter measure shows that the moral element is still in the ascendancy in the State and that they do not propose to have Louisiana turn her face backward toward the past.

The bill repealing the exemption of vessels engaged in the American coastwise trade from paying tolls when passing through the Panama Canal, with the Simmons amendment attached, has passed both houses of Congress. The amendment referred to declared that nothing in the measure adopted should be construed as denying or abridging the right of the United States to discriminate in favor of her own ships of commerce, should she subsequently desire to do so. This action may be claimed as a victory for President Wilson, though it is somewhat of a compromise.

Porfirio Diaz, the former Mexican ruler, according to report, has sent word to Huerta that he cannot accept his invitation to return to Mexico to lead the army against foreign invaders because he is too old and infirm. Diaz is also said to have strongly exhorted Huerta to resign the Presidency and stop the further prosecution of a surely disastrous foreign war, for his country's sake, provided he can obtain an agreement with Carranza for the immediate cessation of the civil war and the temporary recognition of a provisional government by the United States. Manifestly, the ex-dictator has given the despot now holding forth where he once wielded the scepter some wholesome advice.

The London Everyman thus describes the exodus of population from the British Isles: "The tide of emigration continues unabated. Thousands every week continue to leave London, Liverpool and Glasgow for Canada and Australia. There is every indication that the year 1914 will beat every record in the recent history of emigration, and that before December 300,000 will have left these shores. And what is even more ominous than the quantity of the emigration is its quality. It is the young men, the enterprising and the energetic that are leaving. It is the old men, the women and the children that are left behind. Some of the more beautiful districts of Scotland are being depleted. Whole cities, like the old country town of Jedburgh, are left desolate, and houses are crumbling in even in the main streets." This status of things is no doubt, in part at least, responsible for the decrease in membership which most of the churches in Great Britain have been reporting for several years.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Meridian District Conference was held in the beautiful, new Methodist Church in DeKalb, Miss., June 9-11. The very capable and much loved presiding elder, Rev. J. T. Leggett, guided the deliberations. G. S. Harmon and J. Loyd Deceall occupied the Secretary's table. The attendance was good. Nearly all the pastors were present, a number of local preachers, and a goodly representation of laymen.

Resolutions were passed expressing love and sympathy for Rev. I. L. Peebles, who was detained at home, having recently undergone an operation. The usual interests of the Church were looked into, and the general condition of the district was found to be healthful. The revival spirit is upon the preachers and among the people, and material affairs also are moving apace.

Miss Ethel Golding edited the Conference in presenting the cause of the Orphans' Home; Dr. J. M. Sullivan made a strong speech for Millsaps College, and Dr. I. W. Cooper was in attendance for a day, but was not on the floor when called on to speak for Whitworth College.

One afternoon was devoted to the Laymen's Missionary Movement with an admirable and carefully prepared program, both enjoyable and helpful. Under the energetic leadership of the District Lay Leader, President J. W. Beeson, of the Meridian College, the Laymen's Movement has been magnified. At his own expense and the sacrifice of much valuable time, Dr. Beeson has held a number of rallies and is urging the laymen on to large endeavors in the work of the Church. Backed by the zealous co-operation of the presiding elder, he has succeeded in having the "Financial System for Methodists" adopted in several charges, where it is in successful operation, and the goal is this system for every charge in the district. Dr. Beeson was re-elected Lay Leader, and in appreciation of the excellent services rendered by him resolutions of thanks and commendation were passed.

Mr. J. B. Holland, superintendent of the Sunday school at Fifth Street, Meridian, delivered a strong and comprehensive address on "The Sunday School, Its Work, Needs, and Proper Conduct," which will be of lasting benefit to all who heard it.

James P. Walker, of East End, Meridian, was granted license to preach, and Robert H. Lewis, of Central, Meridian, formerly of the Alabama Conference, was recommended to the Annual Conference for re-admission.

James B. Cibley was received as a local preacher from the Methodist Protestant Church, and recommended to the Annual Conference for recognition of elder's orders. The following local preachers were passed in character and had their license renewed: W. H. Emmerson, J. E. Robinson, H. E. Raley, M. G. Matheny, I. B. Moore, D. B. Barnard, Earl Howell, Floyd Wells, A. Trotter, O. B. Matheny, J. T. Griffith, Roy Graham, J. M. Robertson, D. C. Hull, and T. K. Harper. The following named local elders and deacons were passed in character: R. H. Lewis, J. N. Tucker, C. W. Campbell, A. C. Hundley, E. C. Stearns, A. C. Flowers, and J. N. Broadway.

On the grounds of inefficiency and unacceptability, the Conference refused to pass the characters of John D. Crymes, local elder, and R. B. Chisholm, local deacon. For the same reasons the Conference refused to renew the license and pass the character of J. T. Daws, local preacher.

The laymen elected the following delegation to the Annual Conference: Principals: D. S. Harmon, J. W. Beeson, L. P. Brown, and S. J. Creekmore. Alternates: W. H. Emmerson, and J. B. Holland.

The Licensing Committee is composed of the Presiding Elder, ex-officio; J. R. Jones, G. S. Harmon, H. A. Gatlin, and W. B. Hogg.

Waynesboro was unanimously chosen as the seat of the next Conference.

Appreciating the real worth of the Presiding Elder and his eminent qualifications for the office, the following resolution, introduced by laymen, was passed by a unanimous rising vote:

"We, the members of the Meridian District Conference, of the Mississippi Conference, recognizing the efficiency, faithfulness and thoroughness of the work of our presiding elder, Rev. J. T. Leggett, in the administration of his office, do hereby express our appreciation of his excellent service and brotherly spirit, and request the presiding Bishop to continue him on this district."

The Conference was spiritual and strengthening. The preaching, which was done by Brothers W. B. Hogg, J. L. Deceall, W. M. Sullivan, W. N. Thomas, and J. R. Jones, was good to the use of edifying. Harmony prevailed; there was not a discordant note, an unkind word, or a division on any question.

The hospitality of the splendid citizenship of De Kalb abounded to usward, and, together with the untiring efforts of the pastor, Rev. W. F. Baggett, made the stay there most delightful.

LOST AND FOUND.

Lost! a very precious thing;
A sunny little smile.
Although we've missed it but an hour,
It seems a long, long while.
The last time that we saw it Was on Mary Josephine;
She wore it to the party.
And since then it's not been seen.

It shone just like a sunbeam
On the little maiden's face.
Two merry, twinkling dimples kept
The pretty thing in place.
I fear someone has stolen it;
I can't think where it's gone;
I only know, without it, all
The household is forlorn.

Oh, joy! Oh, joy! I've found it.
And you never could guess where.
For I had looked and hunted
Under sofa, bed, and chair;
Had searched in every closet,
Had peered behind the screen,
And had sat me down discouraged
Next to Mary Josephine.

A frown was on her forehead,
And her lips were pursed up tight;
I couldn't keep from sighing.
She was such a dismal sight.
When all at once from eyes and lips
That precious smile peeped out!
It had been hiding all the time
Beneath that little pout!

TESSIE'S TEXT.

"Bear ye one another's burdens."

Slowly Tessie read over the illuminated text that grandma had hung in her room. She thought it rather an inappropriate text for her room, because she was, only seven, and you surely can't be expected to bear other people's burdens very well at seven. It would have been much better, she thought, to have put it on Aunt Mary's wall, or big Brother Will's. Aunt Mary knew so much—oh, most everything there was to know!—and Brother Will was so strong. How easy it would be for them to bear the burdens of others. But she, Tessie, was little and weak and far from wise. What could she do?

A moment later, on her way down stairs, she heard grandpa say: "How I wish I had this letter mailed. But I do not feel as if I could walk five blocks in this hot sun."

"I'll mail it, grandpa," cried a joyous little voice, as Tessie flew for her hat. Why, here was the best chance in the world of bearing a burden for dear old grandfather, who is always so kind to her.

When she returned from her errand she dropped into the hammock on the porch, and lay swaying to and fro in the shade of the vines, enjoying the delicious breeze that had sprung up. Inside, she heard mamma say to grandma: "Did you ever see a baby so fretful? I have never had such a weary time trying to sew. And this dress must be finished for to-morrow night!"

Another chance to be a burden bearer, thought Tessie. She leaned in at the window. "Just hand me that cross baby, mamma. I believe he will go to sleep for me out here in the hammock. It is so nice and cool now, in the shade."

So mamma passed the whining little bundle through the low window, and the little girl sang and swung him to sleep.

And this was how Tessie, who had never thought much about such things before, found that even a little child may help to bear the burdens of the world.—Canadian Churchman.

"UYONA."

"Please, Umfundisi (teacher), I want to come and live at the school and work for you and go to school." This was a request made by a small native boy about eight years of age, of a missionary who lived in Pondoland, South Africa.

"What can you do to earn your food and clothes?" asked the missionary.

"I do not know, but I am willing to do all things," said the boy.

"Why do you wish to live here and go to school?"

"I like to learn," was the reply.

"If you come here you will have to stay a long, long time, because you are a small boy, and it will take you many months to be able to learn anything, and at the same time, work for your food, clothing and books."

"Yes, I know that thing," said the little boy.

"If your father and mother agree, we will make a bargain," said the missionary. "If you come, be sure to bring your blanket, for you will need it."

The little boy's parents had lived near the mission station for many years, but all that time they had been much afraid that their children would go to school and become Christians.

Just before the conversation took place between the little boy and the missionary, one of the grown daughters of this heathen kraal had sickened and died. The parents thought that the death of their daughter was caused by a witch, who happened to be the uncle of the girl and whom they feared very much. The parents tried to get this uncle, the witch, driven out of the neighborhood, but the chief would not consent, because the uncle was a friend of the head chief.

The only thing for the parents to do to get away from their supposed troubles was to leave the neighborhood themselves, which they did, deserting a new house and all their gardens.

The little boy, who was one of a very large family, did not desire to follow his parents. The next morning, bright and early, he was at the mission station, carrying all his earthly belongings on his shoulder. The bundle consisted of one small blanket, worth about thirty-five cents, and one suit of clothes bought from the missionary's wife a few days previous. He had earned the money with which to buy the suit by working six months for a native man and his wife, taking care of a small baby, while the parents were working in their gardens.

"Hello, my boy! You have arrived, have you?"

"Yes."

"What did your parents say?"

"They agreed."

"That is good. Now we will see what you can do. Take your blanket over to that hut yonder, and here is a mat for you to sleep on. Be quick for you have a little work to do before school."

Uyona was off like a flash and was soon back at the wood pile, splitting wood with all his might.

Day after day, week after week, there was that constant regularity of work and school until the time for the Christmas vacation. The school closed, and all the children scattered to their different homes looking forward to a happy time.

Uyona came to the back door of the mission and looked very sad. "Well, Uyona," spoke the missionary. "what makes you look so sad? Do you desire to go home?"

"No," said Uyona, "I want work."

"What!" said the missionary, "Do you not desire to visit your parents like the other children?"

"I desire to work for my books and clothes," said Uyona. "I do not wish to go to my people, for they are heathen and they will trouble me. The things of the heathen do not help anything. I do not want anything to do with heathen matters."

This was quite a statement for a little boy to make just out of heathenism. It is needless to say that it touched the missionary's heart. This showed what the boy was made of, and to this day he has not disappointed his missionary friends.—A. M. Anderson, in Junior Herald.

AGAINST RETAINING THE WORD "CATHOLIC."

St. Paul says "If meat maketh my brother to offend, I will eat no meat while the world standeth;" but his successors are not so solicitous about results when it comes to the use of the word "Catholic." They seem to think the salvation of the Methodist Church depends on retaining that word.

Of course, most of us know it means universal—see how many times Mr. Davies in his recent article says so—but very few can refrain from referring the word to its specialized use. There are many people who cannot retain the double meaning in their minds and it is a hardship and a hindrance to force it on them; and there isn't the slightest benefit connected with it—not so as you'd notice it. General usage has given one denomination the word Presbyterian, another the word Methodist, and another the word Baptist, and it is narrow minded egotism not to cut the word "Catholic" out of our book—exactly the spirit of the Campbellites in calling themselves Christians.

There is no virtue in the word, as a word; then why keep it for a stumbling block and rock of offense to those whose minds are set in associating it with the Romish Church? It is embarrassing to explain it fully to people who cannot understand and who become more confused; and I do not feel resentful toward them either—my resentment is against those who make such situations possible. Our church has been singularly free from flies in its pot of ointment, but there are people who prefer flies—if they are old flies. The Bible makes very few words sacred—and catholic isn't one of them; but it does make the way so plain that a fool need not err therein. And catholic isn't plain—it's pigheaded, simply that and nothing better.

More and more as time goes on is the word being limited to the Romish Church, and what good is there in kicking against the pricks? That energy and devotion would be effectively profitable if directed into channels of charity. Universal is a better word from every point of consideration, and "holy Church of God" is vastly preferable to any other expression. Why not? Catholic doesn't mean Christ, or God—it's absurd.

When the clergy get out of touch with the common people on so unimportant a matter as this and fail to make reconciliation the goblins will get somebody most assuredly. It is narrow-minded.

Catholic isn't definite enough to express what we mean as to our religion, anyhow.

right that she is said still to possess to be settled definitely and forever. We, therefore, trust that the pugnacious leaders who beat the tom-toms and who clamored so loudly for more war at Oklahoma City will now be given the right of way and allowed to fight to their hearts' satisfaction. And we also hope that the lawyers there who knew exactly how to win for the Church will at once be given a chance to volunteer and make good in the field of conflict their proud boastings when in council. By all means, let these Rodericks have an opportunity to get out their swords and bugle horns and rally our routed forces and show that the Church yet has champions who are not too "cowardly" to face the foe and keep her colors flying. But we think that, except for the expenses actually necessary, these legal lights should render their service gratuitously. Surely, in the glory of battle such warriors will find ample reward and should ask for nothing more.

A COMMENDABLE MOVEMENT.

We published in the Advocate last week an article relative to the University of Mississippi from the pen of Rev. E. S. Lewis, the pastor of the Southern Methodist Church at Oxford, where that institution is situated, in which occurred the following statement:

"Steps are now being taken to reduce the expenses at the University, thus enabling poor boys to come here, as well as those in a better financial condition. By the new co-operative system of boarding, the cutting out of some fees and the reduction of others, it is claimed that a young man may be able to get through on $150 a session."

We heartily commend this action upon the part of the authorities of this historic institution. It evinces a sense of obligation to the less favored young men and young women of the State that it is highly praiseworthy, and is a trend in the right direction. Far too many colleges and universities seem to be imbued with the idea that, having provided valuable facilities for instruction at prices within the reach of people who are in moderately good circumstances, there is nothing further left for them to do except take charge of such pupils as may enter their doors. Such a conception of duty is discreditable to any institution of learning. Every college ought to be missionary in spirit, and should diligently seek to provide ways and means for reaching and making possible the education of every poor boy and girl that it can. As far as is practicable, it should reduce expenses for them and establish enterprises that would enable them to support themselves while prosecuting their studies. The exclusive school, like all other aristocracies, is on the wane in this advancing day of democracy and human brotherhood.

And our Church colleges would, we think, do well to imitate the example that many State institutions are setting them in making their courses of study more flexible and in endeavoring to get closer to the great body of the people. A wider diffusion of higher education is what we need, and workable standards and methods that will set the torch of knowledge to blazing in millions of homes are likely to come more and more into vogue in the future.

ATTENTION, EPWORTH LEAGUERS.

Are you going to the great International Epworth League Conference which is to be held in Buffalo, July 1-5? A choice program has been arranged and the occasion promises to be a memorable one. Special rates can be had on the railroads and lodging can be secured in the convention city at reasonable prices. We trust that the Southern Methodist Church will be well represented at this notable gathering. Get ready and go if you can. It will be a fine trip and the services will be inspirational in their influence. Dr. F. S. Parker and other leaders in our League work will be there to greet you.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Seashore Divinity School is on this week, having opened with a good attendance last Tuesday.

The Andrews' meeting at Moss Point, Miss., is in its third week. The attendance and interest continue to grow.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, of New Orleans, recently assisted Rev. C. V. Brethaupt of Houma, La., in a successful meeting.

"Rev. L. M. Lipscomb assisted in a meeting at Coldwater, Miss., last week." So says the Southern Reporter, issued at Sardis, Miss.

The Louisiana State Epworth League Conference met in Shreveport the latter part of last week. The session was an enthusiastic and profitable one.

Dr. A. F. Watkins preached for the Mississippi Conference Epworth Leaguers, who were in their annual session at Meridian, last Sabbath at the morning hour.

The summer address of Rev. H. T. Carley, of Centenary College, is Satartia, Miss. Correspondents will please take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

It's a beauty. We mean the catalogue of the Meridian Woman's College and Conservatory. Dr. J. W. Beeson has our thanks for a copy of this fine annual.

How about your subscription to the New Orleans Christian Advocate? Look at the label on your paper and see. If it has expired, please renew at once.

Writing from Walnut, Miss., Rev. A. L. Davenport says: "We are having a good year on the Chalybeate Circuit. The Lord is blessing us and the work is moving forward."

The May-Mott-Lewis law forbidding the shipment of more than one gallon of liquor at a time to the same person in Mississippi has been pronounced constitutional by the Supreme Court of the State.

Rev. M. M. Black, pastor of the Broad Street Church of Hattiesburg, Miss., gave us a nice club of subscriptions secured from among his congregation, a few days since. Such a service is doubly appreciated in this dull summer season.

Rev. N. E. Joyner and Mrs. Joyner are spending some time at the Seashore Campground. We regret to learn that the health of the latter has not been robust of late, and we trust that the Gulf breezes will soon make her well and strong again.

Dr. J. B. Hutton will not accept the presidency of the Southwestern Presbyterian University at Clarksville, Tenn., but will continue to be pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Jackson, Miss. The Doctor's announcement of this decision has greatly rejoiced his congregation.

Rev. John F. Foster, our popular pastor at Amite, La., occupied the pulpit of the Parker Memorial Church of New Orleans on Sunday, June 14, and preached in a manner that greatly pleased that congregation. Brother Foster has many acquaintances and friends in the Crescent City.

The Lower House of Congress is expected to vote on the question of national constitutional prohibition on July 6. It might not hurt to let your Congressman know that your eye is upon him. A courteous note asking him to support the Hobson amendment would serve as a gentle reminder.

Rev. E. P. Craddock, now pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Meridian, Miss., continues to show himself to be a modern Nehemiah. He took charge of his present congregation on the 4th of last January, and since then the membership has doubled and a new house of worship has been erected.

The Musical Conservatory of Whitworth College is unsurpassed anywhere in the Southeast. Have you read what Miss Bauer, of Cincinnati, the noted musician, has said about it? If not, look up her statement in the Advocate. Dr. Cooper believes in having the best of things and has no patience with shoddy work.

Dr. J. T. Sawyer preached at the Mary Werlein Church last Sunday evening. Pastor Jamieson being out of the city. The Doctor reports that he had a good summer congregation who listened attentively. The service closed with the Communion. We are pleased to know that the work of this church is progressing favorably.

Rev. W. D. Dominick gave us 7 additional subscribers from his charge at New Augusta, Miss., last week. This makes 15 names for our subscription files that he has lately sent in. We appreciate this good work in behalf of the Conference organ, and we pray that it may effectively re-enforce this diligent pastor in his labors.

We have in hand an announcement which reads as follows: "Mr. and Mrs. J. Monroe Wright, of Alexton, La., announce the marriage of their daughter, Mattie, to Rev. H. Wade Cudd, at their residence on Tuesday afternoon, June 30, at 2 o'clock." We congratulate in advance the contracting parties and wish for them much happiness.

We regret to learn that the infant daughter of Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Saunders, of Fernwood, Miss., has been ill for some time and that considerable anxiety is felt concerning the little one. We sympathize with this father and mother in their solicitude and pray that a favoring Providence may soon start their precious babe on the road to recovery.

A note from Rev. H. S. Spragins states that his wife, who recently was operated on for appendicitis in a sanitarium at Greenville, Miss., continues to improve nicely. This is good news indeed. Friends in Greenville frequently write us that a more popular and beloved minister's wife has never resided in that city than Sister Spragins.

We acknowledge the reception from Mr. and Mrs. John Ash, of Centerville, Miss., of an invitation to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Mahel, to Mr. Archle Cook Cursler, which will be solemnized in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at that place on Tuesday, June 30, 1914, at 10:30 o'clock a.m. We extend congratulations and best wishes.

From the Memphis Commercial Appeal of Saturday, June 20, we take the following: "Bishop W. B. Murrah of Jackson, Miss., one of the leading men of the Southern Methodist Church, will visit Memphis during the coming week. He will be the guest of a number of Methodist pastors and laymen at a luncheon at the Hotel Chisca on Friday, June 26."

The Monroe District Conference was held at Winnsboro, La., last week, with Rev. Wm. Schuhle, the presiding elder, in the chair. We are happy to know that our Church work is prospering in that section of Louisiana. A report of this gathering from the pen of Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, the Secretary, will appear in the next issue of the Advocate.

In sending us a number of subscriptions from his charge at Camden, Miss., Rev. H. N. McKibben says: "My work is progressing very nicely. We are beginning now to take up and press our revival campaign." We like the ring of this note. Evangelism, soul-saving, is a pastor's first and highest duty and he does well to put his heart and best energies into it.

Prof. and Mrs. R. E. Bohbitt, of Mansfield, La., were in New Orleans Monday of this week. The Professor paid our office a call, which was greatly enjoyed. Mansfield College, under the direction of this capable educator, has had a splendid session, having enrolled 66 boarding and 103 local students. Never was the outlook for this historic institution brighter than it is to-day.

Rev. J. L. Sutton has been induced to continue to serve as pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Church of this city. He has, however, been relieved of his pastoral duties for three months, during which time Rev. Charles McGehee, a student in Vanderbilt University, will serve the congregation in his stead. Brother McGehee began his ministrations last Sunday.

Read what Miss Martha Nutt, of St. Mark's Hall, this city, has to say about the need for missionary work in New Orleans. It is high time that we were giving the promising mission with which she is connected a permanent home and an ampler equipment. Here is an opportunity for some one who has money to immortalize himself and set in motion influences that will reach far out into eternity.

A note from the Rev. M. A. Burns, of the North Mississippi Conference, written from the Lucy Brinkley Hospital of Memphis, Tenn., on June 16, stated that he had carried Mrs. Burns there for an operation of quite a serious nature and that necessarily she would have to remain for some weeks. Brother Burns requests the brethren to remember him and Sister Burns at the throne of grace.

We are indebted to the following brethren, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. H. K. McKee, Oak Ridge, Miss., 5; Rev. W. R. Harvell, Athens, La., 5; Rev. L. T. Sargent, Greenwood Springs, Miss., 6; Rev. J. H. Bass, Columbus, Miss., 3; Rev. W. R. Williams, Mt. Pleasant, Miss., 3; O. P. Armour, Macon (Miss.) circuit, 6.

Rev. T. B. Cottrell, of Tylertown, Miss., was in New Orleans last Monday, and as a visiting Methodist preacher ought always to do, brightened the Advocate office with his presence. He was en route to the Seashore Divinity School, his people having voted him a vacation and given him a purse to meet the expenses of it. Brother Cottrell stated that the meeting recently held for him by Rev. T. J. Norrworthy was a great success, resulting in 86 additions to the churches, the Methodists receiving 52 of them. He was also loud in his praise of Rev. Robert Selby as a presiding elder, and thinks that he fits that office most admirably.

The Corinth (Miss.) District Conference convened at Ecru last week, with the energetic presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Mitchell, in the chair. The reports of the preachers showed that Methodism is steadily forging forward in Northeast Mississippi. From a report of this conference published in the Commercial Appeal, we take the following: "It was a touching scene when Dr. J. Y. Murry, of Ripley, who is over 80 years old and crippled, and who has been a life-long member of the Church, and who always attends his district conference, was carried in a chair to the rostrum and the congregation passed by and warmly grasped his hand as an expression of appreciation of the splendid service that he has rendered." Dr. Murry has the high esteem of all who know him and well deserves it.

Tidings From the Field

FROM OLOH, MISS.

Although I may not be able to make as glowing a report as some of the other pastors in the Conference, I am glad to say that there are some good things within the bounds of our charge; and while there are some things that are not so bright, we are far from being discouraged. We will never be discouraged as long as we have a faithful band of men and women, even though numbers be small. At one point we have celled the church. Here we have a good Sunday school and observed Children's Day, with a fine program nicely carried out after only a few days of preparation. At another point the people kindly raised a purse for the pastor's trip to the District Conference. At Oloh, the call of the pastor's wife for water, was answered by putting in the parsonage yard one of the finest wells in the little village. Children's Day was observed here under the direction of Prof. E. S. Arnold and was most interesting. We much appreciate our good Sunday school, and good superintendent and teachers. We are expecting to begin revival meetings soon with the help of Brothers George Huff, Jas. Purcell and Henry Nordin. We are looking to the Lord for help. Pray for the success of these meetings.—A. H. Steele, P. C.

THE NEW METHODIST CHURCH IN GUNNISON, MISS.

The first church in this part of the Delta, was a log meeting house, built about 1848, near old Concordia, a landing on the Mississippi River, in Bolivar County, Miss. The next was a little frame church built about 1856, in Concordia. The third was a neat frame church built in Concordia about 1869, while Rev. J. T. Truslo was pastor.

When the Riverside division of the Valley Railroad was built, a station was located about three miles below Concordia and called Gunnison, and soon the town was moved to Gunnison. This last church was rolled to Gunnison in 1892 during the pastorate of Rev. M. D. Fly, and was torn down in February, 1914, having served as a place of worship for about 45 years.

On the site of the good old church, we have erected a beautiful up-to-date new church, ready for service, all paid for; and last Sunday, June 14, we had our first service in the new church, and notwithstanding the fact that the heat was oppressive (the mercury in the thermometer playing around the 100 mark) a splendid congregation assembled for the opening service, a special feature of which was the presentation by the building committee to its secretary-treasurer of a Bible, as an expression of appreciation of special services which he had rendered. A very touching incident of the Sunday school service was when Dr. J. B. Pease in retiring from the active superintendency of the work, asked Brother R. S. McKnight to take his place, which he kindly consented to do. Dr. Pease, a princely man, has lived in this community and practiced medicine with distinction for half a century; and has been Sunday school superintendent for about fifty years. It was a tender scene when Dr. Pease was asked by his pastor how long he had been superintendent and he could not answer. All regretted that Brother W. C. Boyd, because of sickness, could not be with us in this first service.

Brother E. L. Blanchard, Brother

J. W. Shepherd, and others, with elect ladies, faithful and true, have stood by the old ship through all these years and rejoice to witness the progress of Zion. The Lord bless them all. May success crown all their efforts in his cause, and may they all find a hearty welcome through the gates into the city of the redeemed.

J. H. SMITH, Pastor.

The primary department in the Sunday school is being greatly emphasized in these late days and new methods and plans are being sought, written and arranged to win these straggling members of the home into the Sunday school. Winning the children is an easier task. This primary department is simple, feasible and has little organization. It can be fitted to any Sunday school in city or country, since it is an endeavor not to make the home feel the school, but the Sunday school help the home.

DURANT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The following examining committee have been appointed to serve at the Durant District Conference to meet in Goodman, Miss., at 7 p.m., July 7:

License to Preach—J. M. Wyatt, W. M. Commander, J. B. Streater. Orders—J. A. Poe, D. H. Crowson, W. F. Rogers. Admission on Trial—J. J. Garner, J. D. Simpson, E. Nash Broyles. W. S. SHIPMAN, P. E.

TO THE BRETHREN OF THE ABERDEEN DISTRICT.

My dear Brethren: I received your cordial letter of greeting and sympathy through your secretary, Rev. I. D. Borders. I love Methodist preachers with all my heart. There is no nobler more self-sacrificing band of Christian ministers in all this wide world. It is no reflection upon world Methodism to say that the ministers of the North Mississippi Conference are the best of all. I can't help but place higher than any of the preachers of the other districts those of the Aberdeen District, for the reason that you brethren have been near enough to me to enter into my afflictions with me. I assure you that I appreciate it all. I am slowly, but I hope surely, improving.

Brother D. R. Wasson will be with me next Sunday and will do the preaching and all of the work for a couple of months, after which time I will go right ahead with the work.

Bishop Hoss will dedicate our beautiful new Church on the third Sunday in August. A cordial invitation to attend is extended to all former pastors and presiding elders. Rev. J. A. Bowen will be with us in a revival campaign a week or ten days following the dedication.

With love to all of the brethren, and a prayer that God may bless us all and help us to wind up the best year we have had, I am as ever,

W. D. WENDEL.

MINOR HURTS SOMETIMES FATAL

A cut, bruise, pimple, pin prick, or scratch very often develops into a serious case of blood poison. To allow a sore of any kind to go unattended is risky business. Dangers of this nature can be easily and surely avoided by having a supply of Gray's Ointment on hand for immediate use. I will save Doctor's bills and perhaps life. And then, if you ever suffer from boils, carbuncles, old sores, ulcers, poison oak, or other skin trouble, I will quickly and permanently relieve you. Write Dr. W. F. Gray & Company, 806 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., for a Free Sample of Gray's Ointment or get it from your druggist 25c.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The second annual session of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference convened in Aberdeen, Miss., June 11. The Executive Committee met at 8 a.m. to formulate some plans for the session, and we found everything prepared for our immediate consideration, without loss of time.

At 3:30 p.m. a Workers' Conference was conducted by our former president, Mrs. W. W. Scales, in which the Conference officers gave splendid plans for their various departments.

The evening was opened by a prayer and praise service, conducted by Mrs. I. D. Borders, which was followed by a business report of the Council which met in Fort Worth, Texas, in April, by Miss Dunstan, of Winona, Secretary of the Home Department. Miss Dunstan, in a clear, business-like manner told of the work and plans of the Fort Worth Council, of the many changes for the betterment of the work, some of which were: The plans for organic union, such as the having of only one secretary and one treasurer. The change of names of some of the officers, as, instead of a Third Vice President, we have a Superintendent of Stewardship and Mission Study. Instead of a Fourth Vice President, we have a Superintendent of Social Service and Local Work, which gives us for Conference officers, a President, a First Vice President, a second Vice President, a Corresponding Secretary, a Treasurer, a Superintendent of Mission Study and Stewardship, a Superintendent of Social Service and Local Work, a Superintendent of Publicity, a Superintendent of Supplies and a Recording Secretary, all of whom shall be members of the Executive body. There were some other changes regarding our finances which do not affect us until January 1, 1915.

Mrs. Hoyle gave the inspirational report of the Council. She held the audience spellbound as she told in burning words of the fields, their needs and their successes.

The first business session was opened at 8:30 Friday morning, June 12. Reports of the various officers showed that North Mississippi had advanced along all lines of the work. West Point is again the banner auxiliary, adult, and Brooksville the banner young people's auxiliary. Columbus District is the banner district. The Winona District is making the greatest increase of any district.

This Conference was really and truly our "very own" since the visiting Bishop was our own North Mississippi Bishop Murrah; and our visiting returned missionaries—Miss Julia Wasson of Shanghai, China; Miss Mary Massey of Mexico, and our Council visitor, Mrs. Bessie W. Lipscomb, were each our own North Mis-issippi women. Our Deaconess visitor, Miss Mary Daniel, while not a native North Mississippian, is ours by adoption and therefore none the less dear.

The Bishop, returned missionaries, council visitor and deaconess were of untold value to us; the Bishop for his helpful sermon on Sunday; Miss Wasson for her talks on China; Miss Massey for explanation of the Mexican situation; Mrs. Lipscomb for her two splendid addresses and her wise counsel in the business sessions, and Miss Daniel for her inspirational talks on the Co-operative Home at Corinth. Our hearts were made glad that we had with us a young woman, strong of character, just graduated from the I. I. & C., who wishes to enter the training school for deaconess work, Miss Kate Strickland of Ripley, Miss. Our only regret was that we did not have a dozen volunteers, each, for the Home and Foreign fields.

Rev. I. D. Borders again placed the women of North Mississippi Missionary Society under obligations to him for his helpful Bible talks at the noonday devotionals, as well as for his untiring efforts as our Conference host.

The Session closed Monday, June 15, promptly at 12 m., with the following officers for the ensuing year:

President, Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle, Tupelo; First Vice President, Mrs. S. M. Thames, Hernando; Second Vice President, Miss Lillie Hartwell, Water Valley; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Louise Dunstan, Winona; Treasurer, Mrs. W. W. Wilburn, Lexington; Superintendent of Mission Study, Mrs. J. W. Conger, Vaiden; Superintendent of Social Service and Local Work, Mrs. Walter Trotter, Winona; Superintendent of Publicity, Mrs. Walter Campbell, Winona; Superintendent of Supplies, Mrs. Susie Thomas, Starkville; Recording Secretary, Mrs. T. M. Clark, Tupelo.

District Secretaries:
Aberdeen District, Mrs. Madge Haughton, Prairie; Columbus District, Mrs. T. W. Woodward, Starkville; Corinth District, Miss Corinne Rogers, New Albany; Durant District, Mrs. G. H. McMorrough, Lexington; Greenville District, Mrs. E. T. Clark, Cleveland; Holly Springs District, Mrs. J. T. Binford, Water Valley; Sardis District, Mrs. T. T. O'Bryant, Sardis; Winona District, Mrs. K. M. Bryan, North Carrollton.

Mrs. WALTER CAMPBELL.

CITY MISSIONS.

In addition to 14 Wesley Houses, 104 works among foreigners. City and Conference Mission Boards have aided city mission and cotton mill communities. Ten Wesley Houses and two small institutional churches, conducted by 30 deaconesses and missionaries, and 322 volunteers, represent the effort for bettering the cotton mill people. Seven Wesley Houses, 20 deaconesses and missionaries and 115 volunteers serve other city slums. A notable development of this quadrennium is the opening of co-operative homes for working girls. Six of these homes housed 568 young women in 1913. Handsome property is owned by the Church for this purpose at Houston and Waco, Texas. The City Boards maintain a total of thirty Wesley Houses and six co-operative homes in these three different types of community endeavor. During the quadrennium they expended $230,429.03 in their maintenance, an increase of $64,083.67 over the previous quadrennium.

"THE OLD RED MILL" TURNS CANE JUICE INTO DOLLARS

Most any Cane Mill will crush the cane, but the mill you want is the one that will grind out the most DOLLARS while it presses the juice.

You want a Cane Mill that is strong, light running, finely finished and economical in operation. You want a mill made by the Chattanooga Plov Co., a mill that's familiarly known wherever cane is grown, like THE OLD RED MILL, a mill which years of use has proved the best under all conditions and for all varieties of sugar cane and sorghum—the planter's standby.

Has steel shafts, almost no friction, steel set screws, which regulate pressure on rolls, preventing mashing at ends; patent bottoms preventing juice from wasting or getting in oil box; working parts enclosed; strongest, easy and economical to operate; most reasonable in price and so simple a child can run it.

Thousands in use—each one an actual proof of the superiority of "THE OLD RED MILL" over any mill made.

The Old Red Mill is always ready—always reliable—ranges in size from light one-horse to four-horse—and is correctly proportioned by proved principles.

Before you think of buying a cane mill write for our free catalogue describing the unequalled Chattanooga line. Write now and it will be sent you immediately, without one penny of cost to you. It contains clear and accurate illustrations and descriptions of our mills and tells just what to seek and what to avoid when buying cane mills of any make. Write to-day.

THE EDUCATION OF BEREAVEMENT.

"As an eagle stirreth up her nest * * * so the Lord alone did lead him."—(Deut. 32:11, 12).

What a startling thought—that the breaking up of the nest is an act of God's benevolence! I always looked upon it as a calamity. We are all familiar with the experience of the breaking up of home. We remember the glad circle round the old fire, and how it grew thinner and thinner. One went to the colonies; one went out to be a governess; one departed with a stranger to a house of her own; more than one passed into the silent land. I always thought it a subject for tears. But here is an old writer who makes it a subject for praise, blesses God for it, declares it to be the first step of my education! I can understand God's love in many things I can understand why I should praise him for his gifts to body and soul. But I lose my breath in surprise when I am asked to make the first stanza of my hymn the adoration of his mercy in loosing the ties of home!

Nay, my soul, it is to strengthen these ties that thy Father breaks up the nest. It is not to get rid of home he would teach thee to fly. It is that thou mayst learn by travel that thy home is wider than thy nest. He would have thee learn that in thy Father's house are many mansions, of which thy nest is only one. He would tell thee of a brotherhood in Christ which includes, yet transcends, thy household fires. He would tell thee of a family altar which makes thee brother to the outcast, sister to the friendless, father to the homeless, mother to the sick, son to the feeble, daughter to the aged—in kinship to all. Dost thou remember how the child Jesus in the temple lost his parents for a time? It was to him the first breaking of the nest; it made him think in his solitude of the wider house of his Father. So is it with thy temple, O my soul. Thy parents, thy brothers, thy sisters, leave thee behind; and in the vacant place there arises a new altar—humanity. Thy Father has given thee wings in the night, wings in the breaking of thy ties. Thou hast soared by thy sorrow; thou hast loved by thy loss; thou hast widened by thy weeping; thou hast grown by thy grief; thou hast broadened in being broken; thou hast enlarged thy sympathy by emptying out thy treasures. The storm that shook thy nest taught thee to fly.—George Matheson, in "Leaves for Quiet Hours."

NOT WORK, BUT WORRY THAT KILLS.

Work is the natural, or, as physicians say, the physiological exercise for nerves and muscles. It is absolutely essential to their health and development. But when work is carried to an extreme, and the nerves and muscles become fatigued then worry sets in and it is the worry that kills.

Physiologists tell us that the human body is like a delicate machine. If the oil in the bearings is exhausted, friction develops, which if not properly relieved will soon wear out the working parts and wreck the mechanism. So when you find that your work, mental or physical, is becoming burdensome, when you are worrying more than you are working, it is a good sign that your nerves and muscles or both need a little more lubricant.

According to Dr. Hollingworth, of Columbia University, the caffeine contained in Coca Cola, caffeine and tea, acts as a lubricant in relation to the nerves and muscles, enabling them to respond more easily to the will. This explains the well known fatigue-relieving quality of Coca Cola, and its use is further justified and approved by the testimony of the greatest living authority on Pharmacology, Dr. Schmeideberg of Strassburg, Germany. The following paragraphs are taken from his disposition in the famous Chattanooga case. Dr. Schmeideberg testified:

"Caffeine is hence a means of refreshing bodily and mental activity, so that this may be prolonged when the condition of fatigue has already begun to produce restraint and to call for more severe exertion of the will, a state which, as is well known, is painful or disagreeable."

Discussing the wholesomeness of the caffeine beverages Dr. Schmeideberg said:

"The character of caffeine action makes it plain that these food materials do not injure the organism by their caffeine content, and especially do not by continued use cause any chronic form of illness."

In concluding his testimony as expert witness Dr. Schmeideberg used these words:

"On the basis of the preceding explanation, I sum up my opinion thus: That Coca Cola syrup represents a food product containing caffeine and that, even in the maximum quantity which may be generally taken daily, it cannot, because of its caffeine content, be accounted injurious to health."

As Coca Cola contains, in addition to caffeine, only carbonated water, sugar and fruit flavors, all of which are known to be wholesome, it is quite clear that the refreshing and fatigue-relieving effects of this popular beverage are not only not injurious but positively beneficial to health.

If you would be interested to know more about Coca Cola, write for free booklet containing scientific explanations by the leading medical authorities of America and Europe. Address the Advertising Managers of this paper, Messrs. Jacobs & Company, Clinton, S. C.—Advertisement.

Common sense is the measure of the possible; it is composed of experience and provision; it is calculation applied to life.—Amiel.

MISS BERTHA BAUR, Directress
Highland Ave., Burnette Ave. and Oak Street

Cincinnati, May 21, 1914.

After the many excellent talents which have come to us from Whitworth College during the past ten years, I feel impelled to write you of their superior studentship and splendid preparation, not only technically, but musically, which has been on a par with the best schools of this country. I congratulate you upon your splendid music department, and its high standard; in each case students from Whitworth College have been able to take their places in the front rank. It is always my pleasure to endorse Whitworth College. Faithfully yours, BERTHA BAUR.

Mansfield Female College

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Founded in 1854.

"This College offers a happy home to those who believe in regularity, promptness, order, obedience to authority, work, duty in season, loyalty and reverence for the sacred institutions of life.

The Christian standards of womanhood are ever before our girls and the discipline necessary to growth and vigor of body and soul are constantly sought to be maintained.

Our faculty members are chosen for their special fitness to do a given task, and always with the knowledge, as far as is possible for us, to learn, that each is the living embodiment of a Christian woman's grace and charm, and dignity and power. Girls learn much from books, but more from daily association with noble, consecrated women.

A Variety of Courses

English leading to M. A. degree; teachers leading to M. A. degree; Organ, Piano, Violin, Voice, harmony, history of music, singing, domestic science and art, Chinese, water color, pastel, oil, etching, craft, Academy, intermediate, primary.

Our course for Teachers is similar to that of the best Normal and includes observation and practice teaching. Graduates exempt from examination except in Theory and Art of Teaching. Thirty enrolled last year. Mansfield College has always boasted of its Music Department, and we still believe we offer superior advantages for the study of the Piano, Organ, Piano, Violin and Voice. Last year showed the largest enrollment ever known at M. F. C.

We call especial attention of mothers to our Domestic Science and Art course. This work has been offered for two years; now, let us enroll last year and two received certificates in June.

The College will have a large kin for firing cannon. The teacher in charge of the Art Department is a lady of splendid Christian character and is an artist of rare ability and of large experience.

The College that expects honest work: requires obedience: demands loyalty: has discipline: boasts a strong, cultured, Christian faculty: gets a fine, appreciative and rapidly growing patronage, collects its bills and pays its debts.

Write, telephone, telegraph or call and see for yourself. If you have investigated and are not satisfied, send or go elsewhere. We expect every Louisianian to investigate before sending to some distant school.

Two thousand catalogs are being distributed. Write for one, and do it now.

R. E. BOBBITT, President.

CHIEFLY PERSONAL

In a business note to our office, bringing several subscriptions, for which we are most grateful, Rev. J. M. Guinn, of Crawford, Miss., adds the following: "We are very much indebted to Rev. T. H. Lipscomb of Starkville for some most excellent sermons, as well as helpful service, in a meeting here which closed on June 12. We feel sure that his clear, straightforward presentations of gospel truth will be exceedingly beneficial in our town."

Dr. Frank N. Parker, the accomplished head of the Trinity College Biblical Department, was in New Orleans on Wednesday, June 17, and looked in on us at the Advocate office. He was looking splendidly and stated that Trinity has had a fine year. We nominate Dr. Parker for Dean of the new Theological School that our Educational Commission is expected to establish in the near future. He is a scholar, and what is even more important, he has religion.

Mr. S. H. Meyer, Treasurer of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions, has received a communication from Mr. J. D. Hamilton of Nashville, Treasurer of the General Board, stating that money is needed for the work and urging him to do what he can to secure early collections. Brother Meyer requests the brethren who have missionary money in their hands to forward it to him at once, that he may promptly pass it on to headquarters.

The Holly Springs District Conference had a profitable session at Potts' Camp (Miss.) last week. Among the visitors were Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, who ably represented the North Mississippi Conference Board of Education; Miss Ethel Golding, who spoke impressively in the interest of the Mississippi Orphans' Home; and Rev. E. W. Bachman, the faithful colporteur of the two Mississippi Annual Conferences. We are delighted to know that Brother Bachman is again able to take up actively his important work.

Dr. S. A. Steel, of Columbia, S. C., writes: "I have just returned from one of the greatest Commencements that old Emory and Henry has known. There were 3000 people present, among them some of the noblemen of the land, and Virginia's great Methodist Governor, H. C. Stuart, who left the Commencement to attend a district conference." Our readers will be pleased to know that Dr. Steel has furnished us with a part of the annual address that he delivered at Emory and Henry, which will appear next week.

Rev. Isaac Lockhart Peebles, of Meridian, Miss., has issued another attractive little volume, entitled "Cannot and Can Fall From Grace." The Publishers are Smith & Lamar. It is neatly printed and bound, and has as a frontispiece a striking likeness of the author. Brother Peebles has a fertile mind and is really one of the most remarkable Methodist ministers in this section. He has a fondness for doctrinal study and is a clear and able exponent of Arminian theology. We hope to have more to say of this publication at a later date.

Rev. H. M. Ellis, Field Agent for the Memphis Methodist Hospital, spent Sunday, June 14, at Greenwood, Miss., where he secured for the institution that he represents a subscription of $6600, and the people have assured him that the amount will be increased to $10,000. Greenwood is the most hustling and progressive city in Mississippi, and her churches are as enterprising as her business houses. And what shall we say of Brother Ellis? We have space only to affirm that he is going to build that hospital, and not be much longer about it. Those who wish to have a hand in it had better get busy, or they will be left out.

The Memphis Commercial Appeal of June 16 contained the following dispatch from Coldwater, Miss.: "Miss Julia Jones of this place and Dr. G. M. Shaw of Robinsonville, Miss., surprised their friends by the announcement of their marriage at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. John T. Conger, at England, Ark., this morning. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw will be at home at Robinsonville, where Dr. Shaw enjoys a large practice." There is no choicer Christian woman in Mississippi than Mrs. Shaw, and Dr. Shaw is a fine citizen and a man of sterling worth. We extend our heartiest congratulations to his splendid couple, who have thus linked together their lives.

Rev. F. N. Sweeney sends us the following note from Wilson, La.: "We have just closed a great meeting here. Brother Hunter, of Hammond, did the preaching. He gave us good, solid gospel sermons in a spirit of love that made them sink in to the hearts of the people, and glorious results quickly followed. Our Church has been genuinely revived and we look for greater things at Wilson. Brother Hunter won the hearts of both the young and old." We regret to know that Bro. Sweeney has become somewhat run down physically while prosecuting so energetically the work in his charge. He was in New Orleans last week resting and recuperating at the Presbyterian Hospital.

Rev. F. E. Power, of Logansport, La., writing under date of June 19, says: "We are beginning a meeting here with Dr. A. C. Holder doing the preaching. We have had six additions by certificate and are hoping to have a great awakening. On Wednesday afternoon the home in which we were stopping burned down and my grip containing some clothes, my Bible, a few books, sermon notes, and some other things, were destroyed in the fire. Dr. Holder also lost possessions to the amount of about $25." We sympathize with these brethren in their misfortune, particularly in the loss of "the sermon notes." It is too hot to make new ones these days. Ask the presiding elders if this isn't true.

On Sunday evening, June 14, Rev. E. Nash Broyles, our pastor at Durant, Miss., conducted in his church at that place a most unique and impressive service. It was in the interest of Christian patriotism, and the national airs and hymns of nearly all the leading countries of the world were brought into requisition. The address of the occasion, which was patriotic in character, was delivered by the Hon. D. T. Guyton. We feel sure that this service must have had a valuable educative and inspirational influence, and we think that the pastor and his congregation are to be congratulated upon having worked it up. Patriotism and civic righteousness are none too plentiful in this day, and it is well to stimulate sentiment in that direction.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Hon. R. P. Hobson requests that every minister in the United States shall, at one service on June 28, present an argument for National Constitutional Prohibition to his people, and that great popular rallies shall follow on July 4 when resolutions favoring the amendment should be passed and sent to the Senate and House.
